1. Contract for.

Contract to Build—Cost of Extras—Penalty for Non-completion.]—The plaintiff contracted with the defendant to build for the P. government a steam vessel of war for 10,400*l.*, such price to be inclusive of all charges except as thereinafter mentioned; the vessel to be built according to Lloyd's rules as specified to the satisfaction of S.; to be delivered on a day named "finished, fitted, found and equipped in manner similar in all respects to that which is practised with ships or vessels of the same class in her majesty's navy, under contracts with the admiralty, except machinery"—(which was being manufactured by the plaintiff under another contract)—"armament, furniture, stores, plate, linen, glass, crockery and opticians' instruments." And it was agreed that the sum of 10,400*l.* was to be "inclusive of all charges for the said ship or vessel finished and fitted perfectly in every respect, and no charges shall be demanded for extras; but any addition or additions which may be made by order in writing of the said S. as an extra or extras shall be paid for at a price to be previously agreed upon in writing." Penalty 5*l.* for each day upon non-delivery by the day named; provided that if the vessel should not be launched and delivered at the time appointed by reason of any cause not under the control of the plaintiff, the same to be certified by S., then the penalty should not be enforced for such time as S. should name. In the course of her construction large additions were made to the ship under verbal directions of servants of the P. government:—Held that the plaintiff could not recover the price of these. Russell v. Sa Da Bandera (Viscount), 13 C. B. (N.S.) 149; 32 L. J., C. P. 68.

The vessel was not finished by the day named, and the defendant claimed to enforce the penalty of 5*l.* per day. The delay had in part arisen by reason of disputes and objections on the part of the defendant as to the construction of the contract:—Held, that the plaintiff was not liable for the penalty. Ib.

Sale of Ship to be built and delivered Abroad.]—A shipbuilder at Glasgow contracted to build and deliver a ship at St. Lucia. On her voyage out she was lost, and the buyer sued the builder for repayment of the price, which had been paid by instalments as the building went on:—Held, that, in the absence of proof that the buyer agreed to take delivery at Glasgow, the money must be repaid. Henckell, Du Buisson & Co. v. Swan & Co., 17 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 252.

Chain Cable—Warranted Tested.]—In every contract for the sale of a chain cable, whether for use on a British ship or not, there is an implied warranty that it has been tested and stamped as required by law. Hall v. Billingham, 54 L. T. 387; 36 W. R. 122; 5 Asp. M. C. 538.

Contract for Repairs—Construction—Evidence.]—A firm of shipbuilders agreed to lengthen and repair an iron steamship; the object being that she might be classed 100 A 1 at Lloyd's. The specification forming part of the contract contained this stipulation—"Iron work: The plating of the hull to be carefully overhauled and repaired, but if any new plating is required the same to be paid for extra (fourteen words deleted, signed A. and J. I., D. G.). Deck beams, ties, diagonal ties, main and spar deck stringers, and all iron work to be in accordance with Lloyd's rules for classification":—Held, that the shipbuilders were bound to supply without extra charge any new plates required to enable the vessel to be classed 100 A 1 at Lloyd's; and that neither the letters of the parties before the contract was signed, nor the initialled deleted words in the contract, could be considered for the purpose of interpreting the intention of the parties. Inglis v. Buttery, 3 App. Cas. 552—H. L. (Sc.)

Held, also, the costs of Lloyd's survey, and the board of trade tonnage measurement, should be borne by the shipowner. Ib.

—— Action under, before Completion.]—A ship outward-bound with goods, being damaged at sea, put into a harbour to receive some repairs which had become necessary for the continuance of the voyage, and a shipwright was engaged and undertook to put her into thorough repair. Before this was completed, he required payment for the work already done, without which he refused to proceed; and the vessel remained in an unfit state for sailing:—Held, that the shipwright might maintain an action for the work already done, though the repair was incomplete, and the vessel thereby kept from continuing her voyage at the time when the action was brought. Roberts v. Havelock, 3 B. & Ad. 404.

—— Tender of Reasonable Sum—Detention.]—A declaration alleged that the defendant agreed to repair a ship for the plaintiff for a reasonable and proper price in that behalf, to be charged by him to the plaintiff, and to redeliver the ship when repaired upon payment of such price; that the plaintiff was ready and willing to pay such price, but that the defendant did not charge a reasonable price, and refused to redeliver the ship except upon payment of an exorbitant and unreasonable sum; and claimed damages for the detention of the ship:—Held, that it was not necessary that the plaintiff should aver a tender of a reasonable sum. Watson v. Pearson, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 501; 8 L. T. 395; 11 W. R. 702.

Damages for Breach of Contract.]—When a breach of contract with the owner of a ship has been committed, whereby he is prevented from employing her upon an adventure, the damages payable to him cannot be reduced on the ground that he has earned a profit by sending another ship upon the same adventure in place of the first-mentioned ship. Jebsen v. East and West India Dock Co., 44 L. J., C. P. 181; L. R. 10 C. P. 300; 32 L. T. 321; 23 W. R. 624; 2 Asp. M. C. 505.

A company having contracted to supply a steamship with a propeller shaft and other fittings, supplied useless fittings, whereby the owners, besides being obliged to replace the fittings, lost the use of the ship for nine days:—Held, that the lost earnings of the ship for the nine days ought to be included in the damages recoverable. Wilson v. General Screw Colliery Co., 47 L. J., Q. B. 239; 37 L. T. 789; 3 Asp. M. C. 536.

A shipbuilding company, at the time of being wound up, was under a contract with a steam-packet company to do certain repairs to a ship within a given time, and under orders obtained in the matter of the winding-up, the official liquidator was authorised to complete the repairs, the rights of all parties being reserved. The repairs not having been completed within the stipulated time, leave was given to the steam-packet company to go in under the winding-up order and prove in respect of any damage that might have accrued from the delay:—Held, that the measure of damages was the net profits which the steam-packet company might have made if the contract had been completed in time, but that the company was not entitled to prove for damages arising from imperfect workmanship during the delay. Trent and Humber Shipbuilding Co., In re, 38 L. J., Ch. 38; L. R. 4 Ch. 112; 19 L. T. 465; 17 W. R. 181.

Repairs Improperly Executed.]—Shipwright held entitled to agreed cost, less damages by reason of improper work and materials. Strachan v. Paton, 3 Bligh (N.S.) 359.

Payment for Use of Dock during Detention.]—A shipowner received an estimate for repairs, the last item of which was "the cost of use of graving dock for the job will be from 120 to 150 guineas." The ship was repaired, and the account was sent in with this item included. No objection was made to this item, but time was required for payment. The shipwright, who claimed and enforced his lien on the ship for payment, urged the removal of the ship, saying that from a certain day he should charge 20*l.* a day for the use of the dock:—Held, that these facts did not constitute an implied contract on the part of the shipowner to pay the additional charge, and that having paid it under protest, he might recover it back. Somes v. British Empire

Shipping Co., 8 H. L. Cas. 338; 30 L. J., Q. B. 229; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 761; 2 L. T. 54; 8 W. R. 707.

Repairs—Master—Power to Bind Owners—Bottomry.]—P. W. & Co. ordered a ship on commission for colonial purchasers, and advanced money for her outfit. They appointed a master and sent her out to New Zealand for the purchasers. The ship had been originally registered in the name of P. W. & Co., but before sailing was transferred to a bank manager to secure advances by the bank. On the voyage she suffered damage and put into a port to refit. The master, for money advanced for necessary repairs, gave a bond binding himself and also the ship and freight. At the same time he drew bills on P. W. & Co. for the amount. The purchasers became insolvent; P. W. & Co. got the ship transferred to them by the bank, sold her and received the price. In an action against them by the holders of the bills, which they had refused to accept:—Held that P. W. & Co. were liable, being employers of the master, and the real owners of the ship. Miller v. Potter, 3 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 105. And see post, X. BOTTOMRY.

Semble, the bond given by the master was not a valid bottomry bond. Ib.

—— Liability of Owners—Payment to Agent.]—Repairs done at Hull upon the order of the owner's agents at the instance and direction of the master. Account made out to the master and owners and sent in to the agents, but payment not demanded for some months. Meanwhile, the owner paid the agents for the repairs. The agents being in difficulties, the shipwright applied to the owner for payment:—Held, that he was liable. Stewart v. Hall, 2 Dow, 29.

2. ADVANCES FOR.

A mercantile house at Newry direct a house at Quebec to contract for the building of a ship, for which the Newry house would send out the rigging. The Quebec house contract with some shipbuilders accordingly. The Newry house then direct their correspondent at Liverpool to send out the rigging. He does so; and, it having been actually delivered to the Quebec house:—Held, that the property in it was vested in the Newry house, and that the Quebec house had a right to retain it against the Liverpool correspondent, on account of their lien on it for advances made to the builders, and payment of custom-house expenses, although, previously to the delivery, they had obtained an assignment of the ship to themselves from the builders, and had registered it in the name of one of the partners in their house. Rogerson v. Reid, 1 Knapp, 362.

By an agreement in 1861, but not executed till the 11th April, 1862, shipbuilders agreed to build a schooner for F. On the 12th April the agreement was assigned to the plaintiff to secure 500*l.* already advanced to them for the purpose of enabling them to complete her, and future advances up to a certain amount, and the vessel was assigned to the plaintiff, to be held by him in lien for such advances and interest. On the 19th May the agreement between the builders and F. was put an end to, and on the 20th they entered into a new contract with the plaintiff to complete and sell the vessel to him for 1,160*l.*, of which the advanced 500*l.* was to be taken as part payment. No registration of the vessel ever took place, but on the 20th May the builders certified, according to the provisions of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, that they had built the schooner for the plaintiff. The advances did not appear to have been laid out exclusively upon the vessel, and before the 20th May the builders had discharged their workmen and were virtually insolvent, though this was not proved to have been brought to the plaintiff's knowledge. The vessel was unfinished on the 2nd June, when they were adjudicated bankrupts, and on the 19th the defendants were chosen assignees. On a bill to support and enforce the lien, as to the instrument of the 12th April:—Held, that the lien under it was destroyed, if not by the cancellation of the agreement with F., yet by the fact that the 500*l.* thereby secured was merged into and taken as part payment of the purchase-money, under the agreement of the 20th May. Swainston v. Clay, 1 N. R. 307; 8 L. T. 563; 11 W. R. 811. Affirmed on this point, 2 N. R.—L.JJ.

As to the memorandum of the 20th May:—Held, that under it the plaintiff was entitled to a lien on the unfinished ship for the 500*l.* actually advanced. Ib.

Held, also, that no registration under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, was necessary. Ib.

Held, also, that the vessel was not within the order and disposition of the builders at the time of their bankruptcy. Ib.

L., who was executor of H., and manager of a bank, agreed to take a security on ship "E.," belonging to F., in lieu of a security given by F. to H. on another ship, and he abstracted money from the bank, which he advanced to F. to enable him to complete repairs on the ship "E.," taking from F. a security on the ship to himself, as executor, for these advances, as well as for the sum advanced by H. The bank, having discovered L.'s improper abstraction of their money, required security for it, and L. assigned to them the securities on the ship. The ship was sold for a sum much less than the amount originally advanced by H.:—Held, first, that as the bank took the assignment from L. to secure a pre-existing debt due from him personally to them, and had notice that the securities belonged to the estate of H., they could have no better title against the estate than L. would have had if he had advanced his own money, instead of that of the bank. Collinson v. Lister, 25 L. J., Ch. 38; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 75; 4 W. R. 133—L.JJ.

Held, secondly, that L. would in that case have had no claim against the estate, as he had not advanced the money for repairs from necessity and bonâ fide, and therefore could not set up his claim in respect of these advances against the security for the sum lent by H. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the bank could not claim a lien on the proceeds of the sale of the ship on the ground of following trust moneys of theirs improperly disposed of by L., for that they had, by taking the security from him, treated the transaction as a loan from them to him; and moreover, as he was their agent, they were affected by his acts in making the advances. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that whether the title to the ship could or could not be affected by the trusts of the mortgage from F. to L., the moneys received from the sale of it were subject to those trusts, and that the registered transfer of the securities to the bank did not enable the bank to retain the moneys discharged from those trusts. Ib.

3. Property in Unfinished Hull.

When Property passes to Purchaser.]—The defendants contracted with a company to make and supply new boilers and certain machinery for a steamship of the company, and to alter the engines of such steamship into compound surface condensing engines according to a specification. The engines, boilers and connections were, by the contract, to be completed in every way ready for sea so far as specified, and tried under steam by the engineers (the defendants) previously to being handed over to the company; the result of such trial to be to the satisfaction of the company's inspector. The price of the work was to be 5,800*l.*, and was to be paid as the work progressed, in the following manner: viz. 2,000*l.* when the boilers were plated, and 2,000*l.* when the whole of the work was ready for fixing on board, and the balance, 1,800*l.*, when the work was fully completed and tried under steam. These payments were only to be made on the certificate of the company's inspector. The old materials removed from the ship were to become the property of the defendants. The specification contained elaborate provisions as to the fitting and fixing the new boilers and machinery on board the ship, and the adaptation of the old machinery to the new. The boilers and other new machinery contracted for were completed and ready to be fixed on board, and one instalment of 2,000*l.* had been paid under the contract, when the ship was lost by perils of the sea. The value of the work actually done by the defendants under the contract amounted to 4,118*l.* The second instalment of 2,000*l.* was subsequently paid, at the time of which payment the company knew of the loss of the ship, but the defendants did not. The company claimed delivery of the boilers and other machinery completed under the contract, and this being refused, brought an action for the detention of the same, or to recover back the 4,000*l.* paid by them to the defendants:—Held, that the contract was an entire and indivisible contract for work to be done upon the company's ship for a certain price, from further performance of which both parties were released by the loss of the ship: that the property in the articles manufactured was not intended to pass until they were fixed on board the ship; and that consequently the company was not entitled to the boilers and machinery, nor could they recover the 4,000*l.* already paid as upon a failure of consideration. Anglo-Egyptian Navigation Co. v. Rennie, 44 L. J., C. P. 130; L. R. 10 C. P. 271; 32 L. T. 467; 23 W. R. 626. The case was ultimately referred to arbitration. See L. R. 10 C. P. 571, n.

A builder contracted with the plaintiffs to build them a ship, and the plaintiffs from time to time advanced money for the building. Before the ship was completed the builder gave the plaintiffs a bill of sale, habendum "when the ship shall be completed and finished," and the vessel was thereupon registered in the plaintiffs' names. The builder afterwards registered the ship in his own name, and, having borrowed money from the defendants in order to finish her, executed a bill of sale to them, and gave them possession of the ship:—Held, that the plaintiffs could recover in trover against the defendants for conversion of the ship, and that the measure of damages was the value of the ship at the time of the conversion. Read v. Fairbanks, 13 C. B. 692; 1 C. L. R. 787; 22 L. J., C. P. 206; 17 Jur. 918.

Ship paid for by Instalments.]—Where a ship is contracted to be paid for by instalments, to be paid at different stages of her building, the property in the ship and her gear as approved and paid for passes to the vendee. Woods v. Russell, 5 B. & Ald. 942; 24 R. R. 621.

Ship Lost — Recovery of Advances.] — See Henckell, Du Buisson & Co. v. Swan & Co., supra, col. 14.

Ship in Builder's Yard Distrained for Rent.]—A shipbuilder contracted to build a ship on premises which he held as tenant to the defendants. The ship was to be paid for by instalments. After the ship had been partly built and paid for, it was seized by the defendants as a distress for rent. The person for whom the ship was being built paid the rent under protest and sued to recover the amount:—Held, that, assuming the property in the ship to have passed to the plaintiff, the ship was nevertheless liable to distress. Clarke v. Millwall Dock Co., 55 L. J., Q. B. 378; 17 Q. B. D. 494; 54 L. T. 814; 34 W. R. 698; 51 J. P. 5—C. A.

Purchaser acquires no Property until Ship finished.]—In the absence of a special agreement the purchaser of a barge or vessel ordered to be built acquires no property therein until she is finished and delivered, actually or constructively. Painting the purchaser's name on the stern held to be immaterial. Mucklow v. Mangles, 1 Taunt. 318; 9 R. R. 784.

Law of Scotland—Bankruptcy of Builder.]—B. and C. verbally agreed to make advances to A. on the security of a ship he was building on his own account, provided A. made an absolute contract for sale of the ship. A. thereupon agreed to complete and deliver the ship to B. and C. for a price to be paid in two instalments, with powers for B. and C., in case A. failed to complete the ship, to enter into possession of the ship and to complete and sell her. In a correspondence between A. and B. and C. and a shipbroker relating to the sale of the ship, she was called A.'s ship; but nothing was written to any one inducing him to deal with the ship as if she were the property of A. B. and C. after the contract made advances to A., taking a receipt as for payment of part of the purchase-money; at the same time. bills for the like amount were accepted by A. The advances amounted to the full purchase-money of the ship. Before she was completed A.'s estate was sequestrated (in Scotland). The bills were paid by B. and C. In a question between A.'s trustee and B. and C.:—Held, by the law of Scotland there was a bonâ fide sale, but no delivery; and that B. and C. were entitled to the ship. M'Bain v. Wallace, 6 App. Cas. 588; 45 L. T. 261; 30 W. R. 65—H. L. (Sc.)

4. Bankruptcy of Owner or Builder.

P. contracted with a shipbuilder to build him a ship for a named sum, to be paid by instalments as the work went on; an agent of P. to superintend the building. The ship was partly built and approved by P.'s agent when the builder became bankrupt. The assignees completed the ship. All the instalments of purchase-money were paid or tendered by P. In action of trover by P. against the assignees:—Held, that upon each instalment being paid the property in the part finished vested in P., subject to the right of the builder to retain it for the purpose of completing the ship; and that each material subsequently added became the property of P., and that the ship did not pass to the assignees as being in the order and disposition of the bankrupt. Clarke v. Spence, 4 A. & E. 448; 6 N. & M. 399; 1 H. & W. 760; 5 L. J., K. B. 161.

In December, 1861, the bankrupt contracted with W. to build a barge for him, to be paid for in bricks, the barge to be completed on 5th June, 1862. The bankrupt hired a barge building-yard for a period which expired before the barge was built, and W. then hired the yard. In June it was agreed by the bankrupt in writing that the barge should be held by W. as security for advances made by him. In July the bankruptcy took place. The advances made by W. exceeded the amount of work done on the barge and materials supplied for her by the bankrupt:—Held, that W. had a lien upon and was entitled to hold the barge unless the assignees chose to complete her. Watts, Ex parte, Attwater, In re, 32 L. J., Bk. 35.

C. & Son, engineers in Scotland, agreed with the appellants to fit up engines in ships then being built by the appellants, who made advances to C. & Son as the work progressed. C. & Son being insolvent to the knowledge of the appellants, an agreement was entered into between them to the effect that upon payment being made in respect of any ship, the materials laid down and work done in respect of that ship should become the property of the appellants subject to the lien of C. & Son for any balance of the price of the same. C. & Son having become bankrupt, it was held that, by the law of Scotland, the appellants were not entitled as against the trustees in C. & Son's bankruptcy to materials in C. & Son's yard intended to have been used upon the ships. Seath v. Moore, 55 L. J., P. C. 54; 11 App. Cas. 350; 54 L. T. 690; 5 Asp. M. C. 586—H. L. (Sc.)

B. & Co. agreed to build a ship for F. S., before the agreement was signed, advanced money upon the terms that the benefit of the agreement should be assigned to him, and that he should have a lien on the ship. The agreement was cancelled. B. & Co. agreed to sell the ship, which was not finished, to S. Four days before this they had stopped payment and shortly after became bankrupts:—Held, that S. was entitled to a lien on the ship. Swainston v. Clay, 4 Giff. 187; 2 N. R. 345; 32 L. J., Ch. 503; 8 L. T. 563; 11 W. R. 811—L.JJ.

A. contracted to build a ship for B., the purchase-money to be paid by instalments partly in bills, the partly built ship to become the property of B. upon payment of the first instalment to the extent of his payments and subject to A.'s lien for unpaid instalments. B. gave acceptances to A. in payment of the instalments, which A. discounted. Before the ship was completed A. and B. became insolvent. B.'s creditors accepted a composition, B. abandoned the contract, and A.'s trustee in bankruptcy finished the ship. Bankers, holders of the bills, claimed to have a lien on the ship:—Held, that Waring, Ex parte, did not apply, and that the bankers were not entitled to a lien. Lambton, Ex parte, or Greener, Ex parte, Lindsay, In re, 44 L. J., Bk. 81; L. R. 10 Ch. 405; 32 L. T. 380; 23 W. R. 662; 2 Asp. M. C. 525—L.JJ. Affirming S. C., nom. Greener, Ex parte, Lindsay, In re, 32 L. T. 205.

Engineers contracted with the owner of a barge to supply machinery to the barge in a certain dock, the price to be paid by bills. The barge was entered in the books of the dock company in the name of the engineers, who remained in possession of her until she was finished, when the owner filed a liquidation petition, and a receiver was appointed. Meanwhile, the engineers had been paid part of the price of the work, partly in bills which they had discounted, and partly in cash:—Held, that the engineers were entitled to a lien for the unpaid balance of the price of the engines. Willoughby, Ex parte, Westlake, In re, 16 Ch. D. 604; 44 L. T. 111; 29 W. R. 935.

A shipbuilder had in his possession at his bankruptcy a ship which he had sold but not completed:—Held, not to be in his order and disposition. Holderness v. Rankin, 2 De G. F. & J. 258; 29 L. J., Ch. 753; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 903, 928; 8 W. R. 713—L.JJ.

In consideration of periodical payments to be made by B., A. agreed to build a ship, to be launched on or before July 31st, 1853, with a proviso that if A. failed to complete the ship according to the agreement, it should be lawful for B. to take possession of the ship "which from and after the payment of the first instalment, shall be and be deemed and continue to be as soon as the said ship shall be commenced, in every respect, and for every purpose, the property of B."—and to finish her "using such of the materials of A. as shall be applicable to the purpose"—A. to repay to B. so much as he should expend thereon in excess of the contract price. A. failed to complete the ship, and B. took possession of her, and after an act of bankruptcy by A. proceeded to finish her, using materials in A.'s yard that had not been appropriated for the ship. None of these materials had been used upon the ship, but some had been selected and placed by B. in the ship's carcase before A. became bankrupt:—Held, that the assignees were entitled to recover against B. the value of these materials. Baker v. Gray, 17 C. B. 462; 25 L. J., C. P. 161; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 400; 4 W. R. 297.

In 1833, and until his bankruptcy, J. L. carried on business as a shipbuilder; and on June 10th he agreed to build for 1,750*l.* a ship then being built in his yard, payment to be made by various persons mentioned in the agreement in amounts there specified. The plaintiff signed in October, 1833, for one fourth of the ship, and J. L. signed underneath accepting the price and mode of payment. The plaintiff paid for his share by bills before J. L.'s bankruptcy. The T. C. Company signed the agreement for one fourth; and H., a member of the company, used to go down and superintend the building of the ship, J. L.'s foreman having instructions to work under H.'s orders. At the bankruptcy of J. L. the ship was on the stocks unfinished in J. L.'s yard; and after the bankruptcy some of the shipwrights continued to work on her and to receive their pay from H.:—Held, that the property in one fourth of the ship had not passed to T. L., the plaintiff. Laidler v. Burlinson, 2 M. & W. 602; 6 L. J., Ex. 160.

J. agreed to build an iron steamship for the plaintiff for 16,000*l.* payable by instalments, the first, of 1,000*l.*, to be payable immediately.

Plaintiff advanced money to J. in anticipation of instalments as the work went on. J. became bankrupt, the vessel being in his yard unfinished, together with her engines and part of her framework, which had not been fitted or built into her. The amount advanced by plaintiff to J. exceeded the value of the engines and unfixed framework. The plaintiff's name was stamped on the ship's keel before J.'s bankruptcy :—Held, that the ship's loose engines and framework were the property of the plaintiff and not of J.'s assignees ; and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages against the assignees for detention of the ship, but not of the engines and framework. Wood v. Bell, 6 El. & Bl. 355 ; 25 L. J., Q. B. 321 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 664 ; 4 W. R. 553. See also Baker v. Gray, 17 C. B. 462 ; 25 L. J., C. P. 161 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 400 ; 4 W. R 297, supra.

5. Lien.

a. Of Shipwright.

Nature of.]—A shipwright has a lien upon a ship for repairs. Franklin v. Hosier, 4 B. & Ald. 341 ; 23 R. R. 305.

But a shipwright in the river Thames has no lien on a ship taken into his dock to be repaired, without an express agreement for that purpose, because by the usage of the trade the credit is always given to the owner. Raitt v. Mitchell, 4 Camp. 146 ; 16 R. R. 765.

It is otherwise where the shipwright deals for ready money. Ib.

Priority of Rights.]—When a shipwright has received a vessel into his yard and repaired her, his rights are subject to all existing obligations then complete and due against the vessel. The Gustaf, Lush. 506 ; 31 L. J., Adm. 207 ; 6 L. T. 660.

Claims for salvage take precedence of a shipwright's lien in respect of subsequent repairs to the vessel. Ib.

A shipwright's lien is postponed to master's and seamen's wages earned prior, but not to such wages earned subsequently, to the time when the vessel entered the shipwright's yard. Ib.

The seamen and master are, in the case of a foreign vessel, entitled to an allowance for return to their own country, and this right takes priority also of such shipwright's claim. Ib.

The shipwright's lien takes precedence of all claims in respect of necessaries supplied subsequently to the time when the vessel entered the shipwright's yard. Ib.

Effect on Priorities of Material Men.]—The possessory lien of material men is not determined by the arrests of the vessel by warrant of the high court of admiralty in a suit for equipment and repair. The Acacia, Hamilton v. Harland, 42 L. T. 264 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 254.

Right of Sale.]—A lien upon chattels confers no right of sale upon the person holding such lien, though the retention of the chattels may be attended with expense ; and therefore, where shipbuilders having a lien on a ship built by them, according to contract, for the unpaid purchase-money, filed in equity a bill to e force their lien by a sale, a demurrer was allowed. Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Co. v. Patent Derrick Co., 1 J. & H. 93 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 714 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1013 ; 2 L. T. 208 ; 8 W. R. 408.

Unpaid Vendor.]—Plaintiff agreed to build a ship for P. and L. and got the ship built accordingly. P. paid his moiety of the price. L. did not. The builder gave a bill of sale of the ship to the plaintiff, and possession to L., from whom he took bills of exchange in payment of his half share in the ship. The bills were dishonoured, and L. died. His executors sold L.'s half of the ship to P., having notice ; P. sold the ship to S. without notice. Decree against P. that he pay the plaintiff one-half the purchase-money he received for the ship ; L.'s representatives to reimburse P. Walker v. Preswick, 2 Ves. Sen. 622 ; Belt's Suppl. 449.

Possession.]—A ship was placed on a patent slip for repairs. When part of the repairs were completed she was removed by the shipbuilders for their own convenience to a wet dock, into which the shipway opened, and the repairs were there completed, the ship being made fast to pawls on the shipbuilders' premises. She was moved from time to time for the convenience of persons using the slipway, chiefly by the shipbuilders' men, but under orders of the harbour master. The master was always on board during the day, and a shipkeeper at night :—Held, that the shipbuilders had not parted with their lien. Barr v. Cooper, 2 Ct. of Sess. Ca. (4th ser.) 14.

No Maritime Lien.]—On a ship's being repaired in the river Thames, and fitted out there with new rigging and apparel, the ship itself is not liable, but the owners. Watkinson v. Barnadiston, 2 P. Wms. 367. S. P., Shank, Ex parte, 1 Atk. 234.

Secus, if repaired or fitted out at sea, where the master alone may hypothecate. Watkinson v. Barnadiston, supra.

No lien on a ship abroad can be created by parol nor by bills of exchange drawn by the master ; unless, upon mistake clearly established, the instrument can be corrected. Halkett, Ex parte, 2 Rose, 194, 229 ; 19 Ves. 474.

A ship, while the possession of it is retained, is specifically chargeable in respect of the expense incurred in repairing it ; but the possession being parted with the lien is lost. Bland, Ex parte, 2 Rose, 91.

No lien on a ship or proceeds from sale of it for repairs done, except in course of a voyage ; liberty given to bring an action as to the personal liability of the part owners who received the benefit. Lord Hardwicke's decision in Doddington v. Hallet (1 Ves. 497) has been overruled, and now settled that part owners in a ship are not to be considered as partners. Buxton v. Snee, 1 Ves. 154 ; Young, Ex parte, 3 V. & B. 243.

—— Under Mortgage.]—A mortgagor of a ship, who remains in the ostensible ownership, has an implied authority to confer a right of lien for repairs to keep her seaworthy. Williams v. Allsup, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 417 ; 30 L. J., C. P. 353 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 57 ; 4 L. T. 550.

As against Admiralty Process.]—See The Harmonie, post, col. 979.

b. Of Others.

Consignees of Cargo—Lien on Cargo—Repairs.]—Consignees of cargo, who by agreement with the owner charter a ship and expend money in her to enable her to fetch the cargo, have without special agreement a lien on the cargo in the shipowner's hands for the money expended ; and one who is not consignee has under similar circumstances a similar lien, if he can arrest the cargo before it comes to the hands of the shipper. Young v. Neill, 32 Beav. 529; 2 N. R. 212; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 976; 9 L. T. 9; 11 W. R. 1052.

Disputed Ownership.]—The plaintiffs bought a ship, upon a sale by the master abroad, and repaired her. The sale was disputed, and upon her arrival in England registration in the names of the plaintiffs resisted by her owners:—Held, that assuming that the plaintiffs had acquired no legal interest by the sale, they had no lien in respect of the money laid out by them in repairs, and that the bill of sale could not operate by way of bottomry. Ridgway v. Roberts, 4 Hare, 106.

Engines of new Ship—Engineer's Lien—Possession.]—Engineers contracted with a shipbuilder to put engines into a ship he was building on her being brought to Leith. The contract provided that the engines were to be the property of the engineers until paid for in cash, but should be subject to a lien in favour of the shipbuilders for moneys or bills paid by them to the engineers; that the ship was to be at the disposal of the engineers at Leith for the purpose of putting the engines on board; that she should be taken away by the shipbuilder when the engines were on board, the engineers providing men to work them; and that the ship should "throughout be in charge of the shipbuilders." The ship was towed to Leith and handed over by the shipwright in charge to the engineers, but a master remained on board. The engineers also put a man on board and moved the ship without consulting the master:—Held, that the engineers had no lien on the ship. Ross v. Baxter, 13 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 185.

6. TONNAGE.

See cases XX. COLLISION, 7. LIMITATION OF LIABILITY, infra, col. 747.

Awning Deck.]—A vessel had an upper deck above her main deck, but such upper deck was not continuous from stem to stern of the vessel, and the hatches and other fittings in it were not water-tight:—Held, that such upper deck was not a third deck or spar deck within the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 21, sub-s. 5; and that the space between it and the main deck was not space available for cargo, or for accommodation of passengers or crew, within sub-s. 4, and consequently should not be reckoned in estimating her tonnage. Lord Advocate v. Clyde Steam Navigation Co., L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 409; 32 L. T. 287; 2 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 23; 2 Asp. M. C. 502.

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 23, provides that in every ship propelled by steam or other power requiring engine room, an allowance shall be made for the space occupied by the propelling power, and the amount so allowed shall be deducted from the gross tonnage of the ship, to be estimated as provided by that act. Sect. 29 gives power to the commissioners of customs, with the sanction of the board of trade, to make such modifications and alterations as from time to time become necessary in the tonnage rules:—Held, that the commissioners had no power to alter the provisions of the act, as to estimating the tonnage of ships. City of Dublin Steam Packet Co. v. Thompson, 1 H. & R. 369; 35 L. J., C. P. 198; L. R. 1 C. P. 355; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 726; 15 L. T. 112; 14 W. R. 876—Ex. Ch. Affirming 19 C. B. (N.S.) 553.

—— For Dues—Deck Cargo—"Goods"—Horses and Cattle.]—Horses and cattle carried as deck cargo are "goods" within the meaning of s. 23 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876. Richmond Hill Steamship Co. v. Trinity House Corporation, 65 L. J., Q. B. 561; [1896] 2 Q. B. 134; 75 L. T. 8; 45 W. R. 6; 8 Asp. M. C. 164—C. A.

The proper method of measuring the space occupied by such goods for the purpose of ascertaining the additional tonnage upon which dues are payable, is to measure a rectangular space sufficient for the animals to live in during the voyage, allowing them reasonable facilities for moving. Ib.

Re-measurement on Alteration—At what Port.]—A vessel duly registered at D. in Ireland under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, was in 1862 altered at L. in England, where a surveyor appointed under the above act certified his measurement to the surveyor at that port. The owners objected to the measurement and applied for a mandamus to the registrar at D. to have the ship re-measured:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction, since the act requires the registration to be at the port of alteration. Reg. v. Gardiner, 16 Ir. C. L. R. 349.

Closed in Space.]—The space on the main deck under a hurricane deck held not to be a "closed in space on the upper deck available for cargo or stores, or for the berthing or accommodation of passengers or crew," and therefore not to be included in the ship's measurement. Leith, Hull and Hamburg Steam Packet Co. v. Lord Advocate, 11 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 597.

II. NATIONAL CHARACTER.

Evidence.]—A ship's register, containing a statement of British ownership, even if, by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 107, made primâ facie proof of such ownership, may be outweighed by circumstantial evidence to the contrary. The Princess Charlotte, Br. & Lush. 75.

The nationality of a British ship is sufficiently proved by statements of the master and crew that she is a British ship sailing under a British flag, without proof of her having been registered; and even if it appears that she has not been registered, a prisoner charged with committing a crime on board might be convicted. Reg. v. Seberg, 39 L. J., M. C. 133; L. R. 1 C. C. 264; 22 L. T. 523; 18 W. R. 935; 11 Cox, C. C. 520.

To prove that a ship is a British ship, it is not necessary to produce the registry or a copy thereof; it is sufficient to shew orally that she belongs to British owners, and carries the British flag. Reg. v. Allen, 10 Cox, C. C. 405.

A register is not a document required by the law of nations as expressive of a ship's national character. Le Cheminant v. Pearson, 4 Taunt. 367; 13 R. R. 636.

A native of the Ionian Islands purchased an American ship, and, upon a declaration that he was a British subject, obtained from the British consul at Cuba a provisional registry of the ship as British. The ship was afterwards seized and condemned for a breach of the Slave Trade Acts. Upon an objection taken on appeal to the jurisdiction of the court below, on the ground of the national character of the owner of the ship and cargo:—Held, that the registry, flag and pass of a ship carry with them the presumption that they are true and correct, and that the owner was estopped from proving that he was not a British subject, and consequently the register of the ship was void. The Laura, 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 181; 12 L. T. 685; 13 W. R. 369.

Register no Evidence by itself that Ship is British-built.]—See Reusse v. Meyers, 3 Camp. 474, infra, col. 257.

Illegal Colours.]—A British merchant ship was boarded, having an ensign with the St. George's cross, &c., colours other than those legally worn by merchantmen, contrary to 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 105. A warrant of arrest was directed to issue against the master, upon affidavits of the facts in lieu of declarations in support of them. Reg. v. Ewen, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 454.

Concealment of British Character—Forfeiture.]—When a British subject, the owner of a British ship, by a representation to the collector of customs at the port of registry that his ship has been sold to foreigners, procures the closing of the registry, and sails her under a foreign certificate of registry and under a foreign flag, whilst he continues to own her and to receive the profits of working her, doing such acts with the intent to conceal her British character from the officers of customs, and prevent her seizure as unseaworthy, he commits an offence against the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 103, by reason of which his ship is liable to and will be condemned to forfeiture to her majesty. The Sceptre, 35 L. T. 429; 3 Asp. M. C. 269.

Forfeiture, as against bonâ fide Purchaser for Value.]—The forfeiture incurred under s. 103 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, accrues at the time of the illegal and fraudulent act, and a subsequent seizure relates back to the date of the act constituting the cause of forfeiture; and this is so even as against a bonâ fide purchaser without notice of such act. The Annandale, 47 L. J., Adm. 3; 2 P. D. 218; 37 L. T. 139, 364; 26 W. R. 38; 3 Asp. M. C. 504—C. A.

A ship, with the consent of the British owners, sailed under the Belgian flag in 1874. In 1876 the defendant bought her bonâ fide, and for valuable consideration. The ship was claimed as forfeited to the crown under s. 103 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854. The defendant pleaded his bonâ fide purchase for valuable consideration:—Held, that such sale was of no effect as against the prior forfeiture, which accrued at the time of the act of sailing under foreign colours. Ib.

In Prize Cases.]—The flag and ship's documents are conclusive as to the nationality of the ship, but not of the cargo. The Vreede Scholtys, 5 C. Rob. 5, n. The Vrow Elizabeth, 5 C. Rob. 2.

Seizure of British Ship as Prize—Action against Commander of Captor.]—No action lies against the commander of a British ship of war for seizing and detaining a vessel on suspicion of her being hostile prize. Faith v. Pearson, 6 Taunt. 439; Holt, N. P. C. 113; 16 R. R. 649.

Trover of Ship—Illegal Seizure.]—Damages recovered against a king's officer illegally commissioned to seize interlopers in the Guinea trade. Docwray v. Dickenson, Comb. 366.

1. UNDER MERCHANT SHIPPING ACTS.

a. Title by.

Evidence.]—The registry of a ship is conclusive evidence of the property; even against the claim of creditors upon a joint purchase and various acts of apparent ownership, within the Bankrupt Act (21 Jac. 1, c. 19), s. 11. Yallop, Ex parte, 15 Ves. 60; 10 R. R. 24.

The registry of a ship is conclusive evidence of the property, even between creditors; excluding all trusts created by acts of the parties, as by payment of money on a purchase in the name of another. Distinction as to trusts arising by operation of law upon bankruptcy or death. Houghton, Ex parte, Gribble, Ex parte, 17 Ves. 251; 1 Rose, 177; 11 R. R. 73.

Sale by Mortgagee.]—The purchaser from a mortgagee selling improperly after the amount due on the mortgage has been tendered to him, having registered himself as owner under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, got a good title. McLarty v. Middleton, 4 L. T. 852. Affirmed, 10 W. R. 219—C. A.

Power of Attorney given by Mortgagor.]—A., the owner of forty-eight shares in a ship belonging to the port of Liverpool, gave a power of attorney to B., the other part owner, empowering him to sell A.'s share of the ship. The ship then sailed from Liverpool under the command of B., having on board her certificate of registry and the power of attorney. While she was at sea A. mortgaged his forty-eight shares in the ship and all future freight to the plaintiffs, who had no notice of the power of attorney, and a memorandum of the mortgage was entered in the Liverpool register. Subsequently B. sold all the shares in the ship and cargo at Sydney (as to A.'s shares by virtue of the power of attorney) to C., who had no notice of the mortgage made by A. The ship was thereupon registered de novo at Sydney, and was freighted by C. at his own expense with a new cargo for England. She sailed, and arrived in London without having been to Liverpool. The plaintiffs took possession of the ship and cargo in the London docks, and gave notice at all the wharves of their claim to forty-eight shares of the ship and freight. The defendants afterwards also took possession:—Held, that the plaintiffs had the better title under the registry act to forty-eight shares of both the ship and freight, and that they had properly taken possession of them under the circumstances. Cato v. Irving, 5 De G. & Sm. 210; 21 L. J., Ch. 675; 16 Jur. 161.

Mortgage of Ship at Sea—Registration—Policy of the Registration Acts.]—Mortgage of a ship at sea, the forms required by the registry acts being observed, had valid injunction granted to restrain an improper indorsement on the register. The policy and effect of the registry acts discussed. Thompson v. Smith, 1 Mad. 395 ; see Newnham v. Graves, Barker v. Chapman, cited Ib., p. 399.

Judicial Sale of Interest.]—A purchaser under a judicial sale of a beneficial interest in a British ship is not entitled to be registered as owner of it. Chasteauneuf v. Capeyron, 51 L. J., P. C. 37 ; 7 App. Cas. 127 ; 46 L. T. 65 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 489 —P. C.

Charge on Freight—Prior Transfer of Ship.]—An owner of a ship assigned twenty-four sixty-fourth parts to A., and the remaining forty sixty-fourth parts to B., and afterwards, representing himself to be the owner of the ship, gave C. a charge upon the freight then being earned. A. registered the transfer to him prior to the date of C.'s charge, but B. did not :—Held, that C. had a lien upon the freight in priority to B. Lindsay v. Gibbs, 22 Beav. 522 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1039 ; 4 W. R. 788. See S. C., col. 393.

Held, also, that the expenses incurred in earning the freight were the first charge upon it. Ib.

Action between Co-owners—Title.]—In an action between co-owners, title to ship held good, though the Registry Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 29), s. 18, had not been complied with. Carlyle v. Macalpin, 2 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 882.

Ship Transferred to Infant Son—Arrestment—Scotch Law.]—Bell v. Gow, 1 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 183.

See also VIII. SALE AND TRANSFER, and Langton v. Horton, Parr v. Applebee, Whitfield v. Parfit, and The Eastern Belle, sub tit. MORTGAGE, infra, cols. 170, 171.

b. Foreign Owners—Foreign Ships.

Ships Owned by Company—Foreign Members.]—Semble, that the stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 55, s. 33, which authorises a particular mode of registering vessels belonging to joint-stock companies, does not apply to a joint-stock company in which foreigners are shareholders. Benson v. Heathorn, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 326.

Under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, s. 12, a corporation within the United Kingdom, some members of which were foreigners and persons residing abroad, might register ships which were the property of such corporation. Reg. v. Arnaud, 9 Q. B. 806 ; 16 L. J., Q. B. 50 ; 11 Jur. 279.

Old Registry Acts—Foreign Ships.]—A foreign-built ship, British owned, was not, under 38 Geo. 3, c. 76, s. 6, required to be registered, and might sail without convoy. Long v. Duff, 2 Bos. & P. 209.

It is not a fraud to cause a ship belonging to foreigners to be registered in the names of British subjects. Two Sicilies (King of) v. Wilcox or Peninsular and Oriental Steam Packet Co., 19 L. J., Ch. 488 ; 1 Sim. (N.S.) 334 ; 14 Jur. 751.

Where an act of the legislative council of India enabled ships "owned by British subjects" to be registered as British :—Held, that a ship once owned by foreigners, but at the date in question owned by British subjects, could be registered as British, notwithstanding the imperial registry acts, which disqualified such a ship from being registered as British. Crawford v. Spooner, 6 Moore, P. C. 1.

c. Ships owned by Partners.

Ships purchased by one partner held separate property, as between creditors, after his bankruptcy and death of the other, upon circumstances, particularly the registry being made in the name of one party only, and being afterwards continued for a fraudulent purpose. Curtis v. Perry, 6 Ves. 739 ; 6 R. R. 28.

Under a commission of bankruptcy against two partners, ship registered in the name of one of them, but in the order and disposition of both, forms part of the joint estate. Burn, Ex parte, 1 Jac. & Walk. 378 ; 21 R. R. 186.

A ship, the property of a partnership and registered in the name of the partnership, is within the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 55, s. 32, and may therefore be dealt with as any other partnership property. Howden, Ex parte, Litherland, In re, 2 Mont. D. & D. 574.

Agreement between A., B., and C. that they shall purchase ship to be registered in names of A. and B., is against public policy, and demurrer allowed to bill for account in such transaction. Battersby v. Smyth, 3 Madd. 110.

Under 6 Geo. 4, c. 110, s. 32, where a ship belonged to three partners in business and the names of two only appeared on the register, it was held that the third, whose name did not appear, had no interest in the ship. Slater v. Willis, 1 Beav. 354.

Two co-owners of a ship took two partners but executed no transfer of the ship to them :—Held, under the old registry act, that the four partners had no such legal or equitable interest in the ship as enabled them to insure her in the names of the four. Camden v. Anderson, 5 T. R. 709. And see S. C., 6 Term Rep. 725 ; 1 Bos. & P. 272.

d. Certificate.

Possession of Certificate—Jurisdiction of Chancery Court.]—See Darby v. Baines, infra, col. 46.

Vendor—Interest in.]—The vendor of a ship, with a covenant for title, retains after the sale (in order that he may fulfil his contract, and defend himself against an action brought upon his covenant) such an interest in the certificate of registry as enables him to sustain a suit for its delivery against a party unlawfully detaining it. Gibson v. Ingo, 6 Hare, 112.

Lien of Master on.]—A master has no lien on the certificate of registry, either for his wages or for moneys disbursed by him for the use of the ship ; nor have shipbrokers any lien on the certificate of registry for advances made by them to the owner for the use of the ship. Ib.

The admiralty division of the high court has power, upon the application of the owners of a ship, to order a master who has been dismissed from their employment to deliver up the certificate of registry and other papers and property belonging to the ship, where he refuses to surrender them. Semble, that a master, whether co-owner or not, can have no lien upon a certificate of registry or ship's papers in case of wrongful dismissal by the managing owners. The St. Olaf, 2 P. D. 113; 35 L. T. 428; 3 Asp. M. C. 268.

—— To secure Advances — Unregistered Owner.]—The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, s. 30, did not prevent a lien being created on a certificate of an original registry, deposited by an unregistered owner to secure advances for the use of the ship. Clarke v. Batters, 1 K. & J. 242.

—— Of Factor.]—Where a factor for the owner of a ship at an English port had, by a request to the master, obtained a certificate of registry for the alleged purpose of paying the tonnage duties at the custom-house:—Held, that he had no lien on the certificate so obtained for the general balance due to him in respect of the ship. Burn v. Brown, 2 Stark. 272; 19 R. R. 719.

—— Of Agent for Sale.]—The former ship registry acts did not prevent a person from having a lien on papers, deposited with him, of a ship which he was commissioned to sell. Mestaer v. Atkins, 5 Taunt. 381; 1 Marsh. 76.

Equitable Mortgagee.]—Where a certificate of a ship's register had been deposited as a security for advances for the use of the ship:—Held, that this gave the holder a sufficient lien to defeat an action of trover for the certificate. Bowen v. Fox, 10 B. & C. 41; 5 M. & Ry. 5; 4 Car. & P. 452; 8 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 68.

Refusal of Master to Deliver.]—After a ship had arrived at the port of discharge, but before it was discharged, the owner demanded the certificate of registry from the master, intending to dismiss him, but not communicating that intention to him:—Held, that the master was not liable to be convicted, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 50, for refusing to deliver up the certificate without a reasonable cause. Harkle or Arkle v. Henzell, 8 El. & Bl. 828; 27 L. J., M. C. 110; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 306.

A conviction under 6 Geo. 4, c. 110, s. 27, and 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 55, s. 27, for detaining the certificate of a ship's registry, was bad, unless it stated the purpose for which the certificate was wanted, and the person who demanded it was the "proper" officer. Rex v. Walsh, 3 N. & M. 632; 1 A. & E. 481; 3 L. J., M. C. 100.

Under 34 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 18, the master could not be convicted for refusing to deliver the ship's certificate of registry to the owner. Rex v. Pixley, 13 East, 91.

Pledge of.]—A pledge, by the master and sole owner of a ship, of the certificate of registry, though for a good and sufficient consideration, is illegal and void; and therefore an action will lie by the master and sole owner against the person detaining it, after a demand made upon him to return it for the purposes of navigation. Wiley v. Crawford, 1 B. & S. 253; 30 L. J., Q. B. 319; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 943; 4 L. T. 653; 9 W. R. 741—Ex. Ch.

Sale under Order of Court—Conversion of.]—An owner of a ship consigned her to persons abroad, who hypothecated her, and directed the captain to sign a bottomry bond; on her arrival in London, he, by their direction, delivered the register to the agent of the consignees, who gave it to their solicitor to institute proceedings in the court of admiralty on the bottomry bond; the ship was sold by order of that court, and the register decreed to be given up to the purchaser. The owner became bankrupt, and his assignees brought an action for the register:—Held, that they could not recover, as they might have appeared in the admiralty court and prevented the sale of the vessel, and as the delivery of the register to the purchaser, under the decree of that court, was not a conversion. Hassack v. Masson, 4 Moore, 361.

Possession of Certificate.]—Sale by mortgagee whilst ship under agreement between mortgagor and a company to run as one of the company's liners. See The Celtic King, post, tit. IX. MORTGAGE, col. 182.

—— Admiralty Court.]—The admiralty court would not formerly interfere to give possession of a ship's register to a person whose title is in doubt. The Frances of Leith, 2 Dods. 420.

e. Improper Registration.

Liability for Goods supplied.]—The registered owners of a ship are primâ facie alone liable for goods supplied, though so registered without their knowledge. Machell, Ex parte, 2 Ves. & B. 216; 1 Rose, 447.

Fraudulent Registration—Relief in Equity.]—A bill stated that the vendors of a ship executed a bill of sale to a purchaser, which was to be handed to him upon his paying the consideration in a manner stipulated, but that he took it away with some other paper, as it was supposed, by mistake, and afterwards returned it, saying, he could not comply with the terms. The bill further alleged, that the plaintiffs, the vendors, had discovered that the defendant, the purchaser, had taken advantage of his accidental possession of the document, to make himself the registered owner of the ship, and was about to sail in her:—Held, that the alleged fraud would not enable the court to interfere, and a demurrer to the bill was allowed. Follett v. Delany, 2 De G. & Sm. 235; 17 L. J., Ch. 254; 12 Jur. 549.

Where a person, having no title to a ship, procures it to be registered in his name, the court will compel him to retransfer it to the rightful owner, and account for the earnings, even though there has been no fraud, and notwithstanding the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104. Holderness v. Lamport, 29 Beav. 129; 30 L. J., Ch. 489; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 564; 9 W. R. 327.

—— Gives no Title.]—Under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 79, the registry of a bill of sale, which though purporting to be valid, so that the registrar has no alternative but to register it, is in fact invalid, and gives no title, even at law, to the person thereby registered as sole owner of the ship. Orr v. Dickinson, 1 Johns. 1; 28 L. J., Ch. 516; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 672.

Therefore where a bill of sale, though executed by the person named for that purpose by the plaintiff, the then owner of the ship, and purporting in all other respects to be made in conformity with the certificate of sale, was, in fact, made for less than the minimum price specified in the certificate, and the ship was registered in the name of the purchaser as sole owner:—Held, that the registry was void; and the ship having been sold by arrangement pending a suit, that the plaintiff was entitled to the net proceeds of the sale. Ib.

Quære, whether under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 79, and 18 & 19 Vict., c. 91, s. 10, the court of chancery has jurisdiction to interfere with a title required at law by the registration of a valid bill of sale of a ship. Ib.

The 65th section of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, does not deprive the court of chancery of its ordinary jurisdiction to protect property during litigation. Ib.

Relief in Equity.]—Equitable relief may be given against the registered owner of a ship in cases of fraud. Armstrong v. Armstrong, infra.

Improper Registration abroad.]—Two British subjects, H. and B., owned an American built ship, which, in fraud of the American law, they caused to be registered in America in the name of C., an American citizen. After she had made several voyages between England and America, B. excluded A. from his share in the ship's earnings and against his will sent her on a further voyage to America:—Held, that assuming the registration and trading of the ship were contrary to American registration and British navigation law, A. was nevertheless entitled to an account and payment of his share of the ship's earnings, and that B. would be personally liable in case the ship or her proceeds were not forthcoming. Sharp v. Taylor, 2 Ph. 801.

Improper Indorsement—Injunction.]—Mortgage of ship at sea (the form of Registry Act being observed) held valid, and injunction granted to prevent an improper indorsement on certificate of registry of ship. Thompson v. Smith, 1 Madd. 395; and see Rex v. Collector of Customs, post, col. 44.

Agreement to Purchase—Improper Registration.]—Agreement between A., B. and C., that they shall purchase ship to be registered in names of A. and B., is against public policy, and demurrer allowed to bill for account in such transaction. Battersby v. Smyth, 3 Madd. 110.

Propriety of Registration—Evidence.]—The registry is conclusive as to the ship being in a fit state to be registered under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, although there may be evidence to shew that the ship was not completed at the time of registry. Coombes v. Mansfield, 3 Drew. 193; 3 Eq. R. 566; 24 L. J., Ch. 513; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 270; 3 W. R. 345.

Sale by Mortgagee—Discharge of Mortgage—Invalid Transfer—Registration of New Transfer.]—In 1888 a mortgagee of shares in a ship sold them for the amount of the mortgage debt. A discharge of the mortgage and bills of sale in favour of the purchaser were at the same time entered on the register. The bills of sale were not properly executed, and in 1892 the mortgagee granted new bills of sale. The purchaser tendered these for registration, but the mortgagor having claimed the shares, the registrar refused to register the new bills of sale:—Held, that an order should go to the registrar to enter them on the register. Duthie v. Aiken, 20 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 241.

Wrong Name.]—The name of a vessel was the "City of Bruxelles," and was so described in a mortgage. It was registered by the owner and by the mortgagee as the "City of Brussels":—Held, that the misdescription did not vitiate or affect the validity of the registration. Bell v. Bank of London, 3 H. & N. 730; 28 L. J., Ex. 116.

Mandamus to Register.]—See Rex v. Liverpool Collector of Customs, 2 M. & S. 223, post, col. 44.

f. Equitable Interests.

Proceeds of Sale of Ship.]—The policy of the Ship Registry Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 89), in disregarding interests not appearing on the register, is inapplicable both to the money arising from the sale of a ship, and to the produce of the freight. Armstrong v. Armstrong, 3 Eq. Rep. 973; 21 Beav. 78; 24 L. J., Ch. 659; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 859; 3 W. R. 563. S. C., on motion for injunction, 2 W. R. 678.

When a party who appears on the registry to be the absolute owner of a ship, enters into an agreement for valuable consideration, admitting he is a trustee, and engaging to sell the ship, and hand over the produce to the true owner, the court, notwithstanding 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, ss. 34–39, will enforce the agreement. Ib.

Shares in a ship purchased with A.'s money were registered in B.'s name. After A.'s death, B. entered into an agreement with his representatives, admitting their right, and for valuable consideration agreeing to sell the shares at the end of twelve months, and to account to the representatives for the proceeds. B. accordingly sold to C.:—Held, that though the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, prevented the representatives enforcing any right against the ship itself, still that they were entitled to recover the purchase-money in the hands of C. Ib.

Between the date of a bill of sale of shares of a ship, and the entry of the transfer on the register, the purchaser had notice that the vendor, though the shares were registered in his name, was a trustee. The case presenting a primâ facie appearance of fraud, the court granted an interim injunction to restrain the purchaser from dealing with the shares or indorsing the transfer on the certificate of registry, so as to insure the effective determination of the questions at the hearing. S. C., 21 Beav. 71.

There is nothing in the policy of the Ship Registry Acts to prevent a third party not having any registered share in a ship from acquiring from the owner an interest in the proceeds of the sale of the ship in the hands of a purchaser, when the ship shall have been sold, the court not being required to recognise any interest in such third person in the ship itself, semble. M'Calmont v. Rankin, 8 Hare, 1; 19 L. J., Ch. 215; 14 Jur. 475.

But whether, under a contract by which a party has an interest in the proceeds of the sale of a ship, such party can compel the owner to sell the ship, or obtain a decree for the sale, quære. Ib.

The provisions of the Ship Registry Acts apply equally to contracts as to sales; and the whole frame of these acts negatives any equity resulting out of the doctrine of notice. An unregistered agreement, therefore, with the registered owner of a ship, which the owner subsequently transfers for value to another person who has notice of the agreement, cannot be enforced either as against the ship or its proceeds. S. C., 2 De G. M. & G. 403; 22 L. J., Ch. 554.

Non-registration of mortgage held not to affect mortgagee's title to proceeds of sale of ship. Lister v. Payn, 11 Sim. 348.

Unregistered Assignment — No Relief in Equity.]—An assignment of a ship by way of mortgage, which is defective by not having complied with the old registry act, cannot be made good in equity. Bulteel, Ex parte, 2 Cox, 243; 2 R. R. 39.

Jurisdiction of Chancery Courts.]—By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, the court has jurisdiction over equitable rights of mortgagees and owners. Samuel v. Jones, 7 L. T. 760.

The vendor sold a share in a ship, executed the bill of sale, and gave a receipt for the purchase-money, though it had not been paid. Relief given in equity. Ryle v. Haggie, 1 Jac. & Walk. 234.

Contract for Sale—Specific Performance.]—According to the proper construction to be put upon the 34th section of 8 & 9 Vict. c 89, a court of equity will not enforce specific performance of a contract for the purchase of a ship, although such contract does not affect to make a transfer of the ship, but is merely executory. Quære, whether an action may not now be maintained at law on such a contract, although it would have been void under the old registry acts (26 Geo. 3, c. 60, and 34 Geo. 3, c. 68). Hughes v. Morris, 2 De G. M. & G. 349; 21 L. J., Ch. 761; 16 Jur. 603.

Bill for specific performance of contract to buy ship dismissed. Brewster v. Clarke, 2 Mar. 75.

The act 54 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 15, applied to an executory contract for sale of a ship. Mortimer v. Fleming, 4 B. & C. 120; 6 D. & R. 176.

Trust for Sale.]—An executory trust for sale of a ship cannot be enforced (under the old registry act). Hodgson v. Brown, 2 B. & Ald. 427.

Account of Freights—Purchaser unregistered—Payment out of Freights.]—An account of freights grounded on a contract for the sale of the ship, which was to be paid for out of freights received by the purchaser, taken in equity; although the ship was not registered in the name of the purchaser, and although (under the old Registry Acts, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 55, and 6 Geo. 4, c. 110) he had no equitable interest in the ship. Davenport v. Whitmore, 2 Myl. & Cr. 177.

Possession.—G. having entered into a contract for the purchase of a ship not binding under the registry acts, agreed with the plaintiff that he should set up engines in her, to be paid for at a specified price if a certain speed was attained, but if not, to be removed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff, with the knowledge and approbation of Y., the registered owner, set up the engines, which did not enable the vessel to attain the required speed. Y. then refused either to pay the stipulated price or allow the plaintiff to remove the engines:—Held, that the plaintiff's remedy against Y., if any, was at law, and that there was no ground for equitable interference. Rennie v. Young, 2 De G. & J. 136; 27 L. J., Ch. 753.

Unregistered Mortgagee—Right to Restrain Sale.]—Where the mortgagee of a ship omitted to procure the indorsement on the certificate of registry as required by the registry act, and after that period the registered owner became bankrupt:—Held, that he had no equitable right to restrain the assignees from sale of the ship, distinct from his legal right, and depending upon the rule of law regarding the bankrupt's having the order and disposition. Campbell v. Thompson, 2 Hare, 140; 7 Jur. 59.

High Court of Admiralty.]—Under the Registry Act of 1839, the high court of admiralty, in a cause of possession, refused to regard equitable interest in a ship. The Valiant, 1 W. Rob. 64.

And see, tit. TRANSFER AND SALE, post.

8. Old Registry Acts.

Transfer of a share in a ship to another part owner, void by not procuring the indorsement upon the certificate, within the time prescribed by the registry acts after the arrival of the ship. Speldt v. Lechmere, 13 Ves. 588.

The bill of sale passes the alsolute property in a ship at sea, subject only to be devested in case the indorsement on the certificate of registry not being made within ten days after the return of the ship to port; power of attorney to sign an indorsement on a certificate not revoked by bankruptcy of the vendor, subsequently to the execution of the power, but previously to the indorsement, being a power only to do a mere formal act, which the bankrupt himself might have been compelled to execute, notwithstanding his bankruptcy, and for a valuable consideration; therefore, in this case, the indorsement on the certificate being made within the ten days, under a power of attorney, the grantor of which had since become bankrupt:—Held, a sufficient compliance with the terms of the registry act. Dixon v. Ewart, 3 Mer. 322; Buck. 94.

Sale of a ship at sea valid, notwithstanding the bankruptcy of the vendor before her arrival in port; and, therefore, before the title is complete by the indorsement on the certificate of registry, if the other requisites of the ship registry act were previously complied with. Mestaer v. Gillespie, 11 Ves. 639; 8 R. R. 261.

Whether, the legal title under an assignment of a share in a ship failing under the Ship Registry Acts (26 Geo. 3, c. 60, 34 Geo. 3, c. 88), or for want of the indorsement upon the certificate, within ten days after the return of the ship to port, if that was prevented by fraud, relief can be had in equity, sed quære, in what form, and quære whether it may not be had as to the freight, if not as to the ship, though both were comprised in the same bill of sale. Ib. 621.

Sale of a share of a ship is good without actual delivery. Whether an executory agreement for the sale of a ship must recite the registry under the 26 Geo. 3, c. 18, s. 17, quære. Addis v. Baker, 1 Anstr. 222. See 6 R. R. 28, n.

If on sale of a ship there is no bill of sale or indorsement of certificate of registry, no relief can be given in equity on ground of accident or fraud. Thompson v. Leake, 1 Madd. 39.

The old registry acts did not apply to transfers by operation of law. Bloxam v. Hubbard, 5 East, 407.

Until registration, the bill of sale had no legal existence. Boyson v. Gibson, 4 C. B. 122; 16

L. J., C. P. 147; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 150; 3 L. T. 494; 9 W. R. 292..

A bill of sale of a ship was made a collateral security, and the papers, &c., delivered, but there was no recital in the bill of sale of the registry, pursuant to act 26 Geo. 3, c. 60. This cannot be supplied against assignee of a bankrupt, and bill for that purpose dismissed. Hibbert v. Rolleston, 3 Bro. C. C. 571.

The non-registration of a ship, required by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, ss. 37, 38, by the first purchaser, did not affect the title of a subsequent bonâ fide purchaser. The Australia, Lapraik v. Burrows, 13 Moore, P. C. 132.

Sale of ship at sea; non-registration until after bankruptcy of vendor:—Held, invalid as against assignees of vendor. Moss v. Charnock, 2 East, 399.

Mortgage of ship held invalid where registry act, 26 Geo. 3, c. 60, not complied with. Bulteel, Ex parte, 2 Cox, 243.

The application of the doctrine as to order and disposition not affected by the old registry acts. Hay v. Fairfield, 2 B. & Ald. 193.

Two ships and sixteen sixty-fourths of a third were (in 1830) mortgaged, whilst the ships were at sea, to W. & Co.; the bill of sale was registered by the customs officers at the ships' port before their return to port. One ship afterwards returned, but no indorsement under 6 Geo. 4, c. 110, s. 39, was made on her register. After being insured she sailed on a fresh voyage within thirty days and was lost. But a subsequent bill of sale, to which W. & Co. were parties, after reciting the prior mortgage, the mortgagor assigned the same ships and shares, with policies upon two ships, and the sum payable under a charter of the third, with all his equity of redemption, &c., subject to the prior mortgage to W. & Co. This bill of sale was registered before the return to port of any of the ships. The mortgagor became bankrupt. Two of the ships returned, and upon their certificates of registry were duly indorsed within thirty days the two bills of sale in order of their date:—Held, that the second bill of sale was valid under 6 Geo. 4, c. 110, ss. 31, 37, against the assignees of the bankrupt, although the mortgagor became bankrupt within thirty days of the ships' arrival in port; and the same as to the policy and charter-party moneys. Jones, Ex parte, Richardson, In re, 2 Tyr. 671; 2 C. & J. 513; 1 L. J., Ex. 218.

Where A., having contracted for a ship to be built for him in the East Indies, agreed during the time of the building to sell a share to B., and B. paid a part of the price in pursuance of the agreement, and afterwards, on the ship's arrival in England, A. caused her to be registered, and accounted with B. as part owner; but B.'s name was never on the register as part owner:—Held, that B. had no legal interest in the ship. Stringer v. Murray, 2 B. & Ald. 248.

The old registry acts precluded any application of the equitable doctrine of notice. Coombes v. Mansfield, 3 Eq. Rep. 566; 3 Drew. 94; 24 L. J., Ch. 513; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 270; 3 W. R. 345. S. P., McCalmont v. Rankin, 2 De G. M. & G. 403; 22 L. J., Ch. 554; 14 Jur. 475.

A bill for an account of the earnings of a ship described some of the owners as resident in England and the others in India, and stated the ship to have been built by B. & Co., of Newcastle; but it did not contain any positive averment that the ship was British built:—Held, that for want of such averment, a demurrer founded on the ship registry acts could not be supported. Smith v. Small, 14 Sim. 119.

The following cases were decided upon points arising under the old registry acts:—Kirby v. Hodgson, 2 D. & Ry. 848; 1 B. & C. 588. Biddell v. Leader, 1 B. & C. 327. Campbell v. Stein, 6 Dow. 116. Palmer v. Moxon, 2 M. & S. 43. Mair v. Glennie, 4 M. & S. 240; 16 R. R. 145. Jones, Ex parte, 4 Man. & G. 150. Cole v. Doyle, 12 East, 471. Batson, Ex parte, 3 Bro. C. C. 362. Monkhouse v. Hay, 8 Price, 256; 4 Moore, C. P. 549; 2 Br. & B. 114. Stadgroom, Ex parte, 1 Ves. 163. Liverpool Borough Bank v. Turner, 30 L. J., Ch. 379; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 150; 3 L. T. 494—L. C. Parr v. Applebee, 7 De G. h. Miscellaneous.

When Unnecessary.]—It was decided under the repealed statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, that if a vessel under fifteen tons burden, navigating on the coast of the United Kingdom, was registered by her owner, a British subject, he might transfer it to another British subject without any instrument in writing, or fresh registry, for s. 34 of that statute did not apply, inasmuch as 8 & 9 Vict. c. 88, ss. 13, 14, the original registration was unnecessary. Benyon v. Cresswell, 12 Q. B. 899; 18 L. J., Q. B. 1; 12 Jur. 1086.

Condemned Ships.]—The purchaser of a ship, which appeared by the sentence of condemnation in the vice-admiralty court abroad to have been taken and condemned for being engaged in the slave trade, was not entitled to register such ship at the custom-house under 26 Geo. 3, c. 60, as the owner of a ship taken and condemned as lawful prize, although he produced a certificate from the judge of the court abroad, certifying that she was condemned as lawful prize. Rex v. London Collector of Customs, 1 M. & S. 262.

Jurisdiction—Registration in Scotland.]—The registration of a ship in Scotland is no ground of jurisdiction over an English shareholder in an action of set and sale. Anderson v. Sillars, 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 105.

Assignment of Barge—Whether Registration required.]—See Gapp v. Bond, post, col. 156.

Liability for Repairs—Evidence of Ownership.]—See OWNERS, infra.

2. REGISTRATION AT LLOYDS'.

Negligent Classification—Right of—Purchaser relying on.]—The defendants, the trustees of Lloyds' Register of Shipping, had on the request of the owners of the "Midas," caused her to be surveyed, and issued a certificate in the usual form that she was efficient and that she had been entered on the register as A 1 for seven years. The survey fees were paid by her owners. The plaintiff, relying on this certificate, bought the "Midas" from her owner. She was in fact defective, and the plaintiff in consequence suffered damage. It was admitted for the purposes of the action that the survey had been negligently made, and that but for such negligence the plaintiff would not have sustained damage:—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover against the defendants, as there was no contract between them and the plaintiff, and no fraudulent misrepresentation. The Midas, Bragington v. Chapman, 7 Asp. M. C. 77, n. See also S. P., Thiodon v. Tindall, 60 L. J., Q. B. 526; 65 L. T. 343; 40 W. R. 141; 7 Asp. M. C. 76, infra, col. 151.

Removal of Ship from her Class—Damage.]—A shipowner whose ship was removed from her class by Lloyds' in consequence of non-compliance with a new rule passed with reference to scuppers, sued Lloyd's for damages:—Held, that there was no contract and that the action failed. Henderson v. Lloyds' Register of British and Foreign Shipping, 6 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 835.

Suspension of Class—Right to notify Non-registry.]—Upon a motion for an injunction by subscribers to an association called the Underwriters' Registry, who had had a ship registered by the association in the highest class, to restrain the committee of the association from inserting, after a subsequent survey allowed by the plaintiffs, in their published registry of ships the words, "class suspended" against the plaintiffs' ship:—Held, that the committee was justified in notifying to their subscribers and the public their honest opinion as to the merits of the ship, and had a right to suspend the class until the plaintiffs should have altered the ship according to their requirements. Clover v. Royden, 43 L. J., Ch. 665; L. R. 17 Eq. 190; 29 L. T. 639; 22 W. R. 254.

Production of Documents—Action in Scotland—Commission against Chairman and Secretary of Lloyds'.] — There is no jurisdiction under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 82, s. 5, or otherwise, for a judge in chambers to order the chairman and secretary of Lloyds', not being parties to the action in Scotland to appear before a commissioner appointed by the Scotch court for examination or to produce documents specified in the commission. Burchard v. McFarlane, Ex parte, Tindall and Dryhurst, 60 L. 1. WHO ARE.

a. Evidence of Ownership—The Register.

Action on Contract made by Master.]—The register is by itself no evidence of ownership, so as to fix the party whose name appears thereon with liability for contracts entered into by the master on behalf of the ship. Myers v. Willis, 18 C. B. 886; 25 L. J., C. P. 255; 4 W. R. 637; Ex. Ch. S. P., Pearson v. Nell, 12 L. T. 607; 13 W. R. 967, infra, col. 64.

Action for Goods supplied.]—In an action against several for stores supplied to a ship by order of the captain, the register obtained on the oath of one is primâ facie evidence of ownership against all. Stokes v. Carne, 2 Camp. 339.

A declaration of ownership in a ship is primâ facie proof of ownership without the registry, and though the party has ceased to be owner: yet if he has been present when the work was done, giving directions about it, that will be evidence of liability for repairs. Tibbald v. Wood, 1 F. & F. 287.

But the bare production of a register containing the names of several owners will not be evidence to support a plea in abatement by one of them of nonjoinder of the others in an action against him alone. Flower v. Young, 3 Camp. 240. And see Ditchburn v. Spracklin, 5 Esp. 31.

Proof of the execution of a bill of sale of a ship to the defendant is not evidence to charge him as an owner with stores furnished to the ship, without shewing his assent to such sale. Tinkler v. Walpole, 14 East, 226. S. P., Cooper v. South, 4 Taunt. 802.

A person registered as owner without his knowledge held liable for goods supplied to the ship. Machell, Ex parte, 2 V. & B. 216; 1 Rose, 447.

In an action against the owner of a ship for stores supplied to her, the register purporting to be granted on the oath of the defendant, and stating him to be sole owner, is no evidence of ownership. Smith v. Fogo, 3 Camp. 456.

The fact of a person being the registered owner of a ship, is not of itself evidence that the master has authority to bind him by contracts for necessaries supplied to the ship, but it must be shewn that the master is his agent for that purpose. Mackenzie v. Pooley, 11 Ex. 638; 25 L. J., Ex. 124; 4 W. R. 262.

Where a ship sailed for a foreign port, the master having a power of attorney from the owner, and whilst the ship was at the port, the defendant purchased it:—Held, that he did not thereby become liable for necessaries supplied to the ship by order of the master. Ib.

The registered owner of a ship is primâ facie liable for goods furnished for the use of that ship, but such liability may be rebutted by evidence of the credit having been given to others. Cox v. Reid, 1 Car. & P. 602; R. & M. 199. See also Cases ante, cols. 15, seq.

Liability while on Register.]—Where there were two joint owners of a ship, and one, by private agreement, parted with all his interest in his share to the other, to be paid for by bills at different dates, but kept his name on the register by way of collateral security for the payment of the bills:—Held, that he was liable for repairs done to the ship subsequently to such agreement, although he had never afterwards interfered in the concern or management of the vessel. Dowson v. Leake, D. & R., N. P. C. 52.

In order to charge a party, by reason of his name appearing on the ship's register as part owner, for repairs done to the ship, it must distinctly appear that they were done upon his credit, and that the order for them was given with his authority, express or implied. Curling v. Robertson, 8 Scott (N.R.) 12; 7 Man. & G. 336; 13 L. J., C. P. 137.

Where a party takes a share in a ship under a conveyance which is void for want of conformity with the provisions of the registry acts he is not liable to pay for goods supplied for her use, unless credit is given to him individually, or he has held himself out as owner, or unless he has made an express promise to pay, or has received profits from the ship. Harrington v. Fry, 9 Moore, 344; 2 Bing. 179; 1 Car. & P. 289; R. & M. 90; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 244.

The mere fact of a man's being registered as a part owner of a ship, under an absolute bill of sale, which was in fact given as security for advances, does not give the owner or the master (appointed by his co-owner) authority to pledge his credit for necessary repairs. Hackwood v. Lyall, 17 C. B. 124; 25 L. J., C. P. 44, n.; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 44, n. S. P., Rands v. Thomas, 5 M. & S. 244, infra, col. 64.

The vendor of a ship for a month after the sale neglected to have the register indorsed pursuant to 34 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 15, remaining on the register as legal owner. Repairs were meanwhile ordered by the vendee. Held, that the vendor was not liable for them. Young v. Brander, 8 East, 10. S. P., McIver v. Humble, 16 East, 169.

—— Liability for Wages.]—Owners at Liverpool conveyed the ship to others and the certificate of registry was indorsed by the proper officer at Liverpool. The officer in London to whom the certificate was transmitted failed to enter the indorsement at the custom house in London:—Held, that the former owners were not liable for seamen's wages earned after the conveyance. Ratchford v. Meadows, 3 Esp. 69.

Bankruptcy of Owner—Collision—Application by Shipwright to have Sums found due in Admiralty Action paid out.]—See The Endeavour, XX. COLLISION, post, col. 729.

Evidence of Ownership in Criminal Cases.]—A murder was committed on board a ship on the high seas sailing under the British flag, and the accused was brought to England in custody, and put on his trial for the crime. To shew jurisdiction in the courts of this country, it was sought to establish that the ship was a British ship, and the register of the ship at the port of London was put in, wherein the owner's name was stated to be C. A. Rehder, of 14, London Street, city of London, merchant. Rehder was alien born, and it did not appear that he was a denizen of this country or naturalised. The ship was foreign built, and the officers and crew, including the accused, were foreigners:—Held, that although the register might be primâ facie evidence of the facts stated therein, and that the ship was a British ship, yet the proof that the owner was alien born rebutted the inference from the register that he was a British subject, and he was therefore disqualified by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 18, from being the owner of a British ship. Reg. v. Bjornsen, L. & C. 545; 34 L. J., M. C. 180; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 589; 12 L. T. 473; 13 W. R. 664; 10 Cox, C. C. 74.

Held, also, that it would not be presumed that he was denizened or naturalised. Ib.

Entry in the book of registry pursuant to 6 Geo. 4, c. 110, s. 37, of the bill of sale of part of a ship held sufficient evidence of ownership in a criminal case. Rex v. Philp, 1 M. C. C. 263.

Bill for Discovery of Owners.] — Bill in chancery for discovery of the part owners of a ship to enable the plaintiff to sue at law for destruction of his goods on board by fire. Morse v. Buckworth, 2 Vern. 443. S. P., Heathcote v. Fleete, 2 Vern. 442.

Injury to Person—Liability.]—A ship, of which the defendant was the registered owner, was laid up in dock under the charge of a shipkeeper, by whom one of the hatchways was negligently left open, whereby the plaintiff, who was lawfully passing over the deck of the ship, fell through the hatchway and was injured. At the trial of an action to recover compensation, it did not appear by whom the shipkeeper was appointed, and the only evidence to charge the defendant with liability was the ship's register, in which he was described as owner:—Held, by Blackburn and Lush, JJ. (dissentiente, Mellor, J.), that this was primâ facie evidence, from which, if unrebutted, they might infer that the shipkeeper was appointed by the defendant. Hibbs v. Ross, 9 B. & S. 655; 35 L. J., Q. B. 193; L. R. 1 Q. B. 534; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 812; 15 L. T. 67; 14 W. R. 914.

Evidence of Possession.]—Property in a ship must be proved by evidence of possession in the plaintiff, his vendors or bailees, accompanied with a certificate of registry. Pirie v. Anderson, 4 Taunt. 652; 3 Camp. 242. And see Paterson v. Hardacre, 4 Taunt. 115.

Registered Owner—Denial of Interest.]—A., whose name has been registered as the part owner of a vessel on the oath of B., and has afterwards conveyed such share by deed to B., covenanting for the goodness of his title, cannot be admitted to prove by the evidence of B. that he has in fact no interest in the vessel. Nickson v. Thomas, 1 Stark. 85. And see Watson v. Shelley, 1 Term Rep. 301.

b. Other Evidence.

Parol.]—If a plaintiff in trover for a ship sought to prove his title by the register and failed:—Held, that he could not afterwards prove a possessory title by parol evidence. Sherriff v. Cadell, 2 Esp. 616.

Ownership in an action upon a policy may be proved by parol evidence. Robertson v. French, 4 East, 130; 4 Esp. 246; 7 R. R. 535.

Appearance in Action.]—In an action against the owners of a ship it is primâ facie evidence of ownership to produce an undertaking to appear for them, given before the commencement of the action, by the person who subsequently acted as their attorney in defending it, in which he describes them as owners without further proof of agency. Marshall v. Cliff, 4 Camp. 133.

Declaration of Ownership.]—A declaration of ownership held to be primâ facie evidence of ownership without the register. Tribbald v. Wood, 1 F. & F. 287.

Bill of Sale—Defeasance.]—If there is a bill of sale of a ship not containing any qualification, and such unqualified bill of sale is entered properly on the register, and there is also a deed of defeasance, making void such bill of sale on the payment of a sum of money, the deed of defeasance may be given in evidence on the part of the defendant, in an action for goods on his liability as the registered owner, in order to shew the qualified nature of his ownership. Cox v. Reid, 1 Car. & P. 602; Ry. & M. 199.

c. Generally.

Dispossessing Owners on Register.] — The court cannot look behind a ship's register for the purpose of dispossessing an innocent purchaser for value whose name is on the register. The Horlock, 47 L. J., Adm. 5; 2 P. D. 243; 36 L. T. 622; 3 Asp. M. C. 421.

Co-ownership Action—Owners on Register—Jurisdiction — Admiralty Court Act, 1861.]—Quære, whether s. 8 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, giving the admiralty court jurisdiction to decide questions between co-owners, is not confined to questions between registered co-owners. The Bonnie Kate, 57 L. T. 203; 6 Asp. M. C. 149, infra, col. 48.

Infant Shipowner—Guardian.]—See Michael v. Fripp, infra, col. 160.

Within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 147, sub-s. 1—Contract to purchase a Share, Effect of.]—A person who, though not a registered owner, has entered into a contract enforceable in equity for the purchase of a share of a ship, is an owner within the meaning of s. 147, sub-s. 1, of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104. Hughes v. Sutherland, 50 L. J., Q. B. 567; 7 Q. B. D. 170; 45 L. T. 287; 29 W. R. 867; 4 Asp. M. C. 459; 46 J. P. 6.

Ship forfeited—Trover.]—The owner of a ship forfeited for breach of the Navigation Act (12 Car. 2, c. 18), could not maintain trover for the ship against the seizor. Wilkins v. Despard, 5 Term Rep. 112; 2 R. R. 559.

Ships captured in War—Ownership.]—At common law the subject is entitled to all that he can take in time of war from the king's enemies—per Wright, J. Morrough v. Comyns, 1 Wils. 211.

A British ship captured by the enemy and taken into his port is presumed to have been condemned, and the title of the former owner divested. The Countess of Lauderdale, 4 C. Rob. 283.

Any subject of her majesty may seize an enemy's ship, but she does not thereby become the prize of the seizor. The Johanna Emilia, 1 Spinks, 317.

Ships captured in war belong to the crown. The Elsebe, 5 C. Rob. 173, 181.

Admiralty Jurisdiction in Prize.]—Prize or no prize cannot be tried at common law; it is triable only before the judge of the admiralty by the law of nations. Mitchell v. Rodney, 2 Br. P. C. 423.

2. PART OWNERS.

a. Are Tenants in Common.

Part owners of a ship are tenants in common, not joint tenants; the other partners have no lien therefore on the share of one, a bankrupt having been also managing owner for outfit, freight, &c. Young, Ex parte, 2 V. & B. 242; 2 Rose, 78, n.; 13 R. R. 78.

The owners of a ship are not interested in it as joint tenants, but as tenants in common; upon a bankruptcy, therefore, the bankrupt's share passes to the creditors under the bankruptcy, without being liable specifically to the claims of the other part owners in respect of their disbursements and liabilities for the ship. Harrison, Ex parte, 2 Rose, 76.

Part owners are tenants in common of a ship, but jointly interested in her use and employment; and the law as to the earnings of a ship, whether as freight, cargo or otherwise, follows the general law of partnership. Green v. Briggs, 6 Hare, 395; 17 L. J., Ch. 323; 12 Jur. 326.

A mandamus to the officers of customs to register a ship transferred by the survivor of two part owners, merchants, was refused on the ground that the executors of the deceased part owner ought to have joined in the transfer. Rex v. Liverpool (Collector of Customs), 2 M. & S. 223.

A mortgagee of a ship agreed with one of the part owners that he would pay all disbursements of a voyage, and in consideration was to have the proceeds of the freight handed over to him, in priority of all other charges. He failed to advance any money, and the part owner was obliged to do so instead. Both having become bankrupt and the ship having been sold:—Held, that the assignees of the mortgagee were entitled to their full share of the proceeds, as, though he had not fulfilled his contract, yet the ownership of a vessel is in common and not joint, and this agreement and dealing had not made it joint; and that the part owner had no claim on the share of the mortgagee for his advances. Leslie, Ex parte, Drury, In re, 3 L. J., Bk. 4.

A surviving merchant, who claimed a joint interest in a ship with another who was dead, sued the defendant for detaining the ship; plea in bar; judgment for the plaintiff; the plea should have been in abatement. Kempe v. Andrews, 3 Lev. 290; Carth. 170.

A master sued in chancery for 10*l.*, due to him on account of the ship, the executor of a deceased part owner:—Held, that the other part owner must be a party. Pierson v. Robinson, 3 Swanst. 139.

Are not Partners.]—Part owners in a ship are not as such partners. Buxton v. Snee, 1 Ves. Sen. 155. And see Helme v. Smith, infra.

Part owners formerly held to have a lien on the shares of their co-owners for payments made for goods supplied to the ship. Doddington v. Hallett, 1 Ves. Sen. 496. But this overruled, see Ib., Suppl. 87; 2 V. & B. 242. Young, Ex parte, supra. Green v. Briggs, supra. Harrison, Ex parte, supra.

May be Joint Tenants of a Share.]—Two or more persons may hold a share in a ship jointly. Rex v. Philp, 1 M. C. C. 263.

b. Rights and Liabilities between themselves.

Application of Freight — Ship's Outfit.]—A part owner of a ship has a right to require the gross freight to be applied, in the first place, in payment of the expense of the outfit of the ship for the voyage in which the freight was earned, nothwithstanding he might sue his co-owners for their proportion of the expenses before the adventure ends. Green v. Briggs, 6 Hare, 395; 17 L. J., Ch. 323; 12 Jur. 326.

The same rule applies to the expenses of repairs to the hull of the ship, where such repairs were done with a view to the particular adventure in which the earnings were made, and without which that adventure could not have been undertaken. Ib.

Where Part Mortgaged.]—A part owner of a ship, whose share was subject to a mortgage, agreed with the other part owner (whose share was not subject to any mortgage), but without the concurrence of the mortgagee, to purchase guano on the joint account of the two part owners, and bring it in the ship to England. On the completion of the voyage, and when the cargo was about to be discharged, the mortgagee took possession:—Held, that he had no claim against the owner of the mortgaged share for freight, and could, at the utmost, only claim to adopt the mortgagor's contract, and stand in his place as the profits of the adventure, after deducting all expenses. Alexander v. Simms, 5 De G. M. & G. 57; 23 L. J., Ch. 721; 2 W. R. 329. See S. C., infra.

Ship owned by Partners.]—If the names of two partners in trade appear on the certificate of registry as owners of a ship, the registry acts do not prevent the shewing how and in what proportions the several owners are respectively entitled; and though the partners may derive title under different conveyances, yet, if their shares were purchased with the partnership funds, and treated by them as partnership property, and the partners became bankrupts, these shares will be considered as the joint property. Jones, Ex parte, 4 M. & S. 450.

A ship was purchased by a partner for himself, but was paid for out of the partnership assets. The firm became bankrupt:—Held, that the firm had no interest in the ship, or any lien on it for the amount of the purchase-money. Walton v. Butler, 29 Beav. 428.

Interest of Unregistered Partner of Registered Owner.]—See Campden v. Anderson, REGISTRATION, supra, col. 30.

Ship's Expenses—How Recovered.]—A. and others agreed to run a vessel during the winter between two places, and to share profits and pay expenses ratably according to the capital subscribed by each; if the ship's earnings should be insufficient to keep A. in funds, each of the subscribers to pay A. from time to time instalments of the capital subscribed. The ship's earnings were insufficient to meet her expenses, which were paid by A.:—Held, that the proper form of action for the recovery of such expenses was an action against the other subscribers for breach of the contract to pay up the instalments. Brown v. Tapscott, 6 M. & W. 119; 9 L. J., Ex. 139.

A part owner of a ship is not necessarily a partner; therefore, a part owner, who as ship's husband incurs expense in fitting her out may sue his co-owners separately for their shares of the expense. Helme v. Smith, 7 Bing. 709; 5 M. & P. 744; 9 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 206.

Court of Chancery.]—A court of equity will not interfere by injunction to restrain a part owner of a ship from retaining part of the machinery of the ship, unless the admiralty court has been previously applied to, and refused to interfere, or can only afford a dilatory and inadequate relief. Brennan or Brenan v. Preston, 10 Hare, 331; 2 De G. M. & G. 813; 1 W. R. 69, 322.

No question arises as to the jurisdiction of this court in enforcing the rights of some against the other part owners of a ship, with regard to the management of the ship and the possession of the certificate of registry, where those rights are regulated by an agreement entered into between all the owners of the ship. Darby v. Baines, 9 Hare, 369; 21 L. J., Ch. 801.

—— Bill for Account—Parties.]—In a bill by some part owners for an account against others of profits of the ship, all those claiming the account must be parties. Moffat v. Farquharson, 2 Bro. C. C. 338. Overruled, see Note, Ib.

A suit between two shipowners, and the mortgagee of one, was dealt with as in an administration suit, by first directing the payment of all the costs (except the mortgagee's) out of the fund, and distributing the residue pro ratâ. Alexander v. Simms, 20 Beav. 123; 24 L. J., Ch. 618. See S. C., supra.

A. and B., British subjects, purchased and repaired an American-built ship, on a joint speculation, with a view of employing her in the trade between the two countries, until an opportunity should occur for reselling her to advantage; for which purpose they procured her to be registered in the United States in the name of C., a citizen of that country, upon a false declaration that she was bonâ fide the sole property of C. After the ship had made several voyages, B., who had had the management of her, attempted to exclude A. from his share in the speculation, and, in spite of the dissent of A., sent her on another voyage to America:—Held, that even supposing the declaration above mentioned, and the registration thereby effected, to have been a fraud upon the American law, and the subsequent employment of the ship so registered to have been a fraud upon the English navigation law, such fraud would not prevent A. from maintaining a suit against B. for an account and payment of his share of the realised profits of the speculation. And in decreeing such account the court also directed an inquiry what had become of the ship since she was sent on her last voyage, and what was her value when so sent, with a view to making B. personally liable for such value in case either the ship or the proceeds of her sale should not be ultimately forthcoming. Sharp v. Taylor, 2 Ph. 801.

A., in 1799, purchased shares in a ship of G. R., who, having also shares in the same ship, was intrusted by A. and the other part owners with the whole management of the ship, and to keep the accounts relating to it from the time of the purchase until the ship was sold by G. R., with the consent of all the owners in 1805. Upon the occasion of the sale, G. R. stated and settled accounts with W., one of the part owners, and paid him the balance due upon the earnings of the ship and the proceeds of the sale. In 1824, G. R. died. Upon a bill filed by A. in March 1826, for an account against the executors of G. R., it appeared by a ledger (found in a room wholly disused by G. R.) containing the accounts of the ship, that the credit and debit account between him and A. was not carried beyond 1805. On the debit side there were two items, one in 1811, and another in 1812. A. left England in 1820, and some time after his departure his brother-in-law called several times upon G. R. with messages from A., and on those occasions asked him to come to a settlement with A. respecting the ship; G. R. never stated that he was not indebted to A. An account was decreed against the executors of G. R., and that decree affirmed on appeal. Robinson v. Alexander, 8 Bligh (N.S.) 352; 2 Cl. & F. 717.

Action in Admiralty.]—Account of earnings of a ship ordered upon the petition of a part owner. The Albion, 6 L. T. 165.

Liability of Purchaser.]—A purchaser of shares in a ship, which at the time of the sale is on a voyage, is liable for the expenses of this voyage, and of the vessel's outfit for it, and is entitled to a share of the freight. The Vindobala, 58 L. J., Adm. 51; 14 P. D. 50; 60 L. T. 657; 37 W. R. 409; 6 Asp. M. C. 376—C. A.

A vessel was chartered for twelve months, and during the currency of the charter the charterers made default in certain payments and the charter lapsed. The vessel was rechartered by a voyage charter from K. to England. During the performance of this voyage the defendant purchased a share in this vessel:—Held, on objection to the registrar's report in a co-ownership action, that the defendant was not liable to bear any of the losses occasioned by the time charter. The Meredith, or White v. Ditchfield, 10 P. D. 69; 52 L. T. 520; 5 Asp. M. C. 400.

Liability of Trading Owners.]—Part owners who do not dissent from the employment of a ship, and are aware that other part owners have dissented, are liable to bear the expenses, and are entitled to receive the profits of the ship in the proportion which their shares bear to the number of shares in the ship, after the deduction of the shares of the dissentient part owners. The Vindobala, supra.

Transfer of Share—Bill of Sale.]—The managing owners of the steamship "B. K." in 1882, agreed to sell the defendant V. one sixty-fourth share in the "B. K.," for which he gave them a bill of exchange for 156*l.*, and received from them a receipt for the same as "being one sixty-fourth share in the s.s. 'B.K.'" In 1883 the managing owners sent V. 8*l.* in respect of profits on his share, and subsequently sent him a statement of accounts. No bill of sale was ever executed by the managing owners, and it appeared that their shares in the "B. K." were mortgaged at the time of the sale to V., and that subsequently they never were in a position to redeem them. Certain of the owners having paid losses incidental to the working of the ship, now sued V. as a co-owner for his proportion of the losses:—Held, that notwithstanding the receipt by V. of the 8*l.*, he was not, either in law or equity, a co-owner; that the managing owners had no authority to pledge his credit, and that therefore he was not liable. The Bonnie Kate, 57 L. T. 203; 6 Asp. M. C. 149.

Use of Ship by Part Owner—Freight.]—M. contracted with his co-owners for use of their ship on a voyage to S., and he shipped in her some thousands of bricks, which, on the arrival of the ship, were reduced to dust. No freight was paid at S., nor was the dust removed, but the agent of the other owners at S. used it as ballast on a voyage by the same ship from S. to C., where it was sold for a small sum. In taking the accounts between them, the chief clerk charged the ship's husbands with the freight of the bricks, although they had received no part of it; and a motion by them to vary was dismissed, with costs. Garrett v. Melhuish, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 943; 6 W. R. 491.

Fraudulently disposing of Co-owner's Share.]—A part owner cannot sue his co-owner for fraudulently disposing of his share in the ship. Graves v. Saucer or Sawcer, 1 Keb. 38; 1 Lev. 29; Sir T. Raym. 15.

Ship's Money received by Agent of one Part Owner—Action by Co-owners.]—A., B. and others were owners of a ship in the service of the East India Co. B. was managing owner, and employed C. as his agent for general purposes and to receive moneys on account of the ship; C. keeping a separate account with B. To obtain payment from the company on account of the ship it was necessary that the receipt should be signed by one or more of the owners, besides the managing owner, and upon a receipt signed by B. and another owner C. received from the company 2,000*l.* and placed it to B.'s credit in his books as managing owner. The part owners brought money had and received to recover the balance of that account:—Held, that C. had received the money as agent for B. and was accountable to him only, and that the action would not lie. Sims v. Brittain or Britten, 4 B. & Ad. 375; 1 N. & M. 594.

Share of Prize.]—Thirty shares in a privateer remaining unsubscribed for and taken by the managers of the concern on their own account, after a valuable capture, held to be the exclusive property of the managers. Bill on behalf of the other subscribers dismissed; since, if there had been a loss, they could only have been answerable to the amount of their own shares. Blunt v. Cumyns, 2 Ves. 331.

Liability for Damages.] — A. and B. were owners of a ship; A. working the ship, defraying all the expenses, and taking the uncontrolled management of her, and paying himself by taking two-thirds of the gross earnings; B. taking the remaining one-third as portion:—Held, that A. was a hirer of the share of B., and not the servant or agent of B., so as to render B. liable for damages caused by the negligence of A. Bernard v. Aaron, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 470.

Illegal Capture—Costs.]—Part owners of a privateer must bear costs proportionally of an illegal seizure of a prize at sea. Walton v. Hanbury, 2 Vern. 592.

Damages between Co-owners.] — Claim for damages by some of the part owners against the others in co-ownership action. The Ceylon, 18 L. T. 417.

Money paid for Appointing Master.]—Money paid to part owners for their votes in the appointment of a captain is no profit of the ship. Moffatt v. Farquharson, 2 Bro. C. C. 338.

Offer to buy Shares of Co-owners—Acceptance by Some only.]—In a Scotch action of set and sale the pursuer offered to buy the shares of his co-owners. One accepted the offer, the other did not:—Held, that the pursuer was not bound to buy the shares of one defender only. Anderson v. Sillars, 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 105.

Cost of Insurance.]—Although one of two part owners of a ship has no authority as such to order insurances to be effected on account of the others, yet if they are in partnership together, an order to insure given by one renders all liable. Hooper v. Lusby, 4 Camp. 66.

One part owner cannot charge another with any part of the premium, unless the insurance is authorised or ratified by him. Ogle v. Wrangham, Abbott on Shipping, 13th ed. 96.

A., a part owner, assigned his proportion of the freight payable in respect of a voyage, to C.; B., his co-owner, subsequently, without notice of the assignment to C., concurred with A. in authorising a broker to pay the insurance of the ship and freight for the voyage:—Held, that the costs of such insurance were proper expenses of the voyage, and that they ought to be deducted from the freight before dividing it between B. and C. Lindsay v. Gibbs, infra.

—— Broker's Bill.]—Upon a settlement of accounts at the end of a voyage, one of the shipowners agreed to pay the broker's bill, and, in consideration, was allowed a large share of the profits. He omitted to pay the broker, who sued both owners for the amount. The other owner having paid it:—Held, that he might sue him for the amount. Wilson v. Cutting, 10 Bing. 436; 4 M. & Scott, 826.

Policy Moneys.] — Where a ship originally belonged to one of two partners, and had been conveyed to B. for securing a debt, and B. became the sole registered owner of the ship, and afterwards, as agent for both partners, insured the ship and freight, and charged them with the premiums; and, on a loss happening, received the money from the underwriters:—Held, that he was accountable to the assignees of the surviving partner for the surplus, after payment of his own debt, and not to the executors of the deceased partner, to whom the ship originally belonged. Dixon v. Hamond, 2 B. & Ald. 310.

Expenses of Earning Freight.]—The wages of the captain and seamen of a ship, being the expenses which produce the income thereof, are proper deductions to be made from the gross freight, as between the part owners of the ship and the assignees of the freight belonging to the other co-owners. Lindsay v. Gibbs, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 779; 6 W. R. 733. Affirmed, 3 De G. & J. 690; 28 L. J., Ch. 692; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 376; 7 W. R. 320. See S. C., col. 1047.

Advances for Supplies.]—A co-partner in a ship may sue the ship for advances made by him, but not if he is interested in the particular voyage for which the ship is supplied. The Underwriter, 25 L. T. 279; 1 Asp. M. C. 127.

Liability of Part Owners for Necessaries.]—See Davison v. Donaldson, infra, col. 52, and cases infra, cols. 66, 67.

Mode of Payment.]—The four defendants and B. were the owners in certain shares between them, of a ship to which the plaintiffs by order of W., the ship's husband, and with the authority and consent of the defendants, did certain repairs, and upon the account for such repairs being sent in to the owners, it was arranged between W. and the plaintiffs, that it should be paid partly in cash (subject to discount) and partly in good bills, and that the total amount of the contract should be apportioned between the several owners according and in proportion to their interest and the number of their respective shares in the ship. The necessary calculation having been made by W., the account was then paid to the plaintiffs through W., partly by a cheque of the defendant Andrews, payable to W.'s order, and indorsed by him for the amount of Andrews' proportion, partly by cash payments from each of the other three defendants for the amount of their respective proportions, and partly by a bill at six months, drawn by W. on and accepted by B., for the amount of B.'s proportion of the account. B.'s bill being dishonoured at maturity, the plaintiffs brought an action against the defendants to recover from them, as joint owners of the ship, the amount of such dishonoured bill, in answer to which the defendants contended that the plaintiffs, by taking B.'s bill, and giving him time, had placed his co-debtors, the defendants, in a worse position, and necessarily postponed their remedy against B., and had consequently discharged the defendants:—Held, that the defendants were bound by the mode of payment adopted, and that that circumstance distinguished the case from that of principal and surety. Mould v. Andrews, 35 L. T. 813; 3 Asp. M. C. 32.

Settlement of Accounts—Majority Bind the Rest.]—If the major part of part owners settle the ship's account, it shall bind the rest. Robinson v. Thompson, 1 Vern. 465.

In all sea-adventures the acts of the majority of partners shall bind the whole. Falkland v. Cheney, 5 Bro. P. C. 476.

Claim against Managing Owners—Reopening Account—Statute of Limitations.]—The relations between co-owners of a vessel engaged in foreign voyages and her managing owners are, in the absence of any evidence to shew that each voyage is a separate trading transaction, to be treated, in relation to the profit and loss on her voyages, as a continuous partnership or agency, as the case may be. Consequently the rule as to partnership accounts applies, the accounts may be gone into without any limit as to time, and the statute of limitations does not apply so long as the partnership or agency is continuous. The Pongola, 73 L. T. 512; 8 Asp. M. C. 89.

Ship's Register—Detention by Master Part Owner.]—A master, part owner, refusing to deliver up the ship's register to the managing owner, held not liable to penalty under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 50. Arkle or Harkle v. Henzell, 8 El. & Bl. 828; 27 L. J., M. C. 110; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 306.

Contribution to Losses—Power of Majority to Bind All—Costs of defending Action.]—The owners of a ship, except A., who had one share, resided in England, and were found liable in an action in England to cargo owners for its loss. A., who resided in Scotland, did not join in the defence. The owners were insured by an association of which their managing agent was a member. The agent, in his own name, sued the association upon the policy. The action was not successful, and an appeal was abandoned upon a money payment being made by the association by way of compromise. In an action against A. by the other owners for contribution to the loss:—Held, that, notwithstanding the compromise with the insurers, he was liable. Bennett v. McLellan, 17 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 800.

Held, also, that the costs of defending the action in England were included in A.'s liabilities. Ib.

Sale by Part Owners.]—See post, tit. VIII. SALE AND TRANSFER.

And see further, post, tit. XXVI. ADMIRALTY LAW AND PRACTICE.

c. Rights and Liabilities against and to Others.

Bankruptcy—Set-off.]—Part owners of a ship cannot set off their proportions of a debt to the bankrupt on account of the ship against debts due to them severally from the bankrupt. Christie, Ex parte, 10 Ves. 105.

Covenant with Part Owners—Joint or Several.]—A covenant with the part owners of a ship, and their several and respective executors, to pay money accruing for the hire of the ship for freight, and for use of the ship's tackle, to the covenanters, their and every of their several and respective executors, at a specified bank, in such proportions as were set against their several and respective names, is a several covenant, and cannot be sued on by the covenanters jointly. Servante v. James, 5 M. & Rob. 299; 10 B. & C. 410; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 64.

Part Owners suing for Injury to Ship in Separate Actions—Abatement.]—If one of two part owners of a ship sues alone for an injury done to the ship, and the defendant does not plead in abatement, the other part owner may afterwards sue alone, and the defendant cannot plead in abatement to the second action. Sedgworth v. Overend, 7 Term Rep. 279. Cf. Addison v. Overend, 6 Term Rep. 766.

Liability of Owner for Supplies—Acceptance of Agent's Draft for Price — Dishonour.]—A tradesman who had supplied goods to a ship took the acceptance of the shipowner's agent for the amount of his bill for the goods, and afterwards consented to the renewal of the bill twice. Upon the agent's failure and dishonour of the bill:—Held, that the shipowner was liable for the price of the goods, although the agent had throughout had in his hands money of his principal sufficient to pay for the goods. Robinson v. Read, 9 B. & C. 449; 4 M. & Ry. 349; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 236.

Joint Agent—Liability.]—If persons, separately interested in aliquot parts of a ship, employ a joint agent, they are liable in the aggregate. Pasmore v. Bousfield, 1 Stark. 296.

Surviving Part Owner—Trover.]—A surviving part owner may bring trover for the whole ship. Dockwray v. Dickenson, Comb. 366.

Necessaries—Liability of Part Owner.]—The plaintiff sold stores for a ship to T., who was ship's husband and managing owner. The defendant was part owner of this ship, and was also interested with T. in the adventure for which the ship was fitted out. The plaintiff applied to T. for payment, but did not obtain it. Three months after the goods were supplied, and again two years after that, the defendant settled accounts with T., and gave him credit for the price of the goods, supposing they had been paid for. More than three years after the goods had been supplied, T. having become bankrupt, the plaintiff for the first time applied for payment to the defendant, and brought his action for the price of them:—Held, that there had been no such conduct on the part of the plaintiff as would discharge the defendant from liability. Davison v. Donaldson, 9 Q. B. D. 623; 47 L. T. 564; 31 W. R. 277; 4 Asp. M. C. 601—C. A.

Liabilities in respect of Repairs.]—A., B. and C. being part owners in a ship, A. directed B. and C. not to order any repairs in their joint names, and informed them that he would no longer consider them as managing owners: repairs were done in their joint names upon the direction of the captain employed by B. and C.:—Held, that A. was jointly liable. Gleadon v. Tinckler, Holt, 586.

Liability for Repairs and Expenses.]—See The Vindobala, supra, col. 47. And see 4. LIABILITY ON CONTRACT, infra, cols. 61, seq.

Liability for Damage—Ship worked by One Part Owner — Liability of the Other.]—See Burnard v. Aaron, infra, col. 72.

d. Refusing to Navigate.

Chancery Jurisdiction.]—The court of admiralty is open all the year round to applications by part owners to restrain the sailing of ships without their consent until security given to the amount of the respective shares. But where the shares are not ascertained, the court of chancery will exercise a concurrent jurisdiction, by injunction, to restrain the sailing of a ship until the share of the party complaining shall be ascertained, and security given to the amount of it. In this case it was referred to the master to make the inquiry and to settle the security accordingly. Haly v. Goodson, 2 Mer. 77; 16 R. R. 145.

Injunction to restrain the sailing of vessel containing goods sold to a person who had become insolvent, but over which the plaintiff retained a right of stoppage in transitu, refused. A court of equity has not jurisdiction in any case to stop goods in transitu, semble. Goodhart v. Lowe, 2 J. & W. 349; 22 R. R. 164.

Injunction to restrain the sailing of a ship upon the application of a part owner, refused, where the ship was intended to sail the next day, and it did not appear by the affidavit filed in support of the motion that there were any circumstances to account for the plaintiff's delay in applying. Christie v. Craig, 2 Mer. 137.

Semble, the court of chancery will not, in a case within its jurisdiction, interfere beyond or otherwise than the court of admiralty would interfere, at the suit of some part owners to restrain the sailing of a ship or control her management; there being no question as to the ownership, and the only dispute being as to the powers of the owners inter se. Castelli v. Cook, 7 Hare, 89; 18 L. J., Ch. 148; 13 Jur. 675.

The master of an American vessel arriving in England, authorised by the owners to sell or charter the ship, entered into a charterparty with the plaintiff for a voyage to Ceylon and back. A few days afterwards the defendant purchased the ship from a party acting under a power of attorney from one of the owners to sell her. The greater part of the cargo had been put on board under the charter-party. The defendant attempted to stop the sailing of the ship:—Held, that the master having authority to charter the ship, which he had done, and the defendant knowing of the charterparty, an injunction would lie to restrain the purchasers from interfering with the sailing of the ship, in pursuance of the charterparty. Messageries Imperiales Co. v. Baines, 7 L. T. 763; 11 W. R. 322.

Whether the court will grant an injunction restraining a party from taking a ship to any other than a certain port, thereby in effect compelling him to proceed to such port, quære. Lidgett v. Williams, 4 Hare, 465; 14 L. J., Ch. 459.

A shipowner of Hamburg made, at Hamburg, an agreement with a domiciled Englishman for the sale to the Englishman of a Hamburg ship whenever she might return from the voyage on which she then was. The ship returned, and was by the owner ordered to proceed to Sunderland. The master of the ship, who was authorised by the shipowner to act as his agent in the sale, refused to deliver the ship except on certain terms. The purchaser filed a bill against the owner and the master for specific performances. He obtained leave to substitute service on the master for the owner, and moved for an injunction to restrain the defendants from removing the ship out of the jurisdiction:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to restrain the defendants from removing the ship, and injunction granted. Hart v. Herwig, 42 L. J., Ch. 457; L. R. 8 Ch. 860; 29 L. T. 47; 21 W. R. 663; 2 Asp. M. C. 63.

Held, that substituted service on the master was effectual and proper. Ib.

Application to Chancery to restrain Sailing by Minority Owner.]—The court of chancery will not restrain a ship from sailing on the application of the owner of the smaller ascertained share. The court only interferes where the shares are unascertained. The application is too late when the ship is on the point of sailing with emigrants. Hallaran v. Donal, 9 Ir. Eq. Rep. 217.

The proper application in such case is to the court of admiralty for security. Ib.

The defendant, a Spaniard, executed at Santander, in Spain, a mortgage to A. B. of a Spanish vessel, of which he was the master, to secure the repayment by the defendant to A. B., or whoever in future might represent his right, a sum of money and interest; and the mortgage deed contained a proviso that A. B., or whoever might represent him, might exact payment of the loan and interest at any time and in any manner. The plaintiff was the transferee of the mortgage, and the defendant and the vessel being at the port of Q., within the jurisdiction, the plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to enforce the mortgage, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from removing the vessel out of the jurisdiction, and duly served the defendant with a copy of the writ. He now moved for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendant from removing the vessel out of the jurisdiction until the hearing:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to grant such an injunction, and it was granted accordingly. Clavering v. Aguire, 5 L. R., Ir. 97.

Certain persons entered into an agreement in writing for forming themselves into a company, one of their rules being to manage the affairs by a committee, but no time being fixed for the duration of the company. Four of the members took upon themselves the exclusive management of a ship, the property of the company, and were about to send her on a voyage disapproved of by some of the members, whereupon the latter filed a bill to restrain the four from proceeding otherwise than under the direction of the committee, and to obtain delivery up of books, &c. A demurrer for want of equity was allowed. Miles v. Thomas, 9 Sim. 606.

Ship taken Possession of by Minority Owners and Lost.]—A ship was forcibly taken possession of by a minority of the part owners, and sent on a voyage on which she was lost:—Held, that trover could not be maintained and damages for her loss recovered. Knight v. Coates, 1 L. R., Ir. 53. Following Barnadiston v. Chapman, cited, 4 East, 121; Bul. N. P. 34.

Action by Part Owner against Co-Owner—Sending Ship to Sea.]—An action does not lie at the suit of one part owner against another for sending the ship on a voyage without the plaintiff's assent, whereby the plaintiff lost his share. Graves v. Sawcer, 1 Lev. 29; 1 Keb. 38; Sir T. Raymond, 15.

And see tit. XXVI. ADMIRALTY LAW AND PRACTICE, 16. RESTRAINT, infra.

Dissenting Part Owners—Sharing Profits.—A part owner of a ship, which had been let to the East India Company for a voyage to India, after the other part owner had expended a large sum in repairing and fitting it out for the voyage, arrested the ship by process out of the admiralty court, and compelled the other part owner to give security for his share; the ship afterwards sailed to India and returned home:—Held, that the part owner who had taken the security was not entitled to any share of the profits of the voyage, but was bound to pay his portion of the repairs and outfit. Davis v. Johnston, 4 Sim. 539.

A dissenting part owner who takes security in admiralty for the return of the ship is not entitled to share in her earnings. Anon., Ca. in Ch., pt. 2, 36. And see Anon., Skinner, 230, infra.

—— Bearing Loss.]—If the ship is lost, a part owner who does not dissent from the voyage bears his share of the loss. The Vindobala, 13 P. D. 42; supra, col. 47. Aliter, if he expressly dissents, Horn v. Gilpin, infra.

One part owner of a ship freighted against the express dissent of the other: the ship and cargo are lost; the loss falls wholly on the partner who freighted. Horn v. Gilpin, Ambl. 255. N. B., Strelly v. Winson, infra, is wrongly reported.

A., one of three part owners of a ship, refuses to navigate; B. and C., the other two, navigate without his consent, and ship is lost in the voyage. A. shall bear his proportion of the loss, for he would have been entitled to an account of the profits. Strelly v. Winson, 1 Vern. 297; Skinner, 230.

If a dissenting part owner does not expressly prohibit the voyage, he shall have an account of the profits; if the ship is lost, he shall not be answered his part. Anon., Skinner, 230.

3. MANAGING OWNER AND SHIP'S HUSBAND.

Authority of Managing Owner to Bind other Owners for Ship's Necessaries.]—W. was the registered owner of certain shares in a ship, and had been entered on the register as managing owner. The defendant subsequently became the registered owner of other shares in the ship. The defendant was not aware in fact that W. was so registered as managing owner. W. sent the ship on a voyage without the defendant's knowledge, and contrary to the terms of an agreement made between them. The defendant did not participate in the adventure, and had previously informed W. that he did not intend to navigate the ship or take any part in her management. The plaintiffs supplied necessaries for the ship previous to such voyage, upon the order of W., without the knowledge or consent of the defendant. The plaintiffs, before supplying the goods, consulted the register, and found the defendant's name entered therein as part owner of the ship:—Held, that the fact that the defendant had allowed the entry on the register describing W. as managing owner to remain unaltered did not per se amount to a holding out of W. as his agent, so as to render the defendant liable for the necessaries supplied by the plaintiffs, and that inasmuch as W. had not in fact authority to bind the defendant, the plaintiffs could not recover against the defendant for such necessaries. Frazer v. Cuthbertson, 50 L. J., Q. B. 277; 6 Q. B. D. 93; 29 W. R. 396.

If a person who supplies stores to a ship, of which there are several owners, takes in payment the bill of the ship's husband (a part owner) only, and settles with him alone, he discharges the other owners, particularly if the bill is renewed. Reed v. White, 5 Esp. 122.

Necessaries were furnished to a ship on the order of the ship's husband (himself a part owner), by whom alone the ship was managed;—Held, that the co-owners were liable, although part of the supplies had been paid for by bills drawn by the ship's husband upon the brokers of the ship; and on the bankruptcy of the latter, the plaintiff had proved against their estate for the balance. Whitwell v. Perrin, 4 C. B. (N.S.) 412.

Necessaries supplied to foreign ship in England on order of part owner do not create a maritime lien. See The Heinrich Bjorn, post. tit. XXVI. ADMIRALTY LAW AND PRACTICE, col. 966.

—— Recovery from Part Owners.]—A part owner of a ship is not necessarily a partner; therefore a part owner, who, as a ship's husband, incurs the expense of the outfits, may sue the other part owners separately for their respective shares of the expense. Helme v. Smith, 7 Bing. 709; 5 M. & P. 744; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 206.

One of several co-owners who acts as ship's husband, is only entitled to charge the cost price of supplies to the ship furnished by him in the course of his business. Ritchie v. Couper, 28 Beav. 344.

In an action against one of the owners for work done to a vessel by the order of the ship's husband, such owner will be liable, unless it is shewn that the dealing was, that the person who directed the work to be done should be looked to exclusively. Thompson v. Finden, 4 Car. & P. 158.

Releasing Ship from Arrest.]—A managing owner has power to release a vessel from arrest under an order of the court of admiralty, in order that she may prosecute her voyage and earn freight; and he is not bound to do this at his own expense, but may release the ship according to the rules of the court, by procuring bail for damages and costs. Barker v. Highley, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 27; 32 L. J., C. P. 270; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 391; 9 L. T. 228; 11 W. R. 968.

Master Suing in his own Name.]—Where the master is part owner, but has the entire control and management of the ship, paying to his co-owner a third of the net profits, he is competent to sue in his own name. Cawthron v. Trickett, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 754; 33 L. J., C. P. 182; 9 L. T. 609; 12 W. R. 311.

Repairs.—Authority to pledge Credit of Co-owners—Underwriters liable for Damage.]—A managing owner, who has been deputed by his co-owners to employ a vessel for their benefit, in such trades as he may from time to time think fit, has authority to give orders for the repair, fitting and outfit necessary for such employment. The Huntsman, [1894] P. 214; 6 R. 698; 70 L. T. 386; 7 Asp. M. C. 431.

If the ship is damaged, a person repairing her may do so on the credit of the owners, by the orders of the managing owner, although there is reason to believe that the ship is insured, and that the underwriters are liable for the damage. Ib.

Aliter, where the repairs are not of necessity, see Chappell v. Bray, infra, col. 66. And see further, as to power of managing owner to order. Steele v. Dixon, infra, col. 62.

Ship's Husband—Duty to Account—Interest—Proceeds of Prizes.]—Owners of a privateer acting for themselves and crew in the sale of prizes, having neglected to render accounts and delayed distribution of proceeds, charged with interest on balances and costs. Pearse v. Green, 1 Jac. & Walk. 135; 20 R. R. 258.

Right to Advances out of Freight.]—The right of a ship's husband to be repaid out of the freight for advances made on account of the ship is a right of lien or retainer and not in the nature of a charge on the freight; and therefore if he is removed from his office by the owners before he is in a position to receive the freight, an assignee of his interest in the freight cannot maintain a claim to it as against the owners. Beynon v. Godden, 48 L. J., Ex. 80; 3 Ex. D. 263; 39 L. T. 82; 26 W. R. 672; 4 Asp. M. C. 10—C. A.

Appointment of Agent by.]—A. and B., joint part owners of a ship, intrusted the management to C., their co-part owner, as ship's husband; C. employed D. as his agent to raise and pay money in respect of the ship, and also for his general affairs. The ship was chartered by the East India Company, earning freight for them, which D. received, upon giving receipts signed (as required by the rules of the company) by one other part owner, in addition to C., the ship's husband. D., who knew that C. was only part owner, but was never controlled by the others, placed the amount of freights received to the account of C., as ship's owner, and kept a distinct general account with him. C. died insolvent:—Held, that A. and B. could not sue D. for the balance due from him on the ship's account, because there was no privity of contract between them; D.'s responsibility was to the executors. Sims v. Britten or Brittain, 1 N. & M. 594; 4 B. & Ad. 375. See Walshe v. Provan, post, col. 389.

Assignment of Freight to secure Private Debt.]—S. & Co. were owners of seven-eighths of an American vessel and ship's husbands. T. was owner of the remaining eighth, and was captain of the vessel, which was dispatched on a voyage to Liverpool. Before the voyage S. & Co. spent a large sum in repairs, and for the purpose of taking up bills which they had accepted on account of the repairs, they borrowed a sum of money from the plaintiffs, and assigned the freight to them by way of security. On the arrival of the vessel in Liverpool the plaintiffs obtained an injunction to prevent T. from receiving the freight:—Held, that a part owner, who is ship's husband, has not the right, as against other part owners, of making an assignment of the whole freight to secure moneys advanced to him; that the legal right to receive the freight was in the captain, and that, in the absence of any sufficient allegation and proof that he was about to misapply it, the injunction ought not to have been granted. Guion v. Trash, 1 De G., F. & J. 373; 29 L. J., Ch. 337; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 185; 1 L. T. 469; 8 W. R. 266.

Action for not Accounting.]—Part owners of a ship having agreed, "each and every of them with the others and each and every of the others," that the ship should proceed on a certain voyage under the exclusive management and control of one of them as ship's husband; and that after her return, "a full account should be made of the ship and her concerns," and the net profits be divided in proportion after deducting all charges; the duty of making out such account is cast upon the ship's husband; and for not doing so, and not dividing the net profits, after deducting all charges, within a reasonable time after the ship's return, an action lies against him upon the agreement by each of the part owners; though it is not averred in terms that the charges were or could have been ascertained before the account brought, for that is matter of defence. Owston v. Ogle, 13 East, 538; 12 R. R. 426.

When an action is brought in rem against a ship by the owners of certain shares therein, claiming possession and an account against the managing owner, and the latter makes default in appearing, the court will order such managing owner to be joined as defendant, so that his accounts may be investigated, and will give possession to the plaintiffs if they hold a majority of shares; but will not order, before the reference, a sale of the defendant's shares to satisfy the plaintiffs' costs and any sum found due at the reference. The Native Pearl, 37 L. T. 542; 3 Asp. M. C. 515.

Authority to pledge Owner's Credit for Costs of Action.]—A ship's husband has no authority to pledge his owner's credit for the expenses of a law suit. Campbell v. Stein, 6 Dow, 116.

May deduct Expenses from gross Freight.]—A ship's husband, who had advanced for outfits and disbursements of the ship sums considerably exceeding the money received under the charterparty at the commencement of the voyage, had, before the freight was delivered, obtained a loan by deposit of the charterparty to relieve himself from his advances on account of the ship. Motion by one of the part owners to restrain the ship's husband from receiving or dealing with the freight refused with costs, the ship's husband being entitled to receive the freight and deduct his disbursements, and his conduct not having been so improper as to justify the restraint of this right. Harris v. Reynolds, 4 W. R. 278.

Managing Part Owners—Right to sue for Supplies furnished.]—Some of the joint owners of a ship, acting as managers on behalf of the owners generally, furnishing supplies for the voyage, are entitled to sue for an account of the transactions between themselves and the other owners. Vanner v. Frost, 39 L. J., Ch. 626.

Cost Price only.]—One of several co-owners of a ship, who acts as ship's husband, is only entitled to charge the cost price of supplies to the ship furnished by him in the course of his business. Ritchie v. Couper, 28 Beav. 344.

As Charterers.]—The plaintiffs (who were part owners of the ship), having founded their title to relief on their rights as charterers, and stated that they were managing owners, not for the purpose of relief as managing owners, but in order to protect their rights as charterers, are not entitled to an injunction founded merely on their right as managing owners, but can only be so on the foundation of their rights as charterers. Lidgett v. Williams, 4 Hare, 464; 14 L. J., Ch. 459.

Retracting Authority of.]—Per Lord Esher, M.R.:—The managing owner of a ship is the agent of each co-owner separately, and each co-owner may retract his authority to the managing owner without consulting the other co-owners. The Vindobala, supra, col. 47.

Duty to Account—Co-ownership Action.]—It is the duty of a managing owner to account to his co-owners for the ship's earnings and disbursements within a reasonable time, but what is a reasonable time must depend upon the circumstances of each case. There is no fixed rule that a ship's accounts are to be ready before she sails on her next voyage. The Mount Vernon, 64 L. T. 148 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 32.

Powers and Duties of.]—Powers and duties of the managing owners of a ship, as between themselves and the other part owners. Darby v. Baines, 9 Hare, 369 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 801.

Construction of an agreement, entered into by the part owners of a ship, with regard to the management of the ship, and the allowance for brokerage and commission. Ib.

Account with Banker.]—The managing owner of a ship chartered by the East India Company receives the warrants for the freight, and pays them into a banker's in his own name, drawing cheques from time to time for various sums out of the proceeds, part of which are applied for the use of the ship, and part for other purposes :—Held, that the other part owners have no lien on this fund in the hands of the bankers, nor any claim against the bankers as their debtors. Gribble, Ex parte, 3 Deac. & C. 339.

Cancelling Charterparty.]—A ship's husband, as such, has no authority to bind the shipowner to pay money to the charterer in consideration of the cancellation of the charterparty. Thomas v. Lewis or Oxley, 48 L. J., Ex. 7 ; 4 Ex. D. 18 ; 39 L. T. 669 ; 27 W. R. 111 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 51.

Mortgage of Warrant for Freight.]—Where A., as the managing owner of a vessel, was permitted by the other owners to have possession of two warrants or orders of the East India Company to pay to the owners or bearer the sum of money therein mentioned, for freight, and A. deposited those warrants in the hands of his bankers, and they received the money due on them, and gave him credit for it on account :—Held, in an action brought after A.'s death by the surviving part owners against the bankers, that on proof of these facts they could not recover the money, because it was not shown that the loan was upon their account, for the fact of the warrants being the property of all the part owners when placed in the banker's hands, was, upon the evidence, consistent with the supposition that the loan of the proceeds to the bankers was A.'s loan. Sims v. Bond, 2 N. & M. 608 ; 5 B. & Ad. 389.

Payment to—Misapplication—Rights of Owner paying.]—Where a part owner of a ship pays to the managing owner his contribution due upon the ship's accounts as agreed between the co-owners, the managing owner receives such contribution as agent for all the owners ; and in the event of the managing owner misapplying such payment to his own use, and not paying the ship's accounts therewith, the contributing owner is entitled to be credited with the amount so paid, but all the owners, including himself, must make good the defalcations in proportion to their shares. The Ida, 55 L. T. 59 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 21. See also The Dora Tully, post, col. 95.

Claim against Managing Owner—Statute of Limitations—Opening Account.]—See The Pongola, 73 L. T. 512, supra, col. 51.

Right to Commission.]—The managing owner of a ship is competent to appoint himself to act as broker to the ship in collecting and distributing the freight, there being no incompatibility between those services (as, semble, there would be between the services of a ship's chandler or a ship's carpenter) and his fiduciary character as managing owner. Smith v. Lay, 3 K. & J. 105.

But, before allowing him a commission in respect of the services in question, the court directed an inquiry whether, according to the custom of shipowners or otherwise, he, being managing owner, was entitled to any and what commission in respect of duties performed by him, and which duties are ordinarily performed by shipbrokers. Ib.

A part owner being the manager of a ship, is entitled to remuneration for his services, but there is no fixed rate applicable. The Meredith, or White v. Ditchfield, 10 P. D. 69 ; 52 L. T. 520 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 400.

The procuring of charters and freights is one of the ordinary duties incidental to the position of a managing owner of a ship ; and in the absence of a special contract he is not entitled to retain, as against the ship, commissions on the charters or freights procured, whether he is acting as shipbroker himself or employing other brokers. Williamson v. Hine, 60 L. J., Ch. 123 ; [1891] 1 Ch. D. 390 ; 63 L. T. 682 ; 39 W. R. 239 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 559.

A part owner acted as ship's husband without agreement for commission ; his predecessor had acted in the same way, and had received commission :—Held, entitled to reasonable remuneration. Salter v. Adey, 24 L. T. 229 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 930.

The directors of a company owning vessels cannot authorise one of themselves to act as husband of one of the vessels, and to receive the usual remuneration of a ship's husband. Benson v. Heathorn, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 326.

In the absence of an agreement, semble, a part owner acting as ship's husband is not entitled to charge commission. Miller v. Mackay, 34 Beav. 295 ; see also S. C., 31 Beav. 77.

Ship's Husband—Commissions not accounted for—Right of a single Part Owner to sue.]—A single part owner may sue the ship's husband for an account of rebates of commissions allowed to him by brokers. Manners v. Raeburn, 10 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 899.

Commission retained—Concealment.]—A., B. and C. being joint owners in a vessel, it was agreed that A. should act as the ship's husband and broker, and be entitled to commission on "gross freight" ; and in case of gross negligence or fraud on the part of A., that B. and C. might put an end to the agreement by notice and purchase of A.'s shares. A. effected a charterparty of the vessel, the charterer paying all expenses, and 130*l.* per week for the ship, and 4*l.* a week to

A., who, in the accounts he rendered to B. and C., represented the amount paid as 130*l.* a week only :—Held, that the concealment of the receipt of the 4*l.* a week was such a fraud on B. and C. that it entitled them to put an end to the agreement; that the fraud could not be justified on the ground that, had the charterparty been effected on the usual terms of the owners of the vessel paying the usual expenses of the ship, A. could have been entitled to as large a sum by way of commission on gross freight. Brenan v. Preston, 2 W. R. 138.

Semble, that B., having once signed the notice to put an end to the agreement, could not afterwards withdraw. Ib.

4. LIABILITY ON CONTRACT.

a. Necessaries and Repairs.

Authority of Master to Bind.] — Whoever supplies a ship with necessaries has a treble security: 1, the person of the master; 2, the specific ship; and 3, the personal security of the owners. Rich v. Coe, 2 Cowp. 639; 1 Term Rep. 108, n. S. P., Bland, Ex parte, 2 Rose, 91; aliter later cases, Allport v. Thomas, Gilb. 227.

Contract by master for necessary goods supplied to the ship binds the owner; decree against part owners pro ratâ. Speerman v. Degrave, 2 Vern. 643; Cary v. White, 5 Brown, P. C. 323; 1 Abr. Eq. Ca. 722.

The plaintiff proved that he supplied goods, and did work to fit out the ship "Progress" then in London, in dock; that the orders were given by T., who appeared in the register as master, and that the defendant appeared on the register as owner. Some evidence was given, from which it might be inferred that T. was appointed by the defendant. The defendant proved that he had agreed to sell the ship to G.; that T. was appointed master by G., and gave the orders for G., and that the defendant afterwards resumed possession of the vessel. The judge directed the jury, that if T. acted as master with the defendant's privity and consent, and the goods were bonâ fide supplied on the credit of the owner, the defendant was liable, and that, though the defendant's evidence was believed, he was not conclusively entitled to a verdict:—Held, that the defendant was not liable for the goods ordered by T. unless he had sanctioned his appearing to be his captain, acting for him, and the goods were supplied on the faith of T.'s being so, and, consequently, that the direction was wrong. Mitcheson v. Oliver, 5 El. & Bl. 419; 25 L. J., Q. B. 39; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 900—Ex. Ch.

The liability of an owner to pay for repairs and equipments ordered by the master depends, not upon the ground of ownership of the vessel, but upon the ground of a contract made with the vendor by a person who was the owner's agent for the purpose of ordering such necessaries. The Great Eastern, L. R. 2 A. & E. 88; 17 L. T. 667.

The master's contract cannot bind the owner, unless authority to bind the owner has been actually given to him; or unless the owner has, by word or deed, held out the master as his master, and thereby induced the vendor to supply the necessaries upon the credit of the owner. Ib.

The master, both at home and abroad, has authority to bind the owners for repairs or stores ordered by him which are necessary for the equipment and navigation of the ship in the voyage or trade in which the owners employ her. Frost v. Oliver, 1 El. & Bl. 301; 1 C. L. R. 1003; 22 L. J., Q. B. 353; 18 Jur. 166.

Goods supplied on Order of Ship's Husband.]—Owners are liable for necessaries supplied to the ship upon the order of the ship's husband. Tolson v. Hallett, Ambl. 270.

Repairs—Power of Managing Owner.]—Where a vessel is in a home port and the owners accessible, the managing owner cannot, without authority, bind his co-owners for extensive structural repairs. Steele v. Dixon, 3 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1003.

Liability of Owner and Master.]—The repairer of a ship has his election to sue the master or the owner; but if he undertakes on a special promise from either, the other is discharged. Garnham v. Bennett, 2 Str. 816; Hoskins v. Slayton, Cas. t. Hard. 376.

Order for Repairs by one not Owner.]—A person who gives the order for repairs may be liable though he is not the owner. Tibbald v. Wood, 1 F. & F. 287.

Goods supplied on Master's Order at Home Port.] — The master has authority by law to pledge the credit of his owner, resident in England, for money advanced to the master in an English port where the owner has no agent, if such advance of money was necessary for the prosecution of the voyage; and whether it was so or not is a question for the jury. Arthur v. Barton, 6 M. & W. 138; 9 L. J., Ex. 187.

Where clothes have been supplied to a ship's crew on the orders of the master, in a port within a day's post of the residence of the owners of the vessel, and an undertaking to pay given by the master, the value of the goods cannot be recovered from the owners. Curran v. Wood, 15 L. T. 592.

In an action against an owner to recover money advanced to the captain for the use of the ship whilst in a home port:—Held, that the only question for the jury was, whether the captain's position was such as to constitute him the authorised agent of the owner, in order to procure such advances; and that the state of the accounts between the captain and the owner at the time had nothing to do with the case. Williamson v. Page, 1 Car. & K. 581.

In a home port, as well as a foreign one, the master has implied authority to borrow money on the owner's credit in case of necessity. Stonehouse v. Grant, 2 Q. B. 431, n.

But the master had no implied authority to pledge the owner's credit in respect of necessary supplies and advances for the use of the ship during several weeks while she lay at Newport, Monmouthshire; the owner during all that time having resided at Plymouth, and nothing appearing to have prevented communication, if desired, between the master and owner. Ib.

In a home port, the master has the implied authority to borrow money for the necessary use of the ship, if the owner is absent, and no communication with him can be had without great prejudice and delay. Johns v. Simons, 2 Q. B. 425.

A vessel having been a fortnight wind-bound at Newport, her owner residing at Exeter, one day's post from Newport, the master borrowed 5*l.* from a broker, in order to enable him to purchase provisions necessary for the use of the ship:—Held, that the jury was justified in inferring that there was such a reasonable necessity for borrowing the money as to render the owner liable for it, though there was no proof that the goods might not have been obtained by the master on credit. Edwards v. Havill, 14 C. B. 107; 2 C. L. R. 1343; 23 L. J., C. P. 8; 17 Jur. 1103; 2 W. R. 12.

A shipowner (in England) is liable for money advanced to the master at his request, for the necessary use of the ship after her arrival in an English port, nor is the consent of the owner necessary to establish his responsibility. Robinson v. Lyall, 7 Price, 592.

Abroad.]—An owner of a vessel is liable for money supplied to the captain in a foreign port, provided the supply is absolutely necessary for the use of the vessel. Rocher v. Busher, 1 Stark. 27; 18 R. R. 742.

The plaintiff must shew that it was necessary to borrow the money, and must prove the actual application of it. Bogle v. Atty, Gow, 50.

It is not sufficient to prove the advance of a much larger sum than was necessary for the use of the ship, and an application of part of that sum to such uses, and that the residue was placed to the private account of the captain. Palmer v. Gooch, 2 Stark. 428.

A shipowner is not only liable for necessary repairs done to a ship by the master's order, but for such as are fit and proper for the vessel on her voyage, and such as a prudent owner, if present himself, would order. Webster v. Seekamp, 4 B. & Ald. 352; 23 R. R. 307.

An owner is not liable for money advanced to the master, and expended by him in the necessary use of the ship, unless the money is advanced expressly for that purpose. Thacker v. Moates, 1 M. & Rob. 79.

The master drew bills on his owners for disbursements at a foreign port by charterer's agent, which were dishonoured. The disbursements were not necessary:—Held, that the owners were not liable for exchange and re-exchange. Strickland v. Neilson, 7 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 400.

Liability of intended Transferee of Ship—Agreement to accept Bills of Owner for Repairs.]—A shipowner being indebted to his agent transferred the ship to the agent under an agreement that the agent should accept the shipowner's draft for the amount of repairs to the ship owing to the shipwright. The agreement was not communicated to the shipwright. The shipowner became bankrupt without having drawn upon the agent:—Held, that the shipwright could not recover for the amount of repairs against the agent. Rattenbury v. Fenton, 3 My. & K. 505; 3 L. J., Ch. 203.

Onus of Proof.]—In an action against a shipowner for goods supplied and money lent to the master at a foreign port, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove that the goods and money supplied were necessaries. Mackintosh v. Mitcheson, 4 Ex. 175; 18 L. J., Ex. 385.

The presumption that repairs to the ship ordered by the master are under an implied authority from the owner may be rebutted by circumstances, as where the master promises to pay cash and no mention is made of the owner. Gordon v. Hare, 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 70.

Evidence of Ownership—Register.]—The defendant living at Yarmouth was one of the registered owners of a ship at Yarmouth. The plaintiff at the order of the master, through the direction of P., who had been ship's husband, supplied necessaries to the ship for her voyage. It did not appear whether P. was a registered co-owner, or whether he acted as ship's husband with the assent of the defendant. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for the price of the necessaries, the plaintiff was nonsuited. There was evidence that the defendant had been on board, and had made inquiries as to repairs which were being done to the ship:—Held, that there must be a new trial. Burton v. Burton, 1 L. T. 552.

The defendant in an action for goods supplied to a ship is not liable where, although on the register as part owner, he never was a part owner; although in order to clear the title after the supply of the goods, he executed a bill of sale containing a covenant for title. Rands v. Thomas, 5 M. & S. 244. S. P., Rex v. Teal, 11 East, 307; 10 R. R. 516.

In an action against A. for the costs of repairs ordered by the master it was proved that he said he was the largest part owner; that the repairs were necessary; that credit was given to the master only; and that the defendant was the sole registered owner. Verdict for the plaintiff; but new trial ordered on the ground that there was no evidence to go to the jury. Pearson v. Nell, 12 L. T. 607; 13 W. R. 967.

And see III. REGISTRATION, ante; and Cases, ante, col. 40.

Liability for Disbursements—Coals—Charter-party.]—See The Durham City, post, col. 249.

Ship transferred at Sea—Liability of Transferee on Contracts of Master.]—The liability of the owner for acts of the master arises solely from the relation of principal and agent; and in order to make a person liable, such relation must be shewn, either expressedly or impliedly, to exist between him and the master. Myers v. Willis, 18 C. B. 886; 25 L. J., C. P. 255; 4 W. R. 637—Ex. Ch.

The owner of a ship, which was then at sea, transferred it to the defendant by absolute bill of sale, and the transfer was duly registered. The bill of sale was in fact intended only as a collateral security for a loan, and the defendant in no way interfered with the ship. While abroad the master entered into contracts (which were within his general authority) with the plaintiff, neither party being aware of the transfer to the defendant:—Held, that he was not liable on these contracts, as there was no evidence of authority from him to the master to act as his agent. Ib.

Sale of Ship—Goods supplied before Sale completed.]—See An Arranging Trader, In re, 1 Ir. Rep. Eq. 216, infra, col. 68.

Where Covenant by Master to Repair.]—Though the master of a vessel is also lessee of it, by agreement with the owners, for a term of years, under a covenant on their part that he shall have the sole management of the ship, and employ her for his own sole benefit, and on his part that he shall repair her at his own sole cost and charge, the owners are still liable for necessaries furnished for the ship by order of the master, though without the knowledge, or without their being known to the person supplying them. Rich v. Coe, Cowp. 636; 1 Term Rep. 168, n.

The registered owners of a steam-boat let it to A., the captain, for one year; the boat to be repaired by A., the engines to be repaired by the owners, who were to appoint an engineer:—Held that the owners were not liable for repairs ordered by A., unconnected with the engine. Ib.

The registered owner is not liable for articles furnished without his order for the repair of a vessel, chartered for a year, by a party who has undertaken to repair the ship during that term. Reeve v. Davis, 3 N. & M. 873; 1 A. & E. 312.

Nor, when there is no charterparty unless the goods were ordered by the agent of the owner, or were beneficial to him. Ib.

Ship demised—Owner not liable.]—The registered owner of a ship having chartered her to the then captain at a rent for a certain number of voyages, is not liable for stores furnished to the ship by order of the charterer, during the charterparty. Frazer v. Marsh, 13 East, 238; 2 Camp. 517; 12 R. R. 336. See Baumwoll Manufactur Von Carl Scheibler v. Furness, post, col. 297.

Where Express Stipulation in Charterparty.]—Where A., charterer of a vessel, by the charterparty, agreed that, on the arrival of the ship at the outward port, he would, through his agent there, supply cash to the master for the disbursement of the vessel, to be repaid by bills to be drawn by the master on the owner; and on the arrival of the vessel there, the agent supplied goods for the use of the crew, and paid certain money demands made on the master, but did not advance any actual cash:—Held, that although it was not shewn that any bills were drawn by the master for the amount, A. might recover it from the owner in an action for goods sold and delivered and for money paid, the master having authority to obtain supplies of goods and money for the necessary use of the ship on the credit of the owner, independently of the express stipulation of the charterparty. Weston v. Wright, 7 M. & W. 396; 10 L. J., Ex. 329.

A chartered ship at her outward port being in want of money for her necessary disbursements, a merchant there being shewn the charterparty, by which the freighter covenanted to furnish what money might be required for the necessary disbursements of the ship, advanced the requisite sum to the master, and took a bill of exchange drawn by him for the amount upon the freighter:—Held, that, on this bill being dishonoured by the freighter, the owner of the ship was not liable for any part of the money advanced. Harber v. Brotherstone, 4 Camp. 254. See also cases, post, cols. 293, 411.

Where Solvent Agents Appointed.]—The master of a ship has no power to pledge the owner's credit for requisite supplies to her in a foreign port at which a solvent agent for her has been appointed; and a ship chandler who, in ignorance of there being an agent at the port, furnishes goods or advances money for the ship's use upon an order given by the master without the owner's authority, cannot recover the price of the goods or the amount of the loan from the owner, if at the time of supplying the goods or advancing the money he had the means of knowing that an agent able and willing to furnish what was requisite for the ship had been appointed by the owner to act at the foreign port. Gunn v. Roberts, 43 L. J., C. P. 233; L. R. 9 C. P. 331; 30 L. T. 424; 22 W. R. 652; 2 Asp. M. C. 250.

Abandonment to Underwriters.]—The owner is liable for stores and necessaries supplied by the order of the supercargo, after the detention and liberation of the vessel by a foreign power, although the supplies are afforded after an abandonment by the owner to the underwriters. Mitchell v. Glennie, 1 Stark. 230; 18 R. R. 765.

Disbursements—Advances for—Bills dishonoured—Liability of Owners and Master.]—Ship-brokers made disbursements for a German ship and took bills for the amount drawn by the master on the owners, which were returned unaccepted. The brokers sued the master in Germany on the bills but failed on a technical plea. They then sued the owners in Scotland on the debt; plea, that by electing to sue the master the brokers were barred from suing the owners:—Held, that not having obtained judgment, the brokers were not barred. Meier v. Küchenmeister, 8 Ct. of Sess. Ca. (4th ser.) 642.

Owners' Liability—Bond on Freight—Master.]—It was agreed by charterparty that disbursements at the port of loading should be advanced by charterers' agents on account of freight. The agents refused to make the advances without a bond on the ship. The master gave an obligation on the freight:—Held, that the master had power to give such obligation, and that the shipowners were liable to the charterers' agents for their advances. Brun v. Porret, 6 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 577.

Bill drawn by Master on Owner for Advances—Advance Freight.]—See North Western Bank v. Bjornstrom, XIII. FREIGHT, post, col. 413.

See also as to liability of owners for necessaries, XXVI. ADMIRALITY LAW AND PRACTICE, 19. NECESSARIES, post, cols. 960, seq.

b. Liability of Part Owners.

An express authority is necessary from a part owner to the ship's husband to order works not necessary as repairs; but such authority once given cannot be revoked after it has been acted upon, and it is for the part owner, when sued for contribution, to prove that it was revoked before the works were commenced, or a contract for them entered into. Chappell v. Bray, 6 H. & N. 145; 30 L. J., Ex. 24; 3 L. T. 278; 9 W. R. 17.

A. and B. being joint owners of a ship, A. conveyed his moiety to B.; but in the bill of sale the certificate of registry was not truly recited; B. took possession, and afterwards mortgaged the whole ship to A., who did not take possession;

Injury to Diver.]—Where a diver, while employed in diving in a navigable river within the body of a county, was injured by the paddle-wheel of a steamship, and instituted a cause of damage against the steamship in the court of admiralty for the recovery of damages in respect of the personal injuries he sustained:—Held, that the 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 7, gave the court of admiralty jurisdiction. The Sylph, 37 L. J., Adm. 14; L. R. 2 A. & E. 24; 17 L. T. 519.

Obstruction to Navigable Creek.]—The defendant with his barges obstructed a public navigable creek, whereby the plaintiff navigating his barges therein was put to expense in having to unload his goods and carry them over land:—Held, that this was special damage for which the plaintiff could recover in an action on the case. Rose v. Miles, 4 M. & S. 101; 16 R. R. 405.

Damage to Dolphin.]—A steamship, without negligence, came into contact with a mooring dolphin, which fell over under the pressure:—Held, in admiralty, that the dolphin being erected for the purpose of receiving the pressure of ships in the ordinary course of navigation, the owners of it could not recover. The Albert Edward, 44 L. J., Adm. 49; 24 W. R. 179.

Damage by Licensed Watermen in Thames.]—The owner of a barge on the Thames required by law to be navigated by licensed watermen is liable for damage done by her, although the licensed watermen have a monopoly of the navigation. Martin v. Temperley, 4 Q. B. 298; 3 G. & D. 497; 12 L. J., Q. B. 129; 7 Jur. 150.

Damage by Sunken Ship.]—The owner of a vessel sunk in a public navigable river, so long as he remains in possession is bound to take reasonable precautions that other vessels are not injured by striking on it; and this duty may be transferred with the possession of the sunken ship; on abandonment of the wreck the obligation ceases. White v. Crisp, 10 Ex. 312; 23 L. J., Ex. 317.

—— Duty to Buoy.]—There is no duty in the owner of a ship sunk without his fault to mark her with a buoy. Brown v. Mallett, 5 C. B. 599.

The owner of a vessel sunk in a navigable channel is bound to place a buoy over it. Harmond v. Pearson, 1 Camp. 515.

Indictment for Obstruction by.]—An indictment cannot be maintained against the owner of a vessel sunk by accident or misfortune in a navigable river for not removing the wreck. Rex v. Watts, 2 Esp. 675; 5 R. R. 766.

Damage by Unbuoyed Anchor.]—Declaration for damage done to plaintiffs' ship by defendants' anchor unbuoyed in a river, without shewing how it got there, bad. Hancock v. York, Newcastle and Berwick Ry., 10 C. B. 348.

See also, infra, cols. 721, 890, seq., as to sunken ships.

Expense of Raising Wrecks.]—As to liability of owners for expense of raising wrecks, see The Crystal, and cases infra, col. 993.

Ship damaged during Arrestment.]—In an issue whether a foreign ship arrested and taken from her anchorage was injured by the negligence of the defenders it is immaterial whether the damage occurred before or after the arrestment. Peterson v M'Llean, 6 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 218.

Damage to Telegraph Cable.]—A ship let go her anchor so as to foul and damage a telegraph cable lying at the bottom of the sea:—Held, that whether the damage was done within or without the three-mile limit from British shores, the action would lie. Submarine Telegraph Co. v. Dickson, 33 L. J., C. P. 139.

Ship worked by one Part Owner—Liability of the Other.]—A. and S. were part owners of a ship. A. worked the ship, paying all expenses and managing her entirely himself. A. took two thirds of her gross earnings and S. the remaining one third:—Held, that S. was not a partner with A. so as to render him liable for injury to the plaintiff's horses by a piece of timber let fall upon them whilst unloading the ship. Burnard v. Aaron, 31 L. J., C. P. 334.

Damage by Foreign Ship—Loss of Life.]—Sect. 527 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), which gives a remedy in certain cases against the owner of a foreign ship for damage done to a British subject in any part of the world, is confined to damage to property, and does not extend to injury to the person. Harris v. Owners of the Franconia, 46 L. J., C. P. 363; 2 C. P. D. 173.

Wilful Act of Crew—Liability—Fishing Boat worked "on Deal"—Crew cutting Nets adrift.]—The owner of a fishing boat let out "on deal" held liable for loss of nets of a stranger cut adrift by the crew to save their own. M'Ghee v. Anderson, 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 274.

Collision—Liability for.]—See tit. COLLISION, infra.

Wrongful Arrest—Of Seaman by Master—Liability of Owner—17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 246.]—A shipowner is not liable for a misuse by the master of the power to arrest a deserting seaman under the above enactment. O'Neil v. Rankin, 11 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 538.

—— Of Passenger.]—See Lundie v. Maebrayne, infra, col. 79.

Sea Fisheries Act, 1883, Sched. Art. XIX.—Damage to Long Lines by Trawler.]—The crew of a fishing boat shot their long lines at sea near a buoy round which two trawlers were fishing within a radius of a mile. The crew of the trawler could have seen that the lines were being shot, it being daylight; they trawled over the lines and injured them:—Held, that the trawler was liable, and that she had no exclusive right to the fishing round the buoy. Mason v. Nicholson, 20 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 176.

Shipowner and Stevedore joint Wrong-doers—Right to Contribution—Damages.]—The relatives of a man killed by the negligent use of improper tackle in unloading a ship, sued the ship's owner and the stevedore, and got a decree against them jointly and severally for the whole amount of damages and costs. The shipowner paid the whole sum and took an assignment of the decree, and sued the stevedore for contribution. The stevedore refused to pay his moiety upon the ground that he and the shipowner were joint wrong-doers:—Held, that the stevedore was liable, the foundation of the claim being the civil debt created by the judgment. Palmer v. Wick, [1894] App. Cas. 318—H. L. (Sc.)

b. Injury to Crew.

See also VI. SEAMEN, infra.

Expense of curing Seaman injured—Shipowner liable—17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 228, 229.]—Injury received by a seaman by a sea striking the ship and making her a complete wreck is "an injury received in the service of the ship to which he belongs"; and the shipowner is liable for the expense of curing them. Lord Advocate v. Grant, 1 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 447; 32 L. T. 287.

Volenti non fit injuria.]—The common law rule that a servant working in the face of known danger cannot claim damages from his master does not apply to seamen on board ship. Rothwell v. Hutchinson, 13 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 463.

Shipowner and Stevedore joint Wrong-doers—Contribution.]—See Palmer v. Wick, supra.

Seaworthiness of Ship—Negligent Use of Appliances.]—See cases tit. UNSEAWORTHINESS, infra.

Liability to Seaman for Negligence of Captain.]—The shipowner is not responsible for injury to or death of seaman by the negligence of the master. Hedley v. Pinkney & Sons' Steamship Co., 63 L. J., Q. B. 419; [1894] A. C. 222; 70 L. T. 630; 42 W. R. 497; 7 Asp. M. C. 135—H. L. (E.) Not following Ramsey v. Quin, Ir. Rep. L. R. 10 C. L. 322; infra, col. 726.

Master and Servant—Common Employment—Shipowner and Stevedore—Injury to Seaman.]—Where a stevedore had contracted to discharge a vessel for a lump sum, the fact that the master of the vessel had some control over the discharging held not to make the servants of the stevedore the servants of the shipowner, so as to free the stevedore from liability for injury to one of the seamen by their negligence. Cameron v. Nystrom, 62 L. J., P. C. 85; [1893] A. C. 308; 1 R. 362; 48 L. T. 772; 7 Asp. M. C. 320—P. C.

Maintenance of Injured Seaman.]—See Organ v. Brodie, supra, col. 68.

Compulsory Pilot—Injury to—Common Employment.]—See Smith v. Steele, infra, col. 145.

c. Unseaworthiness—Overloading.

Duty of Shipowner to Crew—"Seaworthy for the Voyage."]—The words "seaworthy for the voyage" in s. 5 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, mean that the ship must be "in a fit state as to repairs, equipment and crew, and in all other respects, to encounter ordinary perils of the voyage." They do not include "a neglect properly to use the appliances on board a vessel well equipped and furnished." Dixon v. Sadler (5 M. & W. 405) approved. Hedley v. Pinkney & Sons' Steamship Co., 63 L. J., Q. B. 419; [1894] A. C. 222; 6 R. 106; 70 L. T. 630; 42 W. R. 497; 7 Asp. M. C. 483—H. L. (E.)

Carriage of Grain—Shifting-boards—Feeders.]—A ship having two decks and loaded with a cargo of barley in bulk at a port in the Mediterranean must, upon the proper construction of s. 4, sub-s. (c), of the Merchant Shipping (Carriage of Grain) Act, 1880, and the Board of Trade Regulations of August, 1881, be provided with shifting-boards in the lower hold. By paragraph 4 (b) of these regulations—which directs that feeders shall be fitted to feed the grain carried in the between-decks, such feeders to contain not less than 2 per cent. of the compartments they feed—it is intended that the feeders feeding the grain carried in the between-decks shall contain not less than 2 per cent. of the grain in the compartments in the between-decks which they feed, and of the grain in the hold below which is fed by such compartments. The Rothbury, 57 L. J., Adm. 99; 13 P. D. 119; 59 L. T. 672; 37 W. R. 158; 6 Asp. M. C. 332.

Timber—Excessive Deck Cargo—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 451.]—See Morris v. Thormodsen, 60 J. P. 644, infra, col. 503.

6. LIABILITY AS CARRIER.

a. Apart from Contract.

Contract to carry Goods at Through Rate—Damage by Peril of the Sea.]—The defendant undertook to carry the plaintiff's wool, partly by sea and partly by land, at an agreed through rate per ton including insurance. The insurance was effected by the defendant through his own brokers at an amount per bale which was in accordance with directions given by the plaintiff. There was no bill of lading or any stipulation as to excepted perils of the sea. The wool was damaged by sea-water in the course of the carriage by sea:—Held, that the defendant was liable for the damage sustained, inasmuch as he had undertaken the duty of a common carrier, and had neither expressly nor impliedly limited his liability as a common carrier, and also that he had effected the insurance on the wool, not as agent for the plaintiff, but in order to protect himself against damage to or loss of the wool. Liver Alkali Co. v. Johnson, infra, followed. Hill v. Scott, 65 L. J., Q. B. 87; [1895] 2 Q. B. 713; 73 L. T. 458—C. A.

Notice—Liability limited by.]—A shipowner may bind the freighter by notice given that he will not be liable except for the negligence of his servants. Evans v. Soule, 2 M. & S. 1.

Liability of Shipowner as Common Carrier.]—A barge owner let out his vessels for the conveyance of goods to any customers who applied to him. Each voyage was made under a separate agreement, and a barge was not let to more than one person for the same voyage. He did not ply between any fixed termini, but the customer fixed, in each particular case, the points of arrival and departure. In an action against the barge owner by a hirer for not safely and securely carrying his goods:—Held, that in exercising this employment he had incurred the liability of a common carrier, and was liable though the goods were lost without negligence on his part. Liver Alkali Co. v. Johnson, 43 L. J., Ex. 216; L. R. 9 Ex. 338; 31 L. T. 95; 2 Asp. M. C. 332—Ex. Ch. See also Nugent v. Smith, infra.

The barge owner was not a common carrier nor liable as such, but was liable as a shipowner carrying goods for hire upon the custom applicable to him as such. Ib.

Hoyman on the Thames.]—A hoyman between London and Milton in Kent held liable upon the custom of the realm and at common law for loss of a passenger's portmanteau. Rich v. Kneeland, Hob. 17; 2 Cro. 330.

Liability for Theft by Crew.]—The shipowner is liable for cargo lost or embezzled by the negligence of the master. Boucher v. Lawson, Ca. temp. Hardw. 85; Cun. 241.

The master of a general ship, on board which goods have been laden in the Thames for a foreign port, is liable for the loss of them by robbery in the river. Barclay v. Cuculla y Gama, 3 Dowl. 389; cited 1 Term Rep. 33, nom. Barclay v. Heygena.

Liability for Robbery—Custom of Realm.]—Action on the custom of the realm against the master of a ship bound from London to Cadiz for the loss of goods taken from her by robbers whilst lying in the Thames at Stepney:—Held, that the master was liable. Morse v. Slew or Slue, 1 Vent. 190, 238; 2 Keb. 72, 112, 135, 866; Sir T. Raym. 220; 1 Mod. 85.

"In the case of Morse v. Slew, supra, if the ship had been robbed at sea the master had not been answerable, yet he was chargeable at land"—per Holt, C.J. Lane v. Cotton, 4 Taunt. 628; 12 Mod. 484.

Damage to Goods by Ship striking an Unbuoyed Wreck.]—Shipowners are liable as carriers for damage to goods in their ship, which was sunk by striking on an anchor of another ship negligently left unbuoyed:—Held, that they could not sue the goods owner for the expenses of recovering the goods. Trent (or Trent and Mersey) Navigation (Proprietors of) v. Wood, 3 Esp. 127; 3 Dougl. 287.

Pleading—Action on Custom or in Assumpsit.]—Action for negligent carriage of wines by common carrier from Bristol to Gloucester; plea, not guilty; issue found against defendant; in error held that the issue was erroneous, the action being in assumpsit. Bradley v. Benney, Noy, 114.

Refusal to carry Plaintiff—Action against Shipowners as Common Carriers.]—See Bennett v. Peninsula and Oriental Steamboat Co., 6 C. B. 755, infra, col. 78.

Loss by Act of God.]—A mare on board a steamer trading regularly between London and Aberdeen, was injured during bad weather, which caused her to kick and strain herself, without negligence on the part of the ship's crew or owners:—Held, that the shipowner was not liable. Nugent v. Smith, 45 L. J., C. P. 697; 1 C. P. D. 423; 34 L. T. 827; 24 W. R. 237; 3 Asp. M. C. 198—C. A.

Loss by act of God is loss occasioned by agency of nature not to be prevented by ordinary care. Ib.

Semble, carriers by sea are not subject to the liabilities of a common carrier. Ib.

—— Jettison, to save Life.]—A box of specie was thrown overboard to save life:—Held, that the barge owner was not liable; semble, act of God. Gravesend Barge Case, 1 Rolle, 79.

—— Must be immediate—Striking on Sunken Wreck.]—The act of God, to excuse a shipowner for loss of the goods, must be immediate. Smith v. Shepherd, Abbott on Shipping, Ed. 13, p. 459.

The defendant's ship struck on a mast of a sunken ship in the Humber, being on her passage from Selby to Hull, and sank, and the goods were spoiled:—Held, that the shipowner was liable. Ib.

—— Rats.]—A hoyman carrying goods is insurer against everything except act of God and the king's enemies, and is therefore liable for damage to goods by water let into the ship by a hole eaten by rats. Dale v. Hall, 1 Wils. 281. See also Goff v. Clinkard, cited 1 Wils. 282, n. where the carriage was from London to Amsterdam.

—— Hoyman—Capsizing by Sudden Squall.]—Hoyman held not liable for upsetting of his hoy by a sudden gust of wind (act of God). Amies v. Stephens, 1 Str. 127.

—— Collision between Tug and Craft in Tow.]—Goods on board a boat in tow of a steamer in the Solent were damaged by reason of the boat in tow being pitched by the sea upon the rudder of the steamer (which had stopped to avoid another), whereby she sprang a leak. The defendants, the owners of the steamer and towboat, were carrying the goods as common carriers:—Held, that the loss was not an act of God, and the defendants were liable. Oakley v. Portsmouth and Ryde Steam Packet Co., 11 Ex. 618.

b. Under Contract of Carriage.

Leakage—Notice as to Liability.]—Where carriers by sea received a cask of brandy to carry, on the terms that they should not be liable for any loss or damage arising from any cause whatever during the transit:—Held, that they were not liable, as common carriers, for an injury to the cask. Phillips v. Edwards, 4 H. & N. 813; 28 L. J., Ex. 52.

Owners of a steam vessel plying between London and Bristol, issued every month handbills of the times of their vessels' sailing, and which contained a notice that they "received goods for shipment on the conditions and agreement only that they are not liable for inward condition, leakage and breakage, and that they would not receive any goods for conveyance by their vessels except upon the terms that they should not be responsible for any loss or damage of or to such goods from any cause whatever during the voyage." On the 8th March, the plaintiffs, who had received these handbills, shipped on board one of the defendants' vessels two casks of brandy to be carried to Falmouth. On the 11th March the shipping broker delivered to the plaintiffs a freight note, at the foot of which was a notice that the defendants did not hold themselves liable for leakage of oils, spirits or other liquids, unless from bad stowage. In the course of the voyage one of the casks of brandy was stayed in and nearly all its contents lost:—Held, that the notice in the handbills constituted the terms of the contract under which the goods were shipped, and that those terms were not qualified by the notice at the foot of the freight note, and, consequently, that the defendants were not responsible. Ib.

Loss of Bullion—Covenant for good Behaviour of Master.]—Shipowner held liable for non-delivery of moidores, where ship let to charterer for the voyage, the shipowner having covenanted for the good behaviour of the master. Parish v. Crawford, 2 Str. 1251.

Railway Company—Notice as to Nonliability—17 & 18 Vict. c. 31.]—A railway company owning and working steamships cannot by notice limit its liability for loss of passengers' luggage, being subject to the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 7, and the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, s. 16. Cohen v. S. E. Ry., 46 L. J., Ex. 417; 2 Ex. D. 253; 36 L. T. 130; 25 W. R. 475; 3 Asp. M. C. 248—C. A.

A condition in a contract for carriage of animals by steamboats worked or chartered by a railway company that the company should not be liable for negligence of master or crew is unreasonable and void. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 92, s. 31; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 119, s. 12. Doolan v. Midland Ry., 2 App. Cas. 792; 37 L. T. 317; 25 W. R. 882; 3 Asp. M. C. 685.

Carriers Act, 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68.]—The Carriers Act, 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 68, held to apply to a railway company carrying passengers and goods partly by land and partly by sea (from London to Jersey). Pianciani v. L. & S. W. Ry., 18 C. B. 226.

Carriage of Goods partly by Land and partly by Sea—Negligence of Crew of Steamship—17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, s. 7; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, s. 16—34 & 35 Vict. c. 78, s. 12—Void Condition.]—A railway company contracted to carry goods "through," partly by land and partly by sea. A condition exempting them from liability for negligence of the captain and crew of a steamship, owned and worked by a steamship company who had made arrangements with the railway company for through booking, is no answer to an action for loss of goods caused by the negligence of the crew of the steamship, being unreasonable and void. Moore v. Midland Ry., Ir. R. 9 Ch. 20. And see S. C., Ir. R. 8 C. L. 232.

—— Railway Company and Shipowners Joint Contractors—Carriage of Pigs.]—A. shipped pigs on a steamship belonging to B. that plied between Cork and Milford, and paid to B. a through freight for the carriage of the pigs to London by the South Wales and Great Western Railways. Over B.'s door was painted "South Wales Railway Office"; also over the adjoining cattle yard. The shipping agents were paid by B., and the signboards were not sanctioned by the railway company; but there was an agreement between B. and the railway company as to dividing the freights:—Held, that the railway company and B. were both liable for breach of contract to carry the pigs; and that the railway company were liable in an action for money had and received for money produced by the sale of carcases of pigs destroyed on the voyage. Hayes v. South Wales Ry., 9 Ir. C. L. R. 474.

Passengers' Luggage.]—See infra, XXI. PASSENGER SHIPS, col. 867.

Improper Abandonment—Salvage—Recovery against Shipowner.]—Salvage paid by cargo owner by reason of improper abandonment by master is recoverable against the ship and her owner. The Princess Royal, 39 L. J., Adm. 43; L. R. 3 A. & E. 41; 22 L. T. 29.

See also tits. XI. CHARTERPARTY; XII. BILL OF LADING; XXII. ADMIRALTY LAW AND PRACTICE, 20, DAMAGE TO CARGO.

c. Liability to Passengers.

Passengers' Luggage.]—The plaintiff, a passenger in the defendant's ship from New York to Galway, signed a ticket, upon which it was stated that the shipowners would not be accountable for passengers' luggage, unless bills of lading were signed. The ship and luggage were lost by the master's negligence:—Held, the shipowners were not liable. Wilton v. Atlantic Royal Mail Steam Nav. Co., 10 C. B. (N.S.) 453; 30 L. J., C. P. 369; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 232; 4 L. T. 706; 9 W. R. 748.

Notice as to Nonliability.]—A passenger took and signed a ticket for Colon by the defendant's steamship, upon which was printed "The company will not be responsible for any loss or damage to luggage in any circumstances." The passenger was put ashore ill and insensible at Jamaica, with his box, which was lost:—Held, that he could recover nothing for the loss. Thompson v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., 5 Asp. M. C. 190, n.

Delay in Sailing.]—For unreasonable delay in sailing, passengers may recover damages, even in the absence of a fixed time being advertised—per Alderson, B. Ellis v. Thompson, 3 M. & W. 456; 7 L. J., Ex. 185.

Separate Actions by Passengers—Stay—Insufficient Accommodation.]—Stay of proceedings in seven out of eight actions brought against a shipping company by passengers, for insufficient accommodation on board ship, refused. Westbrook v. Australian Royal Mail Steam Nav. Co., 14 C. B. 113.

Refusing to Carry Plaintiff—Common Carrier.]—Declaration against shipowners as common carriers, for refusing to take plaintiff as passenger from Southampton to Gibraltar. Verdict for the plaintiff sustained. Bennett v. Peninsular and Oriental Steamboat Co., 6 C. B. 775.

Injury by Negligence of Crew.]—See Dalyell v. Tyrer, infra, XX. COLLISION—LIABILITY. Monaghan v. Buchanan, infra, XXI. PASSENGER SHIPS.

Ferry Boat—Negligence in Landing Passengers' Goods.]—The plaintiff's phaeton, containing a case of watches and jewellery, was being landed from the Woodside ferry, at Liverpool, when it overpowered the men who were landing it, ran backwards violently, and the watches and jewellery were injured:—Held, that it was a question for the jury whether there was a contract to land the carriage and contents, and whether the landing had been completed without negligence. Walker v. Jackson, 10 M. & W. 161; 12 L. J., Ex. 165.

Held, also, that the plaintiff's right of action was not affected by his not having communicated the fact of the jewellery being in the carriage. Ib.

—— Injury to Horse in Landing.]—The lessees of a ferry on the Mersey held liable for injury to a horse under the charge of its owner caused by the giving way of a side rail of the gangway or brows used between the ship and the shore. Willoughby v. Horridge, 12 C. B. 742.

Liability for Arrest of Passenger—Purser.]—A passenger sued a shipowner for an alleged wrongful arrest by the purser:—Held, that the action would lie, the purser having a statutory power to arrest. Lundie v. Macbrayne, 21 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1085.

Passengers forwarded from Wreck.]—See The Mariposa, infra, col. 87.

7. Limitation of Liability.

Loss by Fire—26 Geo. 3, c. 86.]—The statute 26 Geo. 3, c. 86, limiting shipowners' liability for loss by fire, did not protect the owners of a "gabbert" (lighter) on board which goods were burnt; the statute applied to seagoing ships only. Hunter v. McGowan, 1 Bligh, 573.

Master, Part Owner—53 Geo. 3, c. 159.]—In an action against several defendants, shipowners, for loss of goods on board their ship:—Held, under 53 Geo. 3, c. 159, s. 1, that their liability was limited to the value of the ship and freight, although the loss was caused by the fault of one of the defendants, who was master and part-owner; the value of the ship to be taken at the time of the loss; and money paid as advance freight to be included in the item of freight. Wilson v. Dickson, 2 B. & Ald. 2; 20 R. R. 331.

Ransom Bill.]—Owners were not liable upon a ransom bill beyond the value of ship and freight. Helly v. Grant, cited 1 Term Rep. 76.

In case of Collision.]—See tit. XX. Collision, infra.

8. Offences by.

Certificated Master—Icemaster.]—A whaling ship went to sea with a certificated master and an icemaster, who was in fact in charge of the ship by the owner's orders. The owner was convicted, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 136, for employing a master who had no certificate. Conviction quashed. Heslop v. Cadenhead, 14 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 35.

Excessive Deck Load—Timber — Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 451, sub.-s. 3 (a).]—See Morris v. Thormodsen, infra, col. 503.

Grain Cargo — Unseaworthiness.]—See The Rothwell, supra, col. 74.

Overloading by Master without Knowledge of Owner—Liability of Owner.]—A shipowner does not "allow" the overloading of his ship within the meaning of s. 28 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, and thus render himself liable to the penalty thereby imposed, merely by appointing the master who was in charge of the ship at the time of overloading. Massey v. Morris, 63 L. J., M. C. 185; [1894] 2 Q. B. 412; 10 R. 342; 70 L. T. 873; 42 W. R. 638; 7 Asp. M. C. 586 58 J. P. 673.

Discharging Seamen Abroad—Wages.]—See VI. Seamen, infra.

Ships' Lights.]—See XX. Collision, infra.

1. Position, Duties, and Liabilities.

Must give Whole Time to Ship.]—The master of a ship is bound to employ his whole time and attention in the service of his employer; and, semble, a custom allowing such master to trade on his private account during the voyage cannot be maintained. Gardner v. M'Cutcheon, 4 Beav. 534.

If A., whilst employed as master of a ship, of which B. is owner, gives part of his services for an agreed payment to C., and C. pays this sum to B., an action to recover it will not lie at the suit of A. against B. Thompson v. Havelock, 1 Camp. 526.

Must account for Trading Profits.]—A master of a ship who, having authority to employ the vessel on freight to the best advantage, but not to purchase a cargo on the owner's account, and being unable to procure remunerative freight, loaded the ship with a cargo of his own:—Held, liable to account to the owners for all profits made by the sale of the cargo, and not merely for a proper freight. Shallcross v. Oldham, 2 J. & H. 609; 5 L. T. 824; 10 W. R. 291.

May Sue Wrongdoer.]—The master may sue a wrongdoer who takes possession of the ship. Pittes v. Gainee, 1 Ld. Raym. 558.

Trespass to Cargo.]—The master may sue for trespass to cargo. Mikes v. Caley, Holt, 467.

Authority of Master to Sue for Collision.]—See The Reinbeck, infra, col. 85.

Robbery—Liability for.]—Where goods were taken by robbers on the Thames, the master was held liable. Mors v. Slew or Slue, supra, col. 75.

And see as to the duties of the master with reference to cargo, tit. XV. Cargo, infra.

Pilot—Master not liable for Fault of.]—For a collision caused by the fault of the pilot, the master is not liable. The Octavia Stella, 57 L. T. 632; 6 Asp. M. C. 182.

The captain is not responsible to the owner for the fault of the pilot. Aldrich v. Simmons, 1 Stark. 214. And see VII. Pilot, XX. Collision, post.

Penalties.]—The master is not liable to penalties for infringement of rules of navigation where the ship is in charge of a compulsory pilot. Oakley v. Speedy, 40 L. T. 881; 4 Asp.

M. C. 134. S. P., Michell v. Brown, 28 L. J., Adm. 53.

Assaults by.]—A captain is not justified in throwing a stone at a person in a boat who has fastened it to the ship, and thereby impeded and endangered it, for the purpose of making him let go, unless it was not possible, either at the time or before the immediate pinch of the danger, to adopt any other mode for the purpose. Eyre v. Norsworthy, 4 Car. & P. 502.

An action lies against the master for purposely firing a cannon at negroes, and thereby preventing them trading with the plaintiff; and it is no answer that the plaintiff had not conformed to the law of the country in paying the duty due to the king for his licence to trade. Tarleton v. M'Gawley, Peake, 270; 3 R. R. 689.

False Imprisonment of Passenger.]—Damages 25*l*., recovered by a passenger for false imprisonment by the master. The authority of the master over passengers is limited to the necessities of the case, the preservation of discipline, and the safety of the ship. Aldworth v. Stewart, 4 F. & F. 957; 14 L. T. 862.

Justifiable Force against Passenger.]—Semble, the master may use force to passengers, as in compelling them to fight an enemy, if the safety of the ship or those on board her requires it. Boyce v. Bayliffe, 1 Camp. 60; Boyce v. Douglass, 1 Camp. 59. Or to preserve order. Noden v. Johnson, 16 Q. B. 218; 20 L. J., Q. B. 95; 15 Jur. 424.

Seaman—Authority of Master to Punish.]—See tit. SEAMEN.

—— Entry of Offences in Log.]—See Hill v. Thompson, infra, col. 136.

Infringement of Patent by.]—An action was brought against the master of a ship to restrain him from using pumps which were an infringement of the plaintiff's letters patent. He denied having used any pumps which were an infringement of the patent, and did not suggest that the owners ought to be parties. It was shewn that the ship was fitted up exclusively with pumps which were an infringement of the letters patent, but had been so fitted up before the defendant, who was not a part owner, had taken command of her; he had nothing to do with putting them on board, and they had never been worked in British waters:—Held, by Brett and Cotton, L.JJ. (dissentiente, James, L.J.), that the injunction was rightly granted, on the ground that the defendant, being in command of a ship exclusively fitted up with pumps which were an infringement of the letters patent, was intending to use the patented invention. Adair v. Young, 12 Ch. D. 13; 40 L. T. 598—C. A.

Service without Agreement.]—The law will presume that the terms of a master's engagement for one voyage extend to a succeeding voyage performed without a new agreement, express or clearly implied. The Gananoque, Lush. 448.

Wrongful Dismissal—Jurisdiction.]—A claim for damages for wrongful dismissal is within the cognisance of a court having original admiralty jurisdiction, and, semble, of a county court having admiralty jurisdiction by statute. The Blessing, 3 P. D. 35; 38 L. T. 259; 26 W. R. 404; 3 Asp. M. C. 561.

—— Measure of Damages.]—A master engaged for a voyage out and home, if wrongfully discharged abroad, is entitled to wages until he can obtain other employment. The Camilla, Swabey, 312; 6 W. R. 840.

Notice of Dismissal.]—The master of a ship, in the absence of express stipulation in the contract of hiring, is entitled to reasonable notice of dismissal from the shipowner. Creen v. Wright, 1 C. P. D. 591; 35 L. T. 339; 3 Asp. M. C. 254.

Certificate of Master — Suspension.] — The Merchant Shipping Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 80), does not extend the jurisdiction to suspend or cancel the certificate of the master to cases not within the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), ss. 242, 432. There is, therefore, no power to suspend the master's certificate where a ship has merely been stranded without material damage to the ship or loss of life. Story, Ex parte, 47 L. J., Q. B. 266; 3 Q. B. D. 166; 38 L. T. 29; 26 W. R. 329; 3 Asp. M. C. 549.

See further, XXII. BOARD OF TRADE PROCEEDINGS.

Removal of.]—By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 240, the court of admiralty has power, on an application by the owner or part-owner, to remove the master of a ship, if satisfied that the removal is necessary. The Royalist, Br. & Lush. 46; 32 L. J., Adm. 105; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 852.

The removal is necessary if the master has committed a fraudulent breach of trust against the owners, such as making a payment of 5*l*. on ship's account, and fraudulently claiming 25*l*. of the owners, and the court will make the order of removal on the application of one part owner only, notwithstanding another part owner (the ship's husband) is dissentient. Ib.

Authority to raise Seaman's Rating.]—The master has authority to engage a seaman to serve at higher wages as steward, the steward being dead. Hicks v. Walker, 4 W. R. 511.

—— To Hire Steward.]—A., master of a ship in the temporary possession of B., has implied authority from B. to hire a steward for the ship's purposes. Luttrell v. China Navigation Co., 1 N. R. 329.

Liability of Master for Necessaries.]—See The Marco Polo, and cases infra, col. 92.

Ship let to Master—Liability for Repairs, &c.]—See Reeve v. Davis, ante, col. 65.

Refusing to give Seaman Certificate of Discharge.]—See VI. SEAMEN.

Master refusing to deliver up Certificate of Registry.]—See Rex v. Pixley, ante, col. 31.

Effects of Master dying on Board—Succeeding Master Trustee thereof.]—The master dies. The succeeding master takes possession of money on board belonging to him and trades with it :—Held, that he was a trustee and accountable to the widow for what he made of it. Brown and Litton's Case, 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 722 ; Lucas' Rep. 20.

Weighage — Custom of London — Master liable.]—The master of a ship is liable for weighage on goods brought into London. London (Corporation) v. Hunt, 3 Lev. 37.

Official Log—Ship's Draught—M. S. A. Amendment Act (34 & 35 Vict. c. 110), s. 5.]—A shipmaster sailed from Batavia for other ports in Java, 500 miles from Batavia, to take in his cargo. He did not record his ship's draught of water in the official log, until he finally sailed for home :—Held, that he had not complied with the act. Board of Trade v. Brown, 13 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 58.

Commander of King's Ship—Trespass—Seizure as Prize.]—No action at common law lies against the commander of a king's ship for seizing a ship as prize, or for false imprisonment of her crew. The only remedy is in admiralty. Faith v. Pearson, Holt, N. P. 113 ; 16 R. R. 649.

Not fellow-servant of Seamen.]—The captain of a merchant ship is not a fellow-servant of the sailors, but is the agent or representative of the owners of the vessel during the voyage, and the owners of the vessel are responsible for the injury to, or death of, a sailor resulting from the negligence of the captain during the voyage. Ramsay v. Quinn (Ir. R. 8 C. L. 322), not followed. Hedley v. Pinckney & Sons S. S. Co., supra, col. 73.

Impressment.]—Semble, the master of a trading vessel is not free from impressment. Chalacombe, Ex parte, 13 East, 550, n. ; 12 R. R. 431, n. : Burrows' Case, 14 East, 346.

Seaman—Entry of Offence in Log—Slander.]—See Hill v. Thompson, infra, col. 136.

Not Agent of Cargo Owner.]—The master is not the agent of the cargo owners unless expressly so constituted by them—Per Lord Stowell. The Mercurius, 1 C. Rob. 80, 84.

Bill of Lading.]—Duty of master as to delivering goods under. See The Stettin, infra, col. 314.

2. Authority to bind Owners.

To substitute Voyage.]—A captain of a ship has no authority, as such, to agree to a substitution of another voyage in the place of one agreed upon between his owners and the freighters in England, and on which he has sailed to a foreign country. Burgon v. Sharpe, 2 Camp. 529 ; 11 R. R. 788.

Usual Course of Business.]—If the master makes a particular engagement or warranty relating to the conveying of merchandise according to the usual employment of the ship, the owners will be bound thereby, although made without their consent. Ranquist v. Ditchell, 3 Esp. 64 ; 2 Camp. 556, n.

As Servant of Charterer.]—Where the owner has let the ship to freight for a specific voyage, the master is the agent of the freighter, and consequently the owner is not liable for the non-delivery of the goods on the contract of the master. James v. Jones, 3 Esp. 27.

By Charterparty.]—A master has no authority to bind his owners by writing forward to a broker in a foreign port, prior to the ship's arrival therein, authorising the broker to charter his ship. The authority of a master to bind his owners by charterparty arises when he is in a foreign port, and his owners are not there, and there is difficulty in communicating with them. A master is not the agent for his owners to hold out a person as authorised to charter his ship, so as to bind the owners. The Fanny, The Matilda, 48 L. T. 771 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 75—C. A.

The master chartered the ship abroad to M. & Co., with a view to secure to them payment of a debt due from the shipowners. The freight being in court, it was claimed by M. & Co. ; by mortgagees of the ship under an assignment of freight by the master to secure advances made to the ship ; and by assignees of the owners :—Held, that the assignees were entitled; the master having no power to bind the owners by charter or assignment of freight. The Sir Henry Webb, 13 Jur. 639.

The master of an American vessel arriving in England, authorised by the owners to sell or charter the ship, entered into a charterparty with the plaintiff for a voyage to Ceylon and back. A few days afterwards the defendant purchased the ship from a party acting under a power of attorney from one of the owners to sell her. The greater part of the cargo had been put on board under the charterparty. The defendant attempted to stop the sailing of the ship :—Held, that the master having authority to charter the ship, which he had done, and the defendant knowing of the charterparty, an injunction would lie to restrain the purchasers from interfering with the sailing of the ship, in pursuance of the charterparty. Messageries Imperiales Co. v. Baines, 7 L. T. 763 ; 11 W. R. 322.

By what Law Governed.]—The power of a master to bind his owners personally is but a branch of the general law of agency ; and where the master contracts as such in a foreign port to carry goods for a foreigner, his authority to bind his owners is that conferred by the law of the country to which the ship belongs ; and the flag of the ship is notice to all the world that his implied authority is limited by the law of that flag. Lloyd v. Guibert, 6 B. & S. 100 ; 35 L. J., Q. B. 74 ; L. R. 1 Q. B. 115 ; 13 L. T. 602—Ex. Ch. Affirming 10 Jur. (N.S.) 949 ; 12 W. R. 953.

Where a master of a French ship contracted in the West Indies to carry goods of an Englishman thence to Liverpool, and on the voyage was obliged to put into a port of refuge, and there properly borrowed money on bottomry bonds for the use of the ship and crew, and the owner of the goods was obliged to pay money to the holder of the bonds in order to redeem his goods:—Held, that the owner of the goods had no claim against the owners of the ship, if they chose to abandon the ship and freight : inasmuch as by the law of France, it was lawful for them to free themselves from the acts and engagements of the master, in all that concerned the ship and voyage, by the abandonment of the ship and freight. Ib.

Power to ransom Ship.]—The master had power (when ransom was legal) to bind ship and cargo by an agreement with the captors.—Per Lord Stowell. The Gratitudine, 3 C. Rob. 240, 259.

Authority to institute Action for Collision.]—The master of a ship carrying cargo where his ship and cargo have been damaged by collision in or near a foreign port, has authority to institute an action in rem in the foreign port against the offending ship on behalf of both ship and cargo, and the owners of the cargo cannot, so long as that suit is pending in their names, be allowed to deny his authority. The Reinbeck, 60 L. T. 209; 6 Asp. M. C. 366—C. A.

May bind Owner beyond Value of Ship.]—The master may by contract bind his owners beyond the value of ship and cargo. Yates v. Hall, 1 Term Rep. 73.

Special Contract with Seamen.]—A promise by a captain on behalf of his owners to pay monthly wages to one of the sailors, in order to induce him to become a hostage, is binding on the owners, although they abandon the ship and cargo. Ib. And see Helly v. Grant, 1 Term Rep. 76.

Settling Demurrage.]—A., the owner of a ship, entered into a charterparty containing stipulations as to demurrage. The ship was detained in South Africa beyond the time stipulated for. The captain was in possession of the ship: he was to be paid freight and demurrage by bill in South America. After making the charterparty, and before the settlement hereinafter mentioned, the ship with the charter was sold to F. The captain became a part owner of the ship. The captain having settled the account for freight, demurrage and delay with the charterer by taking a bill in South America:—Held, that F. and A., in whose names he was suing, were bound by such settlement. Alexander v. Dowie, 1 H. & N. 152; 25 L. J., Ex. 281.

Collecting Freight.]—An order by an owner of a ship to a house abroad to collect freight, takes the freight out of the hands of the master. The Edmond, Lush. 58; 29 L. J., Adm. 76; 2 L. T. 192.

Salvage.]—Observations of Brett, M.R., as to the implied authority of shipmasters to bind owners by salvage agreements. See The Renpor, 52 L. J., Adm. 49; 8 P. D. 115; 48 L. T. 887; 31 W. R. 640—C. A.; infra, SALVAGE.

Power to bind Owners for Necessaries.]—See cases ante, cols. 61, seq.

—— For Repairs.]—See Miller v. Potter, ante, col. 17, and cases ante, cols. 61, seq.

Duty as to Repair.]—If a vessel after she has started on her voyage receives damage, the master, in considering what steps he shall take in regard to carrying on the cargo or first repairing the ship, is bound to consider not one individual interest, but the interests of all concerned; whether it be to return to his port of loading and repair, or repair at the nearest possible place before proceeding, or go on without repairing; but if it be in his power to effect the repairs without any great delay or expense to the interests intrusted to his charge, it is his duty to repair before proceeding. The Rona, 51 L. T. 28; 5 Asp. M. C. 259.

Authority to make Towage Agreements.]—See The Alfred, Wellfield (Owners) v. Adamson, post, col. 681.

Liability—Bill of Lading—Power of Ship's Brokers to Exempt.]—The mere employment of ship's brokers at a foreign port to find a cargo for a ship and adjust the terms upon which it is carried does not give them implied power to relieve the master, when he signs bills of lading presented to him, from the duty of seeing that the dates of shipment are correctly stated in the bills. In breach of that duty the master is liable to his owners. Stumore v. Breen, 56 L. J., Q. B. 401; 12 App. Cas. 698—H. L. (E.)

Authority to hire and raise Seaman's Rating.]—See Hicks v. Walker, and cases supra, col. 82.

Payment of Past Services—Borrowing Money for.]—The master has, in the absence of the owner, or means of communicating with him, authority to pledge his credit for all things necessary for the purpose of conducting the navigation to a favourable termination, and for that purpose he may borrow money for services which require prompt payment; but he has no authority to borrow money generally in order to pay for services already rendered. Beldon v. Campbell, 6 Ex. 886; 20 L. J., Ex. 342.

Special Instructions—General Authority.]—A shipowner, in his written instructions to a captain, directed him, in case of emergency, to apply to certain firms abroad, "who would give him any assistance required":—Held, that this did not authorise the captain to do anything not included in his general power and authority as captain. Lyall v. Hicks, 27 Beav. 616.

Owner taking Benefit of Master's Contract.]—The master of a ship who had expended all the money furnished to him by his employers, entered into a contract abroad for the purpose of obtaining funds to enable him to lay in the cargo which constituted the main object of his voyage:—Held, upon its appearing that the owners had derived benefit from the contract in question, that they had no right to repudiate the claim of the party by whom the advance was made, upon the ground that the master had exceeded his authority in the transaction, or that he had obtained the advance by means of representations to the lender the truth of which the latter was not in a position to prove. Ashmall v. Wood, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 232; 5 W. R. 397.

Power to draw Bill on Owner—Necessaries.]—The master in a foreign port cannot bind the owners by drawing a bill on them. Drain v. Scott, 3 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 114.

The master cannot bind the owner for goods supplied that are not necessary or proper for the ship. Ib.

Authority of Master to borrow Money in a Home Port.]—In an action against a shipowner for money advanced to the master in a home port:—Held, that the only question for the jury was whether, under the circumstances, the master was agent for the owner to get the advance; and that the state of accounts between the master and the owner had nothing to do with the case. Williamson v. Page, 1 Car. & K. 581.

Wreck of Passenger Ship—Carrying on Passengers—Agency of Master.]—Where a passenger ship is wrecked, and by the terms of the contract with the passengers the owners are under no liability to forward them to their destination, the master, who makes arrangements with another vessel to carry on the passengers, does so as the agent of the passengers, and not of the owners. The Mariposa, 65 L. J., Adm. 104; [1896] P. 273; 75 L. T. 54; 45 W. R. 191; 8 Asp. M. C. 159.

Power to Hypothecate.]—See tit. X. BOTTOMRY.

Bankruptcy of Shipowner—Money Payable under Charterparty.]—See Wilkins v. Mure, infra, col. 392.

Mate succeeding to Command—Death of Master.]—Power of mate to bind owners by altering rating of seamen. See Hanson v. Roydon, infra, col. 117.

Power to extend Lay Days—To give Discharge from Demurrage.]—See Holman v. Peruvian Nitrate Co., infra, col. 479.

Coals—Charterer to Provide—Power of Master to bind Owner.]—See The Castleyate, infra, col. 250.

3. AUTHORITY TO SELL SHIP OR CARGO.

Cargo.]—See infra, col. 523.

Ship—Necessity alone justifies Sale—Insurance.]—The master of a vessel has no power to sell her so as to affect the insurers, except under circumstances of stringent necessity: such circumstances as, after sufficient examination of her condition, and after every exertion in his power, within the means at his disposal, to extricate her from peril or to raise funds for the repair, leave him no alternative but to sell her as she is. Cobequid Marine Insurance Co. v. Barteaux, L. R. 6 P. C. 319; 32 L. T. 510; 23 W. R. 892; 2 Asp. M. C. 536.

No Power to sell Ship.]—The master cannot sell the ship, even in case of necessity, without the owner's consent. Anon., Sid. pt. i. 453.

—— Wreck.]—The master cannot sell the ship, even when wrecked, without the owner's consent. Tremenhere v. Tresilian, 3 Keb. 91.

Power to sell Ship in case of Necessity.]—In case of absolute necessity to save something from an adventure that cannot be completed the master may sell the ship—Per Lord Stowell. The Fanny and Elmira, Edw. 118.

Sale of Cargo not justified by Circumstances.]—On the 19th of April an Austrian ship, with a valuable cargo on board, ran upon a rock on the eastern side of Algoa bay, distant fifty miles by sea, and about eighty by land, from Port Elizabeth. The Austrian consul at Port Elizabeth came to the spot, and, there being no hope of getting the vessel off, he advised the master to sell her with the cargo. The master accordingly advertised the ship and cargo for sale, and they were sold in one lot by auction on the 30th of April for 9,500*l.* after a brisk competition. The purchaser got some part of the cargo out of the wreck, but on the 19th of June the ship went to pieces with the rest of the cargo on board. The owners of the cargo having abandoned it to the underwriters as a total loss, the underwriters filed their bill to have the goods which had been brought to land delivered to them as not having been effectually sold. The master had not gone to Port Elizabeth, nor endeavoured to procure funds to enable him to save the cargo; nor had he made any effort to induce any persons to undertake the salvage of the cargo. Several witnesses at Port Elizabeth deposed that in their opinion no person could have been induced to undertake the salvage; others gave their opinion that offers to save the cargo could have been obtained if a large percentage of the net proceeds had been offered There was a good deal of evidence to shew that, in the opinion of persons on the spot, the course which had been adopted of selling the wreck and cargo was the most advisable one in the interest of all parties concerned:—Held, that no such necessity was proved to have existed as would make the master the agent of the owners of the cargo to effect a sale; that the sale was void; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the cargo saved, subject to a proper allowance for salvage and other expenses. Atlantic Mutual Marine Insurance Co. v. Huth, 16 Ch. D. 474; 44 L. T. 67; 29 W. R. 387; 4 Asp. M. C. 369.

—— Onus is on Master to prove Necessity.]—The authority of the master to sell the goods of an absent owner is derived from the necessity of the situation in which he is placed; and consequently, to justify his selling, he must establish a necessity for the sale; and an inability to communicate with the owner. Australasian Steam Navigation Co. v. Morse, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 482; L. R. 4 P. C. 222; 27 L. T. 357; 20 W. R. 728; 1 Asp. M. C. 407.

Duty to sell Cargo in case of Necessity.]—It is the master's duty in a port where he cannot communicate with the owner of the cargo to do what is necessary for its preservation; he may bottomry or even sell it—Per Lord Stowell. The Gratitudine, 3 Rob. 259.

Right of Cargo Owner to restrain Master from Selling—Terms.]—Where a vessel has become unable to proceed on her voyage without repairs, the owners of goods shipped on board the vessel may obtain the assistance of the court to restrain the captain from selling the cargo. But before the court will grant such assistance, the plaintiffs must shew their title to the goods, and must settle with the captain for what is due to him, and must exonerate the captain from his contract to deliver the goods at their place of destination, and from all liability on the bills of lading. Rayne v. Benedict, 10 L. J., Ch. 297; 5 Jur. 598.

Exception of Perils of Sea—Unnecessary Sale.]—Where the ship is unable to complete her voyage from accident, the exception of "dangers and accidents of the seas and navigation" does not justify the master in selling the cargo. Cannan v. Meaburn, 1 Bing. 243; 8 Moore, 127; 1 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 84. See Freeman v. East India Co., post, col. 525.

Ship sold by Master—Possession.]—Possession of a ship sold by her master without owner's consent decreed to her former owners, in default of appearance by the purchasers. The Lagan, otherwise Mimax, 3 Hag. Adm. 418.

4. Primage and Premiums.

Primage.]—Primage belongs of right to the master, and nothing but an express agreement can deprive him of his right to recover it from the freighter. An agreement by the master to receive from the owner a fixed sum, "in full of all cabin and other allowances," does not divest the master of his right. Best v. Saunders, M. & M. 208; 3 M. & R. 4; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 50. See Caughey v. Gordon, 3 C. P. D. 419; 27 W. R. 50.

By a bill of lading freight was to be paid "as per charterparty, with primage and average accustomed":—Held, that the reference to the charterparty applied to the freight only, and that in an action for primage the charterparty need not be produced. Ib.

Where there is a written agreement between the master and owners, not mentioning primage, and the owners have received payment in respect of primage from the freighters:—Held, that the master, by the usage of trade, is entitled to such payment. Charleton v. Cotesworth, Ry. & Mood. 175.

As to what amounts to an agreement as between shipowner and master to dispense with primage, see Scott v. Miller, 5 Scott, 11; 3 Bing. (N.C.) 811.

Premiums on Bills.]—If the master in a foreign port, from the state of the exchange, receives a premium for a bill drawn upon England on account of the ship, this belongs to his owner, although there may have been a usage for masters of ships to appropriate such premiums to their own use. Diplock v. Blackburn, 3 Camp. 43; 13 R. R. 744.

Master's Gratuity—Liability of Consignee.]—See Hewitt v. Paul, infra, col. 400.

5. Wages and Disbursements.

a. Generally.

Actions for.]—A master is entitled to sue the ship for wages as earned on board the ship within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 10, if he performed the duties of master, although during his service he did not sleep on board the ship, and many of his duties were performed on shore. The Chieftain, Br. & Lush. 104; 32 L. J., Adm. 106; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 388; 8 L. T. 120; 11 W. R. 537.

He may also sue for disbursements made by him during such service on the ship's account, but not for mere liabilities incurred. Ib.

A master suing for wages and disbursements is bound to furnish accounts before bringing his suit, otherwise he will not be entitled to his costs. The Fleur-de-Lis, L. R. 1 A. & E. 49; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 379.

He is entitled, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 187, 191, to double pay for the number of days (not exceeding ten), during which the payment of his wages is improperly withheld; but he is not so entitled, if he himself causes the delay, by improperly keeping back the accounts of the ship. The Princess Helena, Lush. 190; 30 L. J., Adm. 137; 4 L. T. 869. Overruled by The Arina, infra, col. 95.

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 189, read with s. 191, extends to masters of ships. The Blakeney, Swabey, 428; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 418.

Being compelled, by pressing necessity of ill health, to leave his ship abroad, he is entitled to sue immediately for his wages. The Rajah of Cochin, Swabey, 473.

—— In Admiralty.]—Formerly the master could not sue in admiralty for wages. Clay v. Snelgrove, 12 Mod. 405; Holt, 595; Carth. 518. S. P., The Lord Hobart, 2 Dod. 104.

Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 191, the master could not claim in admiralty for disbursements, unless the owners or mortgagees made a claim against him; in which case the court would examine the whole account. The Caledonia, Swabey, 17; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 48; 4 W. R. 183.

The master claimed wages from the mortgagees in possession; they claimed to deduct advances without going into the accounts to shew that they were entitled to do so:—Held, that they could not do so. Ib.

Under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, s. 16, the master could not sue for wages in admiralty, although the owner had compounded with his creditors, and had been released from his debts. The Tecumseh, 3 W. Rob. 109.

Arrest of the ship, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, s. 22, for master's wages, the owner having filed a declaration of insolvency, but not having been made bankrupt: — Held, illegal. The Great Northern, 2 W. Rob. 509. S. P., The Princess Royal, 2 W. Rob. 373.

Where, in an action for master's wages, it appears that, at the institution of the suit, accounts are outstanding between the owners and the plaintiff, and that the same have not been taken or settled, and that within two days of the institution of the suit the wages are paid, the owners have not refused to pay "without sufficient cause" within the meaning of s. 187 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and therefore the plaintiff is not entitled to recover ten days' double pay. The Turgot, 11 P. D. 21; 54 L. T. 276; 34 W. R. 552; 5 Asp. M. C. 548.

Wages not Dependent on Freight.]—The rule of marine law, that wages depend on the earning of freight, does not apply to the wages of the master. Hawkins v. Twizell, 5 El. & Bl. 883; 25 L. J., Q. B. 160; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 302; 4 W. R. 242.

Therefore, where a ship is lost, the administratrix of the captain is entitled to maintain an action for the period of his service before the loss. Ib.

When freight has been earned, the master though also part owner, may sue in the admiralty court for his wages and disbursements. The Feronia, 37 L. J., Adm. 60; L. R. 2 A. & E. 65; 17 L. T. 619; 16 W. R. 585. But see The Sara, col. 99.

In an action by the master against his owners to recover wages which accrued during his detention in a foreign port, it is not incumbent on him to prove that freight was earned; it is sufficient for him to shew that he has performed his services; and the owners must adduce evidence to prove that he is not entitled to remuneration. Brown v. Millener, 1 Moore, 65; 7 Taunt. 319; 18 R. R. 493. See also XXVI. ADMIRALTY LAW AND PRACTICE, infra, col. 952.

Part Owner—Mortgage of Part.]—F. and S., both residing at Halifax, Nova Scotia, were the owners each of a moiety of a ship and cargo. F. (as it was alleged) mortgaged his moiety to S. The ship sailed in November, 1868, from that port, F. being the master. After so sailing, S. assigned his own moiety and the other moiety, of which he was, as he alleged, mortgagee, to B., of Liverpool, who, on the arrival of the ship at Cork, ordered F. to take her round to Liverpool. F. declined to obey that order, on the ground that he, F., was the owner of a moiety of cargo and ship, and he denied in strong language in a letter to B. that he had mortgaged his moiety to S. The ship and cargo were arrested by order of the admiralty court and sold, at a price insufficient to cover the expenses:—Held, that F. was entitled to his wages as master earned on board the ship, even though he was part owner, and that the owner of the other moiety must pay him a moiety of such wages. The Joseph Dexter, 20 L. T. 820.

Claim to Equitable Share.]—In a suit for wages between an owner and the master, who is also a part owner, the court can take no cognisance of a claim by the master to an equitable share in the vessel. The D. Jex, 13 L. T. 22.

Contract—Independent Condition.]—The captain of a South Sea whaler covenanted with the defendant that he would proceed to the fishery and procure a cargo of sperm oil, or as great a proportion as might be, under all circumstances, within his power to obtain; would return to London, and at his own cost deliver the cargo; would obey instructions, be frugal of provisions, and not dispose of any of them without accounting for the same; and would not smuggle or trade, or permit anyone on board to do so. The defendant covenanted, on performance of the before-mentioned terms and conditions on the part of the captain, to pay him a certain proportion of the net proceeds of the cargo:—Held, that the captain's covenants were independent, and that the performance of them was not a condition precedent to an action on the defendant's covenant. Stavers v. Curling, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 355; 3 Scott, 740; 2 Hodges, 237; 6 L.J., C. P. 41.

—— Executed.]—A declaration stated, that the defendant was possessed of a ship, and the plaintiff was a master mariner, having interest in the island of N., in the West Indies, for loading a vessel; and it having been proposed by the plaintiff to the defendant that the defendant should give the plaintiff the command of the ship for a voyage to the West Indies and back, thereupon it was agreed, that, in consideration of the plaintiff having interest in N. for loading a vessel, the defendant would give the plaintiff the command of the ship, with the understanding that he would use all possible exertions for the benefit of the ship and the owners thereof, and that for such services the defendant would pay the plaintiff. Averment, that, in pursuance of the agreement, the defendant gave the plaintiff the command of the ship, and that he set out in command of the ship on the voyage, and safely delivered the outward cargo; that, finding that a homeward cargo was not likely to be obtained at N. without disadvantage to the ship and the owners, the plaintiff proceeded to the West Indies, and there procured a homeward cargo, and safely delivered the same, and then resigned the command of the ship into the hands of the defendant; and that, during all the time, the plaintiff used all possible exertions for the benefit of the ship and the owners. Breach, nonpayment by the defendant. Plea, that the plaintiff did not use all possible exertions for the benefit of the ship or of the owners:—Held, first, that a sufficient consideration appeared on the face of the declaration, the contract having been executed by the plaintiff. Mills v. Blachall, 11 Q. B. 358; 17 L. J., Q. B. 31; 12 Jur. 93.

Held, secondly, that the plea shewed only a partial failure of the consideration, and was, therefore, insufficient. Ib.

Counter-claim in Action for Wages.]—In an action of wages by master against shipowner, the defendant, by way of set-off and counter-claim, claimed damages for the loss of the ship by the negligence of the plaintiff:—Reply, that the ship was insured against a total loss, and that the underwriters had paid or agreed to pay to the owners the whole amount payable by them on a total loss:—Held, on demurrer, that the reply was bad, because the plaintiff had not pleaded that the money had been actually paid to the defendant, or that the counter-claim had been brought without the authority of the underwriters. The Sir Charles Napier, 5 P. D. 73; 43 L. T. 364; 28 W. R. 718; 4 Asp. M. C. 321—C. A.

Jurisdiction of County Court.]—A contract that a master mariner shall take a share of a fishing adventure and bear a share of certain disbursements is a contract of wages by the general maritime law, independently of the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), s. 8; and jurisdiction over such a contract is conferred on county courts having admiralty jurisdiction by the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 3, sub-s. 2. The Blessing, 3 P. D. 35; 38 L. T. 259; 26 W. R. 404; 3 Asp. M. C. 561. See The Dictator, 38 L. T. 947; 4 Asp. M. C. 19, infra, col. 940.

See also XXVI. ADMIRALTY LAW AND PRACTICE.

Liability for Necessaries.]—The captain who gives directions for repairs, is liable to a tradesman in the first instance, if it does not appear that any credit was given to the owners. Essery v. Cobb, 5 Car. & P. 358.

Where goods were ordered for a ship by the owner, before the appointment of the captain, though some were not delivered till afterwards, yet as no personal credit was given to the captain, he was not answerable for any of them. Farmer v. Davies, 1 Term Rep. 108; 1 R. R. 159. See Nicholson v. Mounsey, 15 East, 384; 13 R. R. 501. And The Marco Polo, 24 L. T. 804; 1 Asp. M. C. 54.

Disbursements—From what Time.]—A master can only claim against his ship for disbursements from the date on which he is placed on the ship's register as master. The Albion, 27 L. T. 723; 1 Asp. M. C. 481.

—— Counter-claim on Accounts when a Co-owner.]—In a cause of wages and disbursements instituted on behalf of a master, himself a co-owner, against other part owners, they may plead in answer that on a balance of account between the plaintiff as master and co-owner and the defendants nothing is due to the plaintiff, and set up a counter-claim for a balance due to them. The City of Mobile, 43 L. J., Adm. 41; L. R. 4 A. & E. 191; 29 L. T. 406; 22 W. R. 191; 2 Asp. M. C. 123.

—— Defence on Criminal Charge—Forfeit.]—A master, while at a foreign port with a homeward-bound vessel, incurred expenses in defending himself against a charge of murder, maliciously brought by two of the crew, whom he had censured for misconduct. The master was tried and acquitted, and bound over in 10*l.* to prosecute the men for perjury. He forfeited the 10*l.* in order to return with the vessel to England:—Held, first, that he was entitled to the expenses of his defence, on the ground that the charge originated directly from the performance by the master of his duty to his owners in chastising the men. The James Seddon, 35 L. J., Adm. 117; L. R. 1 A. & E. 62; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 609; 14 W. R. 973.

Held, secondly, that he was entitled to be allowed the 10*l.* forfeit, as it was for the interest of his owners that the master should not be delayed in returning with the vessel. Ib.

—— Bills of Exchange.]—Upon an appeal from the report of the registrar and merchants as to a master's claim for wages and disbursements, the following items were objected to: 1. Sums of money for which the master as well as the ship was liable, but which he had not paid. 2. Slops supplied to seamen, who afterwards deserted. 3. The amount of a dishonoured bill of exchange drawn for ship's purposes by the master upon the managing owner, but it was doubtful whether the master had received notice of the dishonour:—Held, as to the first item that the claim might be allowed upon proof to the satisfaction of the registrar that the sums were actually paid. The Feronia, 37 L. J., Adm. 60; L. R. 2 A. & E. 65; 17 L. T. 619; 16 W. R. 585. But see The Sara, post, col. 99.

Held, secondly, that the items for slops were properly allowed. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that as to the amount of the bill of exchange, even if notice of dishonour had not been waived, the master had not claimed the benefit of notice, and that therefore, as he was liable for the amount, the item was properly allowed. Ib.

There is no implied undertaking on the part of the owner, that a bill of exchange, drawn by the master on a third person, for money advanced for the ship's use, shall be duly honoured. Harber v. Brotherstone, 4 Camp. 254.

When the owners of a ship instruct the captain to make purchases in a foreign country, and to draw bills upon them in payment, the promise implied by law is not a promise to accept or pay the bills, but a promise to indemnify the captain against any loss or damage sustained by him from having drawn the bills. Huntley v. Sanderson, 1 Car. & M. 467.

In April and May, 1880, the master of a steamship obtained at a British colonial port coals for the ship, and paid for them by bills of exchange drawn on the charterers of the ship. The bills were dishonoured by the charterers, and in August, 1880, the master was served with a writ in an action brought to recover the amount of the bills. Judgment in this action was recovered against the master in July, 1881. In October, 1881, the steamship was sold, and the master in November, 1882, instituted an action of disbursements against her and her freight. The purchasers appeared and put in bail. At the hearing of the action the judgment recovered against the plaintiff in August, 1881, remained still in force and unsatisfied, and the plaintiff claimed to recover as a disbursement the amount for which he was liable under it:—Held, that the liability of the plaintiff to satisfy the judgment against him must be considered as a disbursement in respect of which a maritime lien existed under the 10th section of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861. The Fairport, 52 L. J., Adm. 21; 8 P. D. 48; 48 L. T. 536; 31 W. R. 616; 5 Asp. M. C. 62.

Held, also, that the right to enforce such lien had not been lost by any want of reasonable diligence on the part of the plaintiff, and that his claim must be pronounced for. Ib.

Recovery against Owner of Disbursements Paid to Shipwright.]—When shipwrights execute repairs to a ship at the order of the master given under circumstances by which the shipwrights acquire a right to claim against either the owners or the master, and they elect to claim against the master, the latter may, in an action for wages and disbursements, proceed against the ship and recover for the amount of such shipwright's claim as a disbursement made on ship's account. The Limerick, 34 L. T. 708; 3 Asp. M. C. 206—C. A.

Sum Paid under Bond given on Collision.]—When a ship through the default of her master has run into and damaged another ship, and the master of the former has in respect of such collision given a bond for the amount of the damage binding himself and his owners and the ship, he being himself a wrong-doer, cannot, in an action for wages and disbursements, claim the amount of such bond or to be indemnified against any claim to be made against him thereunder in respect of the collision. Ib. Reversing 45 L. J., Adm. 97; 1 P. D. 292.

Misconduct—Master taking Ship to Sea—Mortgagee—Wrongful Dismissal.]—A mortgagee took possession of a ship by putting a man on board and giving notice to the master. The latter, by order of the mortgagor, took the vessel to sea with the man in possession on board. In an action by the master for wages, and for compensation for wrongful dismissal, the registrar awarded him a sum as compensation, being the amount of wages payable for two months after the mortgagee took possession:—Held, on appeal, that the master had been guilty of misconduct in taking the vessel to sea, and could not as against the mortgagee be properly awarded any sum as compensation for wrongful dismissal. The Fairport, 54 L. J., Adm. 3; 10 P. D. 13; 52 L. T. 62; 33 W. R. 448; 5 Asp. M. C. 348.

Fraud of Managing Owner — Privity of Master.]—A master on his appointment agreed with the managing owner that he, the master, should find the provisions for the officers and crew at a certain rate per day. The master subsequently agreed with the managing owner, who was also a ship's store dealer, that the managing owner should supply the provisions and should charge them against moneys of the master which he held in his hands. The managing owner, however, debited his co-owners with the costs of the provisions, and fraudulently applied the master's money to his own purposes:—Held, in an action in rem against the owners by the master to recover wages and disbursements, that the master was entitled to credit for such an amount in the settlement of his accounts with the owners, the fraudulent application of his money by the managing owner being a wrong done to the co-owners for which he was not responsible. The Dora Tully, 54 L. T. 467; 5 Asp. M. C. 550.

Right to Wages up to Final Settlement of Claim.]—A master is not entitled under the Merchant Seamen (Payment of Wages) Act, 1880, s. 4, to wages up to the final settlement of his claim. The Arina, 56 L. J., Adm. 57; 12 P. D. 118; 57 L. T. 121; 35 W. R. 654; 6 Asp. M. C. 141.

Right to Ten Days' Double Pay.]—A master is not entitled under ss. 187 and 191 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, to the double pay for delay in the payment of wages recoverable by "seamen" under the former section. The Princess Helena (Lush. 190) overruled. Ib.

Under the provisions of s. 187 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and s. 4 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1880, as to nonpayment of wages, the right to recover ten days' double pay and wages to the time of final settlement is not enforceable where there is a bonâ fide question as to liability. The Rainbow, 53 L. T. 91; 5 Asp. M. C. 479.

Taking Bill of Exchange.]—The master took a bill of exchange from the shipowner in payment of a balance due for wages and disbursements:—Held, that he could sue in admiralty for wages under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 112, s. 16. The Simlah, 15 Jur. 865.

Neglect to make Protest—Admiralty Jurisdiction.]—The omission of the master to make a correct protest as to damage to goods, whereby the cargo owner is prevented from recovering average and insurance moneys, is not a matter over which the admiralty court has jurisdiction under 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 6. The Santa Anna, 32 L. J., Adm. 198.

Misconduct — Habitual Drunkenness of Master.]—A shipmaster who has been habitually drunk during his employment cannot maintain an action for his wages. The Macleod, 50 L. J., Adm. 6; 5 P. D. 254; 29 W. R. 34. And see FORFEITURE, infra, col. 103.

Wrongful Discharge.]—A master wrongly discharged abroad is entitled to wages until he gets other employment, or (semble) until the end of the voyage. The Camilla, Swabey, 312; 6 W. R. 840. And see The Fairport, supra, col. 94.

Deductions for Misconduct.]—In a suit by the master for his wages the owners may deduct the amount of any loss he has occasioned them by his misconduct. The Repulse, 4 Not. of Cas. 169.

Disbursements—Liability on Bill.]—In an action for master's wages, a mortgagee intervening and declaring to set up a right of set-off or counter-claim, but not filing any such counter-claim in the registry, but only a statement that he objected to all the claims in the master's account except those relating to the payment of wages and the wages claimed, must submit to a settlement of all the accounts between the master and the ship, exclusive of any private account between the master and the owner in respect of extraneous matters. The Glentanner, Swabey, 415. Overruled, see The Sara, 14 App. Cas. 209, infra, col. 99.

In this settlement the amount of a bill drawn by the master on the owners for the ship and dishonoured by them, for which judgment has been recovered against the master, but execution not levied, is to be taken into account. Ib.

Disbursements and Liabilities.]—The master of a British ship drew a bill of exchange on her owners in favour of the vendors of necessaries supplied to her in a home port on her owners' request. The bill was accepted by the owners and afterwards dishonoured, and the master was sued upon it to judgment:—Held, that he had not made a disbursement or incurred a liability on account of the ship under s. 1 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1889, so as to be entitled to a maritime lien upon the ship. The Orienta, Elliott v. The Orienta (Owners); 64 L. J., Adm. 32; [1895] P. 49; 11 R. 687; 71 L. T. 711; 7 Asp. M. C. 529—C. A.

—— Payment of Seamen's Wages—Recovery in Admiralty by Master.]—The master having paid the seamen their wages could not (formerly) sue the owners in admiralty. Anon., Fortesc. 230.

—— Coals—Charterer liable to supply—Bill by Master on Owner.]—See The Castlegate, infra, col. 98.

—— Lien for Disbursements—Enforcement—Winding-up.]—The master of a ship belonging to a company drew a bill on the company for necessaries supplied to the ship, which was accepted, but was dishonoured at maturity. He paid the bill, and claimed repayment from mortgagees who had taken possession of the ship. On the following day an order was made for winding up the company. The master then applied in the winding-up for leave to take proceedings in the admiralty court, and obtained an order giving him leave. The liquidator applied to discharge this order, and an order was made for the liquidator to pay into court to a separate account to meet the claim 150*l.*, which exceeded the principal and interest, the master undertaking not to proceed in the admiralty court; the payment to be without prejudice to any application by him to increase the amount. The 150*l.* was paid in, and he applied to increase the amount so as to cover the costs of defending an action brought against him by the holder of the bill, and his costs of the application in the winding-up. The Vice-Chancellor ordered the principal and interest on the bill to be paid to the master out of the 150*l.*, and the residue to be paid to the liquidator:—Held, that though if there had not been mortgagees in possession of the ship the proper mode of enforcing the master's lien on the ship would have been by application in the winding-up, the order giving leave to proceed in the admiralty court was a proper order, the mortgagees not being parties to the winding-up; and that the master was entitled to all his costs before the vice-chancellor as costs properly incurred by a mortgagee in enforcing his security. Rio Grande Do Sul Steamship Co., In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 277; 5 Ch. D. 282; 36 L. T. 603; 25 W. R. 328; 3 Asp. M. C. 424.

Detention Money as Witness.]—In calculating the amount due to a master for detention money and board whilst detained ashore as a witness, in a cause for the recovery of his wages, the fact that he through his wife carries on a business will not deprive him of his right to be allowed detention money; but if he lives at his place of business during his detention, the fact that he can live more cheaply at home than elsewhere is to be taken into consideration in fixing the amount to be allowed for subsistence money. The Royal Family, 31 L. T. 704; 2 Asp. M. C. 421.

Chancery Suit between Owners and Mortgagees—Master's Costs.]—The captain of a ship served a notice on the trustees of the docks, in which the cargo of the ship was being discharged, not to suffer its removal till the freight was paid, and wrote to the owners of the ship to inform them that he had stopped the cargo till the wages of himself and the seamen had been paid. In a suit between the owners and the mortgagee of one of them, the captain was made a party, and did not, by his answer, disclaim. The chief clerk found that certain sums were due to him in respect of wages, but that other sums claimed were not due:—Held, that the plaintiff was justified in making the captain a party, and that the latter was justified in not disclaiming, and was therefore entitled to his costs. Alexander v. Simms, 20 Beav. 123; 24 L. J., Ch. 618.

Ship's Register.]—The master has no lien on the certificate of registry. Gibson v. Ingo, 6 Hare, 112.

The master, whether co-owner or not, has no lien upon a certificate of registry or ship's papers in case of wrongful dismissal. The St. Olaf, 2 P. D. 113; 35 L. T. 428; 3 Asp. M. C. 268.

For what.]—The master has at common law a possessory lien on the cargo, not only for freight, but also for general average. Galam (Cargo ex), 3 N. R. 254; Br. & Lush. 167; 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 216; 33 L. J., Adm. 97; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 477; 9 L. T. 550; 12 W. R. 495.

A captain who has entered into engagements on account of the ship, thereby acquires a lien on the goods, and on the freight, to the extent of his engagements. White v. Baring, 4 Esp. 22; 6 R. R. 836. S. P., The Panthea, 25 L. T. 389; 1 Asp. M. C. 133.

But he has no lien on the ship for money expended, or debts incurred by him for repairs done to it on the voyage. Hussey v. Christie, 9 East, 426; 13 Ves. 599.

Nor on the freight for his wages, nor for his disbursements on account of the ship during the voyage, nor for the premiums paid by him abroad for the purpose of procuring the cargo. Smith v. Plummer, 1 B. & Ald. 575; 19 R. R. 391.

Nor for wages, stores or repairs done in England. Wilkins v. Carmichael, 1 Dougl. 101.

A master has no lien on the ship or freight for wages, nor for any expenditure which he may make in the ordinary discharge of his duties as master, however necessary for the performance of the voyage. But the case becomes one of ordinary principal and agent, where he makes a special contract, in itself ultra vires, in order to fulfil which he incurs special expenses; if the owner adopts the benefit of that contract, he must, in equity, also bear its burdens. Bristow v. Whitmore, 9 H. L. Cas. 391; 31 L. J., Ch. 467; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 291; 4 L. T. 622; 9 W. R. 621. Affirming 1 Johns. 96; 4 De G. & J. 325; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 29. Reversing 28 L. J., Ch. 801; 1 L. T. 173; 7 W. R. 150.

The master has no lien upon freight for his wages or other demands, unless it is a matter of express stipulation between himself and his owner. Atkinson v. Cotesworth, 5 D. & R. 552; 3 B. & C. 647; 1 Car. & P. 339; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 104; 27 R. R. 450.

Where Unsatisfied Judgment against Master for Necessaries.]—See The Fairport, 8 P. D. 48, supra, col. 94.

Lien not lost by taking Mortgage of Ship.]—A master is not deprived of his lien for wages and disbursements by the fact that he has taken a mortgage on the ship for the balance of his wages and disbursements, more especially if the shipowner has concealed from him the fact that there was a prior mortgage. The Albion, 27 L. T. 273; 1 Asp. M. C. 481.

Delay.]—See The Chieftain, infra, col. 101.

Under Tortious Hirer—Release.]—The release by the master of his personal claim against the shipowner for wages does not operate as a release of the ship from his lien for such wages. The fact that the master was hired by one who had fraudulently obtained possession of the ship, will not prevent the master having a lien upon the ship for his wages and disbursements, if he has discharged his duties in ignorance of the fraud. The Edwin, Br. & Lush. 211; 33 L. J., Adm. 197; 10 L. T. 658; 12 W. R. 992. But see The Sara, infra, col. 99.

Colonial Law.]—By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 191, a master has a lien for his wages in the vice-admiralty court, whatever may be the municipal law of the colony. The Rajah of Cochin, Swabey, 473.

Disbursements — Maritime Lien — Master's Authority.]—A master of a ship acquires, under s. 1 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1889, no lien upon the ship for disbursements for which he has no authority to bind the owner. The Castlegate, Morgan v. Castlegate Steamship Co., 62 L. J., P. C. 17; [1893] A. C. 38; 1 R. 97; 68 L. T. 99; 41 W. R. 349; 7 Asp. M. C. 284—H. L. (Ir.)

Where no lien on the ship exists, there can be no lien on the freight. Ib.

Maritime Lien—Master's Lien for Disbursements.]—A liability incurred at the request of the vendors of necessaries and of the shipowners by the master of a British ship in respect of necessaries supplied to her by the order of the owners at the port in England where they carry on business does not create a maritime lien which takes priority to a mortgage of the ship existing at the date of the necessaries being supplied. The Orienta, 64 L. J., Adm. 32; [1895] P. 49; 11 R. 687; 71 L. T. 711; 7 Asp. M. C. 529—C. A.

Master — Disbursements — Lien for — Necessaries.]—The Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10) does not give the master a maritime lien on the ship for disbursements. The Glentanner (Swabey, 415); The Mary Ann (L. R. 1 Adm. 8); The Feronia (L. R. 2 A. & E. 65); and The Ringdove (11 P. D. 120) overruled. The Sara, Hamilton v. Baker, 58 L. J., P. 57; 14 App. Cas. 209; 61 L. T. 26; 38 W. R. 129; 6 Asp. M. C. 413—H. L. (E.) [See 52 & 53 Vict. c. 46, s. 1.]

Maritime Lien — Right against Shipowners or Charterers — Authority.] — Where a ship is chartered under a charter providing that the master shall be appointed by the charterers, that the owners are to provide and pay for all provisions and wages of captain and crew, and for the necessary equipment and efficient working of the ship; that the captain is to be dismissed by the owners if he fails to give satisfaction, and that the charterers shall provide and pay for all coals, pilotages, port charges, &c., the master is the servant of the shipowners, and hence he has a right in rem for his wages and such disbursements as are necessary for the navigation of the ship, and which the charterers had not by the provisions of the charterparty undertaken to pay; and semble, per Lord Esher, M.R., if the charterers had refused to make these disbursements, and without them the ship could not be navigated, the master would be entitled to charge them against the shipowners. Semble, where the master is the servant of the charterers and not of the shipowners, he has no right against the owners in respect of wages and disbursements. The Beeswing, 53 L. T. 554; 5 Asp. M. C. 484—C. A.

By charterparty it was agreed that the owners of the ship should provide and pay for provisions and wages, and that the charterer should provide and pay for coals and other expenses. The master was to be appointed by and was to follow the instructions of the charterer. The master, with notice of the charterparty, ordered and made himself liable for provisions and coals for the vessel at a foreign port. These provisions and coals were necessary to enable the vessel to perform her voyage:—Held, in an action by the master against the vessel, that he was entitled to recover for the provisions but not for the coals, as by the terms of the charterparty he had no power to pledge the owner's credit in respect of them. The Turgot, 11 P. D. 21; 54 L. T. 276; 34 W. R. 552; 5 Asp. M. C. 548.

Agreement with Owners — Loss of Lien — Non-payment.]—A master, who after receiving a portion of his wages from the managing owners, elects to allow the balance to remain in their hands at interest, by so doing loses his lien, and cannot recover the balance in rem, but if he has had no opportunity of receiving his wages, or has been refused payment of them on demand, the mere fact of his allowing them to remain in the managing owner's hands after they become due will not deprive him of his remedy. The Rainbow, 53 L. T. 91; 5 Asp. M. C. 479.

Where shipowners, in answer to a claim for wages, plead an agreement between the managing owner and the plaintiff, that the plaintiff shall, instead of receiving his wages, allow it to remain in the hands of the managing owner, and has thereby foregone his right against the ship, the onus is upon the defendants to clearly prove that there was an express arrangement to that effect, before the court will deprive the plaintiff of his right. Ib.

Master under Liability for Necessaries may proceed in rem.]—A master who becomes personally liable for necessaries has the right to proceed in rem against the ship. The Marco Polo, 24 L. T. 804; 1 Asp. M. C. 54.

Wages Suit—Mortgagee intervening—Right to release of Ship—Bail.]—In an action against ship and freight for master's wages the mortgagee in possession is entitled to a release of the ship on giving bail, although the master has made himself liable on bills of exchange drawn upon the charterers for the ship's use. The Ringdove, Swabey, 310.

What Ship subject to Lien.]—The master's lien for wages under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, s. 16, affects only the ship in which the wages were earned. The Julindup, 1 Spinks, 71.

Master Joint Mortgagee—Sale by Mortgagees—Master's Claim for Wages.]—The master of a ship was a joint mortgagee of her. The owners became bankrupt, and the ship was sold by the mortgagees in possession, with the knowledge of the master, who did not interfere with the sale:—Held, that the master could sue the ship for wages under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, s. 16. The Repulse, 9 Jur. 738. And see 5 Not. of Cas. 348.

Suit entered in too small Sum—Release of Ship.]—A suit by a master for wages was entered for a sum which, by reason of the defendants' delay, proved insufficient to cover his claim and costs:—Held, that the ship should not be released until claim and costs paid in full. The Helen, 14 W. R. 502.

Lien in Admiralty—None in Chancery.]—A master sued in chancery the executor of a deceased part owner for 10*l.*, due to him on account of the ship. No remedy in equity against the ship, but semble aliter in admiralty. Pierson v. Robinson, 3 Swanst. 139.

Ship liable though Owners not liable—Master appointed by Persons allowed to remain in Possession of Vessel—Maritime Lien.]—The master of a ship, appointed by persons who are not the real owners, but who have been allowed by the real owners to remain in possession and to have the control of the vessel for the purpose of using her in the ordinary way, may have a maritime lien on the ship for his disbursements and liabilities properly incurred by him on account of the ship, although the owners may not be personally liable for the disbursements or the matters in respect of which the liabilities have been incurred. The Castlegate (62 L. J., P. C. 17; [1893] A. C. 38) and The Orienta (64 L. J. P. 32; [1895] P. 49; supra, col. 99,) distinguished. The Ripon City, 66 L. J., P. 110; [1897] P. 226; 77 L. T. 98; 8 Asp. M. C. 304.

c. Priorities.

Extent of.]—The master has a maritime lien on the ship for his wages and disbursements, and his claim takes priority over all other claims, save claims for salvage and damage by collision. The Panthea, 25 L. T. 389; 1 Asp. M. C. 133.

Maritime liens, being in the nature of rewards for services rendered, rank against the fund out of which they are to be paid in the inverse order of their attachment on the res, and the last in time should be the earliest in payment. The Hope, 28 L. T. 287; 1 Asp. M. C. 563, infra.

Over Bottomry Bond.]—The claim of a master for his wages earned and disbursements made subsequently to a voyage, during which a bottomry bond has been given on his ship, takes priority over the claim of the bondholder. Ib.

A bottomry bondholder is entitled to priority over the claim of a master for wages earned on voyages previously to that during which the bond is given. Ib.

Against the balance of proceeds of sale of a vessel sold in a bottomry suit, the master has in respect of his claims, both for wages and disbursements, priority over the rights of the mortgagee. The Mary Ann or Anne, 35 L. J., Adm. 6; L. R. 1 A. & E. 8; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 31; 13 L. T. 384; 14 W. R. 136. But see The Sara, supra, col. 99.

A master, being sole owner, having given a bottomry bond, binding himself, ship and freight, cannot claim his wages to the prejudice of the bondholders. The William, Swabey, 346; 6 W. R. 871.

When a master, being also part owner of a vessel, had bound himself by a bottomry bond on ship, freight and cargo:—Held, that the owners of part of the cargo could not oppose his right to be paid his wages and disbursements in priority to the bondholder. The Daring, 37 L. J., Adm. 29; L. R. 2 A. & E. 260.

In such a suit by the master, the court will not, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1855, s. 191, entertain a counter-claim by the owner of the cargo. Ib.

The master cannot compete with the bondholder for his wages against the ship's freight where he binds himself by the bond. Where, however, he has incurred no such personal obligation, he is not barred. The Salacia, 32 L. J., Adm. 41; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 27; 7 L. T. 440; 11 W. R. 189.

Over Seamen.]—The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 191, does not alter the relation of the master to the seamen, and he cannot compete with them to their detriment for a share in a fund. Ib.

Over Mortgagees.]—A master does not lose his lien upon a ship for wages due by delaying to enforce such lien for ten months after his discharge, notwithstanding he has had an opportunity to do so; but he may enforce it even against persons who, as mortgagees, have in the interim become interested in the ship with notice of the lien. The Chieftain, Br. & Lush. 212. And see The Bangor Castle, post, col. 120.

A master's claim for wages and disbursements, whenever earned or made, takes priority over the claims of mortgagees. The Hope, 28 L. T. 287; 1 Asp. M. C. 563.

Where the master of an ordinary seeking ship entered into a charterparty, under seal, to carry troops from the Mauritius to England, and stipulated, on his own responsibility, in the charterparty, that he would make certain alterations in the ship, in order to enable him to carry the troops, and at the Cape of Good Hope entered into another charterparty, not under seal, to a similar effect, and made the specified alterations, and paid money, and drew bills to meet the expenses necessary to the making of these alterations, and the voyage was performed:—Held, that, apart from lien, in equity, the master was first entitled out of the freight earned under these charterparties to be repaid the sums advanced, and to be indemnified against the bills, and that the owner (or his mortgagee) was only entitled to the net freight after deducting these charges. Bristow v. Whitmore, 9 H. L. Cas. 391; 31 L. J., Ch. 467; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 291; 4 L. T. 622; 9 W. R. 621—H. L. (E.)

Enforcing Claim against Ship.]—The master of a ship belonging to a company drew a bill on the company for necessaries supplied to the ship, which was accepted, but was dishonoured at maturity. He paid the bill, and claimed repayment from mortgagees who had taken possession of the ship. On the following day an order was made for winding up the company. The master then applied in the winding-up for leave to take proceedings in the admiralty court, and obtained an order giving him leave. The liquidator applied to discharge this order, and an order was made for the liquidator to pay into court to a separate account to meet the claim 150*l.*, which exceeded the principal and interest, the master undertaking not to proceed in the admiralty court; the payment to be without prejudice to any application by him to increase the amount. The 150*l.* was paid in, and he applied to increase the amount, so as to cover the costs of defending an action brought against him by the holder of the bill, and his costs of the application in the winding-up. Bacon, V.-C., ordered the principal and interest on the bill to be paid to the master out of the 150*l.*, and the residue to be paid to the liquidator:—Held, that though if there had not been mortgagees in possession of the ship the proper mode of enforcing the master's lien on the ship would have been by application in the winding-up, the order giving leave to proceed in the admiralty court was a proper order, the mortgagees not being parties to the winding-up; and that the master was entitled to all his costs before the vice-chancellor as costs properly incurred by a mortgagee in enforcing his security. Rio Grande Do Sul Steamship Co., In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 277; 5 Ch. D. 282; 36 L. T. 603; 25 W. R. 328; 3 Asp. M. C. 424—C. A.

Priority of Claim of Material-Men.]—A master being part owner of a foreign ship ordered necessaries for the ship. The necessaries were supplied, and the master became liable for payment:—Held, that the material-men were entitled to be paid for the necessaries out of the proceeds of the ship and freight in priority to a claim of the master for wages and disbursements. The Jenny Lind, 41 L. J., Adm. 63; L. R. 3 Adm. 529; 26 L. T. 591; 20 W. R. 895; 1 Asp. M. C. 294.

A shipwright's lien is postponed to a master's claim for wages earned prior to the repairs. The Gustaf, Lush. 506; 31 L. J., Adm. 207; 6 L. T. 660. Cf. The Queen, 19 L. T. 706.

Interference of Court of Bankruptcy with Arrest under Warrant.]—A master mariner claiming a lien for wages and disbursements upon a vessel, the property of the arranging debtor, who had declared himself insolvent, caused the vessel to be arrested under the warrant of the court of admiralty. The court of bankruptcy, upon an application to restrain the further action of the court of admiralty in respect of the vessel, declined to do so, except upon the terms of lodging in court a sum sufficient to answer the claim and costs, and an undertaking to abide any further order in respect of any further sum which might be declared due for costs or otherwise. T. C., In re, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 151

Lien for Disbursements—Priority over Mortgage.]—Master's liability for necessaries has priority over mortgage debt. The Limerick, 1 P. D. 411; 34 L. T. 708; 3 Asp. M. C. 206.

Master's Lien—Mortgage—Sale of Ship.]—Master restrained by injunction from enforcing his alleged lien against proceeds of ship which had been mortgaged and afterwards sold on the voyage as unseaworthy. Lister v. Payn, 11 Sim. 348.

d. Forfeiture.

Drunkenness.]—Constant drunkenness, or non-performance of duty ascribed to it, on the part of the master, does, but occasional intoxication does not, work a forfeiture of wages. The Atlantic, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 183; 7 L. T. 647; 11 W. R. 188. S. P., The Macleod, 5 P. D. 254.

Occasional drunkenness in port on the part of the master of a vessel will not, if unaccompanied with neglect of duty, work a forfeiture of wages. The Roebuck, 31 L. T. 274; 2 Asp. M. C. 387, infra.

Semble, that constant drunkenness on the part of a master, whether there is proof of neglect of duty or not, will work a forfeiture of either the whole or part of his wages, according to circumstances. Ib.

Error in Judgment—Neglect.]—An error in judgment on the part of the master will not work a forfeiture of his wages. The Atlantic, supra.

As where he makes a mistake in the management of the ship's affairs in a foreign port. The Thomas Worthington, 3 W. Rob. 128.

Neither error of seamanship in a master, nor neglect to communicate to a Lloyds' agent, stranding of the vessel, nor neglect to sign a bottomry bond, works a forfeiture of wages. The Camilla, Swabey, 312; 6 W. R. 840.

—— Taking Bill instead of Cash for Freight.]—When a master receives instructions to take the balance of freight due at the end of a voyage in cash, or by bank bill upon London, and without sufficient inquiry, but without mala fides and rather through error of judgment, he takes a bill which he believes to be (but which is not) a bank bill, and which is afterwards dishonoured, causing loss to his owners, this negligence or disobedience, not being wilful, does not work a forfeiture of his wages, nor can the owners claim to deduct the amount of their loss from his wages. The Dunmore, 32 L. T. 340; 2 Asp. M. C. 599.

Insubordination.]—The owners of a vessel have a right to dismiss an officer who directly or indirectly promotes insubordination, and such officer has no right to wages otherwise due to him by agreement after such dismissal. The Marina, 50 L. J., Adm. 33; 29 W. R. 508.

F., part owner of a vessel, mortgaged (as it was alleged) his share to the other part owner S., who assigned his own share and the other mortgaged share to B. F. refused to obey B.'s orders, and denied in strong language to him that he had mortgaged to S.:—Held, that even if B. was owner of the entire ship and cargo, F.'s conduct and language were not such as to raise a forfeiture of his wages. The Joseph Dexter, 20 L. T. 820.

Employing Ship contrary to Orders.]—When a master receives express orders from his owners as to the voyages which he is to make and the ports to which he is to take the ship, and such orders are given under and with a view to a state of circumstances out of which danger might arise to the ship, and which are known to and discussed by the master and owner at the time when they are given, the master is not justified, out of an alleged apprehension of that danger, in taking the ship on other voyages and to other ports; and if he does so take the ship, he will not be entitled to recover his wages for the time during which she is engaged against the owners' orders, even if the voyages are for the owners' benefit. The Roebuck, 31 L. T. 274; 2 Asp. M. C. 387.

Desertion.]—A master's wages may be forfeited by desertion, but there can be no absolute desertion of his ship working a forfeiture of the whole of his wages if there is an animus revertendi upon the part of the master. Ib.

When a master quits his ship and remains away for such a time and under such circumstances as lead his owner reasonably to suppose that he has no intention of returning, the owner will be justified in removing the vessel from the place where it is left, and appointing another master; and the original master will not be entitled to recover his wages for any period after the time when he so quitted the ship. Ib.

e. Foreign Master.

Remedy for Wages.]—In a suit by a foreign master against the freight for his wages, the question whether the freight is liable is a question of remedy, and not of contract, and is, therefore, to be determined by the lex fori. The Milford, Swabey, 362; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 417; 6 W. R. 554.

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 191 (notwithstanding s. 107), extends to the masters of foreign ships, and gives them a remedy against ship and freight for wages. Ib.

A master of a foreign ship instituted a cause against the ship for his wages, and no notice of the institution of the cause was given by him to the consul of the foreign state. The owners appeared under protest; and the consul protested, as consul, against the cause being allowed to proceed. The cause was dismissed on the ground that the jurisdiction of the court of admiralty over causes of wages of foreign masters is discretionary only; that notice of the institution of any such cause ought to be given to the consul of the state to which the ship belongs; and that the protest of the consul was a bar to the cause proceeding. The Herzogin Marie, Lush. 292 ; 5 L. T. 88.

Protest by Consul.]—The protest by a foreign consul against the continuance of a wages cause against a foreign vessel does not deprive the court of jurisdiction ; but the court will use its discretion whether or not to exercise the jurisdiction. The Octavie, Br. & Lush. 215 ; 33 L. J., P. 115 ; 9 L. T. 695. And see The Leon XIII., 52 L. J., Adm. 58 ; 8 P. D. 121 ; 48 L. T. 770 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 73—C. A.

In a suit for wages by foreign seamen, if their consul intervenes and asks that payment of the wages due to them be made to him on their behalf, the court usually grants the application. The Timor, 9 L. T. 397 ; 12 W. R. 219.

Lien—Bottomry Bond.]—A master of a foreign ship having, in the terms of a bottomry bond, bound as well himself as the ship and freight, cannot enforce his lieu for wages against the claim of the bondholder. The Jonathan Goodhue, Swabey, 524.

6. Barratry.

Cotton stowed on Deck.]—Ninety bales of cotton, insured against barratry of the master and mariners, were stowed upon deck, and were jettisoned in a storm. Before the ship sailed one of her agents discovered that the captain was stowing cotton on deck, and opposed it, and desired him to send the cotton by another vessel. The captain, notwithstanding the remonstrance, continued to stow the cotton upon deck. This it was contended amounted to barratry, as "an act of wrong done by the master against the ship and goods" :—Held, that it did not amount to barratry. Atkinson v. Great Western Insurance Co., 27 L. T. 103 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 382.

Kidnapping.] — When a master ships and carries Polynesian native labourers without a licence against the provisions of the Kidnapping Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 19), proof that the master, although he may never have seen the act itself or the proclamation thereof in the Australasian colonies, was informed before shipping the labourers that such an act existed, and that it was illegal to carry them, is sufficient evidence to justify a jury in finding that he shipped and carried the labourers wilfully and with knowledge of the prohibition, so as to make his act barratrous. Australian Insurance Co. v. Jackson, 33 L. T. 286 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 26.

Scuttling Ship.]—Scuttling a ship with the knowledge of the shipowner, but without the knowledge of the freighter, is barratry, in respect of which the freighter may recover against the underwriters. Ionides v. Pender, 43 L. J., Q. B. 227 ; L. R. 9 Q. B. 531 ; 30 L. T. 547 ; 22 W. R. 884 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 266. See also Grill v. General Iron Screw Collier Co., post, col. 329.

Deviation for Master's Convenience.]—Deviation for master's convenience is barratry. Vallejo v. Wheeler, 1 Cowp. 143.

Barratry may be committed against a charterer who is pro hâc vice owner. Ib. As to this report see per Buller, J., 1 Term Rep. 329.

Deviation for the Owner's Benefit.]—Is not barratry. Stamma v. Brown, 2 Str. 1173.

Fraudulent Intent.]—On the part of the master is necessary ; neglect to pay port dues is not barratry. Knight v. Cambridge, 1 Str. 581 ; Cowp. 153 ; 2 Ld. Raym. 1540 ; 1 Mod. 230.

Extent of Owner's Liability for.]—A master of a ship, without the owner, entered into a charterparty with plaintiff to undertake a voyage on certain terms, and for due performance he bound the ship, tackle, &c., valued at 300*l.* The master deviated, and committed barratry, for which plaintiff obtained a sentence against him in Spain. The owner brought trover for the ship, and an action against plaintiff for the freight. Per cur., the master is liable for the deviation and barratry, but the owner is not liable beyond the sum at which the ship was valued in the charterparty. Anon., 2 Ch. Cas. 2, 238.

1. Wages.

a. Generally.

Jurisdiction of Admiralty Court.]—The jurisdiction of the admiralty in wages suits is founded on the general maritime law, and has existed from the first establishment of the court. The Courtney, Edw. 239. See also post, XXVI. Admiralty Law and Practice — Prohibition.

Paid by Mate.]—The court of admiralty has no jurisdiction in a claim by a mate for wages paid to seamen and disbursements. The Victoria, 37 L. J., Adm. 12.

Law of Flag or Forum.]—A subject of the United States was mate on board a vessel of that country during a voyage from California to Great Britain. By the death of the master, the mate assumed that position. He proceeded in the British court of admiralty against the freight for wages due to him. The owners appeared under protest, objecting that the law of the flag was applicable, and not the lex fori:—Held, that the lex fori must govern the case, and the protest be overruled, and that the mate had a lien on the freight, whatever might be the law of the United States, and notwithstanding the provisions of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 109, 191. The Milford, Swabey, 362; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 417; 6 W. R. 554.

Freight the Mother of Wages.]—Freight is the mother of wages. If the ship is lost the mariners lose their wages. Dunkley v. Bulwer, 6 Esp. 68, infra.

Freight is the mother of wages. The shipowner gets no freight unless the ship unloads, and the seamen lose their wages. Anon., Siderf. pt. 1, 236: Anon., 2 Show. 283: Anon., Siderf. pt. 1, 119. S. P., The Lady Durham, 3 Hag. Adm. 196: Thomas v. Tobin, 3 Hag. Adm. 197, n.

—— Aliter, where special Agreement for Wages.]—A special agreement for wages held good though no freight earned. Campion v. Nicolas, Str. 405.

Voyage abandoned—Ship unseaworthy.]—Where the ship went to sea in an unseaworthy condition and the voyage had to be abandoned, the seamen could not sue for wages, since no freight was earned. Euken v. Thom, 5 Esp. 6; 8 R. R. 824.

—— Ship lost on Home Voyage.]—A ship was hired by government to take out convicts to Van Diemen's Land. From that place it sailed to Batavia, and on several other trading voyages. It sailed on the homeward voyage to England, and arrived safe at St. Helena, but was lost before arrival at the port of discharge, and all on board perished:—Held, that proof of these facts, and of a seaman having gone on board the ship in England, and having been seen working on board at Van Diemen's Land, at Batavia, and afterwards at St. Helena, was sufficient to entitle the seaman to wages pro ratâ for the voyage out. Harris v. Ivo, 1 H. & W. 238.

Seamen entered into articles to serve for monthly wages on board a ship "bound for the ports of Madeira, any of the West India Islands, and Jamaica, and to return to London"; and it was agreed that they should not demand or be entitled to their wages, or any part, until the arrival of the ship at the port of discharge (meaning London):—Held, that though the ship earned freight upon the delivery of an outward-bound cargo at Madeira, and of another cargo taken in at Madeira, and delivered in the West Indies; yet, that, being lost in her passage home by a storm, the seamen could not recover wages pro ratâ upon the outward voyage by reason of the express terms of the stipulation respecting wages. Appleby v. Dods, 8 East, 300; 9 R. R. 450.

Wages to Port of Delivery—Prepaid Freight.]—If the ship is lost after her departure from a port of delivery, wages are due to the port of delivery; if freight is prepaid and the ship lost before arriving at a port of delivery, wages are due according to the amount of freight prepaid. Anon., 2 Show. 283. And see The Juliana, 2 Dods. 504; Cullen v. Mico, 1 Keb. 831.

Ship captured.]—A seaman was taken out of a captured ship and carried to France; the ship was recaptured and taken to her destination:—Held, that no wages were due. The Friends, 4 C. Rob. 143.

The wages of a sailor are not payable if the ship is lost or taken before the end of the voyage (Hernaman v. Bawden, 3 Burr. 1844); although afterwards ransomed. Wiggins v. Ingleton, 2 Ld. Raym. 1211.

An officer or a sailor, who was engaged to serve on board a letter-of-marque for wages during the voyage, and a share of all prizes, is not entitled to any part of the wages if the ship is taken before she completes her voyage, although he shall have been sent from the ship before the capture, as prize-master on board a prize taken in the course of the voyage. Abernethy v. Landale, 2 Dougl. 539.

—— Where Recaptured.]—If a ship is captured in the course of her voyage, and is afterwards recaptured, and arrives at her port of destination, the sailors are entitled to their wages. Bergstrom v. Mills, 3 Esp. 36; 6 R. R. 810.

Detention by Foreign Power.]—A seaman may recover for wages during a hostile embargo in a foreign port, while he was imprisoned on shore, on proof that the crew was restored to the ship, and that she completed her voyage and earned freight, without producing the order by which the embargo was taken off. Delamainer v. Winteringham, 4 Camp. 186. S. P., Pratt v. Cuff, 4 East, 43, n.

The Russian government laid an embargo on British ships in Russian ports, until an alleged convention between the Russian and British government should be fulfilled by the latter. The crews were taken out of the ships, marched up the country, and there detained for six months, and treated as prisoners of war; and at the end of that time they were marched back to their ships, and the vessels with their cargoes restored:—Held, that this was an embargo, and not a hostile capture, and that the seamen were entitled to wages during the time of the detention. Thompson v. Beale, 1 Dow, 299; 14 R. R. 73; 4 East, 546; 1 Smith, 153; 3 Bos. & P. 405.

So it was held, where the plaintiff was a foreign seaman. Johnson v. Broderick, 4 East, 566; 1 Smith, 144; 7 R. R. 636.

When Seaman Impressed.]—A seaman impressed from a merchant ship was not entitled to wages up to his impressment (2 Geo. 2, c. 36) if his ship was lost and no freight earned. Dunkley v. Bulwer, 6 Esp. 86, supra. S. P., Anon., 2 Camp. 320, n.

The mariner gets his wages up to the time of impressment if the ship earns freight. If the ship is captured the mariner gets no wages, even though she is afterwards recaptured. Wiggins v. Ingleton, 2 Ld. Raym. 1211.

Seaman entitled to wages up to impressment. Chandler v. Meade, cited, 2 Ld. Raym. 1211.

Discharge in foreign Port.]—A master is not generally at liberty to discharge his crew in a foreign port, but circumstances may justify him in doing so upon conditions. The Elizabeth, 2 Dods. 403.

Circumstances under which a master is justified in discharging a first engineer abroad considered. The Marina, 50 L. J., Adm. 33 ; 29 W. R. 508.

Damages for wrongful Discharge.]—Mariners' wages decreed with penalties for wrongful dismissal (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 19, s. 11). A seaman was shipped for a voyage out and home. The ship was sold during the voyage at a foreign port, and the seaman was paid wages to the time of sale and paid his passage home :—Held, that the seaman was entitled to be put into as good a position pecuniarily as he would have been in if the voyage had been completed ; gain of time and re-employment being taken into consideration. Mitchell v. Foe, cited, Maclachan on Ship., 4th ed. 234.

Hardships incurred.—In an action by a seaman for breach of the stipulations in his agreement for service, the court, in addition to the compensation provided by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, can award general damages for breach of the agreement, and for hardships incurred by the seaman through the vessel being employed for purposes other than those contemplated by the agreement. The Justitia, 56 L. J., Adm. 111 ; 12 P. D. 145 ; 57 L. T. 816 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 198.

Agreement for Voyage not exceeding Six Months—Compensation for Discharge within One Month.]—The respondent, a seaman, was engaged under an agreement in the prescribed form to serve on a ship on a voyage from Sunderland to Bilbao, and any other ports within certain degrees, and back to a port of discharge in the United Kingdom. The term of employment was not to exceed six months. The wages were stated to be at a monthly rate. The ship returned to Sunderland within twenty-three days, and, the voyage being thereupon terminated, the respondent was duly discharged. Upon a summons issued by the respondent against the appellant, the master, the judges held that he was entitled to compensation up to one month's wages for such discharge under the provisions of s. 167 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and notwithstanding any agreement : —Held, that, being properly discharged under his agreement, the respondent was not entitled to the benefit of s. 167, since discharge before the commencement of the voyage, or an improper discharge before one month's wages have been earned, is the condition precedent to the relief given by the act. Tindle v. Davison, 61 L. J., M. C. 107 ; 66 L. T. 372 ; 56 J. P. 390 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 169.

Expenses of Maintenance and Passage Home.] —Sect. 186 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which provides that where the service of any seaman belonging to any British ship terminates at any port out of her majesty's dominions ; the master, besides paying the wages to which the seaman is entitled, shall as one of several alternatives, "(d) deposit with the consular officer . . . such a sum of money as is by the officer . . . deemed sufficient to defray the expenses of his maintenance and passage home," imposes upon the consular officer the duty of determining the amount to be deposited ; and where the master has deposited the amount fixed by the officer, no further claim can be made against the shipowner under the section for any expenses incurred by the seaman. Edwards v. Steel, Young & Co., 66 L. J., Q. B. 690 ; [1897] 2 Q. B. 327 ; 45 W. R. 689—C. A.

"Home" in the section means the port at which the seaman was originally shipped, or such other port in the United Kingdom as he agrees to go to. Ib.

Where seamen are wrongfully discharged abroad they are entitled to recover their necessary expenses (The Frederick, 1 Hag. Adm. 219) ; and the whole of the wages for the voyage. The Elizabeth, 6 Jur. 156.

Ship lost—Certificate of Master—7 & 8 Vict. c. 112.]—The enactment 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, s. 17, as to seamen being entitled to wages in case of wreck on receiving the master's certificate, does not apply to a case where the seamen would have been entitled to wages before the act. Where, therefore, a vessel was lost in a seeking voyage after carrying and delivering cargoes in the course of it :—Held, that the seamen were entitled to wages without any certificate from the master. Hicks v. Walker, 4 W. R. 511.

Ship Insured—Owner Bankrupt—Seamen's Wages paid out of Insurance Money.]—Where an insured ship was lost, and the insurance money was recovered by the assignees of the owner, who had become bankrupt :—Held, that the seamen were entitled to be paid in full out of the insurance money. Dawson, In re, 1 Fonb. 229 ; 17 L. T. (o.s.) 100.

Owner and Master Bankrupt—Mate entitled to Six Months' Wages.]—Under a fiat against the master and owner of a ship, the mate is entitled to be paid six months' salary in full. Hamborg, Ex parte, Hudson, In re, 2 Mont. D. & D. 642 ; 11 L. J., Bk. 229 ; 4 Jur. 898.

When Left Behind by Own Negligence.]—A seaman shipped under articles, by which he agreed that he would serve on voyages to certain named places and home to the final port of discharge of the ship, in consideration of which services to be duly performed the master agreed to pay as wages a certain sum per calendar month. He was left behind at one of the places at which the ship stopped ; and the jury found that there was no desertion, but that he had been guilty of drunkenness and abusive language, to the subversion of discipline, and was left behind through his own negligence :—Held, that he was entitled to his wages up to the time of his being left behind. Button v. Thompson, 38 L. J., C. P. 225 ; L. R. 4 C. P. 330 ; 20 L. T. 568 ; 17 W. R. 1069.

Death before Termination of Voyage.] —A seaman entered into articles to serve on board the ship "R.," "bound from the port of L. to the S. S., to procure a cargo of sperm oil, and to return therewith to the port of L., where the voyage was to end" ; instead of wages he was to receive a share of the net proceeds of the cargo ; and it was stipulated that no one of the crew should "demand or be entitled to his share of the net proceeds of the cargo until the arrival of the ship at L., and her cargo should be there sold and delivered, and the money for the same actually received by the owners." A cargo was procured, the ship was afterwards condemned in a foreign port, and the mariner accompanied part of the cargo on its homeward voyage (it having been transhipped into another vessel, the "A."), but died at sea:—Held, that "until" in the articles was a word of limitation of the mariner's right to wages, and not of postponement of payment of them merely; and, consequently, that as the ship did not return to L., the administrator of the mariner was not entitled to recover his share of the net proceeds of the "R.'s" cargo, but only to recover on a quantum meruit for his services on board the "A." Jesse v. Roy, 1 C. M. & R. 316; 4 Tyr. 626; 3 L. J., Ex. 268.

If a sailor hired for a voyage takes a promissory note from his employer for a certain sum, provided he proceeds, continues and does his duty on board for the voyage, and before the arrival of the ship he dies, no wages can be claimed, either on the contract or on a quantum meruit. Cutter v. Powell, 6 Term Rep. 320; 3 R. R. 185.

Where a seaman dies on the voyage his representatives are entitled to his wages up to his death or last time for payment, according as wages are payable. Beale v. Thompson, 4 East, 546.

Seaman Carried on after Service Expired—Damages.]—The plaintiff signed articles on February 11, 1896, to serve on board a steamship for a period not exceeding twelve months, and he was to be discharged either in the United Kingdom or on the continent between the Elbe and Brest. On February 11, 1897, the date when the contract expired, the steamship was at Aden, whence she was to sail to Batoum. The plaintiff applied for his discharge according to the terms of the articles, but being refused he was taken on board the steamer to Port Said, from which port he had to pay his passage home on another vessel:—Held, that he was entitled to recover the cost of his passage, his wages till arrival in the United Kingdom, and the cost of his board and lodging till he got a passage from Port Said. Donkin v. Hastie, 61 J. P. 568.

Assignment of Wages.]—A seaman assigns his wages as a security for money, and dies indebted to other persons. The assignment specifically binds the wages, and the money secured thereby shall be paid preferably to all other debts. Crouch v. Martin, 2 Vern. 595.

A seaman assigned his wages to J. as a security for a debt he owed to J., and died intestate; it was insisted that this was only an agreement in nature of a letter of attorney, and determined by the seaman's death, and that there were bond debts. Decreed J. shall be paid in due course of administration. Mitchell v. Edes, 2 Vern. 391; Pre. Ch. 125.

Expense of bringing sick Seaman Home—Deduction from Wages.]—A seaman who from bad food supplied on board ship fell sick has received an injury in the service of the ship within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 228, sub-s. 1; and the board of trade are not entitled to deduct from wages received on his account the expenses of bringing him home. Board of Trade (Secretary) v. Sundholm, 41 L. T. 469; 4 Asp. M. C. 196.

Seaman unable to do Duty.]—A seaman is entitled to his whole wages though he has been unable to render his service, if his inability has proceeded either from a hurt received in the performance of his duty, or from natural sickness happening to him in the course of the voyage. Chandler v. Grieves, 2 H. Bl. 606, n.; 6 Term Rep. 325, n.; 3 R. R. 525.

Captain causing Men to refuse to work.]—If a seaman's claim for wages is resisted on the ground that he would not do his work, which by the ship's articles is to cause forfeiture of wages, it is a good answer to shew that the refusal to work was caused by the misconduct of the captain, which went to induce the men to incur such forfeitures. Train v. Bennett, 3 Car. & P. 3; M. & M. 82.

Insurance of Wages.]—The seaman could not (formerly) insure his wages. The Lady Durham, 3 Hag. Adm. 196.

Wages Payable out of Proceeds of Wreck.]—Where the mariners saved parts of their ship after she had been wrecked they are entitled to be paid their wages so far as the wreckage goes, though no freight earned. The Neptune, 1 Hag. Adm. 227. S. P., The Lady Durham, supra.

And similarly where the wreck is salved by others. The Reliance, 2 W. Rob. 119.

Illegal Voyage.]—Claim for wages as mate dismissed, the service being in contravention of the slave trade acts. The Vanguard, 6 C. Rob. 207.

Wages may be recovered from the master though the vessel be forfeited for illegal trading to which the mariners were not parties. The Malta, 2 Hag. Adm. 158, n.

Deviation from agreed Voyage.]—Deviation from the voyage agreed upon from accident or overruling necessity does not entitle the mariner to his discharge; but a deviation of importance, without necessity, does. The Eliza, 1 Hag. Adm. 182; The Countess of Harcourt, Ib. 248; The Minerva, Ib. 347; The George Holme, Ib. 370.

The voyage was described in the articles as from London to Madras and Calcutta and back to London. The ship deviated from Madras, going to Calcutta by way of Prince of Wales Island:—Held, that the seaman was entitled to his discharge at Madras, and that, although remaining on board to Calcutta, where he demanded his discharge and refused work and left the ship, he was entitled to wages up to leaving the ship. The Cambridge, 2 Hag. Adm. 243.

Ship Unseaworthy—Desertion of Crew.]—If the ship is not seaworthy by reason of some of the crew having deserted, the rest of the crew are not bound to go to sea in her, and their contract is at an end. Hartley v. Ponsonby, 7 El. & Bl. 872; 26 L. J., Q. B. 322; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 746; 5 W. R. 659.

Seaworthiness—Warranty.]—When a seaman signs articles at a foreign port there is an implied warranty of seaworthiness, and if the ship is unseaworthy there is consideration for a new contract for extra reward to induce him to sail in her. Turner v. Owen, 3 F. & F. 176.

Voyage abandoned—Ship Unseaworthy.]—See Eaken v. Thom, supra, col. 107.

Half Wages if Ship detained by Ice.]—A ship's articles contained a clause to the effect that if the ship should winter abroad on account of ice the officers and seamen should receive half wages during such detention. The ship went "seeking"; the ice prevented her getting a cargo, but not from sailing without one; she wintered abroad:—Held, that the crew were entitled to half wages only. The Hoghton, 3 Hag. Adm. 100.

Apprentice may sue for.]—An apprentice is entitled to sue the proceeds of the ship in which he has served for wages due, under a general apprenticeship to the owner, but not for the penalty contained in the indenture for breach of the agreement. The Albert Crosby, Lush. 44.

Wages of Apprentice harboured in another Ship.]—A. the master of an apprentice, who, being harboured by B. the master of another ship, serves as a seaman on board her, may waive the tort and sue B. for the services of the apprentice. Foster v. Stewart, 3 M. & S. 191; 15 R. R. 459.

Termination of Contract.]—On the wreck of a ship the seamen are bound to do their utmost to save ship and cargo; but the seamen's contract of service may be terminated either by final abandonment of the ship or by a discharge given by the master. The Warrior, Lush. 476; 6 L. T. 133.

Forfeiture of Wages by Misconduct.]—See infra, cols. 128 seq.

i. Stamp.

Under 55 Geo. 3, c. 184.]—The plaintiff and the defendant being resident in England, and P. at Havana, and the defendant being a foreign agent, a written agreement was entered into by the plaintiff with the defendant on behalf of P. that the plaintiff would serve as stoker on board a steamer, about to leave London for Havana, in the service of P. During the outward voyage, rations were to be served out to the plaintiff on account of P., the contract to be in force for one year; and should the plaintiff be discharged before that time, three months' wages were to be paid in advance, besides finding him a homeward passage, P. being at liberty to continue the engagement or to discharge the plaintiff and to find him his passage back to England, the wages to be payable up to the day of the plaintiff's arrival in England, and unless he should be discharged for misconduct, one month's pay to be advanced for his outfit for the voyage:—Held, that the agreement did not require a stamp, being an agreement for the hire of a labourer. Wilson v. Zulueta, 14 Q. B. 405; 19 L. J., Q. B. 49; 14 Jur. 366.

An agreement by a master of a ship to take out a mariner to a foreign port, he working on board, is within the above exemption, as being an agreement for the hire of a labourer. Cornforth v. Danube and Black Sea Ry., 2 F. & F. 197.

Statutory.]—The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 19, s. 2, enacted that it shall not be lawful for any master of a ship to carry to sea any seamen, without first entering into an agreement, in writing, specifying the wages, &c. The defendant pleaded, to an action on a policy of insurance, that the master had not entered into any such agreement with the seamen, or any one of them, wherefore the voyage was illegal:—Held, that the non-compliance with the statute was no answer to an action on a policy of insurance effected on the ship, as it did not make the voyage itself illegal, or the vessel unseaworthy. Redmond v. Smith, 7 Man. & G. 457; 8 Scott (N.R.) 250; 13 L. J., C. P. 159; 8 Jur. 711.

Contract to Serve "in same Employ"—Transfer to another Ship.]—A seaman, in March, 1854, shipped on board a vessel called the "Custos," to serve as steward, and signed articles, as required by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 93, which professed to be an agreement between the master and the several persons whose names were thereto subscribed, at 3*l.* per month wages, for a voyage "from Liverpool to the west coast of Africa, to trade in any ports, bays, or rivers therein, and back to a final port of discharge in the United Kingdom, or for a term not to exceed three years." The articles contained the following provision: "The crew, if required, to be transferred to any other ship in the same employ." After the "Custos" remained some time on the African coast, the seaman, at the request of the captain, was transferred to another and larger vessel, engaged in the same trade, called the "Dauntless," entering into fresh articles with the master, under which he was to receive wages at the rate of 4*l.* per month. The "Dauntless" arrived in Liverpool on the return voyage in June, 1856, when he claimed wages at 4*l.* per month for the period during which he had served on board the "Dauntless." The defendant refused to pay him at the increased rate, insisting that he was bound by the original articles to serve on board any ship "in the same employ"; and he declined to accept the sum mentioned in the original articles:—Held, first, that the articles were not invalid for being, in the alternative "from Liverpool to the west coast of Africa and back, or for a term not to exceed three years." Frazer v. Hatton, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 512; 26 L. J., C. P. 226; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 694.

Held, secondly, that the provision for the transfer of the crew to another vessel in the same employ, was not in contravention of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 93. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the provision for transfer was not limited to a transfer of the whole crew collectively, but that the articles constituted an agreement between the owners and each of the crew for himself, and consequently, that he was bound to serve under the original articles, and there was therefore no consideration for the master's promise to pay the increased wages. Ib.

Execution before Consular Agent.]—Held, lastly, that the circumstances of the fresh articles not having been executed in the presence of a consular agent, was not an objection to their validity, provided they could have been set up. Ib.

No rate specified in Articles.]—Wages pronounced for; no rate being specified in the articles. The Porcupine, 1 Hag. Adm. 378; The Prince George, 3 Hag. Adm. 376.

Custom in Slave Trade.]—Ships' articles are conclusive as to amount of mariners' wages. Claim of a custom in the slave trade that the mate is allowed to carry a slave disallowed. The Isabella, 2 C. Rob. 241; and see The Prince Frederick, 2 Hag. Adm. 394.

See also Turner v. Owen, infra, col. 117; Dafter v. Creswell, infra, col. 117, as to contract for further remuneration.

Currency—Construction in Favour of Seaman.]—When, in a seaman's articles, it is covenanted to pay wages in dollars, sterling and not currency value is to be assumed as intended, and the wages are to be paid at the rate of 4*s.* 2*d.* per dollar. The Annie Sherwood, 12 L. T. 582; 13 W. R. 641, 965.

Where it was alleged that there was a specific covenant in seamen's articles, duly read over and explained to the crew, that the wages when due should be payable in United States currency or its equivalent:—Held, that the court would not enforce such a condition against the seamen, from the fact of its being contrary to equity and justice, and an imposition on them. Ib.

Where the amount of wages due to a seaman under his contract was greatly lessened by a depreciation of the currency at the date of his claim, and it did not appear at what rate such wages were to be calculated, the court construed the uncertain contract most strongly in favour of the seamen, and allowed him wages at the fullest rate. The Nonpareil, 33 L. J., Adm. 201.

iii. Division of Profits.

Consideration for.]—Where an agreement was entered into between the captain and the mariners, whereby, in consideration of their faithfully serving in a fishing voyage to the South Seas and back, they were each to receive a certain share of the net proceeds of the cargo brought home, and the owner was appointed agent to dispose of the cargo for the benefit of all concerned:—Held, that an action would not lie against him by one of the mariners to recover his share of the net proceeds, on proof that the defendant had sold the cargo, and that the price of it had come to his hands, unless an admission of faithful services could be proved. Evans v. Bennett, 1 Camp. 300.

Sailor not a Partner.]—If a sailor engages on a whaling voyage, and is to receive a certain proportion of the profits of the voyage in lieu of wages, when the cargo is sold he may maintain an action for his wages against the captain, and he will not be considered as a partner. Wilkinson v. Frasier, 4 Esp. 182.

What is sufficient Consideration.]—No action will lie at the suit of a sailor on a promise of the captain to pay him extra wages in consideration of his doing more than his ordinary share of navigating the ship. Harris v. Watson, Peake, 102; 3 R. R. 654.

Where a seaman signed articles containing the following provision: "The crew, if required, to be transferred to any other ship in the same employ"; and after serving for a certain period on one vessel was shipped by the captain's desire on another vessel engaged in the same trade, under which he was to receive further remuneration:—Held, on the refusal of the defendant to pay him at the higher rate, that there was no consideration for the master's promise to pay increased wages, and that there was no neglect or refusal on the part of the defendant, so as to render him liable to the penalty imposed by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 187. Frazer v. Hatton, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 512; 26 L. J., C. P. 226; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 694; 5 W. R. 632.

Where Ship Undermanned.]—A ship being on a voyage from L. to P. and back, when in port at P. became so short-handed that it was dangerous to life to proceed with only the reduced crew; the captain, being unable to procure additional hands, voluntarily promised the remaining seamen, who were under articles for the whole voyage, an additional sum if they would assist in taking the ship to her next port:—Held, that the seamen were not bound to proceed on the voyage, as it involved risk of life, and that the promise was therefore binding on the captain. Hartley v. Ponsonby, 7 El. & Bl. 872; 26 L. J., Q. B. 322; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 746; 5 W. R. 659.

The plaintiff and other seamen had entered into articles of agreement to serve for a voyage from Liverpool to Melbourne and home. At Melbourne several of the crew deserted, and one of the crew was discharged by the captain. Whilst the desertion was going on, the captain entered into a fresh agreement with the plaintiff and the other remaining seamen, to raise their wages for the remainder of the voyage:—Held, that he never was, under the circumstances, released from the obligation of the original articles, and could not, therefore, maintain an action to recover the increased rate of wages for the voyage home. Harris v. Carter, 3 El. & Bl. 559; 2 C. L. R. 1582; 23 L. J., Q. B. 295; 18 Jur. 1014; 2 W. R. 409.

—— Ship Unseaworthy.] — See Turner v. Owen, supra, col. 112.

Promise to pay Seamen higher Wages—Want of Consideration.]—In the course of a voyage some of the seamen deserted, and the captain not being able to find others to fill their places promised to divide the wages which would have become due to them amongst the remainder of the crew:—Held, that the promise was void for want of consideration. Stilk v. Myrick, 2 Camp. 317; 11 R. R. 717.

Semble, a promise by the master to pay seamen extra wages for extra work in the ship is void as against public policy. Harris v. Watson, Peake, Cas. 102; 3 R. R. 654.

The plaintiff, at the request of a captain in the royal navy, agreed to enter on board his ship as captain's cook, he undertaking to pay the plaintiff over and above the government pay to which his rating would entitle him. The plaintiff having performed the service:—Held, that there was a sufficient consideration to enable the plaintiff to maintain an action for such wages. Clutterbuck v. Coffin, 4 Scott (N.R.) 509; 1 D. (N.S.) 479; Car. & M. 273; 3 Man. & G. 842; 11 L. J., C. P. 65; 6 Jur. 131.

A mariner, who has signed articles for a voyage at a certain pay per month, cannot claim any further wages or gratuity by usage or custom. Elsworth v. Woolmore, 5 Esp. 84.

Where a sailor sued for wages due under the ship's articles, and also for the average price of a negro slave, for which there was only a parol agreement with the captain, and which was not mentioned in the articles:—Held, that the contract for the slave was void, as being in fact a promise to pay further wages. White v. Wilson, 2 Bos. & P. 116.

Master may bind Owners to pay.]—The master may bind the owners to pay a seaman employed to do other duties, as those of a steward, a higher rate of wages. Hicks v. Walker, 4 W. R. 511.

Death of Master—Mate succeeding to command—Power to alter Rating of Seamen.]—Where, in consequence of the death of the captain during the voyage, the chief mate becomes captain, the latter has authority to appoint a seaman to the post of second mate with the wages of such; and a contract to that effect is binding on the owners, notwithstanding no alteration is made in the articles under which the seaman shipped. Hanson v. Royden, 37 L. J., C. P. 66; L. R. 3 C. P. 47; 17 L. T. 214; 16 W. R. 205.

—— Ship's Articles.]—Semble, if the master dies on the voyage, and the chief mate succeeds him in the command, the crew is bound by the ship's articles, though such chief mate is a foreigner. Renno v. Bennett, 3 G. & D. 54; 3 Q. B. 768; 12 L. J., Q. B. 17.

Articles conclusive as to Rating.]—A seaman entered on the articles as such held to be precluded from claiming additional pay for services given in another capacity. Dafter v. Cresswell, 7 D. & R. 11; 2 Car. & P. 161; 29 R. R. 469.

v. Allowance for Short Provisions.

When Granted.]—Owing to the unexpected length of a voyage, the crew of a vessel had been put upon short allowance. They were allowed compensation under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 223. The Josephine, Swabey, 152; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 148.

vi. Advance Note.

Liability — Condition.]—A captain gave one of the seamen an advance note in the following form: "Ten days after the ship 'Athlone' sails from the port of Liverpool, the undersigned does promise and agree to pay to any person who shall advance to Reuben Hill on this agreement, the sum of 6*l.*, provided Reuben Hill shall sail in the ship from the port of Liverpool." An outfitter gave the seaman in exchange for the note 3*l.* 5*s.* in cash, and 2*l.* 15*s.* worth of wearing apparel; but he stated, that if he had advanced the whole in cash, he would have charged a discount of 7½ per cent. The seaman having sailed with the vessel:—Held, that the condition upon which the holder was entitled to sue the maker was fulfilled by giving the seaman the amount in money and money's worth. McKune v. Joynson, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 218; 28 L. J., C. P. 133; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 760; 6 W. R. 658.

Assignment.]—See Bellamy v. Lunn, post, col. 126.

vii. Jurisdiction to Set Aside Unreasonable Contracts.

Ships' articles are conclusive as to the amount of wages and the voyage; on collateral points the court of admiralty may consider how far they are reasonable and just. Therefore, a clause providing that if contraband goods were found in the forecastle, the seamen living therein should forfeit their wages and 10*l.*, is not conclusive to work a forfeiture of wages against those not proved to be guilty of the offence. The penalty cannot be enforced in admiralty. The Prince Frederick, 2 Hag. Adm. 394.

Contract that if a ship miscarries party shall lose his wages is unreasonable. East India Co. v. Atkyns, 1 Comyn, 348.

The captain of a ship on an outward-bound voyage, takes bonds from his seamen to himself in 200*l.* penalty, conditioned, that they shall not demand any wages until the ship arrives in the port of London. The ship is lost, and the seamen sue the captain for their wages:—Held, that those bonds were unjust and void in law. Buck v. Rawlinson, 1 Bro. P. C. 138.

East India Company takes bond from the mariners and officers of the ships, &c., not to demand their wages unless the ship returned to the port of London. The ship arrives at a delivery port, and is afterwards taken by the French. The seamen and officers shall have their wages to the time of the arrival of the ship at the delivery port. Edwards v. Child, 2 Vern. 727.

A covenant that no wages to be payable unless the ship arrives at the last port of discharge, was not upheld in admiralty. The Juliana, 2 Dods. 501.

Contract determined by War—Foreign Warship—Declaration of War — Wages.]—Shipbuilders in this country contracted with a foreign government to build a warship and deliver it abroad to the foreign purchasers. In pursuance of this contract the shipbuilders contracted in writing with the defendant that he should as captain take out the ship to the purchasers at a fixed rate of pay. The defendant engaged the plaintiff to serve as one of his crew for a lump sum for the voyage. During the voyage the foreign purchasers declared war upon a foreign power. After the declaration of war, and during the voyage, the plaintiff left the ship and sued the defendant for the whole of the sum agreed to be paid him for the voyage:—Held, that he was entitled to recover the whole sum, upon the ground that the defendant had held himself out as the agent of the foreign purchasers, who by their declaration of war had altered the risks of the voyage. O'Neil v. Armstrong, Mitchell & Co., 65 L. J., Q. B. 7; [1895] 2 Q. B. 418; 14 R. 709; 73 L. T. 178—C. A. Affirming 43 W. R. 554.

Seaman sent home as Witness.]—The plaintiff was hired as a mariner on board a ship for a specific voyage. In the course of the voyage he was obliged to leave the ship, and was sent to England by authority of a British consul, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, ss. 59, 60, and 13 & 14 Vict. c. 93, as a witness on a trial of a person for an offence committed on the high seas:—Held, that this operated as a dissolution of the contract, and that he could not recover any wages subsequently to the period when he was sent to England. Melville v. De Wolfe, 4 El. & Bl. 844; 24 L. J., Q. B. 200; 3 C. L. R. 960; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 758; 3 W. R. 401.

c. Lien; Priorities.

Wages are Lien on Ship and Freight.]—Seamen's wages are a lien upon the ship and freight; and are generally entitled to priority. The Louisa Bertha, 14 Jur. 1006: The Lady Durham, 3 Hag. Adm. 196: The Linda Flor, Swabey, 309; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 172; 6 W. R. 197, infra.

Lien not lost by Sale of Ship.]—It is not destroyed by sale to a purchaser without notice. The Batavia, 2 Dods. 500.

Lien Enforced.]—A decree for wages and costs against freight and master enforced against the ship, upon her coming to this country. The Margaret, 3 Hag. Adm. 238.

Voyage not proceeded upon.]—Seamen engaged by the owners or their agent for a voyage upon a foreign-going ship, which does not proceed upon the voyage, are entitled to a lien for their wages upon the ship, and the proceeds of sale thereof, although the engagement of the seamen has not been in writing. Great Eastern Steamship Co., In re, Williams' Claim, 53 L. T. 594; 5 Asp. M. C. 511.

Lien on Freight — Sub-Charter.] — Seamen have a maritime lien on freight due from sub-charterers to the charterers of a ship, and can arrest the cargo for the purpose of enforcing such lien. The Andalina, infra, col. 120.

No Lien on Cargo.]—The seamen's lien is only on ship and freight, not on cargo; although insurances may have been effected upon ship and cargo. The Lady Durham, 3 Hag. Adm. 196; Thomas v. Tobin, 3 Hag. Adm. 197, n.

Wages prior to Mortgage Debt.]—Wages are payable before the mortgage debt. The Prince George, 3 Hag. Adm. 376.

Wages and Subsistence Money prior to Bottomry.]—Mariners' wages, with subsistence money where necessary, take precedence of a bottomry bond. The Sydney Cove, 2 Dods. 13; The Madonna D'Idra, 1 Dods. 37.

A wages claim is preferred to a bottomry bond previously pronounced for, the bond having been given before the wages were earned. The William F. Safford, Lush. 69; 29 L. J., Adm. 109; 2 L. T. 301.

A claim by a person having paid wages to a ship's crew, at the request of the master, on account of a ship is in the nature of a wages claim, and entitled to the same priority. Ib.

There is no distinction in their right of precedence to a bottomry bond between seamen's wages earned antecedently, and those earned subsequently to the execution of the bond. The Union, Lush. 128; 30 L. J., Adm. 17; 3 L. T. 280.

Foreign Ship—Viaticum.]—The master and crew of a foreign ship arrested in this country are entitled to priority over a bottomry bond-holder in respect of their expenses home. The Constancia, 15 W. R. 183.

When a foreign ship is under arrest, and no appearance is entered for her, the court will allow the payment of wages and viaticum out of freight in the hands of a plaintiff in a bottomry suit, and order the discharge of the crew, although there is no suit instituted for their wages. The Bridgwater, 37 L. T. 366; 3 Asp. M. C. 506.

Wages postponed to damage Lien.]—A vessel had been pronounced liable for damage resulting from a collision; wages were due to the crew of the damaged ship. The proceeds of the sale of the ship doing the damage were not sufficient to satisfy both claims:—Held, that the wages were not entitled to priority. The Linda Flor, Swabey, 309; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 172; 6 W. R. 197. S. P., The Chimæra, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 172.

Suit for seamen's wages against the proceeds of the ship condemned and sold in a collision suit, and which were insufficient to satisfy the damage claimant, dismissed upon the ground that they could be recovered elsewhere. The Duna, 5 L. T. 217.

Mortgage Debt.]—The owners of a vessel who have recovered judgment against another ship in an action for damage by collision have a prior right against the proceeds of such ship to seamen who have recovered judgment against the same ship for wages earned before and after the collision. The Elin, 52 L. J., Adm. 55; 8 P. D. 129; 49 L. T. 87; 31 W. R. 736; 5 Asp. M. C. 120—C. A.

Master's Guarantee.]—While a master's lien for wages against his ship takes precedence of an ordinary claim by mortgagees, it does not take priority of any part of the mortgage debt, the payment of which the master has personally guaranteed to the mortgagees. The Bangor Castle, 74 L. T. 768; 8 Asp. M. C. 156.

Seamen's Wages prior to Master's Wages and Disbursements.]—Seamen are entitled to their wages in priority to the master's claim, either for his own wages or for advances made by him in payment of the seamen's wages. The Salacia, 32 L. J., Adm. 41; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 27; 7 L. T. 440; 11 W. R. 189.

Wages prior to Possessory Lien.]—Mariners have priority for wages over persons with a possessory common law lien up to the time of the beginning of such lien, and they are entitled to subsistence money from the time they leave the ship to the time they return home; this and the expenses of the journey home, and the costs of the action, rank with their prior wages. The Immacolata Concezione, 53 L. J., Adm. 19; 9 P. D. 37; 50 L. T. 539; 32 W. R. 705; 5 Asp. M. C. 208.

The master and seamen next after the salvor take precedence of the shipwright for wages earned before their ship comes into the shipwright's hands. If foreigners, they are also entitled, in addition to such wages, to a sufficient sum to take them back to their own country. The Gustaf, Lush. 506; 31 L. J., Adm. 207; 6 L. T. 660.

Wages prior to Towage Lien.]—The lien of seamen for wages ranks before a claim in respect of payments for the towage of the ship from sea to an inland port, and the light dues and dock dues. The Andalina, 12 P. D. 1; 56 L. T. 171;

35 W. R. 336 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 62. But see as to towage, infra, XIX. TOWAGE.

Wages prior to Necessaries Lien.]—The Queen, 19 L. T. 705.

Expenses of Sending Home—Solicitor's Lien—Priority.] — Solicitors for defendants in a salvage action against a foreign ship, who are entitled to a charge upon the ship, or the proceeds thereof, for their costs and expenses incurred in the preservation of the property, do not take priority of the claim of the foreign government, who, on the abandonment of the ship by her owners, are entitled, by the provisions of their code, to a lien upon the ship, or the proceeds, for the expenses of sending back the ship's crew to their own country. An Italian ship was brought into a British port by salvors. A salvage action having been instituted, the ship was sold by order of the court, and a sum was awarded out of the proceeds to the salvors. After payment of that sum, and the costs of the plaintiffs, a balance of 60*l.* 10*s.* 3*d.* remained in court. The defendants' solicitors had incurred expenses in pumping the ship, paying the marshal's possession fees, &c., and claimed a charging order upon the sum in court for such expenses, and sought payment out of such balance to them. The Italian government, through their consul in this country, had sent home the crew of the ship, and had incurred expenses by so doing. By Italian law such last-mentioned expenses are a lien upon the ship. The Italian consul opposed payment out to the defendants' solicitors, and claimed priority for the lien of the Italian government :—Held, that the Italian government was entitled to such priority. The Livietta, 52 L. J., Adm. 81 ; 8 P. D. 209 ; 49 L. T. 411 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 451.

d. Recovery of Wages.

i. Who Liable.

Charterer or Owner—Allotment Note of Seamen.]—By the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 169, the wife of any seaman in whose favour an allotment note of part of his wages is made, may recover by summary procedure the sum allotted, with costs, from the owner or any agent who has authorised the drawing of the note. The registered owner of a ship entered into a charterparty, by which he demised the ship to the charterer for a stipulated period, and parted with all control over it. He took possession of the ship, and appointed a master, who engaged W. as one of the crew, and gave his wife an allotment note, allotting and requiring the charterer to pay her 6*l.* monthly out of her husband's wages. The charterer having become insolvent :—Held, that the section did not, under the circumstances, make the registered owner liable to pay the arrears due under the note. Meiklereid v. West, 45 L. J., M. C. 91 ; 1 Q. B. D. 428 ; 34 L. T. 353 ; 24 W. R. 703 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 129.

On Change of Ownership.]—Where a change of ownership in a British vessel takes place by sale in this country whilst she is in a foreign port, the contract under which the crew shipped is (quoad the new owner) at an end ; but if one of the crew continues to serve on board the vessel at the request of an agent of the new owner without entering into any fresh articles, and afterwards, and before the termination of the contemplated voyage, quits with the consent of the captain appointed by the new owner, he may recover wages pro ratâ against such new owner. Robins v. Power, 4 C. B. (N.S.) 778 ; 27 L. J., C. P. 257 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 810.

Against Master.]—The seamen may recover their wages against the master. The Saluda, 32 L. J., Adm. 41 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 27 ; 7 L. T. 440 ; 11 W. R. 189.

During a voyage the ship was wrecked, and the captain gave the mariners an order upon the owners for the amount of their wages to the date of the wreck, acknowledging, at the same time, that he had hired them by the month :—Held, that, under these circumstances, no action for wages could be maintained by the mariners against the captain, at least without proving that they had first made a demand upon the owners. Forsboom v. Krugor, 3 Camp. 197.

The owners of a ship let it out to freight, and by the charterparty it was agreed, that no freight should be paid to the owners until six days after the ship should return to the port of London, and make a full delivery of her lading, but the master might detain the imprest money ; and if the ship should be lost in her voyage, the master and owners should not expect any other satisfaction than the imprest money for the freight and demurrage of the ship. The ship was lost ; and upon a question who was liable to pay the seamen's wages :—Held, that the master was liable in the first instance, as having hired them, but that he had his remedy against the owners. Buck v. Rawlinson, 1 Bro. P. C. 138.

King's Ship—Purser.]—A purser's steward on board a king's ship cannot recover wages from the purser upon an implied contract for his services as such steward on board the ship. Carter v. Hall, 2 Stark. 361.

Owner on Register not Owner in Fact.]—Owner on register not liable for wages, if not owner in fact. Ratchford v. Meadows, 3 Esp. 69.

Mortgagee not in Possession.]—Mortgagee not in possession is not liable for wages. Annett v. Carstairs, 3 Camp. 354.

Part Owners.]—Some of the mariners may sue some of the part owners for wages ; but semble in admiralty the part owners are liable only pro ratâ. Alleson v. Marsh, 2 Vent. 181.

Action when brought—Before Proper Time.]—Where a seaman is restricted by the ship's articles from demanding his wages until the expiration of twenty days after the ship's arrival at her destined port and the delivery of her cargo :—Held, that although the seaman had commenced his action before the expiration of the twenty days, he might still recover a sum which the captain had admitted to be due to him for wages, and which he had offered to pay him. White v. Mattison, 2 Stark. 325.

Action brought after accounting to Greenwich Hospital.]—Where the captain had, under 37 Geo. 3, c. 73, accounted upon oath to the collector for the wages of a deceased seaman, and paid the same to Greenwich Hospital, the representatives of such seaman may still sue the master for any wages beyond the sum so paid. Armstrong v. Smith, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 299.

Against Ship and Freight or Owner.]—The admiralty court has no power to restrain seamen from proceedingagainst the ship and freight for their wages, or to compel them to sue the owner; although the result may be to prejudice a holder of a bottomry bond on ship and freight. The Arab, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 417.

Wages Earned after Action brought.]—A seaman who brings a suit in rem for the recovery of his wages cannot have a decree for wages or subsistence money after the date of the commencement of his suit, although he is retained in the service of the ship by the master; but he will be entitled to an allowance in the way of costs for detention and subsistence money from the date of the institution of the suit to the date of the decree. The Carolina, 34 L. T. 399; 3 Asp. M. C. 141. See The Constancia, supra, col. 119; The Bridgwater, supra, col. 120.

ii. Right to Sue Barred.

Made Abroad.]—If foreign sailors stipulate, in their own country, before the commencement of a voyage, that they will not sue the captain for any money abroad, but be satisfied with what he may advance them in deduction of their wages till they return home, they cannot maintain an action against him for wages in the courts of this country. Johnson v. Machielsne, 3 Camp. 44; 13 R. R. 745.

Even though the ship and cargo are confiscated in an English port, and the voyage thereby ended. Gienar v. Meyer, 2 H. Bl. 603; 3 R. R. 520.

Made with Part Owner.]—Where a seaman, about to proceed on a trading voyage, entered into and signed articles, whereby he agreed not to sue for wages any of the owners, except one, who was the captain, and who alone was a party to the articles:—Held, that he could not sue the other owners, although they sold and received the proceeds of the cargo, and one of them, the managing owner, adjusted the wages, and settled with the seamen. M'Auliff v. Bicknell, 2 C. M. & R. 263; 1 Gale, 232; 5 Tyr. 1035; 4 L. J., Ex. 225.

Contract not to Sue before Voyage Ended.]—A seaman cannot maintain assumpsit for recovery of wages pro ratâ, where he has contracted to serve on a voyage to A. and back, and that no wages should be payable until the end of the voyage, although he was wrongfully dismissed at A. by the master. Hulle v. Heightman, 2 East, 145; 4 Esp. 75. And see White v. Mattison, supra, col. 122: Buck v. Rawlinson, and Cases supra, col. 118.

Right to Sue on Wrongful Dismissal.]—Where seamen were not to be entitled to their wages until the voyage was ended, and that voyage was to a foreign port, and the master, for no good or legal cause, dismissed a seaman before the ship's arrival at such port:—Held, that such seaman might immediately maintain an action for his wages. Sigard v. Roberts, 3 Esp. 72.

Statute of Limitations.]—Semble, a suit for seamen's wages is not within 21 Jac. 1, c. 16. Hyde v. Partridge, 2 Ld. Raym. 1204.

iii. Foreign Seamen or Ship.

Foreign Ship.]—The court of admiralty has jurisdiction to entertain a suit for wages against a foreign ship, the words of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 10, being "any" ship; but the court ought not to exercise jurisdiction without first giving notice to the consul of the nation to which such ship belongs. The Nina, 37 L. J., Adm. 17; L. R. 2 P. C. 38; 17 L. T. 585; 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 60.

The protest of a foreign consul does not ipso facto operate as a bar to the prosecution of the suit: but the court ought to determine according to its discretion, judicially exercised, whether, having regard to the reasons advanced by the consul, and the answers offered on behalf of a claimant, it is fit and proper that the suit should proceed or be stayed. Ib.

A British subject having shipped on board a Portuguese ship as mate, and having signed an agreement to be bound by the law of Portugal, which required him to submit all differences between the master and seamen to the Portuguese consul, arrested the ship, and instituted a suit against the owners in the court of admiralty in England for wages, whereupon the Portuguese consul entered a protest against the proceedings:—Held, that the suit ought to be dismissed and the ship released, but without costs. Ib.

Quære, whether 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 189 applies to a claim for wages earned on board an American ship. Burns v. Chapman, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 481; 28 L. J., C. P. 6; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 19; 7 W. R. 89.

In an action for wages and wrongful dismissal brought by persons domiciled in England against a foreign ship, in which they had served under articles signed in a port of the country to which the ship belonged, in which action imprisonment, hardship, and ill-treatment were alleged, the court refused to interfere with the discretion of the judge below in declining to exercise jurisdiction against the protest of the consul, which alleged that, by the law of the country to which the ship belonged, all disputes relating to the ship, or claims against the owner or master, were to be referred to and decided by the tribunals or consuls of that country. The Leon XIII., Wardrop v. Leon XIII. (Owners), 52 L. J., Adm. 58: 8 P. D. 121; 48 L. T. 770; 31 W. R. 882; 5 Asp. M. C. 73—C. A.

When a ship has been sold in a cause in which no appearance has been entered, and the proceeds remain in the registry, all preliminary proceedings in a cause of wages may be waived, and the money due paid out of court. The Juliana, 35 L. T. 410; 3 Asp. M. C. 264.

The court will not pay the money to a foreign consul at his request, but will require the solicitor of the parties to satisfy any claims the consul may have before receiving the money. Ib.

A Prussian seaman sued the master and owner of the Prussian ship for wages in an admiralty action in the court of session. The ship had been arrested:—Held, that the action being for less than 20*l.* did not lie. Brahn v. Grunwaldt, 2 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 335.

—— Discretion of Court.]—The discretion of the admiralty court as to entertaining an action by foreign seamen against a foreign ship against which the foreign consul has entered a protest may be exercised on the motion of the defendant notwithstanding his absolute appearance. The Oberburgomeister von Winter, 18 W. R. 443.

What Law applicable.]—The claim of a foreign seaman on board a foreign ship to wages to be decided by the law of the ship's flag. The Johann Frederich, 1 W. Rob. 37.

Foreign Consul.]—The admiralty will entertain a suit against a foreign ship for the wages of her crew being foreigners, provided the representative of the foreign state consents; but municipal laws of the foreign state will not be enforced. The Courtney, Edw. 239.

The court of admiralty has jurisdiction to entertain a suit for wages promoted by foreign seamen against a foreign ship. The consent of the foreign minister or consul is not necessary to found the jurisdiction in such cases; but notice of the proceedings should be given to the representative of the foreign government. The Golubchick, 1 W. Rob. 143; see also The Vrow Mina, infra; The William Frederick, 1 Hag. Adm. 138.

—— Payment to.]—In a suit for wages by foreign seamen, if the foreign consul intervenes and asks that payment of the wages be made to him upon the seamen's behalf, the court usually grants the application. The Timor, 9 L. T. 397; 12 W. R. 219; and see The Juliana, supra.

Wages earned by foreign seamen on board a foreign ship abandoned at Cowes to creditors pronounced for. The William Frederick, 1 Hag. Adm. 138.

Passage Money — Consul's Certificate.]—Foreign seamen, discharged in Great Britain, and who recover wages in a suit against a foreign ship in which they served, are not entitled as of course to their passage money home, but will obtain it when their consul certifies that they have gone or are about to go home. The Raffaelluccia, 37 L. T. 365; 3 Asp. M. C. 505.

Security for Costs.]—When a cause of wages was instituted against a foreign ship by her master and crew, who were also foreigners, and although they were at the time in this country, their only place of residence was on board the ship, and the master had stated that he had no means and intended to leave England, the court ordered them to give a security for costs in 130*l.* The Zufall, 44 L. J., Adm. 16; 32 L. T. 571; 23 W. R. 328. See also ADMIRALTY, LAW AND PRACTICE, infra.

Alien Enemies Suing.]—Alien enemies are entitled to sue in this country for wages earned by them as mariners on a voyage to this country under a licence. The Maria Theresa, 1 Dods. 303.

American seamen serving on board a British ship disguised as American, there being war between England and America:—Held, entitled to sue for their wages. The Frederick, 1 Dods. 266.

The court entertains a suit for wages earned on board a foreign ship belonging to an alien enemy coming to this country under a licence. The Vrow Mina, 1 Dods. 234.

iv. Advance Note.

The plaintiff took a seaman's advance note for 6*l.*, conditional upon his sailing in the ship, in exchange for 3*l.* 5*s.* in cash and 2*l.* 15*s.* in wearing apparel:—Held, that the holder had advanced the seaman 6*l.* within the meaning of the note and could recover against the maker. McKune v. Joynson, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 218; 28 L. J., C. P. 133; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 760; 6 W. R. 658.

Assignment—Condition—Liability of Owner.]—An advance note was given to A., a seaman, for a half month's wages. The note was in this form: "Five days after the ship 'W.' leaves P. pay to the order of A. (provided he sails in the said ship and is duly earning his wages, according to his agreement)," &c. It was directed to B. & Co. the shipowner's agents at P., and there was a note upon it that it should at once be presented to B. & Co. for acceptance. A. transferred the note to C., who presented it to B. & Co., by whom it was duly accepted. Four days after the "W." left P., A. was discharged. The master of the "W." informed B. & Co. that A. had been discharged within five days of sailing, and directed them not to pay the note. B. & Co. paid the note. On action by B. & Co. against the shipowners for the amount of the note:—Held, that, as A. was not earning his wages at the end of five days after the "W." left P., the condition of the note was not fulfilled, and that neither the shipowners nor B. & Co. as acceptors were liable upon it. Bellamy v. Lunn, 77 L. T. 396.

Before Justices.]—The 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, s. 15 (similar to s. 188 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, Part III., s. 188), did not give any jurisdiction to a justice of the peace to adjudicate upon a claim for wages, by the administrator of a deceased seaman, and such administrator was not deprived of his right of action. Hollingsworth v. Palmer, 4 Ex. 267; 18 L. J., Ex. 409.

The admiralty court should not, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 19, ss. 15, 16, entertain a wages suit under 20*l.*, except where the magistrates could not do justice. The King William, 2 W. Rob. 231.

In Superior Court—Place of Business.]—A place of occasional business is not a residence within the meaning of the latter part of s. 189 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102. The Blakeney, Swabey, 428; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 418.

—— Pleading.]—To an action by a seaman for wages a defence that 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 189, prohibits any suit in a superior court for the recovery of wages under 50*l.* is not open under the plea of never indebted, but must be pleaded specially. Johnston v. Hilberry, 3 H. & C. 328.

A seaman having brought an action for wages to an amount less than 50*l.*, together with a claim for damages for an assault, the court allowed the defendant (upon terms) to plead a plea founded upon the 188th and 189th sections of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104. Rossi v. Grant, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 699; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 895; 7 W. R. 203.

Jurisdiction—Admiralty Court.]—The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 189, bars a seaman from recovering wages less than 50*l.* in the court of admiralty, except in the contingencies therein specified. The Harriet, Lush. 285; 5 L. T. 210.

The court of admiralty has no authority to restrain seamen from proceeding against the ship for their wages, however well satisfied it may be that the owner is solvent. The Arab, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 417.

The court has jurisdiction to entertain a claim by seamen for wrongful dismissal and the consequential damages. The Great Eastern, 36 L. J., Adm. 15; L. R. 1 A. & E. 384; 17 L. T. 228.

The object of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 10, is to extend the jurisdiction which the court of admiralty had in the ordinary case of wages to the case of wages under a special contract, and of disbursements on account of the ship. The Nina, 37 L. J., Adm. 17; L. R. 2 P. C. 38; 17 L. T. 585; 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 60.

—— County Court.]—See The Michigan, Reg. v. City of London Court (Judge), post, col. 940.

—— Vice-Admiralty Court.]—See The Ferret, post, col. 946.

"Dispute as to Liability"—Counterclaim.]—A counterclaim in respect of a separate cause of action is not "a reasonable dispute as to liability" within the meaning of s. 4, sub-s. 4, of the Merchant Seamen (Payment of Wages) Act, 1880. Delaroque v. Ovenholme Steamship Co., 1 Cab. & E. 122.

Payment—Lien for Costs.] — Payment to seamen by shipowners before a shipping master is no satisfaction of wages pronounced for in a suit in the court of admiralty so as to deprive the proctor of his lien for costs. The Araminta, Swabey, 81; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 310; 4 W. R. 396.

Ship lost—Monition against Owner.]—Monition to shew cause granted against the owner of a ship totally lost at the instance of a seaman for unpaid wages, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, s. 17. Application for arrest of owner refused. The Stephen Wright, 12 Jur. 732.

Defence — Forfeiture for Misconduct — Logging.]—In a defence to a wages suit it was not necessary to plead the entries in the log of the acts of disobedience relied on as working a forfeiture of wages. The John Knox, 16 Jur. 1161.

Seaman Dead—Decree renewed to Administrator.] — Semble, a decree for wages to a mariner, with costs, may be renewed to the administrator of the seaman, when deceased. The Prince George, 3 Hag. Adm. 376. See also post, tit. ADMIRALTY, LAW AND PRACTICE.

Evidence.]—If, in an action for sailors' wages on articles under seal, the words are, "to which the parties have set their hands," without saying "seals," the plaintiffs will not be nonsuited, if it appears that they did not mean to contract by deed. Clement v. Gunhouse, 5 Esp. 83.

In an action for seamen's wages, the plaintiffs might, under 2 Geo. 2, c. 36, give evidence of the contents of the ship's articles, without having served a notice to produce them. Bowman v. Manzelman, 2 Camp. 315; 11 R. R. 716.

The 2 Geo. 2, c. 36, requiring articles to be entered into between the masters of ships and the mariners, and providing that the mariners shall not fail on any suit for wages from not producing the articles, did not apply in the case of a British seaman entering on board a foreign ship in a British port. Dickman v. Benson, 3 Camp. 290.

2. DESERTION, MISCONDUCT AND FORFEITURE.

Desertion—Left Ashore by Ship's Fault.]—If seamen go on shore on the ship's duty, and when the boat is about to return request to be permitted to remain on shore to get some victuals, which is refused, and the boat goes without them, if they afterwards go and offer to return to their duty on board the ship it is not a desertion. Sigard v. Roberts, 3 Esp. 71.

—— By own Fault.]—A sailor, under articles providing for a forfeiture of wages in case of breach of any of his engagements, among which is that of serving faithfully during the voyage, can recover nothing if he is left ashore in the course of it owing to his own fault in being absent, though he had no intention of deserting. Sherman v. Bennet, M. & M. 489.

—— Master Refusing to give Leave.]—If there is a clause in the ship's articles, that the seamen may leave at the end of three months if the ship is in port or in perfect safety, of which the captain is to be the sole judge, and the ship is in port in safety after three months, the seamen may leave the ship without the permission of the captain. Neave v. Pratt, 2 Bos. & Pul. (N.R.) 408.

Cargo not Discharged.]—A seaman leaving the ship after arrival and mooring at her port of delivery, but before cargo discharged, does not incur forfeiture of wages under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 19, s. 9, but loses one month's pay under s. 7. McDonald v. Jopling, 4 M. & W. 285; 7 L. J., Ex. 220.

—— Old Law as to—5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 19.]—The ancient law as to desertion not altered except by the express enactments of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 19. The Two Sisters, 2 W. Rob. 125.

—— Works Forfeiture of Wages.]—By the maritime law desertion works a forfeiture of wages. The Baltic Merchant, Edw. 86; The Jupiter, 2 Hag. Adm. 221; Anon., 1 Ld. Raym. 639, 739.

Mooring Ship — Discharging Cargo.]—The crew are not discharged by the ship's arrival; they are bound to moor the ship and discharge the cargo. The Baltic Merchant, Edw. 86; The Cambridge, 2 Hag. Adm. 243.

Seaman Refusing to Return on Board.]—Wages forfeited by refusing to return on board when ordered after absence on shore by leave. The Bulmer, 1 Hag. Adm. 163.

—— Leaving before Ship Docked.]—Leaving the ship when she is detained by a crowd of ships from entering the harbour is desertion. The Pearl, 5 C. Rob. 224.

—— Provision in Articles as to.]—A clause in ship's articles to the effect that mere absence for less than twenty-four hours shall not be deemed desertion relates to occasional absence, and not to wilful denial of authority. The Amphitrite, 2 Hag. Adm. 403.

Alteration of Voyage — Leaving Ship not Desertion.]—Ship's articles and voyage were altered after sailing:—Held, that a seaman did not forfeit his wages by leaving the ship; half wages awarded up to the seaman's reaching the port of discharge named in the articles. The Eliza, 1 Hag. Adm. 182.

—— Deviation by Stress of Weather.]—It is no justification for a mariner who deserts his ship, that she has been driven out of her course by stress of weather. The Cambridge, 2 Hag. Adm. 243. See also Cases, supra, col. 112.

Desertion must be clear, to forfeit Wages.]—The Frederick, 1 Hag. Adm. 211; The George, infra.

—— No Contract proved.]—Where the shipowner proved no contract to serve for any specified term:—Held, that no desertion such as would forfeit wages was proved. The George, 1 Hag. Adm. 168, n.

—— Mate sent Home to give Evidence.]—It is not desertion for a mate, in obedience to orders from the consul at a foreign port, to leave the ship and come to England to give evidence in a charge of stabbing against the master, which charge afterwards proved to be groundless. Cross v. Hicks, 16 W. R. 967.

—— Seaman apprehended Ashore.]—A seaman, having taken some of his clothes ashore, was apprehended ashore for assault. The ship sailed without him:—Held, that, desertion not being proved, his wages were not forfeited. Seward v. Ratter, 12 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 222.

—— Going Ashore to get Advice.]—Going ashore to get advice as to their duty under the ship's articles held not to be a desertion. The Westmoreland, 1 W. Rob. 216.

—— Ship not Moored—2 Geo. 2, c. 36.]—A seaman who quits his ship after arrival in port but before she is moored does not forfeit his wages under 2 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 3. To entitle the master to deduct a month's wages under that statute he must shew that the seaman left the ship without leave in writing; and he cannot set off the amount in an action for wages unless the provisions of the statute are complied with. Frontine v. Frost, 3 Bos. & P. 302.

—— Owing to Misconduct of Officers.]—If a master by inhuman treatment compels a sailor to quit a ship, it is not such a desertion as will amount to a forfeiture of his wages for the voyage performed. Limland v. Stephens, 3 Esp. 269.

To a declaration by a seaman for wages, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had been engaged as a seaman on board the "Candace," a British registered ship, for a voyage from Liverpool to San Francisco and back, and had during the voyage, and while he belonged to the ship at San Francisco, deserted from the ship, within the meaning of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, s. 9; and that the plaintiff afterwards, and while he was such deserter, engaged himself as a seaman for the voyage back to England from San Francisco with the defendant as the master of another ship, for wages for which this action was brought. Replication, that while the plaintiff was serving as seaman on board, the captain and officers flogged and punished him with great and unreasonable cruelty and severity, and that such flogging and punishment were not rendered necessary by mutinous or improper conduct, but were unnecessary and unreasonable; that the plaintiff requested the captain and officers to desist, which they refused to do, whereupon the plaintiff, having reasonable grounds to believe that they would continue to flog and punish him with great and unreasonable cruelty and severity, in order to escape therefrom deserted from the ship:—Held, a good answer to the plea. Edward v. Trevellick, 4 El. & Bl. 59; 2 C. L. R. 1605; 24 L. J., Q. B. 9; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 110; 2 W. R. 586.

The plaintiff also replied that he was a negro, and that negroes are bought and sold as slaves in divers states of the United States; that he was serving on board the "Candace," and before he deserted, the captain of the ship threatened to sell him, the plaintiff, as a slave to citizens of the United States; that San Francisco is situated in one of the United States, to wit, in California, and that the plaintiff had just and reasonable grounds for believing and did believe that, on the arrival of the ship at San Francisco, the captain was about and meant to carry his threat into execution; and that, in order to prevent the captain from selling him as a slave, the plaintiff deserted:—Held, no answer to the plea. Ib.

Inciting to Desert—Storekeeper.]—A storekeeper, who had been verbally engaged to serve in port and for the next voyage, held to be a seaman within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 2, 257. Thomson v. Hart, 18 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.), Just. Cas. 3.

Misconduct generally.]—Misconduct of seamen in port not regarded so seriously as when at sea. The Blake, 1 W. Rob. 73.

Wages not forfeited by mere misconduct, but only where the seaman's conduct would have made his discharge necessary for ship's safety. Ib.

Wages are forfeited by acts of mutinous tendency not apologised for. The Susan, 2 Hag. Adm. 229, n.

Misconduct on the part of a mariner such as will forfeit wages must be of a serious character. The Malta, 2 Hag. Adm. 158; The Ealing Grove, infra, col. 131. Ordinary drunkenness not sufficient. The Lady Campbell, 2 Hag. Adm. 5.

Negligence of Mate leading to Thieving.]—A mate may incur forfeiture of wages for general neglect of duty or a neglect of duty leading to robbery of the cargo—Per Dr. Lushington. The Duchess of Kent, 1 W. Rob. 283.

Thieving.]—Wages decreed, though seaman had thieved, and had been put on shore abroad (in violation of 39 Geo. 3, c. 80, s. 29). The Beaver, 3 C. Rob. 292.

If a sailor executed the articles prescribed by 37 Geo. 3, c. 73, and served accordingly, and during the voyage part of the cargo was plundered, but by whom could not be ascertained, he did not, in consequence of such plunderage, forfeit his wages. Thompson v. Collins, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 347.

Detention of Property of.]—Where the second mate was ordered, with three other seamen, to take the ship's boat and convey the captain, who had gone on shore at the Mauritius, on board, and, on their getting on shore, they refused to return with him, but remained there all night, and he was obliged to get back to his ship in another boat, and redeem his own on the following morning, when the mate was taken before a magistrate at the Mauritius, and committed to prison for a month:—Held, that this was such an act of disobedience as to warrant the captain in detaining his property on the vessel by way of forfeiture; and, consequently, that trover could not be maintained against the captain for such detention. Weatherpen v. Laidler, 8 Moore, 37.

Endangering Safety of Ship.]—To sustain an indictment for a misdemeanour under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 239, it is not necessary that the act done or omitted should be followed by actual loss, destruction, or damage of such ship. Reg. v. Gardner, 1 F. & F. 669.

Drunkenness.]—Getting drunk on shore at Dominica and not returning on board at expiration of leave, held not to work forfeiture of wages. The Ealing Grove, 2 Hag. Adm. 15. See col. 129.

A seaman may get moderately drunk without forfeiting his wages. The Lady Campbell, 2 Hag. Adm. 5; The New Phœnix, 1 Hag. Adm. 199.

Deductions from Wages.]—Semble, the master may reimburse himself out of seamen's wages for loss by their fault. Anon., 1 Ld. Raym. 650.

Loss by the gross negligence of a mariner may be set off against a claim for wages. The New Phœnix, 2 Hag. Adm. 420.

Neglect of Duty—Damages—Retention of Wages—17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 243, 244—25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 11.]—In an action by an engineer for wages, the shipowner claimed a right to retain wages for damage to boilers by the plaintiff's neglect:—Held, that the above statutes did not exclude, by implication, a claim by the shipowner for damages at common law, and that the provisions excluding proof of misconduct not entered in the log book applied only to criminal proceedings under s. 243. Great Northern Steamship Fishing Co. v. Edgehill (11 Q. B. D. 225), infra, col. 133, observed upon. Sharp v. Rettie, 11 Ct. of Sess. Ca. (4th ser.) 745.

Disrating.]—The plaintiff, having shipped on board the "H. C." as refrigerating engineer, with wages at the rate of 10*l.* per month, was, during the voyage, disrated by the master for alleged drunkenness and unfitness for his duties. He was placed in the main engine-room, and his wages were reduced from 10*l.* to 7*l.* per month:—Held, that this disrating and reduction of wages was not a "deduction" from the wages within the meaning of s. 171 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and that it was not therefore, necessary that the amount by which the wages had been reduced should be shewn under the head of deductions in the account of wages delivered to the plaintiff by the master. The Highland Chief, 61 L. J., Adm. 51; [1892] P. 76; 66 L. T. 468; 40 W. R. 416; 7 Asp. M. C. 176.

No Duty to attempt Rescue after Capture.]—Mariners are not under any duty to attempt a rescue if their ship is captured. The Two Friends, 1 C. Rob. 271.

Charge of Misconduct not Sustained.]—The Test (2), 3 Hag. Adm. 307; The Exeter, 2 C. Rob. 261.

Admiralty Court—Whole Wages or None.]—The court had no power to pronounce for part of the seaman's wages in a case of misconduct; it must pronounce for the whole or none. The Blake, 1 W. Rob. 73.

Compensation.]—By a clause in the ship's articles of a South Sea whaler, the seamen serving on board were to lose their wages if they did not return with the ship to the port of London. After serving twenty-seven months, some of the seamen were, with the consent of the captain, exchanged into another ship for others belonging to that ship:—Held, that, if these seamen had lost their wages under the articles, they could at any rate receive a reasonable compensation for their services. Hillyard v. Mount, 3 Car. & P. 93.

Waiver.]—If seamen have incurred a forfeiture of their wages, and in a time of distress, when the ship is aground, the captain calls on those seamen to assist in getting her off, this is no waiver of the forfeiture; but if the captain continues them in their work after the peril is over it is otherwise. Train v. Bennett, 3 Car. & P. 3; M. & M. 82.

Where it is provided by a ship's articles that any of the crew who shall absent themselves from the ship without leave shall forfeit their wages; if, after one of the crew has so absented himself, the master receives him back again, and allows him to work like the others, the forfeiture is waived and the wages are recoverable. Miller v. Brant, 2 Camp. 590; 11 R. R. 806.

3. Proceedings against Seamen.

Time for Proceeding.]—The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 257, makes it an offence to persuade or attempt to persuade any seaman to neglect or refuse to join, or to desert from his ship; by s. 525 no conviction for any offence shall be made in any summary proceeding, unless such proceeding is commenced within six months after the commission of the offence; or if both or either of the parties to such proceeding happen during such time to be out of the United Kingdom, unless the same is commenced within two months after they both first happen to arrive or to be at one time within the same:—Held, that "parties to the proceeding" meant the seaman and the person persuading or attempting to persuade; and that if either of them leaves the kingdom during the six months after the commission of the offence, an information may be laid within two months of his return. Austin v. Olsen, 9 B. & S. 46; 37 L. J., M. C. 34; L. R. 3 Q. B. 208; 17 L. T. 537; 16 W. R. 426.

Informal Engagement.]—Held, also, that the offence might be committed, although the formalities required by s. 150 in the engagement of the seaman had not been complied with. Ib.

A seaman engaged by the master, and taken to sea without any such written agreement having been entered into between them as was rendered necessary by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, s. 2, was not a seaman or a mariner within 11 & 12 Will. 3, c. 7, s. 9, and therefore was not liable under that section for making a revolt by deserting his vessel in port, and inducing the rest of the crew to do the same. Reg. v. Smith, 3 Cox, C. C. 443.

Mutiny—Confinement of Captain—Justification.]—Upon an indictment under 11 & 12 Will. 3, c. 7, s. 9, for mutiny, it is no justification that the conduct and orders of the captain were unreasonable, unjust or vexatious; but if they were such that, unless the crew had confined the captain, they would have been in danger of their lives, or of bodily harm, there is justification. Reg. v. Rose, 2 Cox, C. C. 329.

Summary Proceeding excludes Civil Remedy.]—The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 243—which enables a seaman who neglects without reasonable cause to join his ship to be punished upon proceedings before a court of summary jurisdiction with imprisonment and forfeiture of part of his wages—by implication takes away any other remedy against the seaman for the breach of contract, and the shipowner cannot, where the amount which he claims does not exceed 10*l.*, take proceedings for the recovery of damages under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), s. 4. Great Northern Steamship Fishing Co. v. Edgehill, 11 Q. B. D. 225. See Sharp v. Rettie, supra, col. 131.

Evidence of Desertion.]—A seaman having remained ashore all night at a foreign port, the master went to the consul without any notice to the seaman, and obtained his certificate that the seaman had deserted. In a summary proceeding before justices in this country by the seaman to recover his wages, the consul's certificate is not conclusive evidence of the fact of desertion. Lewis v. Jewhurst, 15 L. T. 275.

Ship must be Registered.]—The sections coming under the head of "Discipline," in 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, have reference to British ships alone; and s. 257 renders liable to a penalty every person who wilfully harbours or secretes any seaman or apprentice who has deserted from his ship, and in order to convict an offender under this section, it must be shewn that the ship deserted from is a British ship; and inasmuch as by s. 19 every British ship must be registered, and no ship thereby required to be registered shall, unless registered, be recognised as a British ship, proof that the ship is registered must also be given, either by the production of the original register, or by an examined or certified copy of it, as required by s. 107. Leary v. Lloyd, 3 El. & El. 178; 29 L. J., M. C. 194; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1246.

Proceedings before Justices — "Seagoing Ship."]—A ship registered as a British ship, that is engaged in carrying cargo upon rivers and their estuaries, although it may be capable of going to sea, is not a "seagoing ship" within the meaning of s. 109 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854. Therefore the provisions of s. 243 of that act for the punishment of offences by seamen do not apply to a man who is employed upon such a ship, and he may be dealt with under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875. Salt Union v. Wood, 62 L. J., M. C. 75; [1893] 1 Q. B. 370; 5 R. 176; 68 L. T. 92; 41 W. R. 301; 7 Asp. M. C. 281; 57 J. P. 201.

Wrongful Arrest, Desertion — Liability of Owners.]—O'Neil v. Rankin, IV. OWNERS, 5. LIABILITY IN TORT, ante, col. 72.

4. DUTY AND LIABILITY OF MASTER OR SHIPOWNER.

Who may engage—Persons contracting to purchase one Share of Ship.]—By s. 147, sub-s. 1, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), if any person not licensed by the board of trade other than "the owner or master or mate of a ship, or some person who is bonâ fide the servant and in the constant employ of the owner, or a shipping master duly appointed as aforesaid, engages or supplies any seamen or apprentice to be entered on board any ship in the United Kingdom," he incurs a penalty. The respondent having bonâ fide contracted to purchase one sixty-fourth share in a British ship from P., who, though not registered as the owner, had the full possession and control of the ship under a contract to purchase the sixty-four shares, supplied an apprentice to P., who engaged the apprentice for the ship:—Held, that the respondent was an "owner" within the meaning of the exemption, since though not a registered owner he had a contract enforceable in equity for the purchase of a share in the ship. Hughes Sutherland, 50 L. J., Q. B. 567; 7 Q. B. D. 160; 45 L. T. 287; 29 W. R. 867; 4 Asp. M. C. 459; 46 J. P. 6.

Implied Warranty.]—There is no implied warranty of seaworthiness in a contract between an owner of a ship and a seaman to serve on board it for a particular voyage. Therefore an action by a seaman against an owner of a ship for so negligently fitting out the ship, that by reason thereof it was unseaworthy, and the seaman was unable to sleep in his hammock, and obliged to undergo excessive labour, and was thereby injured in his health, not alleging any knowledge of the unseaworthiness, or any personal blame on the part of the owner, cannot be supported. Couch v. Steel, 3 El. & Bl. 402; 2 C. L. R. 940; 23 L. J., Q. B. 121; 18 Jur. 515; 2 W. R. 170.

To supply Medicines.]—A count alleged that the defendant neglected to supply and keep on board the vessel a proper supply of medicines, whereby the plaintiff's health suffered:—Held, that 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, s. 18 (similar in enactment to s. 224 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), made it the duty of the shipowner to have on board such medicines, and that though the act imposed a penalty recoverable as the specific punishment for the breach of that duty as to the public, sailors sustaining a private injury from a breach of that statutable duty were entitled to maintain an action to recover damages; and that the count was good. Ib.

Increase of Risk.]—The plaintiff agreed with the defendant to serve as one of the crew of a ship, whereof the defendant was master, for twelve months, from London to Rio, or any other of the ports specified in the agreement, amongst which were ports in the Pacific Ocean, and back to a final port of discharge, and to obey during that period all the defendant's lawful commands. He subsequently sailed for Rio with the ship. She was destined, as it appeared from her charterparty, for the service of the Peruvian government, and had on board a cargo of coal and ammunition. In the course of her voyage to Rio she joined company with two Peruvian war steamers, to which from time to time she supplied coal and ammunition. At Rio it became known to the plaintiff and the defendant that hostilities had commenced between Spain and Peru, two powers at peace with England. The defendant, notwithstanding this circumstance, announced to the plaintiff that he intended to go on to Callao, in the Pacific, another Peruvian port. He was at that time acting under the direction of a Peruvian agent on board the ship, who received his instructions from the commanders of the two war steamers. The plaintiff objected to serve any further on the voyage on the ground that it had become illegal, and involved greater danger than he had anticipated when he entered into his agreement with the defendant. He accordingly left the ship. In an action for breach of contract brought by him against the defendant:—Held, that he must be taken to have engaged the plaintiff for an ordinary voyage, and that the plaintiff was entitled to treat as a breach of contract the defendant's employment of him on a voyage which would expose him to greater danger than he originally had reason to anticipate. Burton v. Pinkerton, 36 L. J., Ex. 137; L. R. 2 Ex. 340; 16 L. T. 419; 15 W. R. 1139.

Damages for Breach of Contract.]—The plaintiff, after leaving the ship, was imprisoned at Rio for some days as a Peruvian deserter. When he came out of prison the ship had gone, carrying some of his clothes on board of her. The jury awarded damages both for the imprisonment and the loss of clothes:—Held, that these damages were too remote to be recoverable. Ib.

Leaving Seamen Abroad.]—In an indictment against a master of a merchant ship, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 19, for wilfully and wrongfully leaving a seaman behind before the termination of the voyage for which he was shipped, the allegation of ownership is material; and the only defence which the master can set up is, the production of a certificate of the consul or other party mentioned in the statute, or proof that it was impossible to obtain such certificate. Reg. v. Dunnett, 1 Car. & K. 425.

—— Liability for Expenses.]—Where seamen are injured by an accident, and put on shore while the ship proceeds on her voyage, the captain has no implied authority to make the shipowner liable for expenses incurred for their maintenance and care. Organ v. Brodie, 10 Ex. 449; 3 C. L. R. 51; 24 L. J., Ex. 70; 3 W. R. 13.

Passage Money.]—Foreign seamen engaged for a voyage out and home are entitled, upon being discharged in this country against their own consent, to receive, out of the proceeds of the ship, passage money for their return home; but not so seamen engaged during the course of a voyage. The San Jose Primeiro, 3 L. T. 513.

Seamen forced to provide themselves, the ship's provisions being exhausted, are entitled to board wages out of the proceeds of the ship. Ib.

Seamen of a disabled foreign vessel are entitled to an allowance for a return to their own country. The Gustaf, Lush. 506; 31 L. J., Adm. 207; 6 L. T. 660. See also The Rafaelluccia, col. 125.

Captain and Seaman—Common Employment.]—The owner of a ship is not responsible for the injury to, or death of, one of the crew resulting from the negligence of the captain of the ship, the captain and the crew being fellow-servants engaged in a common employment. Hedley v. Pinkney & Sons Steamship Co., 61 L. J., Q. B. 179; [1892] 1 Q. B. 58; 66 L. T. 71; 40 W. R. 113; 7 Asp. M. C. 135; 56 J. P. 308—C. A.

"Seaworthy" Ship — What is — Duty of Owner to provide.]—By s. 5 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, in any contract of service between the owner of a ship and the master or any seaman thereof, there is to be implied an obligation on the owner of a ship that he and the master shall use all reasonable means to insure the seaworthiness of the ship for the voyage at the time when the voyage commences, and to keep her in a seaworthy condition for the voyage during the same:—Held, that the expression "seaworthy" in that section meant that the ship should be in a fit state, as to repairs, equipment and crew, and in all other respects, to encounter the ordinary perils of the voyage at the time of sailing upon it; and that if a ship was properly equipped to encounter such perils, the negligence of the captain, in not using with proper care the means of safety provided, did not make the ship unseaworthy within the meaning of the section. Ib.

Misconduct—Entry in Log — Slander.]—A master entered in the log that the mate wilfully and intentionally disobeyed his orders in not allowing a seaman to steer. The mate sued the master for slander:—Held, that he must prove malice and want of probable cause. Hill v. Thompson, 19 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 377.

Liability for Injuries to Seamen.]—See ante, IV. OWNERS, col. 73.

5. AUTHORITY OF MASTER TO PUNISH.

In what Cases.]—The captain of a merchant ship, lying in a foreign port, sent a seaman, who had committed mutiny on shore, into the custody of the local authorities, and procured him to be flogged and imprisoned:—Held, that the captain was answerable, having taken an active part in the proceedings, and not merely lodged his complaint. Aitkin v. Bedwell, M. & M. 68; 31 R. R. 712.

Where C., a mariner on board an East Indiaman at anchor in the bay of Canton, within two miles of Macao, and within hail of several other vessels, having been guilty of disorderly conduct in the absence of the captain, was, upon the captain's return to the ship four days afterwards, ordered to be flogged, upon which L., a mariner on board the same ship, resisted the execution of the captain's orders, and was guilty of riotous and mutinous conduct, for which, by command of the captain, he was flogged:—Held, that the captain was justified in flogging L.; and that the authority of the captain to inflict moderate punishment is not confined to a case where the vessel is at sea beyond the reach of assistance; and that such punishment need not be inflicted immediately upon the act being done for which the punishment is inflicted. Lamb v. Burnett, 1 C. & J. 291; 1 Tyr. 265. See also Broughton v. Jackson, 18 Q. B. 378; 21 L. J., Q. B. 265; 16 Jur. 886.

It is the duty of the captain of a merchant vessel, in case of misconduct of one of the crew, previously to the infliction of punishment, to institute inquiry, with the assistance of others, and to have the result entered in the log. Murray v. Moutrie, 6 Car. & P. 471.

A seaman employed in cutting blubber on board a whaler, in consequence of a quarrel with the captain followed by a blow from the mate, threw down his knife and refused to do any more work in the ship:—Held, that such conduct was an act justifying moderate punishment; and that, although the punishment was excessive, yet, if the seaman, by some concession, might have put an end to it, and refused, he could not recover damages for the continuation of the punishment after such refusal. Ib.

Apprentice—Right to Chastise.]—A master has a right to chastise an apprentice, and the court will not inquire whether the chastisement was deserved, provided there was no cruelty. Wights v. Burns, 11 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 217.

Evidence in Action against Captain.]—In an action against the captain of an East Indiaman, for flogging the plaintiff (a gunner's mate) on board the ship, the latter cannot give evidence as to his being of a respectable family and connexions, unless these circumstances could be proved to have been known to the captain at the time. Rhodes v. Leach, 2 Stark. 516.

Excessive Punishment.]—500*l.* damages recovered for excessive punishment by master of his seaman. Watson v. Christie, 2 Bos. & P. 224; 5 R. R. 579.

Threatened Mutiny—Force.]—The master is justified in using force to prevent a threatened mutiny. Bingham v. Garnault, Bull. N. P. 17.

6. Certificate of Character.

A master having made and signed a report of a seaman's character, upon his discharge, in the form sanctioned by the board of trade, the shipping master gave the seaman a copy of such report. A. knowingly and fraudulently made a fac-simile of this report, but instead of writing the letter M., which stood in the original to indicate that the seaman's character for ability and conduct was middling, wrote "G.," indicating that it was good:—Held, that A. was guilty of an offence within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 176. Reg. v. Wilson, Dears. & B. 558; 27 L. J., M. C. 230; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 670; 6 W. R. 503; 8 Cox, C. C. 25.

Refusal to give Certificate of Discharge—Penalty.]—An action will not lie for the refusal to give to a seaman the certificate of discharge directed to be given by the 172nd section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, the only remedy for such refusal being the penalty provided by that section. Vallance v. Falle, 53 L. J., Q. B. 459; 13 Q. B. D. 109; 51 L. T. 158; 32 W. R. 769; 5 Asp. M. C. 280; 48 J. P. 519.

7. Protection from Imposition.

Persons going on Board before final Arrival of Ship.]—A. was charged under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 237, with boarding, without the permission of the master, a ship "about to arrive at her place of destination before her actual arrival in dock or at the place of her discharge." The ship, at the time he boarded her, had just entered the Cumberland Basin, in the port of Bristol, at 7 p.m. The basin is divided from the river Avon by dock gates, and is a complete dock, forming part of, but divided by other dock gates from, the rest of the docks. There are quays in the basin, but the ship was not intended to discharge in the basin; she remained in the basin all night, and the next morning she was moored further in the floating harbour, and discharged her cargo at the quay there. The justices dismissed the complaint:—Held, that the ship had not arrived "at her place of destination" by merely arriving in the port of Bristol, and that she had not "actually arrived at her place of discharge," which was the quay where she ultimately did discharge; but that she had actually arrived in dock, within the meaning of the section, although the dock was not the dock in which she ultimately discharged; and that the justices' decision was therefore right. Attwood v. Case, 45 L. J., M. C. 20; 1 Q. B. D. 134; 33 L. T. 507; 24 W. R. 94.

Disposition of Court to Protect.]—Mariners are, from their ignorance and helpless state, placed in a peculiar manner under the tender protection of the court—per Sir W. Scott. The Exeter, 2 C. Rob. 261.

Assignment of Prize Money.]—Assignment by seaman of his prize money to the surgeon set aside. Taylour v. Rochfort, 2 Ves. Sen. 281. Baldwin v. Rochfort, 1 Wils. 229.

Contract to give up Salvage.]—See post, XXVI. Salvage.

Unreasonable Contracts for Service.]—See Buck v. Rawlinson, and Cases ante, col. 118.

8. Wills of Seamen.

Probate—Mariner's Will.]—1 Vict. c. 26, s. 11.

A mariner on board ship at Port Adelaide wrote a letter relating to the disposition of his property in case of his death:—Held, that this letter was entitled to probate, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 26, s. 11, as a codicil to a will which he had previously executed. Parker, In the goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 375; 28 L. J., P. 91; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 553.

Will of a seaman on board the "Excellent" training ship, permanently stationed in Portsmouth harbour, held to be the will of a mariner or seaman being at sea within 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 11. McMurdo, In the goods of, L. R. 1 P. & M. 540.

A surgeon in the navy, returning from service, whilst at sea wrote a letter stating how he wished his property to be disposed of at his death:—Held, that he was a mariner or seaman within 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 23, and 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 11, and probate granted. Saunders, In the goods of, L. R. 1 P. & M. 16.

A staff-surgeon in the navy wrote a letter, some sentences of which were testamentary, on board H.M.S. "Serpent" at Devonport. The ship was lost at sea a few days after:—Held, that the will was entitled to probate. Rae, In the goods of, 27 L. R., Ir. 116.

9. Impressment.

A man is not excused from impressment as being headborough of the place in which he resides. Semble, there are no exemptions, except by statute, and perhaps ferrymen. Fox, Ex parte, 5 Term Rep. 276; 2 R. R. 596.

Habeas corpus not granted at prayer of the master to bring up his apprentice who had been impressed. Landsdown, Ex parte, 5 East, 38.

To convict for harbouring deserters under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 257, it must be shewn that the ship was British and registered. Leary v. Lloyd, 3 El. & El. 178; 29 L. J., M. C. 194.

Wages of Seamen Impressed.]—See Cases supra, col. 108.

10. Supplying without Licence.

Onus of Proof of Licence on Defendant.]—A defendant having been charged under the 147th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, with supplying a seaman to a merchant ship, in the United Kingdom, he not being a person holding a licence from the board of trade for that purpose:—Held, on a case stated, that proof having been given of the supply of the seaman by the defendant, the onus of proving that he held a licence from the board of trade rested with him. Reg. v. Johnston, 55 L. T. 265; 16 Cox, C. C. 221; 6 Asp. M. C. 14; 51 J. P. 22.

11. Thames Watermen.

Thames By-laws — Navigating Steamboat — Towing more than Six Barges.]—A by-law made in pursuance of the Watermen and Lightermen Amendment Act, 1859, provides that any person, who, when in charge of or navigating any steamboat on the river between Vauxhall Bridge and the entrance to the Victoria Docks, shall at the same time tow more than six barges exceeding ten tons each attached thereto, shall incur a penalty. A person in charge of a steamboat towed thirty-one barges of more than ten tons each from the upper dolphin, situate about 100 yards above the entrance of the Victoria Docks, into the docks:—Held, that he was not, while so doing, navigating a steamboat upon the river within the meaning of the by-law, and could not be convicted of a breach thereof. Rolles v. Newell, 59 L. J., Q. B. 423; 25 Q. B. D. 335; 63 L. T. 384; 39 W. R. 96; 6 Asp. M. C. 563; 55 J. P. 70.

—— Barge—Number of Men.]—By-law 16 of the Thames conservators provides that all barges, boats, lighters and other craft navigating the river Thames, shall, when under way, have at least one competent man constantly on board for the navigation and management thereof, and all such craft of above fifty tons burden shall when under way have one man in addition on board to assist in the navigation of the same:—Held, that, "one man in addition" in this by-law means one competent and skilful man in addition, and that where the craft is above fifty tons burden, the by-law requires two competent men on board, and is not satisfied by having on board one competent man being a licensed lighterman, and a boy about sixteen years of age. Goldsmith v. Slattery, 63 L. T. 273; 6 Asp. M. C. 561. And see Perkins v. Gingell, col. 835.

Watermen's Act — Apprentice — Temporary Employment.]—When a person qualified to take apprentices under the Watermen and Lightermen's Act, 1859, has no employment for the time being for his apprentices, he may find temporary employment for them with another person so qualified. Smith v. Francis, 55 J. P. 407.

—— Apprentice—Second Hand on Barge.]—An apprentice bound as prescribed in the Watermen's Act, 1859, is qualified to act as a lighterman under s. 54, although he does not hold, and is not qualified to hold, a licence under the act; and he may be a competent person to act as second hand on board a barge or other craft of over fifty tons burden, within the meaning of by-law 16, made under the Thames conservancy acts. Gosling v. Newton, 64 L. J., M. C. 160; [1895] 1 Q. B. 793; 15 R. 395; 72 L. T. 500; 43 W. R. 559; 18 Cox, C. C. 135; 7 Asp. M. C. 587; 59 J. P. 406.

—— Working Craft for Hire—Labourer employed at Weekly Wages.]—The appellant, who was not a freeman of the Company of Watermen and Lightermen of the river Thames, was convicted of an offence under s. 54 of the Watermen and Lightermen Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. cxxxiii). That section provides that, "if any person not being a freeman licensed in pursuance of this act, or an apprentice qualified according to this act, . . . shall at any time act as a waterman or lighterman, or ply or work any wherry, passenger-boat, lighter, vessel, or other craft upon the said river from or to any place or places or ship or vessel within the limits of this act for hire or gain," every such person shall be liable to a penalty. The appellant, who was engaged as a labourer at a wharf at weekly wages, by the orders of his employers, rowed a number of labourers in one of his employers' boats to a ship lying in the river within the limits defined by the act. He received no separate reward or payment for so doing:—Held, that the conviction was wrong. Skittrell v. Showell, 59 L. J., M. C. 26; 61 L. T. 874; 54 J. P. 325.

—— Construction — Master on Paddle-box.]—By the 99th by-law under the Watermen's and Lightermen's Amendment Act, 1859, which provides that if the master of any steam vessel shall not (when practicable) remain on one of the paddle-boxes or on the bridge of such vessel, or shall not cause and procure a proper look-out to be kept "from the bow" of such vessel, he shall incur a penalty, is not inconsistent with or impliedly repealed by the 36th by-law made under the Thames Conservancy Act, 1864, which provides that the master of every steam vessel shall be and remain on one of the paddle-boxes or bridge, and shall cause a proper look out to be kept from the said vessel. Green v. Gosling, 62

L. J., M. C. 45; [1893] 1 Q. B. 109; 5 R. 91; 67 L. T. 853; 41 W. R. 141; 7 Asp. M. C. 248; 57 J. P. 87.

—— Barge in Tow—Waterman on Board.]—A barge on the Thames in tow of a tug must have a licensed waterman on board and in charge. Elmore v. Hunter, 47 L. J., M. C. 8; 3 C. P. D. 116; 38 L. T. 179; 3 Asp. M. C. 555.

—— Navigating without Licence.]—A person, other than those mentioned in 22 & 23 Vict. c. cxxxiii, s. 54, who navigates a barge for hire within the limits of the act, is liable to the penalty of the act, although the barge has sailed from a place outside the limits of the act, and might, under 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. lxxv, have been navigated by such person. Doick v. Phelps, 30 L. J., M. C. 2; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1371; 3 L. T. 296; 9 W. R. 70.

The above section does not apply to a person, other than a freeman, who conveys for his own purposes his servants or workmen, without charge. Tadhunter v. Buckley, 7 L. T. 273.

A steam tug of eighty-seven tons, under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. lxxv, s. 37, may be navigated by a person who is not a freeman without incurring a penalty. Reed v. Ingham, 3 El. & Bl. 889; 23 L. J., M. C. 156; 2 C. L. R. 1495; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 61.

A barge, formerly a western barge, but at the date of the offence employed in carrying goods for the Great Western Railway from a basin of the Grand Junction Canal, outside the limits of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. lxxv, to a wharf in the Thames within the limits of the act, is not a western barge within s. 101 of the act. Tibble v. Beadon, 24 L. J., M. C. 104. S. C., nom. Reg. v. Tibble, 4 El. & Bl. 888.

—— Validity of By-law—Penalty.]—A by-law imposing a penalty on any freeman who employed a non-freeman to navigate craft on the Thames is good. Edmonds v. Waterman's Co., 24 L. J., M. C. 124; 3 C. L. R. 902; 1 Jur (N.S.) 727.

Licence Granted—Administrative, not Judicial Act—Certiorari.]—The making of an order for the issue of a licence or certificate by the court of the Company of Watermen and Lightermen of the river Thames authorising a person who has actually served for two years under a contract with a lighterman qualified to take apprentices, to act as a lighterman, is not a judicial, but an administrative act, and consequently such an order cannot be removed into the high court by certiorari. Reg. v. Lucey, Gosling, Ex parte, 66 L. J., Q. B. 308; [1897] 1 Q. B. 659; 61 J. P. 388.

VII. PILOT.

1. Recovery of Fees and Penalties, 141.
2. Duties, Rights, and Liabilities, 144.
3. Licences, 145.
4. Duty to Employ, 147.

And see XX., COLLISION, 10. COMPULSORY PILOTAGE.

1. RECOVERY OF FEES AND PENALTIES.

Production of Licence.]—The master of a ship was not liable to the penalty imposed by 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 58, for refusing to employ a pilot, unless the pilot produced his licence as required by s. 66, although it was demanded. Hammond v. Blake, 10 B. & C. 424; 5 M. & Ry. 361; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 140.

A pilot nonsuited in action for pilotage because he did not shew his license. 52 Geo. 3, c. 39, s. 34. Usher v. Lyon, 2 Price, 118.

Offer by Pilot to take charge.]—A conviction under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 70, for continuing in charge of a ship after a duly licensed pilot had offered to take charge of it, was bad, if it did not shew that the offer was made to or in the presence of the party in charge of the vessel, or that it otherwise came to his knowledge. Chaney v. Payne, 1 G. & D. 348; 1 Q. B. 712.

In an action against a master of a vessel for penalties under 52 Geo. 3, c. 39, s. 34, the declaration must have alleged that a licensed pilot offered to the master to take charge of the vessel, or made such offer in his presence or hearing; and it was not sufficient merely to follow the general words of the act. Peake v. Carrington, 5 Moore, 176; 2 Br. & B. 399.

Transporting in Thames.]—The 5 Geo. 2, c. 20, which inflicted a penalty on persons piloting ships down the Thames, only extended to vessels sailing on foreign voyages, and not to those which, having performed their voyages, were moved from one wharf to another on the river, for the purpose of unloading their cargoes. Rex v. Lambe, 5 Term Rep. 76. S. P., Rex v. Neale, 8 Term Rep. 241.

Extra Fee for Docking.]—A ship arriving at the entrance of the West India Docks too late for docking that tide, held not liable under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, to an extra pilotage charge for "docking" next tide. The Adah, 2 Hag. Adm. 326.

In Charge of Vessel—6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 70.]—Where a person selects the course of a ship, and takes the management of her for the purpose of directing her in that course, he is in the charge or conduct of the vessel within 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 70. The master was not, however, precluded by that section from employing any moving power, as, for instance, steam or other power, bonâ fide used as a moving power, if upon the party applying such power necessarily devolved the selection of the ship's course, and the charge or conduct of her in that course. Beilby v. Scott, 7 M. & W. 93; 10 L. J., Ex. 149.

The master of a vessel navigating it himself as pilot, after a duly licensed pilot offered himself, was not liable to the penalty imposed by 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 70, although he was liable to double the amount of the pilotage of the vessel, within s. 58. Beilby v. Shepherd, 3 Ex. 40; 18 L. J., Ex. 73.

Change of Pilots.]—Where a master of a vessel discharged a cinque port pilot in Standgate-creek, and dropped a mile down the port of Rochester, with a signal flying for a trinity house pilot, who came on board at Sheerness:—Held, that he was liable to a penalty under 52 Geo. 3, c. 39. Thornton v. Boland, 9 Moore, 403; 2 Bing. 219.

Charges—Thames.]—A pilot who brings a ship from Gravesend to the entrance of the Tilbury Docks, and thence into the docks, is not entitled under the order in council of May 17, 1882, to the special charge "for removing a vessel from moorings into a dry or wet dock," or to charge any sum other than the rate from Gravesend to Northfleet. The Clan Grant, 56 L. J., Adm. 62; 12 P. D. 139; 57 L. T. 124; 35 W. R. 670; 6 Asp. M. C. 144.

Liability of Shipbrokers—Pilot carried to Sea.]—The ten shillings and sixpence per day to which a licensed pilot, taken, without his consent, to sea, or beyond the limits of his pilotage district, in any ship, is entitled by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104 (The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854), s. 357, are not "pilotage dues" for which the shipbrokers are liable under s. 363. Morteo v. Julian, 48 L. J., M. C. 126; 4 C. P. D. 216; 41 L. T. 71.

Penalties—Suing for.]—The penalty imposed by 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 70, might be sued for by a common informer. Beilby v. Scott, 7 M. & W. 93; 10 L. J., Ex. 149.

—— Calculation of.]—The penalties imposed by 52 Geo. 3, c. 39, s. 11, on ships neglecting to take in a pilot on arriving off Dungeness, were to be calculated on ships bound for the river, not on the pilotage due from Dungeness to the Downs, but on that which would be due on the ship's arrival at her ultimate place of destination in the river. Mackie v. Landon, 1 Marsh. 585; 6 Taunt. 256.

—— Acting as Pilot.]—T. was third mate of a ship, and after P., a duly licensed pilot, had offered to take charge, continued to act as pilot. T. was charged under s. 361 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854:—Held, that the justices rightly convicted T. without regard to his being or not being mate of the ship. Turner v. Peat, 53 J. P. 230.

—— Local Act—Pilotage Fees.]—Where a public local act, in force before the passing of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and regulating a port, imposes a penalty on unauthorised persons acting as pilots, pilotage is compulsory. Pilotage rates, fixed by by-laws made by trustees under a local act, and under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and duly sanctioned by her majesty in council, may be sued for by a pilot who has rendered services as such. The Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 68), is retrospective, as it declares what the meaning of the principal act of 1854 always has been, and by it the word "ship" in the act of 1854 includes "foreign ship." Jones v. Bennett, 63 L. T. 705; 6 Asp. M. C. 596.

—— Master Piloting his own Ship.]—A master or part owner not being a pilot may not, under 3 Geo. 1, c. 13, pilot his own ship up the Thames. Kemler v. Blanchard, W. Bl. 690.

—— Refusal to take Pilot.]—For a commitment under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 70, to be good it must appear that the offer by the pilot to take charge of the ship was made to the accused, or in his presence. Reg. v. Chaney, 6 Dowl. P. C. 281.

Sued for in Admiralty—Non-qualified Pilots' Charges.]—Pilotage sued for in admiralty; how far statutory rates applicable to non-qualified pilots. The Nelson, 6 C. Rob. 217.

A pilot may sue in admiralty for his services at sea. The Bee, 2 Dods. 498.

2. Duties, Rights, and Liabilities.

Liability of Pilot of King's Ship.]—Liability of pilot of king's ship. See Storr v. Clements, post, XX. Collision, 3. Liability.

Action against Pilot for Collision—Venue.]—An action against a pilot for negligently damaging another ship by collision need not, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 84, be brought in the county where the cause of action arises. Lawson v. Dumlin, 9 C. B. 54.

Pilot Getting Under Way in Improper Weather.]—A pilot who took a heavy steamship out of dock and down the Clyde in weather such that she ought not to have left the dock, held liable in damages for a collision that followed. Burrell v. McBrayne, Islay (Owner of) v. Patience, 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 224.

Held, that taking the ship to sea in such weather was "wilful or culpable neglect or mismanagement," within the above act. Ibid. And see The Strathspey and The Islay, XX. Collision; 9, Compulsory Pilotage.

Jurisdiction against—Court of Passage.]—A ship, by compulsion of law, in charge of a duly licensed pilot in the river Mersey, came into collision with and occasioned damage to another vessel. The owners of the damaged vessel instituted an admiralty suit in the court of passage against the pilot:—Held, that the court of passage had not jurisdiction to entertain the suit, as an admiralty suit. The Alexandria, 41 L. J., Adm. 94; L. R. 3 A. & E. 574; 27 L. T. 565; 1 Asp. M. C. 464.

—— Of Court of Admiralty.]—Semble, that the court of admiralty has not jurisdiction to entertain such a suit. Ib.

There is no admiralty jurisdiction to entertain a suit against a pilot who, in navigating a ship, has caused a collision between that ship and another. Ib.

—— Of County Court.]—An action against a pilot for collision and damage caused to a barque by a vessel under his charge, is not an "admiralty cause," within 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 51, which confer admiralty jurisdiction upon county courts. Flower v. Bradley, 44 L. J., Ex. 1; 31 L. T. 702; 23 W. R. 74; 2 Asp. M. C. 489.

Duties of Pilot in charge of a Ship.]—See post, XX. Collision, 9. Compulsory Pilotage.

Injury to Pilot—Not Fellow-servant of Crew—Liability of Owners.]—There is no implied contract between the owners of a ship and a pilot whom they are compelled to employ, that the pilot shall take upon himself the risk of injury from the negligence of the shipowners' servants; and an action will lie by the pilot against the shipowners for injuries caused to him whilst acting as pilot on board their vessel, by the negligence of their servants. Smith v. Steele, 44 L. J., Q. B. 60; L. R. 10 Q. B. 125; 32 L. T. 195; 23 W. R. 388.

And where a pilot went on board a vessel in the course of his duty, in a district in which pilotage is compulsory, and while he was on board, a boat, which had been negligently slung by servants of the shipowners, fell on and killed him:—Held, that his widow could recover in an action against the shipowners brought by her, as executrix, under Lord Campbell's Act. Ib.

Additional Remuneration—Salvage.]—Where a pilot is called upon to perform extraordinary service, he may recover additional pilotage remuneration. The General Palmer, 2 Hag. Adm. 176; The Enterprise, 2 Hag. Adm. 178, n. And see post, XVIII. SALVAGE.

3. LICENCES.

Licences—Renewal.]—By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 374, no licence granted by the Trinity house shall continue in force beyond the 31st January next ensuing the date of such licence, but the same may, upon the application of the pilot holding such licence, be renewed on such 31st January in every year, or any subsequent day; and a pilot's licence renewed on the 20th January is within the intention of this provision, so as to be in operation and effect in the May following. The Beta, 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 23; Br. & Lush. 328; 34 L. J., Adm. 76; 12 L. T. 1.

—— Refusal to Deliver up.]—Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 352, a qualified pilot refusing to deliver up his licence when required to do so by the pilotage authority, is liable to a penalty, and cannot defend himself on the ground that the pilotage authority has acted capriciously in requiring the delivery. Henry v. Newcastle Trinity House Board, 8 El. & Bl. 723; 27 L. J., M. C. 57; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 685; 6 W. R. 232.

—— Leith Trinity House—Limits.]—The Trinity house of Leith has not power to grant licences to pilots within the jurisdiction of the Trinity house of London, and therefore a pilot to whom a licence has been granted by the Trinity house of Leith to navigate a ship along the east coast of England to Orfordness, thence to the Nore, and vice versâ, is subject to a penalty, under 5 Geo. 2, c. 20, s. 1. Hossack v. Gray, 6 B. & S. 598; 34 L. J., M. C. 209; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 996; 12 L. T. 701; 13 W. R. 859.

—— Hull Trinity House—Authority to Licence.]—By a charter of Elizabeth the Trinity house of Hull was authorised to take duties "in the port of the town of Kingston-upon-Hull, and in all places within the limits and liberties thereof, that is to say, in all havens, creeks, and other places where our customer of Hull by virtue of his office hath any authority to take any custom;" and they were empowered to exercise jurisdiction over disputes arising within the same limits; and to forbid any mariner of Hull to take charge as pilot of any ship to cross the seas, except such as should be first examined and licensed by them; and to punish any person who should act as pilot to cross the seas without their licence. The limits in question extended many miles up the Humber and river Ouse. Goole, a place within those limits, where the customer of Hull had formerly exercised jurisdiction, was constituted a port in 1828. Till after that time the Trinity house had never licensed pilots to take charge of vessels upon the Ouse, or the Humber, above Hull roads:—Held that the power given by the charter to license in all places where the customer of Hull had authority to take custom, extended over all the limits within which the customer might so act at the time when the charter was granted; consequently, that Goole, though now an independent port as to customs, was still subject to the charter, in respect of the licensing of pilots. Beilby v. Raper, 3 B. & Ad. 284.

Held, also, that it was not requisite, by the terms of the charter, that every licence should be for crossing the seas; but that the corporation might grant a more limited licence, as from Goole to Hull roads. Ib.

Pilotage Certificates—Grant of.]—The master of a vessel applied for a certificate, purporting to enable him to pilot his vessel within certain waters, and submitted to the required examination. The certificate was signed and sealed by the pilotage authority, and was lying in the office to be called for by the master, but he had not applied for it, and was ignorant that it was ready and would be given him on application:—Held, that the certificate was not granted to the master, nor possessed by him, within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 340, 353, so as to enable him to pilot his vessel in the specified waters. The Killarney, Lush. 202; 30 L. J., Adm. 41; 5 L. T. 21.

Evidence by a clerk from the Trinity house that the Trinity house has, from a period prior to the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, been in the habit of licensing pilots for the district in question, is primâ facie proof of their authority. The Juno, 45 L. J., Adm. 105; 1 P. D. 135; 34 L. T. 741; 24 W. R. 902; 3 Asp. M. C. 217.

Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 355, the board of trade can issue certificates to masters or mates of ships described in s. 354, and of such ships only. The Earl of Auckland, Lush. 387; 15 Moore, P. C. 304; 5 L. T. 558; 10 W. R. 124—P. C.

A pilotage certificate issued to a master describing a ship as the property of a person, who was not the owner either at the time of the granting of the certificate, or at the time of a collision subsequently occurring, is invalid at the time of that collision. Ib.

—— Refusal of Pilotage Authority to Renew.]—A pilotage authority has an absolute discretion under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 341, to refuse to renew a pilotage certificate granted to the master or mate of a ship under s. 340. Reg. v. Trinity House, 35 W. R. 835.

Cinque Port Pilot—Revocation of Licence—Powers of Trinity House.]—The Trinity house, since 16 & 17 Vict. c. 129, have power to revoke the licence of a cinque port pilot granted by the lord warden, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, for a proper cause. Nature of the inquiry and hearing to be had in such case discussed. Reg. v. Trinity House, 4 W. R. 124.

Duty to produce.]—See Hammond v. Blake, supra, col. 142.

4. Duty to Employ.

Compulsory Pilotage.]—See post, XX. Collision, 9. Compulsory Pilotage.

Duty of Master to employ Pilot.]—It is the duty of a master arriving off a strange port to do his best to procure a pilot: but if he cannot obtain one, the insurance is not therefore void. Phillips v. Headlam, 2 B. & Ad. 380; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 238. See Law v. Hollingsworth, 7 Term Rep. 160.

A captor neglecting to take a pilot into Guernsey, whereby the prize was lost:—Held, liable in damages. The William, 6 C. Rob. 316.

A captor who properly places his prize in charge of a pilot is not liable for her loss. The Portsmouth, 6 C. Rob. 317, n.

1. Contract for Sale.

Written Agreement for—Necessity of Registration.]—An agreement in writing to transfer a ship does not require to be registered under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), s. 55, nor need the special description of the ship sold required by that section to be inserted in a bill of sale transferring the ship be contained in such agreement. The plaintiff agreed in writing with the defendant to sell, and the defendant agreed to purchase, a yacht belonging to the plaintiff for the sum of 2,600*l.*, whereof the plaintiff was the registered owner, on condition that the defendant should be at liberty to rescind the said agreement should the yacht prove unsound. The defendant refused to carry out his part of the agreement, and the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for specific performance, or, in the alternative, 2,600*l.*, and for damages for breach of contract. The defendant pleaded that the agreement, if any was made, was not a bill of sale, nor was it registered, nor did it contain a sufficient description of the yacht, as required by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854. The plaintiff demurred:—Held, that s. 55 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, applies to the actual instrument by which the ship is to be transferred, and not to an agreement to transfer. Batthyany v. Bouch, 50 L. J., Q. B. 421; 44 L. T. 177; 29 W. R. 665; 4 Asp. M. C. 380.

An unregistered contract for the sale of shares in a British vessel could not be enforced in equity before the passing of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 3. Hughes v. Morris, 2 De G. M. & G. 349; 21 L. J., Ch. 761; 16 Jur. 603, infra. S. P., M'Calmont v. Rankin, 2 De G. M. & G. 403; 22 L. J., Ch. 554; Liverpool Borough Bank v. Turner, 2 De G. F. & J. 502; 30 L. J., Ch. 379; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 150; 3 L. T. 494; 9 W. R. 292: Boyson v. Gibson, 4 C. B. 121; 16 L. J., C. P. 147. And see III. Registration, supra.

Executory Contract—Recital of Registry.]—An action would not lie for the breach of an executory contract for the sale or transfer of a ship, unless the contract contained a recital of the certificate of registry pursuant to the previous statute, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, s. 34. Duncan v. Tindall, 13 C. B. 258; 22 L. J., C. P. 137; 17 Jur. 347.

Payment of Earnest.]—Trover was held to lie for a ship, where, upon a bargain of exchange, the contract and delivery were fully completed by the payment of earnest. James v. Price, Lofft, 219.

Illegal Stipulation in.]—A stipulation, in a contract for the purchase of a ship made with a shipbuilder, that a certificate shall be delivered to the purchaser by the builder, for the purpose of enabling the former to obtain a register as owner, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 55, ss. 15, 25, before the masts were on board, and before the ship was in a sufficiently forward state for the measurement required to be made by that act, did not render such contract illegal. Goss v. Quinton, 3 Man. & G. 825; 4 Scott (N.R.) 471; 12 L. J., C. P. 173; 7 Jur. 901.

Irregular—Effect of, against Wrongdoer.]—The plaintiff bought and paid for a ship stranded on the English coast, but the transfer was not regular; he tried to save her, but she went to pieces; the defendant possessed himself of parts of the wreck which drifted on his farm:—Held, that the plaintiff's possession enabled him to recover them in trover. Sutton v. Buck, 2 Taunt. 302; 11 R. R. 585.

Parol Evidence to shew Alteration.]—E., as agent to H., agreed to sell a ship to S., and a written contract was signed by S. The contract was forwarded to H., who made an alteration therein, and returned it to E., who thereupon produced the written contract, as altered by H., to S., who assented, without resigning the contract:—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to shew that S. assented, without re-signing, to the alteration made by H. in the contract after S. had affixed his signature. Stewart v. Eddowes, and Hudson v. Stewart, 43 L. J., C. P. 204; L. R. 9 C. P. 311; 30 L. T. 333; 22 W. R. 534.

Varying by Evidence of prior Contract.]—An agreement for the sale of a ship and kintlage will not be varied or controlled by a prior contract for the purchase of the latter only. Lano v. Neale, 2 Stark. 105.

Warranty by subsequent Bill of Sale.]—A contract by parol, or by letter, having been entered into for the sale of a ship, with a warranty, a subsequent bill of sale, not containing any contract of warranty, does not necessarily destroy the previous warranty, supposing there is no evidence that the parties did not intend that it should continue. Stuckey v. Bailey, 3 F. & F. 1.

Existence of Subject-Matter—Implied Warranty.]—By a deed-poll, A. sold to B. a ship, with its masts, tackle and appurtenances, and covenanted that he had good right, full power, and lawful authority to grant, bargain, sell, assign and set over the premises:—Held, that this was a covenant that the subject-matter of the transfer existed in the character of a ship, at the date of the deed; and if it was physically destroyed, or had ceased to answer the designation of a ship, the covenant was broken. Barr v. Gibson, 3 M. & W. 390; 7 L. J., Ex. 124.

Condition precedent—"Ship now at Rangoon."]—In an action by the vendors against their vendees for refusal to accept, evidence was given to shew the circumstances under which the contract was made, and that it was of vital importance that the vessel should be in the port named at the time of making the contract. The jury found that the condition, "ship now at Rangoon," had not been fulfilled, and that it was a condition absolutely vital:—Held, that it was rightly left to the jury to say under what circumstances the contract was made, and that the words "ship now at Rangoon" amounted to a warranty justifying the defendants in saying that there had been a failure of performance of a condition precedent, and in refusing to carry out the contract. Oppenheim v. Fraser, 34 L. T. 524; 3 Asp. M. C. 146.

Held, also, that the finding of the jury was rightly taken as an element in enabling the court to say that the words amounted to a condition precedent. Ib.

Removing Ship after Contract for Sale.]—A shipowner of Hamburg made, at Hamburg, an agreement with a domiciled Englishman for the sale to the Englishman of a Hamburg ship whenever she might return from the voyage on which she then was. The ship returned, and was by the owner ordered to proceed to Sunderland. The master of the ship, who was authorised by the shipowner to act as his agent in the sale, refused to deliver the ship except on certain terms. The purchaser filed a bill against the owner and the master for specific performances. He obtained leave to substitute service on the master for the owner, and moved for an injunction to restrain the defendants from removing the ship out of the jurisdiction:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to restrain the defendants from removing the ship, and injunction granted. Hart v. Herwig, 42 L. J., Ch. 457; L. R. 8 Ch. 860; 29 L. T. 47; 21 W. R. 663; 2 Asp. M. C. 63.

Sale with all Faults—Misrepresentation.]—Contract for sale of ship "with all faults." The vendors before signing the contract had shewn the purchaser an inventory or advertisement circulated at her previous sale to them, which was misleading as to her condition and value:—Held, that the parties were bound by the signed contract, and that no action for deceit would lie upon the representation. Pickering v. Dowson, 4 Taunt. 779.

Action on Bond for Quiet Possession.]—Action upon bond by vendor for quiet enjoyment of a ship sold; breach alleged, that the purchaser was sued for ballast supplied to the ship before the sale:—Held, that the plaintiff not having shewn that the ballast was in the ship at her sale, he could not recover. Kynter's Case, Leon. part 1, 46.

Sale when War imminent.]—The sale of a ship absolutely and bonâ fide by an enemy to a neutral when war is imminent, is not illegal. The Ariel, Sorensen v. The Queen, 11 Moore, P. C. 119.

Transfer after Capture.]—A transfer by the captor of a ship before condemnation is valid if the ship be afterwards condemned. Morrough v. Comyers, 1 Wils. 211.

Sale of Ship and all belonging to her—Chronometer on Shore.]—A ship ready to sail was sold with all belonging to her on board and on shore:—Held, that a chronometer on shore with an optician for regulation by him, and previously used in the ship, was included in the sale. Armstrong v. M'Gregor, 2 Ct. of Sess. Ca. (4th ser.) 339.

Specific Performance.]—On a sale by auction of shares in a ship, part of a bankrupt's estate, one of the conditions was, that the purchase-money should be paid to the solicitor of the assignees on or before a certain day, when the purchase was to be completed, and the purchaser to have possession, and a bill of sale; the purchaser paid part of the purchase-money to the solicitor before the day appointed for the completion of the purchase, and had possession, but not a bill of sale:—Held, that the payment, and the execution of the bill of sale, ought, in pursuance of the condition, to have been contemporaneous; that the assignees, not having received the money from the solicitor, or executed the bill of sale, would not be restrained from taking proceedings to recover possession of the ship; and that the purchaser was not entitled to a decree for specific performance of the contract, by the execution of the bill of sale by the assignees, upon payment to them of the balance of the purchase money. Hughes v. Morris, 2 De G. M. & G. 349; 21 L. J., Ch. 761; 16 Jur. 603—L.JJ. Affirming 9 Hare, 636.

Bankruptcy Jurisdiction.]—No jurisdiction in bankruptcy to compel bankrupt to perfect bill of sale of a ship. Stewart, Ex parte, 1 Glyn. & J. 344.

Breach of Contract to Sell.]—B. contracted to purchase a barge of H., the purchase-money to be paid by instalments. Part of the money so to be paid was paid, and H. gave notice to B. that he had sold the barge to another person, and he must give it up, and gave a formal notice to that effect. On petition under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 65, to restrain the dealing with the barge until a day specified, order made on the terms of bringing the arrears of instalments into court, and giving security for the completion of the contract. Baker, Ex parte, 18 L. T. 313.

Failure of Consideration.]—The owner of a ship proposes to his agent, to whom he was indebted on account, to transfer the ship to him, provided the agent would answer the owner's draft for repairs, in respect of which the owner was indebted to a third party not named. The ship was, in pursuance of this proposal, transferred to the agent, and the vendor afterwards became bankrupt, without having drawn on the purchaser, and without any communication of the terms of the purchase having been made to the creditor to whom the vendor was indebted for the repairs. There is no consideration between the purchaser and the vendor's creditor to entitle the latter to recover from the purchaser the amount of the repairs. Rattenbury v. Fenton, 3 Myl. & K. 505; 3 L. J., Ch. 203.

Order and Disposition.]—Ship at sea, policy, and cargo assigned to S. as security for an advance. On the ship's arrival, S. failed to take possession or do anything to show that the property had been transferred to him:—Held, that the ship and cargo passed to the assignees in bankruptcy of the transferor, as being in his order and disposition. Mair v. Glennie, 4 M. & S. 240; 16 R. R. 445.

The owner of the major part of a vessel in port mortgaged his share and transferred the bill of sale to the mortgagees. The mortgagees did not take possession, but suffered the mortgagor and the other part owners to manage her. The mortgagor having become bankrupt:—Held, that his share passed to the assignees under 21 Jac. 1, c. 19. Hall v. Gurney, 3 Dougl. 356.

Assignment of a ship at sea for a valuable consideration may be good against assignees of bankrupts, though no possession is taken thereof: aliter, as to a Thames passenger boat. Bourne v. Dodson, 1 Atk. 154. See also col. 158.

Misstatement in Class Certificate issued by Lloyd's Committee—Action by Purchaser of Ship.]—Lloyd's committee had furnished the owner of a sailing yacht with a certificate which classed the yacht as A 1 for eleven years. After the owner had sold the yacht to the plaintiff it was discovered that she was not entitled to this classification. The plaintiff brought an action for damages against the committee upon the ground that owing to the representation in the certificate he had given more for the yacht than she was worth:—Held, that the plaintiff had no cause of action. Thiodon v. Tindall, 60 L. J., Q.B. 526; 65 L. T. 343; 40 W. R. 141; 7 Asp. M. C. 6.

Public Policy—Sale Void.]—A sale by part owners of some of their shares upon the terms that the purchaser shall be master of the ship and the vendors, who retained four-sixteenths of the ship, managing owners, held void, on grounds of public policy. Card v. Hope, 2 B. & C. 661; 4 D. & R. 164; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 96; 26 R. R. 503.

Liability on Bills for Price of Ship.]—R. contracted with a company for the sale to the company of two ships to be sent by him to the Danube, and to be equipped by him for the voyage. The plaintiffs, on behalf of the company, agreed to give their bills for part of the purchase-money, R. undertaking that they should not be called upon to pay more than a specified part of the amount of the bills, and that not before a time named. The rest of the purchase-money was to be secured by mortgage of the ships to R. No transfer to the company and no mortgage to R. was executed. R. then sent the ships upon a voyage not to the Danube with a contraband cargo, rendering them liable to seizure and confiscation. He also mortgaged the ships, and indorsed over bills of exchange given for the mortgage money, all without the knowledge of the company:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to be relieved from their liability upon the bills given to R. in respect of the purchase-money, the agreement for sale by R. to the company being no longer enforceable by R. Burke v. Rogerson, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 635; 14 L. T. 780—L.JJ.

Non-payment of Purchase-money.]—When the vendor of a share in a ship has executed the bill of sale, and a receipt for the purchase-money, without its being in fact paid, a court of equity will give relief as well as discovery. Ryle v. Haggie, 1 Jac. & Walk. 334.

An agreement was entered into for the sale of a ship to A. and B. (one-third to A. and two-thirds to B.), at the price of 750*l.*; and, if default should be made by the purchasers, for the resale of the ship, the deficiency, if any, upon the resale to be made good by the defaulting purchasers. Possession of the ship was delivered to the purchasers by the vendors, who received 250*l.* from A., and two bills of exchange, drawn by them, and accepted by A. for the remaining 500*l.* In the bills of sale, by which the agreement was carried into effect, the purchase-money for the one-third and two-thirds of the ship was expressed to have been paid by A. and B. respectively. The acceptances of A. were dishonoured and he became bankrupt. On a bill filed by the vendors, who had become entitled to the whole interest in the purchase-money, against B., who had become the sole owner of the ship by purchase from A.'s assignee, praying specific performance of the agreement by B., or that the ship might be sold, and the proceeds applied in payment, the court held that it had jurisdiction, and decreed an account and payment of the unpaid purchase-money by B., or a resale of the ship, in default of payment in a limited time. Lynn v. Chaters, 2 Keen, 521.

No Lien for Purchase-money.]—There is no lien on the ship for purchase-money unpaid, or for other interest in her. Walton v. Butler, 29 Beav. 428.

Breach of Contract to Sell—Damages.]—The vendor of a ship covenanted with the purchaser that he had power to sell her. She had been bottomried, and was arrested and sold by the admiralty court at the suit of the lender on bottomry:—Held, that the vendor was liable in damages. Discussion of the policy and law of hypothecation. Meretone v. Gibbons, 3 Term Rep. 267.

Contract by Purchasing Company to allot Shares to Builder—Payment in Cash.]—Shipbuilders contracted with a company to build for the company a vessel, to be paid for as to one-tenth in shares of the company at par on delivery of the ship, and as to the rest in cash by instalments. The shipbuilders afterwards objected to take any part of the price in shares, and no shares were allotted to them until three years after the ship was delivered, when the company was about to be wound up:—Held, that the shipbuilders having insisted upon payment in cash from the time of delivery of the ship, the company was not bound to allot them shares at that time, and were not liable to the shipbuilders in an action for breach of the contract to allot the shares. M'Millan v. Liverpool and Texas Steamship Co., 38 L. T. 288; 3 Asp. M. C. 579.

Nonpayment of Purchase-money — Mortgage for securing—Liability of Purchasers of Mortgaged Property — Sale of Ship rescinded.]—An agreement recited that A. was desirous of purchasing, and B. of selling to A., the half of a schooner for 200*l.*, and that B. had agreed to lend A. 370*l.*, on having the repayment and the interest secured by a mortgage of a rent-charge to which A. was entitled, and of the dividends of certain stock, and by a policy of insurance and two houses; and B. agreed to dispose of the schooner to A., and to execute the necessary deed for that purpose, the 200*l.* purchase-money of the schooner to be part of the 370*l.*, for which the mortgage was to be given by A., and that A. should execute a mortgage of the schooner to B. as a further security for the 370*l.*, which A. was to pay back by annual instalments of 50*l.*, until the principal and interest should be paid; and if A. neglected to pay off all or any of the instalments, with interest, B. should have power and authority to call in the 370*l.*, or so much as should be then due. The schooner proved unseaworthy, and was by mutual consent returned to B. A. afterwards assigned the other property comprised in the agreement to C., who had notice of the agreement:—Held, that a suit could be maintained against C. for an account of the sum due on foot of the 170*l.* actually advanced, and for a sale, although the agreement quoad the schooner had been rescinded. Murphy v. Moorehead, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 454.

Held, secondly, that the return of the schooner to B. was not to be considered as a payment of instalments. Ib.

Right to Freight earned after Sale.]—Where ship sailed in ballast from L. to J., and was sold on her voyage there, and afterwards sailed from J. to L. with cargo, on contract with owners of ship at time of sailing; the creditors of the former owners have no lien on freight due in respect of voyage from J. Hill, Ex parte, 1 Madd. 61.

Sale in Contemplation of War.]—A ship sold in contemplation of war by an enemy to his son, a neutral, and paid for only in part, condemned by prize court as enemy's property. The Baltica, 1 Spink's Prize Cases, 264.

Delivery—Ship sunk.]—After a ship was launched and the last instalment of her price paid and her certificate handed to the purchasers, whose captain was in charge of her, she was blown from her moorings and sunk:—Held, that delivery had been made, and that the ship was at the risk of the purchasers. Brewer v. Duncan, 20 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 230.

Offer to buy Shares of Co-owners—Acceptance by One, Refusal by the Other.]—See Anderson v. Sillars, ante, col. 49.

Sale of Ship to be built and delivered Abroad—Ship lost—Recovery of Advances.]—Henckell, Du Buisson & Co. v. Swan & Co., ante, col. 14.

Broker's Commission on Ship to be built—Recovery by Purchaser.]—Neilson v. Skinner, XXV. SHIPBROKERS AND AGENTS.

Ship's Stores — Appurtenances.]—A ship's husband, who was a part owner, bought his co-owner's share in the ship shortly after her return from a voyage. In an action by the seller against him for an account of the last voyage:—Held, that stores laid in for the voyage to be performed after the date of the sale were not appurtenances of the ship and must be paid for by the buyer. Robertson v. Dennistoun, 3 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 829.

2. TITLE.

a. By Bill of Sale.

Mode of Transfer by.]—Under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, sales of ships can only be made in the manner prescribed by the statute. Liverpool Borough Bank v. Turner, 1 Johns. & H. 159; 29 L. J., Ch. 827; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 935; 8 W. R. 730. Affirmed, 2 De G. F. & J. 502; 30 L. J., Ch. 379; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 150; 3 L. T. 494; 9 W. R. 292.

A mere literal deviation from the form of conveyance of a ship prescribed will not render it void. Taylor v. Kinloch, 1 Stark. 175.

Notwithstanding the 26 Geo. 3, c. 60, s. 17, enacted that a bill of sale of a ship should be absolutely void, unless the certificate of the registry was truly and accurately inserted therein, a mere clerical mistake would not vitiate it. Rolleston v. Smith, 4 Term Rep. 161.

A bill of sale of a ship is not void, although it omits to set forth the true consideration, and is not stamped with an ad valorem stamp; but the parties thereto are liable to a penalty. Robinson v. Macdonnell, 5 M. & S. 228; 2 B. & Ald. 134, infra.

A bill of sale made to a trustee for the benefit of underwriters, whose names are not stated, is not primâ facie void, because contrary to the register acts. Heath v. Hubbard, 4 East, 110; 4 Esp. 205.

Where a bill of sale, though executed by the person named for that purpose by the plaintiff, the then owner of the ship, and purporting in all other respects to be made in conformity with the certificate of sale, was, in fact, made for less than the minimum price specified in the certificate, and the ship was registered in the name of the purchaser as sole owner:—Held, that the registry was void; and the ship having been sold by arrangement pending a suit that the plaintiff was entitled to the net proceeds of the sale. Orr v. Dickinson, infra.

When Necessary.]—A vessel which had been registered, was by the owners used for the space of four years as a mere coaling hulk and workshop, moored at one of their coaling stations; she was then transferred by them, under an agreement in writing, to a company to which the owners transferred their business. She was described in the agreement, and also in an invoice delivered, as a coal hulk:—Held, as a matter of fact, that under the circumstances of the case she was not a ship, at any rate as between the parties, so as to be by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 53, transferable only by bill of sale, and therefore that the property in her passed to the company. European and Australian Royal Mail Co. v. P. & O. Steam Navigation Co., 12 Jur. (N.S.) 909; 14 L. T. 704; 14 W. R. 843.

Vesting of the Property.]—The property of a ship vests in the purchaser, instantly upon the execution of the bill of sale. Hubbard v. Johnstone, 3 Taunt. 177.

The non-registration of a ship, required by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, ss. 37, 38, by the first purchaser, did not affect the title of a subsequent bonâ fide purchaser. The Australia, 13 Moore, P. C. 132; Swabey, 480; 7 W. R. 718.

Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 79, the registry of a bill of sale, which, though purporting to be valid, so that the registrar has no alternative but to register it, is in fact invalid, gives no title, even at law, to the person thereby registered as sole owner of the ship. Orr v. Dickinson, Johnson, 1; 28 L. J., Ch. 516; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 672.

The property in a ship passes, as between the vendor and his assignees and the vendee, by a bill of sale, although the transfer is not registered pursuant to the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854. Stapleton v. Haymen, 2 H. & C. 918; 33 L. J., Ex. 170; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 497; 9 L. T. 655; 12 W. R. 317.

The duty to register a transfer of ownership rests with the vendee; the bill of sale entirely divests the title of the vendor; immediately on the execution of the bill of sale the vendor becomes entitled to all the benefits of ownership, and he takes with them all the concurrent liabilities. The Spirit of the Ocean, 34 L. J., Adm. 74; 12 L. T. 239.

Vesting of Property—Sequestration against Seller whilst registered as Owner.]—Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 120, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 6, s. 3, a bill of sale followed by possession vests the ship in the purchaser, and his property is not affected by subsequent sequestration of the seller whilst still registered as owner. Watson v. Duncan, 6 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1247.

What passes by.]—A bill of sale of a whaler absent on a fishing adventure, together with all masts, &c., boats, oars, and appurtenances, does not pass the cargo of oil, &c., acquired during the adventure. Langton v. Horton, 5 Beav. 9; 11 L. J., Ch. 233; 6 Jur. 357, 594.

Assignment of Future Earnings of Ship.]—An assignment of freight and earnings of a ship held not to include earnings not in existence, actual or potential. Robinson v. Macdonnell, 5 M. & S. 228; 2 B. & Ald. 134, supra, col. 154.

Future earnings of a ship held assignable in equity. The Warre, In re, 8 Price, 269. S. P., Houghton, Ex parte, 17 Ves. 251; 1 Rose, 177; 11 R. R. 73. Speldt v. Lechmere, 13 Ves. 588; Mestarr v. Gillespie, 11 Ves. 621; 8 R. R. 261 (though the ship not transferred in the registry).

Purchase by an Infant.]—A transfer of a vessel by a bill of sale, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104. s. 55, to a bonâ fide purchaser for value, vests the property in such vessel in the transferee from the moment of its execution, and gives him a good title against the assignees of his vendor for seizing and selling the vessel under the bankruptcy of the latter, although, until registration of the transfer, the transferee could not have transferred the vessel to a purchaser from himself. Stapleton v. Haymen, 2 H. & C. 918; 33 L. J., Ex. 170; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 497; 9 L. T. 655; 12 W. R. 317.

On a purchase of a vessel by a person under twenty-one, the vendor becomes a trustee in equity for the purchaser, until the latter, on coming of age, is enabled to make the declaration of ownership required by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 38, previously to registering the vessel in his own name; and s. 3 of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, expressly recognises and gives effect to such an equitable right, and enables it to be enforced. Ib.

Assignment—Dumb Barge—Bill of Sale.]—A dumb barge, propelled by oars, plying on the river Thames and carrying goods, wares and merchandise (without passengers) is a vessel within the exception of the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 and 1882, which excepts from registration as a bill of sale transfers or assignments of a ship or vessel or any share thereof. Gapp v. Bond, 56 L. J., Q. B. 438; 18 Q. B. D. 200; 57 L. T. 437; 35 W. R. 683—C. A.

An assignment of a ship at sea is valid, though no possession is given; but of a passage craft in the Thames is void. Bourne v. Dodson, 1 Atk. 134. Cf. Brown v. Heathcote, 1 Atk. 160.

Whether Absolute or Conditional.]—A bill of sale of some shares in a ship was executed to T., and with it a declaration of ownership, as required for registration. T. did not register the instrument for more than four years, although he knew that this proceeding would be necessary to complete his title as part owner. He sought to have the vessel sold, and accounts taken between him and the defendant. The defendant alleged that the bill of sale had been given by him only as security for a loan which had since been fully paid. On several occasions T. accepted portions of the ship's earnings, without requiring to see vouchers or any regular accounts:—Held, that his conduct was that of a creditor, and not of a part owner, and that the setting up of the bill of sale as an absolute conveyance was an afterthought, and a course of conduct which would not be sanctioned by the court. The Jane, 23 L. T. 791.

When a bill of sale of a ship has been executed in the form prescribed by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 55, the provisions of s. 66 do not prevent the owners from shewing that the transfer, though absolute in its terms, was intended as a security only. Ward v. Beck, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 668; 32 L. J., C. P. 113; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 912.

The 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 3, is a declaratory enactment that this is the true interpretation. Ib.

In July, 1853, A., being owner of a ship, sold it to D., of the firm of D., Y. & Co., for 4,725*l.*, and received in payment their draft on B., at twelve months' date. In September, 1853, the ship sailed from London on a voyage to San Francisco, and thence on a seeking voyage home. In June, 1854, the captain, who was sent out by D. to take charge of the vessel, chartered it to load a cargo of flour for Sydney. Some days after the bill of exchange became due, D., Y. & Co. requested A. to renew it, and he consented to do so on having the vessel transferred to him as a security. The vessel was accordingly transferred to him by deed of assignment, which was in the form of an absolute sale. In October, 1854, the captain, who had no knowledge of the assignment, received 1,000*l.* on account of freight and remitted it to D., Y. & Co. by a bill of exchange. In November, 1854, D., Y. & Co., who had acted as ship's husband, became bankrupt:—Held, that though the assignment was in form absolute, yet the court might look to the real nature of the transaction, and see that it was by way of mortgage only. Gardner v. Cazenove, 1 H. & N. 423; 26 L. J., Ex. 17; 5 W. R. 195.

b. In other Cases.

Ship sold to Foreigner.]—A ship built in order to be sold to a foreigner, and to be delivered to him at a foreign port, was assigned by her builder to a bank for a valuable consideration, under an agreement which was not in the form of a bill of sale given by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854. The assignment was not registered, either under that act or under the Bills of Sale Act, 1854. At the time of the assignment the vessel had been completely built and had been tried:—Held, that the ship was not a British ship within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and that an assignment of her need not be by bill of sale, nor registered under that statute. Union Bank of London v. Lenanton, 47 L. J., C. P. 409; 3 C. P. D. 243; 38 L. T. 698; 3 Asp. M. C. 600—C. A.

Held, also, that an assignment of her fell within the proviso in the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, s. 7, which exempts assignments of a ship from the operation of that statute. Ib.

A transfer of a ship, which has not been registered as a British ship under s. 19 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, is good, although not made by bill of sale under s. 55. Ib.

Shares in Ship.]—An original owner of shares in a ship cannot enforce his title to those shares against a registered owner who has purchased them bonâ fide for value from a person whose name was on the register as owner, even though such person had been registered through fraud in the original owner. The Horlock, 47 L. J., Adm. 5; 2 P. D. 243; 36 L. T. 622; 3 Asp. M. C. 421.

A statement of defence alleging a fraudulent registration of the plaintiff's predecessor in title was demurred to, and the demurrer sustained, on the ground that a fraudulent registration on the part of an intermediate transferee is no defence to an action for possession by a bonâ fide purchaser for value, without notice of the fraud. Ib.

An injunction granted ex parte, on application of the plaintiff to prevent the defendant dealing, and to restrain the registrar of shipping from registering any dealings, in shares of a ship the subject of a co-ownership action pendente lite. Ib.

The sale of a share in a ship is good without actual delivery. Addis v. Baker, 1 Anst. 222.

—— As against Registered Mortgagee.]—A shipowner sold certain shares in a ship, and the purchaser, having neglected to register the sale, subsequently mortgaged the whole ship to a third person, who had no knowledge of the previous sale, to secure a balance exceeding the value of the ship. The purchaser subsequently registered his shares, and then finding the mortgage registered, instituted a suit against the ship, claiming as against his co-owner an account and the sale of the ship. The mortgagee intervened and claimed the release of the ship and damages and costs for its detention:—Held, that he was entitled to the release of the ship and to costs from the time the plaintiff became aware of his claim. The Eastern Belle, 33 L. T. 214; 3 Asp. M. C. 19.

Sale by Licitation.]—The transfer of a British ship is governed by the express provisions of the merchant shipping acts, which make a clear distinction between the legal estate and mere beneficial interests therein:—Held, that a sale by licitation of a British ship (or of a share therein) without a conveyance by bill of sale did not create such an interest in the purchasers as rendered it compulsory on the registrar, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, to register them as owners, and that the registrar was right in refusing so to do, and to erase from his books the inscriptions contained in the register against the ship in the names of the mortgagees. Chasteauneuf v. Capeyron, 51 L. J., P. C. 37; 7 App. Cas. 127; 46 L. T. 65; 4 Asp. M. C. 489—P. C.

Purchase by Surveyor.]—A person surveying a ship, with a view to a sale by the master, may be justified in becoming the purchaser. The Australia, Swabey, 480; 13 Moore, P. C. 132; 7 W. R. 718.

Pirate Ship.]—A ship which had been engaged in acts of alleged piracy, and which, before any proceedings had been taken by the crown, had been sold by her owners at a public auction to a bonâ fide purchaser, was afterwards arrested by the crown:—Held, that although the ships and goods of pirates are upon conviction forfeited to the crown, yet the ship of a pirate which has not been piratically taken, and which before conviction has been transferred to an innocent purchaser, is not liable to seizure by the crown. The Telegrafo or Restauracion, Reg. v. M'Cleverty, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 43; 40 L. J., Adm. 18; L. R. 3 P. C. 673; 24 L. T. 748; 20 W. R. 242; 1 Asp. M. C. 63.

Registration—Bankruptcy—Order and Disposition.]—The defendant grantee under a bill of sale of a ship at sea, failed to register in accordance with 26 Geo. 3, c. 60, and 34 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 16, before the bankruptcy of the grantor, but registered after his bankruptcy:—Held, that the property in the ship did not pass, and that the assignees of the bankrupt could recover in trover. Moss v. Charnock, 2 East, 399; Holt, 603.

Where a ship is sold at sea, in order to prevent her passing to the vendor's assignees upon his bankruptcy, as being in his order and disposition, the bill of sale should be delivered to the purchaser, who must take possession of the ship on her arrival. Matthews, Ex parte, 2 Ves. Sen. 272. Cf. Brown v. Heathcote, 1 Atk. 160.

See also III. REGISTRATION, supra, and Cases, col. 151.

Validity of Sale—By what Law.]—See The Bomba and The Charlotte, infra, col. 161.

3. WHO CAN SELL.

a. Managing Owners.

Authority of.]—D., the managing owner of a ship, through the plaintiffs, his agents at Constantinople, sold her to the Turkish government, and received a bill upon the Oriental Bank in London for the purchase-money, which bill was duly paid. D. had no express authority at the time from the defendants (who were the owners of $\frac{23}{64}$ths of the ship) to sell her, but the latter knew that a sale was contemplated; and, after the sale, they executed a power of attorney, reciting that they had agreed to sell the vessel to the Turkish government, and had actually received the purchase-money, and empowering the plaintiffs to transfer their respective shares and to hand over the vessel to the purchasers. The defendants afterwards received from D. (or settled in account with him) the value of the then respective shares:—Held, that the jury was warranted in finding that the defendants had authorised the sale of the ship to D., or had by their subsequent ratification so adopted his act as to render them jointly liable to the plaintiffs for the commission due to the latter on the sale. Keay v. Fenwick, 1 C. P. D. 745—C. A.

Held, also, that the position of the defendants was not so altered by the fact of the plaintiffs having drawn upon D. a bill at three months' date for the amount of the commission, as to release the former from liability upon the dishonour of the bill. Ib.

b. Part Owners.

Rights of.]—A broker was employed to sell a ship belonging to three part owners, two of whom communicated with him on the subject; to them he paid their shares of the proceeds of the sale, but, after admitting the amount of the third part owner's share to be in his hands, refused to pay it to him without the consent of the other two; an action having been brought by the third part owner for the share:—Held, that he was not entitled to recover. Halsall v. Griffith, 2 C. & M. 679; 4 Tyr. 487; 3 L. J., Ex. 191.

A. and B. being in partnership and joint owners of a ship, A. requested C. and D. to accept two bills amounting together to 2,600*l.* on the security of the ship, which they agreed to do, and A. accordingly executed a bill of sale to them, and the ship was registered in their names, A. agreeing that they might sell the ship, and indemnify themselves out of the proceeds, if he neglected to provide for the bills when due. A. became bankrupt, and the bills were paid by C. and D., who thereupon assumed the ownership of the ship:—Held, that the ship, being the partnership property of A. and B., and registered in the name of the partnership firm, was within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 55, s. 32, and that A. had therefore a right to deal with her as with any other partnership property, and consequently could sell or mortgage her without a power of attorney from his partner B. Howden, Ex parte, 2 Mont. D. & D. 574; 11 L. J., Bk. 19.

A mandamus to the officers of customs to register a ship transferred by the survivor of two part owners, merchants, was refused on the ground that the executors of the deceased part owner ought to have joined in the transfer. Rex v. Liverpool (Collector of Customs), 2 M. & S. 223.

c. Attorney.

Ordinarily a power of attorney authorising the sale of a vessel is revoked by the death of the owner. Watson v. King, 1 Stark. 121; 4 Camp. 272; 16 R. R. 790.

But a power of attorney to execute the indorsement of sale upon the register of a ship when she returns home is not revoked by the bankruptcy of the party giving the power. Dixon v. Ewart, Buck, 94; 3 Mer. 327.

A power of attorney to sell a ship may be substantially revoked by parol, and the attorney selling thereafter is guilty of a breach of trust. The Margaret Mitchell, Swabey, 382; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1193.

If the grantee of a power of attorney to sell a ship sells fraudulently, or so as to commit a breach of trust, the fraud of the attorney vitiates the title of the purchaser, if the fraud was known to him, or could have been known by reasonable inquiry. Ib.

d. Guardian of Infant.

The guardian of an infant shipowner has no power under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 99, to mortgage or sell a ship of which such infant is the owner. Michael v. Fripp, 38 L. J., Ch. 29; L. R. 7 Eq. 95; 19 L. T. 257; 17 W. R. 23.

e. Sheriff.

An execution debtor, being a registered proprietor of shares in a ship, a fi. fa. was delivered to the sheriff; and the solicitor for the creditor, by the direction of the sheriff, procured the certificate of registry from the ship, and delivered it to the sheriff, who retained it. The sheriff was registered at the custom house, under the Merchant Shipping Act, as the owner of the shares, which were afterwards sold by him and transferred to a purchaser by a bill of sale, which was also registered:—Held, that the seizure was effectual, although the sheriff did not go on board the ship, and that the property in the shares was regularly transferred by the bill of sale. Harley v. Harley, 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 451.

f. Master.

Authority and Necessity.]—The master of a vessel has no power to sell her so as to affect the insurers, except under circumstances of stringent necessity; such circumstances as, after sufficient examination of her condition, after every exertion in his power, within the means at his disposal, to extricate her from peril or to raise funds for the repair, leave him no alternative but to sell her as she is. Cobequid Marine Insurance Co. v. Barteaux, L. R. 6 P. C. 319; 32 L. T. 510; 23 W. R. 892; 2 Asp. M. C. 536.

By the law of England, and the general maritime law, the master has no power to sell either cargo or ship, except in cases of absolute and utter necessity. Cammell v. Sewell, 5 H. & N. 728; 29 L. J., Ex. 350; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 918; 2 L. T. 799; 8 W. R. 639—Ex. Ch.

A ship reached Savannah in March, 1855, laded a cargo of timber, and in April, before she cleared the mouth of the river, drove ashore in a hurricane; she was got off, discharged her cargo, and was surveyed; extensive repairs were found necessary; neither the owner, who lived at Gloucester, in England, nor the master had any credit, the ship was uninsured, and money could not be raised on bottomry; under these circumstances the master sold her without any express authority from the owner; she was repaired by the purchasers, sailed to Liverpool, and was arrested there at the suit of the former owner:—Held, that the sale was valid, and the ship was decreed to be restored with costs and demurrage; but in such cases the burden of proof lies upon the purchaser, unless the sale took place under the decree of a competent court. The Glasgow, Swabey, 145; 12 Moore, P. C. 355, n.; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1147; 5 W. R. 10. S. P., The Victor, 13 L. T. 21.

If a ship, being in a foreign port, cannot be sent upon her voyage without repairs, and the repairs cannot be done except at so great and so certain a loss that no prudent man would venture to encounter it, this constitutes a case of necessity, justifying a sale of the ship by the master. The Australia, Lapraik v. Burrows, infra, col. 164.

The sale of a ship abroad, by the master, without the consent of the owner, can only be justified by proof of urgent necessity. The Margaret Mitchell, Swabey, 382; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1193.

Where, in consequence of damage to a ship during the voyage, it becomes impossible to prosecute the adventure, the master has authority to sell her for the benefit of all parties interested, and a person employed by him to superintend the sale may lawfully pay over the proceeds to him or to his order. Ireland v. Thomson, 4 C. B. 149; 17 L. J., C. P. 241.

To constitute a valid sale at a port of distress, there must be the consent of the master (except under most peculiar circumstances), and impossibility of repairs except at a ruinous cost, or an equally ruinous delay and an inexpediency arising from imminent risk of awaiting communication with the owners. The Uniao Vencedora, otherwise The Gipsy, 33 L. J., Adm. 195; 11 L. T. 351.

Duty of Master.]—A master, before selling the ship, is bound, if practicable, to communicate with his owner. The Bomba and The Charlotte, infra.

It is the duty of the master of a British ship, before selling her in a foreign port, to consult the British consular officer there resident, the opinion of the consul being much considered by the court in determining the validity of the sale. Ib.

After Collision.]—Where an English-owned vessel came into collision in a foreign port, within telegraphic communication of England, at which port a British consul and agent of Lloyd's resided, and the master, believing the vessel would not again be fit for sea, sold her against the advice of the agent of Lloyd's and without first fully communicating with the owner and waiting for his reply, and it subsequently turned out that the vessel was but slightly injured, and was at a small expense fitted for sea, the court set aside the sale. The Bonita, 30 L. J., Adm. 145; 5 L. T. 141; Lush, 252.

Onus of Proof.]—The master of a British ship, except under urgent necessity, is not entitled to sell without the authority of the owner; and the proof of such necessity lies upon the purchaser. The Bomba and The Charlotte, Lush. 252; 30 L. J., Adm. 155, n.

The first purchaser of the master is bound to prove such necessity; but whether such onus probandi attaches to a second purchaser depends on all the circumstances of the case. The Australia, Swabey, 480; 13 Moore, P. C. 132; 7 W. R. 718, supra.

By Fraud and Forgery.]—A sole owner and at first master, after some intermediate appointments, made his son master, who, in Australia, without authority, sold the vessel, asserting himself to be the sole owner and master, the certificate of registry and indorsement bearing out, on the face of it, such assertion. The son received the purchase-money, but never transmitted it to the father:—Held, that the sale was effected by the fraud and forgery of the son; that the misleading description of him on the certificate of registry, which enabled him to practise such deceit, was not proved to arise from any culpable neglect in the instructions given by the father to the custom-house, and that the sale was null and void. The Empress, Swabey, 160; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 119; 5 W. R. 165.

According to Law of Foreign Country.]—The validity of the sale of a British ship in a foreign port is determined by the law usually enforced in the court of admiralty, unless the foreign law is specially pleaded. The Bomba and The Charlotte, Lush. 252; 30 L. J., Adm. 155, n.

A British ship was sent home under the command of a master in the navy, who was placed in charge by the naval officer commanding on the station. On her voyage she met with bad weather and put into a port at Fayal, where she was, after survey, sold at public auction to a Portuguese merchant by the master:—Held, that no necessity being shewn, and the proof of the validity of the sale by the law of the country not being made out, the sale was invalid by the general maritime law, and by the law of England. The Eliza Cornish, otherwise The Segreda, 1 Spinks, 36; 17 Jur. 738.

C., a British subject, owner of a ship, transferred her whilst on her voyage, by bill of sale, to H. The master had meanwhile drawn up a bill for necessaries at Melbourne, on C. in England, which C. refused to accept, and the bill was dishonoured. The ship having touched at Havre, the holder of the dishonoured bill indorsed it to T. & Co., French subjects residing at Havre, who thereupon commenced proceedings in the court of the civil tribunal there, against the master and against the ship. The master allowed judgment to go against him by consent, and was condemned to pay the amount of the bill, with interest, and the vessel was sold, H.'s claim as holder of the bill of sale of the ship being negatived:—Held, that the proceedings in the French court were proceedings in rem; and, consequently, the sale under its decree passed the property in the ship, and that H. was not entitled to recover. Castrique v. Imrie, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 405; 30 L. J., C. P. 177; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1076; 4 L. T. 143; 9 W. R. 455 — Ex. Ch. Affirmed, 39 L. J., C. P. 350; L. R. 4 H. L. 414; 23 L. T. 48; 19 W. R. 1—H. L. (E.)

Master cannot Sell without Owner's consent.]—The master cannot sell the ship without the owner's consent even in case of wreck or imminent risk of loss. Tremenhere v. Tresilian, 3 Keb. 91; Anon., Siderf. part. 1, 453.

Ship sold by master without consent of owners; possession decreed to former owners in default of appearance of purchasers. The Lagan, otherwise Mimax, 3 Hag. Adm. 418.

Fraudulent Sale by Master.]—The master fraudulently sold the plaintiff's ship to the East India Company, having no authority to sell her.

The plaintiff brought his bill in chancery against the company for an account and recovered the value of the ship and interest thereon. Ekins v. East India Co., 2 Bro. P. C. 382; affirming 1 P. Wms. 395; 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 722.

Improper Sale by Master.]—A ship belonging to the defendants registered in the port of London, sustained serious damage on her voyage to New Zealand, and on her arrival there was surveyed and pronounced not seaworthy. The master was unable, either by loan or bottomry, to raise money for her repair, and he at length sold the ship to the plaintiffs, and on receiving payment of the purchase-money by a bill of exchange in London, executed to them a bill of sale of the ship. The plaintiffs repaired the ship, and sent her to England with a cargo. The defendants refused to ratify the sale or consent to the registry of the ship in the plaintiffs' names, and on the arrival of the ship in the port of London the defendants put several men on board to take possession of the ship and cargo for them. The plaintiffs thereupon applied for an injunction to restrain the defendants from interfering with the ship, or removing her out of the jurisdiction, and for a manager and receiver of the ship and cargo:—Held, that the plaintiffs had no equitable, as distinct from a legal, title to the ship, and inasmuch as their title (if they had acquired any) was a purely legal one, and the case of interference, if wrongful, was therefore a mere trespass the court could not interfere in favour of the plaintiffs by injunction. That the plaintiffs, according to the case made on the motion, if they failed at the hearing to establish their right to the ship, would be entitled to equitable relief in respect of the bill of exchange given for the purchase-money, and that they were entitled to have the trial of the legal right put in a course for determination, and to have the property protected in the meantime. Semble, in such case, independently of the relief in respect of the bill of exchange, if engagements had been contracted of which the conduct of the defendants would prevent the fulfilment, and if there could be no adequate compensation to the plaintiffs in damages, or if the defendants were about to carry away or destroy the property, the court might interfere by injunction. Ridgway v. Roberts, 4 Hare, 106.

See further as to sale by master, Cases sub tit. B. MARINE INSURANCE, infra.

g. Ratification by Owner.

What is.]—Semble, that the master has authority, when, in consequence of injury to the ship during the voyage, there is no prospect of bringing her to the termination of the voyage, to sell her for the benefit of all parties interested. At all events, where the proceeds of such sale have been received by the owner, that is a sufficient ratification by him of the act of the master in selling her, so as to prevent him from afterwards recovering back the ship from the purchaser or one claiming under him. Hunter v. Parker, 7 M. & W. 322; 10 L. J., Ex. 281.

So, it is equally a ratification of a sale by an auctioneer acting under a parol authority for the master. Ib.

If there has been acquiescence by the owner, however unauthorised the sale may have been at the commencement, it amounts to a ratification by the owner. The Australia, Lapraik v. Burrows, 13 Moore, P. C. 132; Swabey, 480; 7 W. R. 718.

Confirmation of a sale by an owner will not be inferred from vague expressions of approval, if the owner at the time was not aware of the true state of the facts relating to the sale. The Bomba and The Charlotte, Lush. 252; 30 L. J., Adm. 141.

Acceptance of purchase-money generally operates as a ratification of the sale; but not so if the money was received without the intention of appropriating it; or if received in ignorance of the facts relating to the sale. Ib.

Receipt of the purchase-money by a vendor and absent principal, acts only as a ratification of a sale when received by him with an intention to appropriate it to his own use, and with full knowledge of the facts of the case. The Bonita, 30 L. J., Adm. 145; 5 L. T. 141. See also Keay v. Fenwick, ante, col. 159.

4. SALE BY ADMIRALTY COURT.

Sale by Court when Person absolutely Entitled.]—Under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, ss. 62—64, the court will order a particular sale to be carried out, instead of making an order for sale generally, if that course is shewn to be preferable. Santon, In re, 26 W. R. 810.

Where a petitioner under those sections claims as sole executor and general legatee of the registered owner, and makes the application within a year, though more than four weeks after the occurrence of the event on which the transmission took place, it is not necessary to serve the crown or any other person. Ib.

Where jurisdiction was given in respect of a particular kind of proceeding, by an act passed before the passing of the judicature acts, to the court of chancery alone, but, by a later act, still before the passing of the judicature acts, the jurisdiction was extended to the court of admiralty, the chancery division now has jurisdiction under the judicature acts. Ib.

In Co-ownership Action.] — The admiralty division of the high court of justice has power, under the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, s. 8, in a co-ownership action, to order the sale of a ship on the application of a minority of owners, but such power will always be exercised with great caution. The Nelly Schneider, 3 P. D. 152; 39 L. T. 360; 27 W. R. 308; 4 Asp. M. C. 54.

Part owners of a vessel, in a suit for sale brought against them by their co-owners, set up in their answer a claim for damages alleged to have been occasioned by the negligence or other wrongful act of such co-owners. The plaintiffs in their reply denied the jurisdiction of the court:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to entertain such a claim. The Ceylon, 18 L. T. 417.

Sale by Court—Good against the World.]—A sale by order of the admiralty court in a salvage suit is good against a claim of the crown under a prior forfeiture for breach of revenue laws. Att.-Gen. v. Norstedt, 3 Price, 97; 17 R. R. 554.

The title conferred by the court under a sale of a ship by its order is good against the world; and in the case of a foreign ship without transfer of the ship's register. The Tremont, 1 W. Rob. 163.

Sentence of Foreign Court—Prize.]—The sentence of a French court of admiralty condemning a ship for prize is binding in the courts of this country. Hughs v. Cornelius, Sir T. Raym. 473.

Sale under sentence of a foreign admiralty court not to be called in question. The Martin of Norfolk, 4 C. Rob. 293.

Foreign Judgment in rem.]—A ship was, whilst in a port of an English colony, repaired and furnished with necessaries for the voyage. The captain drew on his owner for the amount due. The bill was never accepted. The ship sailed on its prescribed voyage, and before reaching England entered a French port. The bill was indorsed to a French subject, who sued the captain on it, and obtained in the tribunal de commerce a judgment against him, but the judgment freed him from personal arrest, and declared the debt "privileged on the ship" (having priority over others). The ship was taken possession of by the French authorities under this judgment. While the ship was on its voyage, and before its arrival in the French port, the owner had executed a mortgage of the ship to a creditor. Neither the original owner nor the mortgagee was in any way personally cited in the action. The ship could not be actually sold till the civil tribunal of the district had confirmed the original judgment. It was confirmed, after the original owner and his assignee (for he had in the meantime become bankrupt) had been cited before the civil tribunal, and that court disregarded the opinion of an English lawyer as to what would be the relative rights of the holder of a bill of exchange and the holder of a bill of sale of the ship. The assignee of the mortgage afterwards instituted before the civil tribunal a process in the nature of a replevy of the ship, but failed in the process, and the ship was sold:—Held, that there had been a judgment in rem in the French court, and that the title of the vendee of the ship (an Englishman) could not afterwards be disturbed in this country. Castrique v. Imrie, 39 L. J., C. P. 350; L. R. 4 H. L. 414; 23 L. T. 48; 19 W. R. 1—H. L. (E.)

See also infra, XXVI. Admiralty Law and Practice, 18. Co-ownership.

5. Liabilities of Purchaser.

Goods supplied.]—The ship having been sold, but the transfer not having been registered, the vendor held not liable for goods supplied to the ship on the master's order. Young v. Brander, 8 East, 10. Cf. McIver v. Humble, 16 East, 169.

The entry in the custom-house books of the transfer of a vessel to a person named, without proof of authority to make the entry from the person named, is no evidence in an action for the price of goods supplied to the ship. Fraser v. Hopkins, 2 Taunt. 5.

Bottomry—Salvage—Wages.]—The purchaser of a ship takes her with the liabilities attached by law—seamen's wages, bottomry bond, demand for salvage; and his remedy must be against the vendor. The Nymph, Swabey, 86; The Catherine formerly The Croxdale, 15 Jur. 231.

A shipowner assigned fifteen-sixteenths of a ship to his creditor, in trust to sell and retain his debts, and afterwards became bankrupt. The ship was afterwards sold:—Held, that the creditor must bear his proportion of the seamen's wages and other expenses on account of the ship. Douglas v. Russell, 4 Sim. 533.

Where a ship was transferred while at sea to a vendee resident in the port in which she was registered, and money was paid by the vendee's agents under the sentence of a foreign court for salvage and wages of the captain and crew, provisions, and sundry ship disbursements:—Held, that the salvage and mariners' wages were a lien on the ship, but not the sums paid for the captain's wages, nor the disbursements. Richardson v. Campbell, 5 B. & Ald. 203, n.

Ship's Expenses.]—The lien on a ship for necessaries supplied continues, notwithstanding the sale of the ship, if there have been no laches in enforcing the lien. The West Friesland, Swabey, 454; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 658. Cf. Douglas v. Russell, supra.

Where A., who had contracted to buy a share of a ship in July (but did not execute a bill of sale till the September), by a memorandum of agreement dated September 30th, transferred his share with all his liabilities as owner to B., and afterwards sued B. for expenses incurred by himself with respect of the ship, after the contract for the purchase of the ship in July, but before the execution of the bill of sale in September:—Held, that, as the memorandum shewed nothing to make B. liable for expenses not incurred by the owner, the action therefore would not lie. Chapman v. Callis, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 769; 30 L. J., C. P. 241; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 995; 3 L. T. 890; 9 W. R. 375.

Repairs.]—B., managing owner of a ship, ordered necessary repairs. R. was at that time a registered part owner, but, before the order was given, had entered into a contract, to which B. was privy, for the sale of her share, and had received a bill of exchange in payment, though the contract was not completed until after the repairs had been made. R. never interfered in the concerns of the ship. The bill for repairs sent in was headed, "the captain and owners of the ship 'F.'":—Held, that R. was not liable for the repairs. Curling v. Robertson, 8 Scott (N.R.) 12; 7 Man. & G. 336; 13 L. J., C. P. 137.

Although legal ownership is primâ facie evidence of liability, yet it may be rebutted by proof of the beneficial interest having been parted with, and of the legal owners having ceased to interfere with the management of the vessel; and the true question for the jury in cases of this description is, "on whose credit the repairs were done." Jennings v. Griffiths, R. & M. 42; 27 R. R. 730.

Repairs before Registration.]—The sole registered owner of a ship gave orders for materials to be furnished and work to be done for the repairs of it; but before all the articles were delivered on board, he conveyed the vessel, with all its furniture, to another, by a bill of sale, which was duly registered:—Held, that the vendee was not liable for any of the goods furnished before the legal title was conveyed to him, and registered in the manner prescribed by the registry acts, whatever equitable agreement might have existed before between him and the vendor, for the conveyance of the whole or a share of the ship, which was unknown to the tradesmen; nor was the vendee even liable for any of the goods delivered on board after the sale to him, by virtue of the previous orders of the vendor, to whom the credit was personally given; but the vendee was held liable for articles which were ordered by the captain for the use of the vessel after the legal title was transferred to him. Trewhella v. Rowe, 11 East, 435.

Sale—Preliminary Charter.]—A., being sole owner of a vessel, contracted to sell one-half share in her to M. and T., and agreed with them that they should have exclusive direction, management, and control of the vessel, to be dealt with and managed by them as managing owners and ship's husbands as they might think best, without let or hindrance from A. There was at the end of the contract a clause that M. and T. were to pay A. 900*l*. as a charter for his half share of the vessel for the first six months from the date of the vessel being ready to receive her cargo. During those six months repairs became necessary to the vessel, and were ordered to be done by T.:—Held, that A. was liable as part owner to pay for such repairs. Preston v. Tamplin, 2 H. & N. 684; 27 L. J., Ex. 192; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1247; 6 W. R. 82—Ex. Ch.

Sale by Auction—Agreement to pay Liens—Trover.]—The purchaser of a ship at an auction after the sale agreed to pay the purchase-money to the auctioneer who was to distribute it amongst creditors of the vendors who had a lien on the ship. He subsequently paid the purchase-money to the vendor, and the shipwright in whose yard the vessel lay refused to let her leave the yard:—Held, that the purchaser, who had obtained a bill of sale of the ship, could not maintain trover. Norris v. Williams, 1 Car. &. M. 842; 2 L. J., Ex. 527.

Purchaser's Liability for Repairs and Supplies before Sale.]—The purchaser of shares in a ship fully provisioned and fitted for sea is not liable for repairs executed before the sale or for provisions supplied for the voyage; though if freight is earned the cost of provisions is a proper deduction from gross freight. Carswell v. Finlay, 14 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 903.

Damage to Ship before Purchase—Right of Purchaser to Sue.]—Symington v. Campbell, XX. COLLISION, 4. Persons entitled to recover.

6. COMMISSION.

Sale of Ship—Principal and Agent—Profit made by Agent.]—The plaintiff in 1868 consigned a ship to G. & Co., in China, for sale, fixing a minimum price, and requiring cash payment. G. & Co. employed the defendant in Japan to sell the ship, with the same instructions. This was done with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff. The defendant having vainly attempted to sell the ship on the terms mentioned, took her himself at 90,000 dollars, and about the same time resold her to a Japanese prince for 160,000 dollars, payable as to 75,000 dollars in cash, and the rest on credit. The plaintiff was not informed that the defendant had purchased the vessel himself or that he had resold it till June, 1869, after the transaction was completed. The defendant paid 90,000 dollars to G. & Co., who remitted it to the plaintiff, and eventually obtained the whole purchase-money of 160,000 dollars. In 1873 the plaintiff filed a bill in chancery to compel the defendant to account for the profit made by him in the resale of the ship:—Held, that the defendant was liable to account to the plaintiff for the profit made by him, the relationship of principal and agent existing between the parties. De Bussche v. Alt, 47 L. J., Ch. 381; 8 Ch. D. 286; 38 L. T. 370; 3 Asp. M. C. 384—C. A.

A. told W. that if he were the means of introducing a purchaser of A.'s ship, he should have a commission. W. had an offer through B., A. agreed that if the ship were sold W. and B. should share the commission. The offer fell through, also a second offer from C. to B. After some time C. wrote to A., introducing another person, who eventually bought the ship. The jury found that W. was authorised to find a purchaser, and that the purchaser was found through B.:—Held, that C., as agent of the purchaser, having acted on information received from B., W. was entitled to his commission. Wilkinson v. Alston, 48 L. J., Q. B. 733; 41 L. T. 394; 44 J. P. 35; 4 Asp. M. C. 191—C. A. And see XXV. SHIPBROKERS AND AGENTS.

Commission on Building Ship.]—Shipbuilders agreed with a shipbroker to build a ship for 56,000*l*., the builders to take half the shares in the ship. The builders agreed in a separate letter to pay the broker 1½ per cent. commission on the contract price; the usual commission on sale was 2½ per cent. The shares were taken up, and the price collected by the broker, and paid to the builders. The broker superintended the building. The commission was paid to the broker, and vouchers were sent to the owner's accountant shewing the payment. Four of the owners who had bought their shares from the owners, sued the broker for their shares of the commission:—Held, that they could not recover it. Neilsen v. Skinner, 17 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1243.

Introduction of Purchaser.]—Purchaser introduced by broker, but sale not thereby effected: no commission. Wills v. Burrell, 21 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 623.

1. LEGAL.

Effect of Registration—Bankruptcy.]—On the 10th of June, 1830, R. mortgaged, by bill of sale to W. & Co., the ships "Lady East," "Pyramus," and "Sprightly," then being at sea. The bill of sale contained an assignment of the freight and policies. On the 12th of June the bill of sale was entered in the book of registry. On the 18th of October the "Sprightly" returned to port, and sailed again on the 16th November. On the 7th January, 1831, R. mortgaged the same ships, freights and policies to the petitioners by bill of sale, containing a recital of and subject to the first mortgage; on the 11th May, 1831, the second bill of sale was entered in the book of registry; on the 14th June R. became bankrupt; on the same day the "Pyramus" arrived from sea; and on the 15th of July the "Lady East" arrived from sea; on the 21st June both mortgages were indorsed on the certificate of the "Pyramus"; and on the 16th of July both mortgages were indorsed on the certificate of the "Lady East." The "Pyramus" was lost at sea:—Held, that the second mortgage was valid as to the interest in the ships, freights, and policies. Jones, Ex parte, Richardson, In re, 2 C. & J. 513; 2 Tyr. 671; 1 L. J., Ex. 218.

—— Priorities.]—A. mortgaged a ship for 1,200*l.* to B., who transferred the mortgage to C. A. afterwards executed a second mortgage for 400*l.* B. afterwards paid off C., and C. signed a statutory receipt, instead of a retransfer. This receipt was produced to the registrar, who made an entry in the register-book, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 68, to the effect that the mortgage had been discharged. C. afterwards executed a deed purporting to be a retransfer of the 1,200*l.* mortgage to B., which was registered, and at the same time a note was made by the registrar against the entry of the receipt, stating that the receipt was signed in error, and the mortgage was afterwards again transferred to C., to secure a balance on account current, and this deed remained in C.'s hands, after satisfaction of all that was due on the account. B. then took a fresh mortgage from A. for 2,500*l.*, which included the 1,200*l.* and 400*l.*, and had since been transferred to the plaintiff. After the new mortgage, B. agreed with C. that the mortgage for 1,200*l.* should be a security for advances on a current account. The transfer of the mortgage to the plaintiff was not registered until after this agreement. Upon a question of priority between C. and the plaintiff:—Held, that the receipt with the entry on the register operated as a discharge of the first mortgage, and the same could not afterwards be revived by the note made by the registrar. Bell v. Blyth, 38 L. J., Ch. 178; L. R. 4 Ch. 136; 19 L. T. 662; 17 W. R. 194.

Indorsement on Register — Postponement of Power of Sale.]—A claimant, upon an interpleader in a county court as to his title to a ship seized in execution upon a judgment against the registered owner, proved a previous mortgage of the ship to him by such owner for a loan, with a proviso in the mortgage postponing until a date subsequent to the seizure of the ship the power of sale vested in the mortgagee by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 71, and that such mortgage was recorded in the register-book of the port of the ship's registration in the form prescribed by s. 66, but there was no indorsement on the certificate of registry, according to 4 Geo. 4, c. 41, ss. 35, 43, and 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 55, ss. 34, 42:—Held, that the mortgage was not invalid, either as a fraud against creditors, or as not being according to 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, on the ground of the postponement of the power of sale. Dickinson v. Kitchen, 8 El. & Bl. 789.

Held, also, that, even if the registration of the mortgage was imperfect, by reason of the want of the indorsement on the certificate, yet a judgment given by the county court upon the interpleader summons against the claimant in favour of the execution creditor was erroneous; for the claimant became and was the owner of the ship, by reason of the mortgage, and such common-law incident to a mortgage is not abrogated by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 70, which was intended to protect a mortgagee, taking possession of a mortgaged ship in order to make it available as a security, from liabilities that might otherwise attach upon him as owner of a ship in possession. Ib.

Where Fraudulent Concealment.]—The legal title of a mortgagee of a ship who, for the purpose of facilitating a sale by the mortgagor, conceals his mortgage, cannot prevail in equity against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. Hooper v. Gumm, 36 L. J., Ch. 605; L. R. 2 Ch. 282; 16 L. T. 107; 15 W. R. 464.

Of unfinished Ship.]—A., being owner of a ship which was unfinished, on the 5th of July mortgaged it to B. A., on the 5th of August, registered the ship as owner, pursuant to 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 42. On the following day, B. caused the mortgage to himself to be inserted on the register. A. having become bankrupt:—Held, that A.'s consignees could not maintain trover against B. for the ship. Bell v. Bank of London, 3 H. & N. 730; 28 L. J., Ex. 116.

Erasing Entries of.]—There is no provision in the merchant shipping acts which authorises the registrar to erase entries of mortgages. In case of their having been duly discharged, an entry to that effect may be made under s. 68 of the act of 1854. Chasteauneuf v. Capeyron, 51 L. J., P. C. 37; 7 App. Cas. 127; 46 L. T. 65; 4 Asp. M. C. 489—P. C.

Registration.]—A mortgage (1813) that failed to comply with the Register Act was absolutely void. Wilson v. Heather, 5 Taunt. 695.

See also Campbell v. Thompson, supra, col. 36; Cato v. Irving, Bulteel, Ex parte; Payn v. Smith; Coombes v. Mansfield; Lindsay v. Gibbs, supra, III. REGISTRATION.

Registered first mortgagees of a ship, with power of sale, took from the mortgagor, by an unregistered document, a declaration that the mortgage should be a security, not only for the mortgage debt, but for such sums as might, for the time being, be due from the mortgagor, either alone or with any partner to the mortgagees or their firm, however composed. Subsequently another incumbrancer took a registered mortgage, expressed to be subject to the first mortgage, but not referring to the unregistered charge, of which, however, the last mortgagee did not deny having had notice when he took his security:—Held, that the unregistered document was not merely a further charge but a new security, and that the Shipping Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, s. 34, excluded it from priority over the last mortgage. Parr v. Applebee, 7 De G. M. & G. 585; 24 L. J., Ch. 767; 3 W. R. 645.

—— Bill of Sale, held to be Mortgage.]—Bill of sale of a ship, though absolute in its terms, may, notwithstanding the Ship Registry Act, be in equity held a mortgage, if such appears to have been the real intention of the parties. Langton v. Horton, 5 Beav. 9; 11 L. J., Ch. 233; 6 Jur. 357, 594.

The owner of eight sixty-fourths of a vessel, in consideration of 100*l.*, assigned them by bill of sale; contemporaneously with its execution, a memorandum was indorsed thereon, signed by an agent of the assignee, stipulating that, on the assignor repaying to the assignee the 100*l.* and interest, the bill of sale should be void. Subsequently, the assignee received interest, and gave a receipt for it, as for interest on 100*l.* advanced on security of the bill of sale. The registry at the custom-house was of an absolute sale. The assignee sold the eight sixty-fourths, and the bill of sale to the purchaser was duly executed; but, before its registry, a bill to redeem by the original owner was filed, and the court restrained the registry of the bill of sale, and made a decree for redemption on payment of the 100*l.* and interest, with costs so far as they were increased by the dispute of the plaintiff's right to redemption. Whitfield v. Parfitt, 4 De G. & Sm. 240; 15 Jur. 852.

Registered Mortgagee — Unregistered Prior Purchaser.]—Registered mortgagee preferred to unregistered prior purchaser. The Eastern Belle, 33 L. T. 214; 3 Asp. M. C. 19.

Debenture charging Ships — Notice.] — Section 3 of the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, 1862, did not repeal any part, but only explained the meaning of s. 69 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854. Therefore, though equitable interests in ships are recognised, a legal mortgage of a ship in statutory form and registered has priority over an equitable charge previously given, even where the legal mortgagee takes with notice of the charge. Black v. Williams, 64 L. J., Ch. 137; [1895] 1 Ch. 408; 13 R. 224; 43 W. R. 346; 2 Manson, 86.

Mortgage and Subsequent Sale.]—The owner of eight-sixteenths of a ship mortgaged them and afterwards sold them to another who took possession of them and of the great bill of sale. Held, that the mortgagee was to be preferred to the purchaser. Gillespie v. Coutts, Ambl. 652.

Payment off—Duty of Registrar.] — Upon production of a mortgage with a receipt for the mortgage money indorsed, the registrar's duty is to enter the discharge of the mortgage on the register. Holderness v. Lamport, 29 Beav. 129; 30 L. J., Ch. 489; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 564; 9 W. R. 327.

Mortgage of Ship at Sea—Bankruptcy—Order and Disposition.]—A transfer of a ship and cargo at sea conveyed by M. and S. as security for money advanced by executing and delivering to S. a bill of sale of the ship, a policy upon ship and cargo, indorsing the bills of lading, was held not to pass the property to S., where S. neglected upon the ship's return and notice thereof to take possession, or to do any act to notify the transfer of the property to him; but that the property passed to the assignees of M., a bankrupt, as being in his order and disposition; also that an agreement that the captain should have a share of the profits or loss on the voyage did not prevent S. from taking possession. Mair v. Glennie, 4 M. & S. 240; 16 R. R. 445.

R. W. and his partner gave a bond to H. for 1,200*l.*, and the same day assigned to H. or order the goods in two ships at sea, also the bills of lading and policies upon the same goods as collateral security; the policies indorsed to H., the bills of lading not:—Held, upon H.'s bankruptcy, that the ships and cargoes were not in his order and disposition. Brown v. Heathcote, 1 Atk. 160.

Mortgage of a ship at sea is good as against creditors in bankruptcy if the mortgagee takes the bill of sale and gets possession promptly; otherwise not. Matthews, Ex parte, 2 Ves. 272. S. P., Thompson v. Smith, 1 Madd. 395.

Mortgage of a ship in the port of Dublin, and delivery of muniments; the mortgagee insured her there, and made a second mortgage; the second mortgagee took possession as soon as he was informed she was in an English port; this is a sufficient possession to take it out of the stat. 21 Jac. 1, c. 19. Batson, Ex parte, 3 Bro. C. C. 362.

A. being indebted to B., assigns a ship to C. as trustee for B. by way of mortgage. The ship is registered de novo in the name of C., and a certificate of registry is put on board; but she is left under the control of A., who becomes bankrupt. Quære if she passes to his assignees under 21 Jac. 1, c. 19. Hay v. Monkhouse, Holt, 603.

Sole owner of a ship secretly mortgages three fourth shares in her as security for a debt, and is allowed by the creditor to retain possession of her until he becomes bankrupt; the requirements of the registry acts having been complied with:—Held, that the vessel passed to the assignees under 21 Jac. 1, c. 19, s. 11. Kirkley v. Hodgson, 2 . & R. 848; 1 B. & C. 588; 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 185.

—— Trover.]—Where a ship was mortgaged at sea with a proviso that the mortgagor should continue in possession till failure of payment of the mortgage money on demand, the grand bill of sale was delivered and the mortgagor became bankrupt before the arrival of the ship, and the mortgagee took possession on her arrival:—Held, that he could maintain trover against the assignees, although he had made no demand on the bankrupt or his assignees. Atkinson v. Maling, 2 Term Rep. 462; 1 R. R. 524.

Bill of Sale left in Mortgagor's Hands—Indorsement of Subsequent Charges.]—Mortgagee of a ship by deed intrusts the mortgagor with the original bill of sale, and the mortgagor indorses thereon subsequent mortgages, or bills of sale, of several parts of the ship, and mortgagee acquiesces; this is evidence of an assent in such mortgagee, and shall therefore postpone him. Mocatta v. Murgatroyd, 1 P. Wms. 394.

Commission on Loan—Agreement to give Legal Mortgage of Ship—First Mortgage.]—Action to recover commission upon a loan obtained by the plaintiff for the defendant upon security of his ship. The defendant agreed to accept the loan and to give a "legal mortgage" of his ship. The lender, upon investigating the borrower's title, found that there was a first mortgage upon the ship, and refused to make the advance:—Held, that the agreement between the plaintiff and defendant was that the defendant should give a first mortgage as security; and that the verdict for the plaintiff for his commission should stand; new trial refused. Thompson v. Clerk, 7 L. T. 269; 11 W. R. 23; S. C., nisi prius, 3 F. & F. 183.

What Gear included—Fishing Boats—Nets.]—In a case where certain fishing boats had been mortgaged by the bankrupts, and the mortgagees laid claim to the nets and the fishing gear which had been used on board the said vessels (but of which no particular nets were appropriated to or specially belonging to any particular vessel) on the ground that such nets and fishing gear came within the word "ship" in s. 72 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and the word "appurtenances" in the form of mortgage of a ship now in use and substituted for Form I. given in the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854:—Held, that in order to make a thing an appurtenance it must be specified; that in the present case there was no evidence to show that any specific nets were appropriated to any particular ship, but that they were used indiscriminately, and that they could not in consequence be considered "appurtenances" within the meaning of the act. Gould, Ex parte, Salmon, In re, 2 Morrell, 137.

—— Articles on Board at or after Mortgage.]—A mortgage of a ship includes everything on board at the date of the mortgage which was necessary for the prosecution of the voyage, or anything which has been brought on board subsequently in substitution for what was there for the same object at the time when the mortgage was entered into. Coltman v. Chamberlain, 59 L. J., Q. B. 563; 25 Q. B. D. 328; 39 W. R. 12.

Mortgage of Whaler and Catch of Oil—Mortgage without Notice of Prior Mortgage—Priorities.]—See Feltham v. Clark, post, XV. CARGO, 15. SALE, ASSIGNMENT AND MORTGAGE.

Trawl Warp—Mortgage of Trawler—Factors Act, 1889.]—See Hull Rope Works Co. v. Adams, infra, col. 188.

By Guardian of Infant.]—The guardian of an infant shipowner has no power under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 99, to mortgage or sell a ship of which such infant is the owner. Michael v. Fripp, 38 L. J., Ch. 29; 19 L. T. 257; 17 W. R. 23.

2. EQUITABLE.

Notice—Effect of.]—A mortgagee of a ship, with notice of a prior unregistered equitable mortgage, registers; the prior equitable mortgagee is postponed to him. Coombes v. Mansfield, 3 Drew. 193; 3 Eq. R. 566; 24 L. J., Ch. 513; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 270; 3 W. R. 345. See also Hooper v. Gumm, supra.

Validity of.]—In August, 1874, a shipbuilder, having overdrawn his account with his bankers, offered to give them a security over a ship which he was then building. This offer was declined in the first instance, with the intimation, however, that circumstances might arise which might render it desirable for the bank to have the security offered, whereupon he promised that whenever he was required to give it he would do so. Two months later, his account being still largely overdrawn, the bankers requested him to give them the promised security. Accordingly he deposited with them the builder's certificate of the ship, which was still unfinished, and the following day they put a man in possession. At the same time he, in consideration of 770*l.* then advanced to him, assigned to the bankers a trade debt of 2,384*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, as a further security for the general balance of his account. Two days afterwards he filed a petition for liquidation:—Held, that the transaction between him and his bankers was neither a fraudulent preference nor an act of bankruptcy. Winter, Ex parte, Softley, In re, 44 L. J., Bk. 107; L. R. 20 Eq. 746; 33 L. T. 62; 24 W. R. 68.

—— By Deposit of Builder's Certificate.]—Held, also, that the deposit of the builder's certificate was a good equitable mortgage of all his property and interest in the ship, and that, although unfinished, it did not require registration under the Bills of Sale Act, 1854. Ib.

—— Of Unfinished Ship—Incapable of Registration.]—Whether a ship not yet finished, and therefore incapable of registration under the merchant shipping acts, is properly called a ship or not, it is a thing capable of assignment by certificate in the usual way. Ib.

Equitable agreement by articles for security upon a share of a ship then building, with a covenant for a future bill of sale, and if the ship should be sold in the interval, for payment out of the purchase-money; postponed to a subsequent bill of sale, with possession taken as far as it could be subject to the builder's possession and lien. Daniel v. Russell, 14 Ves. 393.

—— Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104.]—Although the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, contains no provision negativing the validity of a mortgage made otherwise than according to the terms of the act, the whole scope of the act is to that effect, and an equitable mortgage is invalid. Liverpool Borough Bank v. Turner, 2 De G. F. & J. 502; 30 L. J., Ch. 379; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 150; 3 L. T. 494; 9 W. R. 292. But see 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 3.

—— In Bankruptcy.]—A registered mortgagee of a ship having deposited with a creditor the instrument of mortgage thereof, and subsequently become bankrupt:—Held, that such deposit took the ship out of the order and disposition of the bankrupt, and constituted the creditor equitable mortgagee of the ship. Lacon v. Liffen, 32 L. J., Ch. 315; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 477; 7 L. T. 774; 11 W. R. 474—L. C.

By Parol as a Lien.]—An owner of a ship may verbally authorise a creditor to take possession of it as a lien, and the creditor so taking possession may enforce such lien without any alteration in the registry. Cazenove v. Clayton, 2 M. & Rob. 552. See Parr v. Applebee, ante, col. 170.

Right to Proceeds of Sale of Ship.]—Moneys were advanced by the plaintiffs to M. M., upon the agreement that they should be reimbursed by the proceeds of a ship then being built in New Brunswick, and of her cargo, which were to be consigned by M. M. to the plaintiffs for sale; and a bill of lading of the cargo, and a power of attorney from the registered owner, enabling the plaintiffs to sell the ship, were transmitted by M. M. to the plaintiffs. M. M. afterwards transferred the ship and cargo to C. and G. The ship was thereupon registered in the names of C. and G. who sold the ship and cargo to R. and P., and the ship was then registered in the name of P. A new master was appointed, and a new bill of lading signed, and the ship and cargo were consigned by R. and P. (with a power of attorney from P. to sell the ship) to R. and G., in which firm all the members of the firm of R. and P. were partners, except P. The plaintiffs filed their bill against C. and G.,

R. and P., and R. and G., and the assignees of M. M., to establish a lien on the proceeds of the ship, and on the cargo, under their agreement with M. M. The defendant R., one of the partners in the firms of R. and P. and R. and G., was alone within the jurisdiction and served with the subpœna :—Held, that in the absence of P., who appeared to be the registered owner of the ship, the court could not make any decree establishing the plaintiffs' lien on the proceeds of the sale of the ship ; that, although it appeared that the ship had been sold by R. and G., pending the suit, under the power of attorney from P., and that the proceeds had been accounted for by R. and G. to R. and P., no fraud being proved in the transactions under which those firms had acquired the ship and the proceeds, the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief in respect of the proceeds of the sale in the suit in which R. only appeared ; that the claim of the plaintiffs in equity to the proceeds of the ship would not be assisted by proof of notice by P. of the transactions between the plaintiffs and M. M. M'Calmont v. Rankin, 8 Hare, 1 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 215 ; 14 Jur. 475. S. C., on further consideration, 2 De G. M. & G. 403 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 554.

Judgment Creditor of Equitable Mortgagee.]—A creditor getting judgment against a ship that is subject to an equitable mortgage is entitled to the interest of his debtor in the ship, and no more. De Wolf v. Pitcairn, 17 W. R. 914.

Assignment by Bill of Sale, in Form Absolute, held to be Mortgage.]—See Whitfield v. Parfitt, and cases supra, col. 171.

Agreement to give Mortgage.]—Means a first mortgage. Thompson v. Clark, supra, col. 172.

3. Mortgagor in Possession.

Effect of Charterparty.]—Where a beneficial charterparty has been entered into by a mortgagor in possession of a ship the mortgagee cannot object to the charterparty being carried out simply upon the ground that the effect of carrying out the charterparty will be to remove the ship out of the jurisdiction of the court, and to render it difficult for him to enforce his mortgage security. The Fanchon, 50 L. J., Adm. 4 ; 5 P. D. 173 ; 42 L. T. 483 ; 29 W. R. 339 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 272.

When shares in a ship are mortgaged, possession being retained by the mortgagors, and the managing owner, duly appointed by all the co-owners, including the mortgagors, charters the ship for a foreign voyage, and she loads and is about to proceed on the voyage, the mortgagee, even though he takes possession of his shares before the sailing of the ship but after the making of the charterparty, cannot arrest the ship or demand bail in an action brought by him to compel payment of his mortgage debt, provided the performance of the charterparty is not prejudicial to the security ; and the court will, upon the application of the co-owners, release a ship so arrested, and will condemn the mortgagee arresting in costs. The Maxima, 39 L. T. 112 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 21.

Where a mortgagor of a ship does some act which prejudices or injures the security of the mortgagee, the declaration in 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 70, 71, that the mortgagor is to be deemed the owner, ceases to have any binding effect against the mortgagee, and he may exercise the powers given to him by the mortgage, subject to this qualification—every contract entered into by the mortgagor in possession is a contract which derives validity from the declaration contained in the statute of his continuing to be the owner. Such contract would, however, enure for the benefit of the mortgagee, on his giving notice to the party who is to pay the mortgagor under that contract. Collins v. Lamport, 34 L. J., Ch. 196 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1 ; 11 L. T. 497 ; 13 W. R. 283.

Therefore where, pending a mortgage, the mortgagor had contracted for the sale of the ship, and before the contract was completed the purchaser had entered into a charterparty with the plaintiff, the mortgagees, on the bankruptcy of the mortgagor, were restrained from selling or otherwise dealing with the ship in any manner inconsistent with the terms of the charterparty. Ib.

Where a mortgagee took, with notice of a charterparty entered into by the mortgagor, an interlocutory injunction was granted restraining the mortgagee from exercising his power of sale in such a manner as to interfere with the rights of the charterer. De Mattos v. Gibson, 4 De G. & J. 276 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 165, 498 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 347, 555 ; 7 W. R. 100, 152, 403, 514.

Right to Possession under.]—A., being the owner of a steamship, mortgaged it to B., and subsequently, under circumstances held to shew acquiescence by B., entered into an agreement in contemplation of a partnership with C., by the terms of which C. was to work the ship for A. till further notice, paying all the expenses and receiving all the profits, A. agreeing to indemnify him against loss, if any, upon a periodical statement of accounts. Subsequently to this agreement B. gave notice to C. of the mortgage, and required possession of the ship. The ship was being employed in voyages at a distance from England, between S. and T., and was at that time at S., under engagements which had been entered into by C. with third parties, with respect to its next voyage to T. The ship was given up to B.'s agent at T. at the termination of its next voyage thither. At the time of such delivery C. owed to the crew of the ship a large sum for wages, which entitled them to proceed against the ship in the admiralty court ; and shortly after the delivery of the ship the crew took such proceedings, and the ship was seized by the officers of the court. B., after suffering much delay and loss, paid the wages and obtained possession of the ship. In an action of trover for the ship, brought by B. against C. :—Held, that C. was entitled to retain possession of the ship till its arrival at T., in order to fulfil the engagements incurred before notice. Johnston v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., 37 L. J., C. P. 33 ; L. R. 3 C. P. 38 ; 17 L. T. 445.

Held, also, that as there had been a delivery of the ship at T., notwithstanding it was subject to a maritime lien for wages, A. was not entitled to recover on a count for trover. Ib.

Constructive Possession.]—A mortgagee may recover upon a ship mortgage, though never in possession of the ship, if the mortgagor has given all the possession he can give. Belchier v. Parsons, 1 Kenyon, 38, 48.

Mortgagor of three hoys suffered by mortgagee to remain in possession, and to work them. Upon his bankruptcy the hoys were held to pass to his assignees as being in his order and disposition. Stephens v. Sole, 1 Ves. 352. S. C., cited 1 Atk. 157.

Right to Proceeds of Ship Sold in Wages Suit.]—Surplus proceeds of ship sold in wages suit not paid out to mortgagees, who had never been in possession; ordered to remain in the registry. The Portsea, 2 Hag. Adm. 84.

A mortgagee in possession of a ship sold under a decree of the court of admiralty for the payment of seamen's wages, is entitled to the remainder of the proceeds after payment of seamen's wages and costs. The Neptune, Hodges v. Sims, 3 Knapp, 94.

Right to Charter Mortgaged Ship.]—R., owner of a ship, having mortgaged it to the defendants, contracted with L. for the sale of the ship to him, and before R. became finally bound by the contract L. entered into a charterparty with the plaintiffs. Before the vessel started on her voyage R. stopped payment, whereupon the mortgagees took steps towards selling the ship. It appearing that the terms of the charterparty would not damage the security, an injunction to restrain any dealings with the ship inconsistent with the terms of the charterparty was granted at the suit of the plaintiffs. Collins v. Lamport, 34 L. J., Ch. 196; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1; 11 L. T. 497; 13 W. R. 283.

Mortgagor no Claim for Use of Ship.]—A mortgagee out of possession of a whaler is not entitled as against the mortgagor or his assignee of the cargo to an allowance for the use of the ship. Langton v. Horton, 5 Beav. 9; 11 L. J., Ch. 233; 6 Jur. 357; 594.

Order and Disposition.]—See cases supra, cols. 151, 158.

Mortgagees Prejudiced.]—A mortgagor may not so deal with his ship as to materially prejudice his mortgagees' security. Laming & Co. v. Seater, 16 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 828.

Arrest of Ship—Freight.]—First mortgagees to whom the ship's freight had been assigned after notice of a second mortgage, although they arrested the ship, did not take possession of her before the freight was paid:—Held, that they were not liable to account for the freight as mortgagees in possession. Having received it as assignees of freight they were entitled to it as against the second mortgagees, although the assignment was made after notice of the second mortgage. The Benwell Tower, 72 L. T. 664; 8 Asp. M. C. 15.

Liability of Mortgagee for Wages and Supplies.]—See Baker v. Buckle, and cases, cols. 191, seq.

Mortgagor taking to Sea Mortgagees' Man in Possession.]—See The Fairport, supra, col. 94.

4. Rights of Mortgagee.

To Sell and Use.]—Where a ship has been mortgaged for a debt, a creditor who has got judgment against a registered owner of the ship cannot take and sell the ship in execution, for to do so would be to defeat the rights of the mortgagee to make the ship available as a security for his debt, given him by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 70. Kitchen v. Irvine, 8 El. & Bl. 789; 28 L. J., Q. B. 46; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 118.

Semble, that a mortgagee of a ship has power, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 70, to use as well as to sell the ship. European and Australian Royal Mail Co. v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., 4 Kay & J. 676; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 310.

—— Under what Conditions.]—Where a mortgagee of a steamship took possession of her, and used her for the purposes of a speculation which resulted in a loss, and subsequently sold her disadvantageously:—Held, that he must himself bear such loss, and be charged with the value of the vessel at the time he took possession of her. Marriott v. Anchor Reversionary Co., 3 De G. F. & J. 177; 30 L. J., Ch. 571; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 713; 4 L. T. 590; 9 W. R. 726.

A vessel was mortgaged for a nominal sum, to secure an unascertained balance due to the mortgagee, with power to sell by public auction, and, in case a vessel could not be sold, the mortgagee was to hold, enjoy and possess the free use, control and possession thereof as sole owner, until the full amount of his claims should be satisfied. Default was made in payment of the sum named before the real balance was ascertained, and pending an investigation thereof before arbitrators, the mortgagee caused the vessel to be sold by private contract:—Held, that such sale was wrongful, and not warranted by the conditions of the mortgage. Brouard v. Dumaresque, 3 Moore, P. C. 457.

Right to Arrest—Restraint Action.] — A mortgagee cannot arrest a ship for the purpose of getting security for her safe return. The Highlander, 2 W. Rob. 109.

As to Sale of Vessel at the Suit of a Mortgagee of Part.]—See The Fairlie, post, col. 194.

To defend Actions against Ship.]—The mortgagee may come in and defend his interest in the ship sued, but can only rely on defences open to the owner of the ship. The Chieftain, Br. & Lush. 104; 32 L. J., Adm. 106; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 388; 8 L. T. 120; 11 W. R. 537.

To receive Freight—Extent of Right.]—A mortgagee of a ship does not, ordinarily speaking, obtain, by the mortgage alone, a transfer, by way of contract or assignment, of the right to freight; the mortgagor remains the dominus of the ship, with regard to everything relating to its employment, or nonemployment, or to any rate of freight to be earned by its employment, until the mortgagee takes possession. The mortgagee on taking possession becomes the owner, and it is by virtue of that ownership, and not by virtue of any antecedent contract or right, that he is entitled to receive the freight, which, by contract or otherwise, is lawfully payable. Keith v. Burrows, 46 L. J., C. P. 801; 2 App. Cas. 636; 37 L. T. 291; 25 W. R. 831; 3 Asp. M. C. 481—H. L. (E.)

M. mortgaged his ship, then in California, to K. & Co., but the mortgage was not registered. A cargo was afterwards put on board in California on account of the ship, and bills of lading were drawn for a nominal freight of 1*s.* per ton. Before the ship arrived in England, B. & Co., without notice of the mortgage, advanced money to M. on the security of the cargo, and then sold the cargo to J. by a contract containing the following clause: "As cargo is coming on ship's account, freight is to be computed at 55*s.* per ton, and invoice to be rendered accordingly." M. paid for the cargo and received the bills of lading, and handed them to B. & Co., with an assignment indorsed of his interest in "the within freight" expressed to be "at the rate of 55*s.* per ton, and not the nominal amount of 1*s.* per ton." K. & Co. registered their mortgage, and on the arrival of the ship took possession, and claimed freight at the rate of 55*s.* per ton: —Held, that the sum of 55*s.* per ton was not really freight, but was part of the price of the cargo kept back till the arrival of the ship, and that the mortgagees were not entitled to more than 1*s.* per ton, the freight specified in the bills of lading. Ib.

The first registered mortgagee of a ship, by taking possession of her before the freight is completely earned, obtains a legal right to receive the freight, and to retain thereout not only what is due on his first mortgage, but also the amount of any subsequent charge which he may have acquired on the freight, in priority to every equitable charge of which he had no notice; and it makes no difference that a subsequent incumbrancer was the first to give notice to the charterers of his charge on the freight. Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Wilson, 41 L. J., Ch. 798; L. R. 7 Ch. 507; 26 L. T. 717; 20 W. R. 665.

The mortgage of a ship carries with it a right to receive the freight earned by the ship; and although the mortgagee cannot recover back from the mortgagor freight which he has allowed the mortgagor to receive, yet he may at any time intercept the freight by giving notice to the mortgagor, consignee, or charterer that he intends to exercise his right of property, and to require the freight to be paid to him. Wilson v. Wilson, 41 L. J., Ch. 423; L. R. 14 Eq. 32; 26 L. T. 346; 20 W. R. 436.

The owner of a ship assigned the freight not yet earned, and three days afterwards, with the knowledge of the assignee, mortgaged the ship to persons, and the mortgagees registered their mortgage. The assignee neglected to give notice of his claim upon the freight to the mortgagees: —Held, that the assignee was not entitled to set up any right to such freight in opposition to the rights of the mortgagees. Ib.

When an entire ship is in mortgage, in order to defeat the right of the mortgagor to receive the freight, the mortgagee must take possession of her before the completion of her voyage; but where the mortgagor of certain shares is ship's husband, if the mortgagees join with the owners of the other shares in the ship in the appointment of a new ship's husband before the completion of the voyage, the mortgagor loses all right as ship's husband to receive the freight. Beynon v. Godden, 48 L. J., Ex. 80; 3 Ex. D. 263; 39 L. T. 82; 26 W. R. 672—C. A.

In August, 1876, R. was mortgagor of certain shares in a vessel, and also was acting as ship's husband, and the defendant was charterer of the vessel for the voyage upon which she was then employed. R. obtained from the plaintiff a loan of 200*l.*, and by a letter dated the 30th of August requested the defendant to pay to the plaintiff the freight due on the charter. On the 20th of September the mortgagees of R.'s shares and the owners of the other shares appointed E. ship's husband in place of R. Upon the 11th of October the vessel completed her voyage, and upon the 14th began to discharge her cargo; upon the 16th the defendant sent to the plaintiff a cheque for 200*l.*, which he afterwards dishonoured, E. having claimed the amount of the freight:—Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain an action to recover the amount of the cheque. Ib.

A mortgagee may entitle himself to freight by taking possession of the ship. Gibson v. Ingo, 6 Hare, 112.

First mortgagees to whom the ship's freight had been assigned after notice of a second mortgage, although they arrested the ship, did not take possession of her before the freight was paid:—Held, that they were not liable to account for the freight as mortgagees in possession. Having received it as assignees of freight, they were entitled to it as against the second mortgagees, although the assignment was made after notice of the second mortgage. The Benwell Tower, 72 L. T. 644; 8 Asp. M. C. 15.

Before the mortgagee obtained possession of the ship, the charterers and consignees of cargo sold to the shipowner part of the cargo by way of discharge of the freight:—Held, that the mortgagee was not entitled to the freight. Belfast Harbour Commissioners v. Lawther, 17 Ir., Ch. R. 54.

A., a shipowner, mortgaged a ship, then on her road home, to B., and afterwards gave a written authority to C., to whom he was indebted, to receive the ship's freight. A., becoming bankrupt, his assignees, under an order in bankruptcy, sold the equity of redemption in the ship, and, after deducting the amount due to them, paid the balance into court under the Trustee Relief Act:—Held, that C.'s claim for freight could not be sustained, no notice of the assignment by A. having been given to the charterers or their agents. Pride of Wales and Annie Lisle (Owners of), In re, 15 L. T. 606; 15 W. R. 381.

Held, also, that it was not necessary that the mortgagors should admit the accuracy of the mortgagee's account, in order to entitle them to payment of the fund in court. Ib.

The plaintiff, a shipowner, in July sold the ship to D., of the firm of D. Y. & Co., and received in payment of the price the draft of D. Y. & Co. on B. at twelve months. In September the ship sailed from London to San Francisco, and thence on a seeking voyage home. In June following the captain sent out by D. chartered her to load flour for Sydney. Some days before the bill of exchange became due, D. Y. & Co. requested the plaintiff to renew it, which he agreed to do upon having the ship transferred to him as security. The ship was accordingly transferred to him by an assignment in form absolute. In October the captain, who had no knowledge of the assignment, received 1,000*l.* on account of freight, and remitted it to D. Y. & Co. In November D. Y. & Co. became bankrupt:—Held, that the court could treat the assignment according to its real nature as a mortgage; and that the mortgagee, not having taken possession, was not entitled to the freight. Gardner v. Cazenove, 1 H. & N. 423; 26 L. J., Ex. 17; 5 W. R. 195.

Under an assignment of a ship, and her present and future cargo, freight and earnings, by the owner, for securing to the assignees all moneys which they had advanced, or might become liable to pay on account of the vessel and her cargo, which they had furnished the means of purchasing:—Held, the assignees, who were also the ship's agents, were entitled to retain a bill which was given for the purchase of part of the homeward cargo, and was remitted, but not indorsed, to them by the owner, notwithstanding he denied that it was remitted in payment, and stated that they had not paid; and, contrary to an express understanding, had left him personally liable to some of the debts incurred in fitting out the vessel; and an injunction which had been obtained by the assignees, restraining an action of trover for the bill, was continued until the hearing. Curtis v. Auber, 1 Jac. & Walk. 526.

A part owner of a ship, whose share was subject to a mortgage, agreed with the other part owner (whose share was not subject to any mortgage), but without the concurrence of the mortgagee, to purchase guano on the joint account of the two part owners, and bring it in the ship to England. On the completion of the voyage, and when the cargo was about to be discharged, the mortgagee took possession:—Held, that he had no claim against the owner of the mortgaged share for freight, and could, at the utmost, only claim to adopt the mortgagor's contract, and stood in his place as to the profits of the adventure after deducting all expenses. Alexander v. Simms, 5 De G. M. & G. 57; 2 Eq. Rep. 861; 23 L. J., Ch. 721; 2 W. R. 329.

By the mortgage of a ship, under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, the legal right to the freight is transferred. Dobbyn v. Comerford, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 327.

In October, 1883, W. mortgaged to the plaintiff certain shares in a ship. Subsequently W., who was captain and ship's husband of the ship, incurred liabilities to the defendants for goods supplied to and disbursements made for the ship. In March, 1886, the ship was chartered for a voyage from Montreal to Liverpool, the freight being payable one-third at Quebec, and two-thirds on right delivery of the cargo in Liverpool. Immediately upon arrival of the ship in Liverpool the plaintiffs took possession, and gave notice to the owners of the cargo to pay the freight to them. The defendants afterwards obtained judgment against W., and obtained garnishee orders upon the receivers of the cargo, attaching the freight due from them:—Held, that the defendants had no right to the freight as against the plaintiffs. Japp v. Campbell, 57 L. J., Q. B. 79.

A vessel was chartered to proceed to A., there take in a cargo to be shipped by the charterers, and return direct to London. After the ship's arrival in the port of London, and whilst the cargo was in course of delivery, a mortgagee, under an ordinary statutory mortgage made prior to the date of the charterparty, took possession:—Held, that he thereby acquired a right to the freight in priority to an assignee of the freight by a deed executed subsequently to the charterparty, notice of which had been given to the charterers. Brown v. Tanner, 37 L. J., Ch. 923; L. R. 3 Ch. 597; 18 L. T. 624; 16 W. R. 882.

Registered assignee of freight preferred to unregistered transferee of part of ship. Lindsay v. Gibbs, supra, col. 29.

Charge by Managing Owner—Appointment of Receiver of Freight—Rights of Co-owners.]—In an action in personam by a plaintiff claiming to be equitable mortgagee of the foreign ship "F." and her freight, to secure a liability incurred by him in accepting bills of exchange which had been drawn by the managing owner, it appeared that the alleged mortgage was given to the plaintiff by the managing owner; that the plaintiff, when he accepted the bills, thought the managing owner was sole owner, and that it was subsequently sworn on affidavit that the managing owner was only a part owner, but it did not appear whether the amount of the bills was in fact expended on the purposes of the ship. The "F." was in an English port under charter to carry cargo to a foreign port, when, on application by the plaintiff, an order was made appointing a receiver, and authorising him to proceed with the ship to the foreign port, and there receive the ship and all the freight due upon the voyage. The defendants appealed:—Held, that, even assuming the managing owner to be only a part owner, yet that, as it did not appear that the amount of the bills was not expended solely for the purposes of the ship, the court had authority to appoint a receiver to receive the whole of the freight, and that, in the circumstances, it was expedient that the order should stand. Burn v. Herlofson, or The Faust, 56 L. T. 722; 6 Asp. M. C. 126—C. A.

Mortgagee intervening in Bottomry Suit to get Freight brought in.]—See The Percy, infra, col. 218.

Freight in hands of Foreigner Abroad—Service of Notice of Writ.]—The first mortgagee of a ship, with power to collect the freight, brought an action against the second mortgagee (whose mortgage contained an assignment of the freight) and others, claiming an account and payment out of the freight of the amount he had paid for wages of the crew, and the wages and disbursements of the master. The freight was in the hands of R. & Co., foreigners, resident abroad, to whom it had been paid as agents of the second mortgagee, and who claimed to retain it in satisfaction of a debt due to them from their principal. The plaintiff sought to make R. & Co. defendants to the action:—Held, that Ord. XI. r. 1, did not apply, and leave to serve notice of the writ out of the jurisdiction refused. McStephens v. Carnegie, 49 L. J., Ch. 397; 42 L. T. 309; 4 Asp. M. C. 215—C. A.

Mortgage without Notice of prior Agreement for use of Ship—Sale by Mortgagee—Right of Purchaser to Certificate of Registry.] — The owner of a ship entered into a contract with a company that the ship should sail as one of the company's line. He subsequently mortgaged her without notice of the contract, and the mortgagee, after the death of the owner, and while the contract was in force, sold the ship, the purchaser having notice of the contract:—Held, that such contract was not binding upon the purchaser, and that in any case he, being the duly registered owner, was entitled to have the certificate of registry of the ship delivered up to him by the company in whose possession it was. The Celtic King, 63 L. J., Adm. 37; [1894] P. 175; 6 R. 754; 70 L. T. 562; 7 Asp. M. C. 440.

Co-ownership Action—Mortgagee intervening—Release of Ship.]—When a part owner of a ship institutes a suit against the ship, claiming as against his co-owner an account and a sale of the ship, a registered mortgagee, holding a mortgage which would not be satisfied by a sale of the ship, is entitled, on intervening in the suit, to a release of the ship, and to his costs from the time of his claiming the release. The Eastern Belle, 33 L. T. 214; 3 Asp. M. C. 19.

Ship's Expenses after taking Possession.]—Mortgagees in possession of a ship held not entitled to prove against the bankrupt mortgagor's estate for the ship's expenses after they had taken possession. Howden, Ex parte, Litherland, In re, 2 Mont. D. & D. 574; 11 L. J., Bk. 19.

Mortgagee not bound to Charter—Equitable Rights in Ship.]—A mortgagee of a ship has a power of sale by his security. The ship arrived at Glasgow, and the mortgagee advertised her for sale by public roup in Scotland. An interdict of the Scotch court was obtained to suspend the sale. In the meantime, the parties claiming other interest in the ship, proposed to the mortgagee to enter into a charterparty for a voyage of the ship, pending the disputes which had arisen. The mortgagee refused to enter into such charterparty. The ship afterwards arrived at Liverpool:—Held, that the mortgagee had a clear right to refuse, as being a speculation which could not be imposed upon him. Samuel v. Jones, 7 L. T. 760.

Held, also, that the interdict having thrown a cloud upon the mortgagee's title, he was entitled to a decree for a sale, and an account as against all parties claiming an interest in the ship. Ib.

By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 3, the court has jurisdiction over all equitable rights and claims of owners and mortgagees of ships. Ib.

Arrest before Mortgage Debt due—Release of Ship.]—Where the registered mortgagees of a ship instituted an action in rem as mortgagees for possession, and the ship was arrested therein before the mortgage money became due, and without any default on the part of the mortgagor, the court, being of opinion upon the facts that the ship was not being dealt with so as to impair the mortgagee's security, ordered her release. The Blanche, 58 L. T. 592; 6 Asp. M. C. 272.

Arrest of Ship for Disbursements—Payment by Mortgagees—Liability of Owners to repay.]—The plaintiffs were the registered mortgagees of forty-eight sixty-fourth shares in a ship, the defendants being the owners of the residue of such shares. The captain, having incurred a debt for necessary disbursements made by him, instituted proceedings in rem against the ship and arrested her in the admiralty division. The plaintiffs, in order to obtain the release and get possession of the ship, paid the captain's claim, together with the costs of the proceedings:—Held, that as the plaintiffs were compelled under pressure of law to pay the sum in question in order to release the ship from arrest and get possession of her, there was an implied promise on the part of the defendants to repay them that sum, inasmuch as the mortgagor and the defendants (the co-owners) were liable to the captain for the disbursements made by him. The Orchis, 59 L. J., Adm. 31; 15 P. D. 38; 62 L. T. 407; 38 W. L. 472; 6 Asp. M. C. 501—C. A.

Fraudulent Preference.]—The court will, under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 65, restrain a mortgagee of a ship from dealing with the ship in such a manner as would enable him to obtain the benefit of a fraudulent preference, and will exercise such power of restraint for a definite period, without requiring the applicant to file a bill. The Regatta, 6 N. R. 248.

Mortgagee preferred to Material Men.]—A British colonial vessel was mortgaged by her owners. The mortgage was duly registered under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854. In February, 1868, whilst lying in the port of London, the material men, on the order of the master, did work and furnished supplies to the ship necessary to put her in a seaworthy condition. In July, 1868, the mortgagee executed an instrument transferring the mortgage to B. This transfer was without any valuable consideration, and was not registered, being made to enable him to take charge of the ship for the mortgagee. In the same month B. took possession of the ship. The material men having instituted a suit against the ship to recover the amount due to them for the work and supplies, B. intervened. At the time of the institution of the suit, the ship was under the arrest of the court, at the instance of two of her crew who had instituted a cause of wages; the owners of the ship were domiciled in Nova Scotia. The ship having been sold, the proceeds were found insufficient to satisfy the claim of the material men and the mortgage debt:—Held, that the assignee of the mortgagee was entitled to have his mortgage debt satisfied before the material men were paid the amount of their claim. Johnson v. Black, The Two Ellens, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 398; 41 L. J., Adm. 33; L. R. 4 P. C. 161; 26 L. T. 1; 20 W. R. 592; 1 Asp. M. C. 208—P. C.

Mortgagee postponed to Maritime Liens.]—A mortgagee of a ship and freight is subject to bottomry, salvage, or wages liens accruing after the date of his mortgage. The Dowthorpe, 2 W. Rob. 73.

Masters' lien for Wages—Sale of Ship by Master subsequent to Mortgage by him.]—Where the captain of a ship mortgaged her whilst on her voyage, and the ship, having become unseaworthy by stress of weather, was sold, and a bill for the proceeds drawn upon the purchaser, and indorsed to the defendant, the captain; the court, being satisfied that the bill represented the ship, granted an injunction against the defendant, who was threatening to put in force the bill to satisfy his claim of lien. Lister v. Payn, 11 Sim. 348.

Rights of Creditor of Mortgagor as against Mortgagee.]—There is nothing in 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, enabling a creditor of the mortgagor to seize and sell a mortgaged ship, and the exercise of such a right by him is inconsistent with the right of the mortgagee, even though the mortgagee has agreed on his mortgage not to exercise his statutory power of sale until a date subsequent to a seizure by an execution creditor of the mortgagor. Dickinson v. Kitchen, 8 El. & Bl. 789.

Bond by Mortgagee not in Possession to prevent Sale of Ship by Foreign Court—Chancery Jurisdiction.]—The owner of a British ship, having mortgaged it in England, employed a Liverpool firm to consign it to their agents at New Orleans. As the New Orleans firm happened to be creditors of the owner, the Liverpool firm, in consideration of their having the consignment, instructed their agents not to proceed against the ship at New Orleans, but to remit the proceeds to the mortgagees. Afterwards, the Liverpool firm getting into difficulties, some of the mortgagees insisted on the consignments being changed, and the Liverpool firm withdrew their instructions. When the ship arrived, the New Orleans firm brought actions in their courts against the owner; and, as the courts of Louisiana do not recognise the rights of mortgagees without possession, writs of attachment were obtained, under which the ship was seized. The mortgagees then, to prevent the ship being sold, gave to the New Orleans firm bonds for the amounts to be recovered in the actions, upon which the ship was released. The mortgagees filed a bill to restrain the holders of the bonds from suing on them, and to have the bonds delivered up:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to stay proceedings on the bonds; first, because the court would not have restrained execution of the attachment at New Orleans, as it could not have placed all the creditors, foreign and domestic, on an equal footing; secondly, because if it could have done so, the mortgagees should have sought to restrain the attachment, and not have placed themselves in a worse position by giving the bonds; and, thirdly, because if the prayer was granted, the courts of New Orleans would never in future release an English ship on the bond of a mortgagee. Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Hunter, 37 L. J., Ch. 386; L. R. 3 Ch. 479; 18 L. T. 749; 16 W. R. 1090.

Mortgagee bidding at Sale.]—Mortgagee of a ship allowed to bid for her at a sale by the court. The Wilsons, 1 W. Rob. 172.

Improper Sale by Mortgagee.]—A ship was mortgaged to secure an unascertained balance due to the mortgagee, with power to sell by auction; and in case the ship could not be sold, to hold and enjoy the ship as owner until the debt should be satisfied. Before the sum due was ascertained by arbitrators the mortgagee sold by private contract:—Held, that such sale was wrongful, and that the mortgagee was liable for the value of the ship after deducting the amount of his mortgage debt. Brouard v. Dumaresque, 3 Moore, P. C. 457.

Mortgagee selling after tender of Sum due on the Mortgage.]—A mortgagee who sells the ship when the amount due on the mortgage has been tendered to him, is liable to pay the mortgagor the value of the ship beyond that sum. M'Larty v. Middleton, 9 W. R. 861; on app. 4 L. T. 852; 10 W. R. 219 (L.JJ. differing).

Sale by First Mortgagee with Assent of Second Mortgagee—Surplus Proceeds.]—A., the first mortgagee of a ship, with the sanction and authority of B., second mortgagee, sold her and received the proceeds, which exceeded the amount due to him:—Held, that A. was accountable to B. in the character of trustee for the surplus. Tanner v. Heard, 23 Beav. 555; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 427; 5 W. R. 420.

Surplus Proceeds.]—Right of mortgagors to have payment out of court without admitting accuracy of account. See The Pride of Wales, The Annie Lisle (Owners), In re, supra, col. 180.

Sale—"Just Allowances."]—A ship was mortgaged to the defendant to secure a sum exceeding 1,400*l.*; the mortgage was duly registered, and the defendant took possession of the ship and advertised her for sale. Before the sale the plaintiff, who held a mortgage on the ship, made and registered after the date of the registration of the mortgage to the defendant, instituted a suit against the ship to enforce his mortgage, and caused the ship to be arrested. The defendant, to obtain the release of the ship, paid 500*l.* into court in lieu of bail. The ship was sold by the defendant, and the proceeds were insufficient to satisfy the defendant's mortgage. The plaintiff, when the cause was ripe for hearing, abandoned the suit. The court condemned the plaintiff in costs, and ordered him to pay to the defendant interest on the 500*l.* paid into court. The Western Ocean, L. R. 3 A. & E. 38.

The mortgagees of a ship having seized it and advertised it for sale, the mortgagors brought an action against them for redemption, and moved for an injunction to restrain the sale, when, upon the mortgagees undertaking not to proceed with the sale, a decree was taken by consent in the action, directing an account of what was due on the mortgage for "principal and interest," and redemption on payment by the mortgagors of the amount certified:—Held, that the mortgagees were justified in seizing the ship, and that, in taking the account directed, they were entitled to be allowed expenses incurred by them in taking and holding possession of the ship, advertising it for sale and effecting insurances, under the head of "just allowances." Wilkes v. Saunion, 47 L. J., Ch. 150; 7 Ch. D. 188.

Mortgage for Further Advances—Bankruptcy of Mortgagor—Right of Mortgagee.]—Where under a mortgage of a ship to secure further advances, an advance is made on the date of a receiving order against the mortgagor, who is subsequently adjudicated bankrupt in respect of acts of bankruptcy committed prior to the execution of the mortgage, the mortgagee is entitled under s. 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, as against the trustee in bankruptcy to recover such advance, where before the date of the receiving order there was a contract to make further advances, and a promise to make the particular advance. The Thames, 63 L. T. 353; 6 Asp. M. C. 536.

Arrestment of Ship—Recall of Arrestment.]—A mortgagee of a ship petitioned for recall of arrestment of the ship, and, pending an action against the registered owner, the court allowed the vessel to sail, on the petitioner consigning a sum to be subject to the same claims and rights of the mortgagee as the ship was, as against the arresting creditor. Stewart v. Macbeth, 10 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 382.

Improper Mortgage by Executor of Mortgagee—Money borrowed to pay for Repairs—Right of Sub-Mortgagee.]—See Collinson v. Lister, supra, col. 18.

Payment of Wages by—Recovery from Mortgagor's Agent.]—The owner of a vessel mortgaged it and subsequently entered into an agreement in contemplation of a partnership with C., under which the latter was to work the vessel, the owner paying all expenses. The vessel was employed on several voyages and finally given up to the mortgagee. At the time of such delivery C. owed large sums for wages, in respect of which proceedings were taken in the admiralty court by the master and seamen. The vessel was seized, and the mortgagee, after much delay and loss, paid the wages :—Held, that he was entitled to recover such payments from C., as money paid to his use. Johnston v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., 37 L. J., C. P. 33 ; L. R. 3 C. P. 38 ; 17 L. T. 445.

Deduction of Advances by Charterers.]—By the terms of a charterparty it was provided that the charterers should advance necessary funds for the ship's disbursements, not exceeding a specified amount, at the port of lading. Previously to entering into the charterparty the owner had mortgaged the ship and freight. The charterers made advances for the ship's disbursements, considerably in excess of the amount specified in the charterparty. Before the freight became due the mortgagee took possession of the ship, and stopped the cargo for freight :—Held, that the charterers were not entitled to deduct from the amount due for freight the advances made by them in excess of the sum provided by the charterparty. Tanner v. Phillips, 42 L. J., Ch. 125 ; 27 L. T. 480, 717 ; 21 W. R. 68 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 448.

Wages Suit — Mortgagee Intervening.] — Where a mortgagee intervenes in a wages suit the account is taken in the same way as if the owner were present to protect his interest. The Julindur, 1 Spinks, 71.

Mortgagee entitled to Release of Ship on giving Bail in Suit by Master for Wages.]—See The Ringdove, ante, cols. 99, 100.

Master's Wages—Advances—Accounts.]—See The Caledonia, Swabey, 17 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 48 ; 4 W. R. 183 ; supra, col. 93.

Sale by Order of Foreign Court.]—A British ship was attached in Louisiana by creditors of the registered owner, a British subject, for the purpose of making her available for their demands. Proceedings were taken by these creditors, in which certain persons, British subjects, claiming under a bill of sale by way of mortgage, from the owner, duly registered in England, intervened for the purpose of asserting their title and protecting their rights. Their title was wholly disregarded by the court of Louisiana, the law of that state not allowing a mortgage of chattels ; and the ship was sold. The ship arrived at an English port, and the mortgagees filed a bill to establish their charge :—Held, first, that the judgment of the foreign court was not upon a proceeding in rem, but in personam. Simpson v. Fogo, 1 Johns. & H. 18 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 657 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 949 ; 2 L. T. 594 ; 8 W. R. 407.

Held, secondly, that the mortgagees had not originated the proceedings in the foreign court so as to estop themselves from asserting their rights in this country. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the judgment of the foreign court as averred, proceeding, as it did, in total disregard of the lex loci contractûs, was not a decision which the court here would of necessity uphold, or such as from its mere averment would destroy the plain and clear title previously averred in the mortgagees. Ib.

The owners of a British ship mortgaged her in England, and she afterwards was taken by the mortgagors to New Orleans, where she was attached by creditors, who took proceedings in the courts there for the purpose of making her available for their demands. The English mortgagees intervened in these proceedings for the purpose of asserting their rights, but their claim was wholly disregarded, the law of New Orleans not recognising a mortgage of chattels ; and, under an order of the court, the ship was sold to a British subject. The ship having afterwards returned to England with a cargo, the mortgagees filed a bill to enforce their claim :—Held, that the judgment of a foreign court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive inter partes on the merits of the matter in dispute, but may be reviewed by the courts in England, if any error appears on the face of the record. Simpson v. Fogo, 1 Hem. & M. 195 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 249 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 403 ; 8 L. T. 61 ; 11 W. R. 418.

Sale Abroad—Right of Mortgagees.]—Consignees of a ship at New Orleans who had made advances to the shipowner, got her sold under an order of a district court in Louisiana before the expiration of the time which the judge had directed should elapse before sale :—Held, that, as against prior mortgagees, the sale was fraudulent. Bland v. Lynam, 5 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 87.

Hire and Purchase Agreement—Factors Act, 1889—Attaching Goods to Ship—Ship's Gear—Disposition of Goods.]—A hire and purchase agreement, under which the hirer has no power to determine the agreement by returning the goods, is an "agreement to buy" within s. 9 of the Factors Act, 1889. And if the hirer in such case, being the mortgagee of a ship, attaches the goods to the ship in such a way as to make them part of the ship's equipment, then such act, at any rate if followed by the mortgagee taking possession, will constitute a delivery by the hirer under a disposition by the mortgagee within the same section. A. owned a smack which he mortgaged to B. & Co. After the mortgage A. entered into a hire and purchase agreement with C., under which he gave A. possession of a trawl warp for the smack. The agreement, though it contained provisions enabling C. to determine it in certain events, gave A. no power to do so by returning the warp to C. A. attached the warp to the smack. Subsequently B. & Co. took possession of the smack and warp under the mortgage. C. thereupon forcibly retook possession of the warp. B. & Co. sued C. in the county court for trespass :—Held, that the county court was right in holding that the warp had passed to B. & Co. under the Factors Act, 1889, s. 9, and in giving damages. Hull Rope Works Co. v. Adams, 65 L. J., Q. B. 114 ; 73 L. T. 446 ; 44 W. R. 108.

5. Recovery of Money Advanced.

Form of Action—Pleading.]—Where the plaintiff assigned his ship to the defendant as a security for the repayment of money ; but it appeared on the register to be an absolute assignment, and the defendant sold her, and told the plaintiff that he had received the purchase-money, and would account with him for the balance of the proceeds of the sale :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover this balance on the common money counts, the acknowledgment being sufficient to support the action. Prouting v. Hammond, 8 Taunt. 688 ; Gow, 41.

Though a bill of sale for transferring the property in a ship by way of mortgage might be void as such, for want of reciting the certificate of registry therein, as required by 26 Geo. 3, c. 60, s. 17, yet the mortgagor might be sued upon his personal covenant contained in the same instrument for the repayment of the money lent. Kerrison v. Cole, 8 East, 231.

Ship Lost—Money to be paid out of Ship's Earnings.]—T. lent D. 600*l.*, D. assigned one-sixteenth in a ship, and by defeasance it was declared that T. out of the earnings should pay himself 600*l.* and should account to D. for the surplus, but there was no covenant for payment of the money. The ship was lost, and T. brought his bill against D.'s executrix for the debt; she denied assets, præter to satisfy specialty debts. Decreed, she should account for testator's estate, and T. to account for the earnings, and to be allowed for the outfit of the ship though cast away. Tyrrel v. Thomas (Lady), 1 Vin. Abr. 183, pl. 5.

Liability of Mortgagor.]—A ship was mortgaged and taken to sea and captured. There was no covenant for payment of the money:—Held, that the executors of the mortgagor were liable for payment of the mortgage money. Anon., cited in King v. King, 3 P. Wms. 358, 360.

Mortgage of Three-fourths of Ship — Sale ordered.]—Order made for sale of a ship at the instance of a mortgagee of three-fourths of the shares. The Fairlie, 37 L. J., Adm. 66.

Interest.]—The contract of mortgage of a ship provided that interest should be paid half-yearly in advance. The mortgagee sold the ship shortly before a half-yearly day for payment of interest, and received the balance of purchase-money (covering his principal debt) three days after that half-yearly day:—Held, that he was only entitled to interest in respect of the three days for that half-year. Banner v. Berridge, 50 L. J., Ch. 630; 18 Ch. D. 254; 44 L. T. 680; 29 W. R. 844; 4 Asp. M. C. 420.

6. Priorities.

See also supra, cols. 168, seq. 1. Legal Mortgage.

Priority over Material Men.]—Where a mortgagee brings an action to realise his security, and material men with a common-law possessory lien on the ship intervene, and the ship, by order of the court, is sold, and the proceeds are only sufficient to satisfy the claim of the material men, the mortgagee is still entitled to be paid his taxed costs, up to the date of the sale, out of the proceeds of the sale of the ship in priority to the material men. The Sherbro, 52 L. J., Adm. 28; 48 L. T. 767; 5 Asp. M. C. 88.

A British colonial vessel was mortgaged by her owners. The mortgage was duly registered under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854. In February, 1868, whilst lying in the port of London, the material men, on the order of the master, did work and furnished supplies to the ship necessary to put her in a seaworthy condition. In July, 1868, the mortgagee executed an instrument transferring the mortgage to B. This transfer was without any valuable consideration, and was not registered, being made to enable him to take charge of the ship for the mortgagee. In the same month B. took possession of the ship. The material men having instituted a suit against the ship to recover the amount due to them for the work and supplies, B. intervened. At the time of the institution of the suit the ship was under the arrest of the court, at the instance of two of her crew who had instituted a cause of wages; the owners of the ship were domiciled in Nova Scotia. The ship having been sold, the proceeds were found insufficient to satisfy the claim of the material men and the mortgage debt:—Held, that the assignee of the mortgagee was entitled to have his mortgage debt satisfied before the material men were paid the amount of their claim. The Two Ellens, Johnson v. Black, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 398; 41 L. J., Adm. 33; L. R. 4 P. C. 161; 26 L. T. 1; 20 W. R. 592; 1 Asp. M. C. 208—P. C.

Necessaries were supplied in an English port to a ship belonging to a colonial port. The ship was under mortgage; the mortgagee had taken possession. No owner or part owner being domiciled in England or Wales, a suit in rem against the ship was instituted in the admiralty court by the person who had supplied the necessaries. The mortgagee intervened to defend, claiming priority:—Held, that the mortgagee had priority, the claimant for necessaries having no maritime lien, and no equity to precede the mortgagee. Ib.

In November, 1861, A. supplied necessaries to a British ship. On the 12th of December, 1861, B. became a registered mortgagee of the ship, and A. subsequently instituted a cause of necessaries against the ship:—Held, that the mortgage of B. had priority over the claim for necessaries. The Pacific, B. & Lush. 243; 33 L. J., Adm. 120; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1110; 10 L. T. 541.

A. was quarter owner of a ship; B. was owner of three-fourths. B. mortgaged his share. The mortgagee did not take possession, and the ship was by arrangement between A. and B. left under the control of A. A. ordered repairs to the vessel, which was afterwards sold by order of the court of admiralty:—Held, that in the distribution of the proceeds of the sale the mortgagee of the three-fourths was entitled to his proportion of the proceeds, without contributing towards the payment of the material men. The Harriet, 18 L. T. 804.

Liability of Master.]—In his accounts against the mortgagee the master is entitled to security for the amount for which he is personally liable in respect of necessaries. The Limerick, 1 P. D. 292; 34 L. T. 708; 3 Asp. M. C. 206—C. A.

Mortgagee Postponed to Maritime Liens.]—An assignee of ship or freight as security for a debt takes subject to subsequently accruing liens, such as for bottomry, salvage, or wages. The Dowthorpe, 2 W. Rob. 365.

—— Postponed to Bottomry.]—See The Royal Arch, and Case, post, col. 218.

Foreign Judgment against Ship in rem — Effect of.]—Declaration that the captain of a British ship, whilst on a voyage, drew a bill of exchange upon the then owners for the necessary disbursements of the ship, and the bill was dishonoured at maturity; that the plaintiff had meanwhile become mortgagee of the ship; that by the French law the bonâ fide holder of such a bill, if a French subject, can attach and sell the ship in proceedings in rem in the French courts; that the defendants, being British subjects and holders of the bill, after it was dishonoured conspired with T., a French subject, that they should indorse the bill to him without value, and that he should take proceedings against the ship in the French courts, falsely representing that he was a bonâ fide holder for value; that this was done and the ship sold by order of a French court, whereby the plaintiff was deprived of his rights as mortgagee:—Held, that the declaration was bad, as no action could be maintained whilst the foreign judgment was unreversed. Castrique v. Behrens, 30 L. J., Q. B. 163; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1028; 4 L. T. 52.

Hypothecation of Freight — Priority — Debenture Holders.]—The directors of a shipping company held to have power under the articles of the company, as against debenture holders, to charge the freight of two ships in order to raise money to carry on the business of the company. The debenture holders having brought actions to enforce their securities, and the company having gone into liquidation:—Held, that the charge upon the freight was to be preferred to the debenture holders' securities. Ward v. Royal Exchange Shipping Co., 58 L. T. 174; 6 Asp. M. C. 239.

Wages Lien—Priority to Mortgage Debt.]—See The Bangor Castle, supra, col. 120; and see supra, 4. RIGHTS OF MORTGAGEE.

First and Second Mortgagees.]—The general principle that a first mortgagee whose mortgage is taken to cover future advances cannot claim in priority over a second mortgagee the benefit of advances made after he had notice of the second mortgage applies to the registered mortgages of ships notwithstanding s. 69 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854. Where priorities depend, not upon the dates of the instruments, but upon a state of facts wholly independent of the dates of the instruments, that section does not apply. The Benwell Tower, 72 L. T. 664; 8 Asp. M. C. 13.

7. LIABILITY OF MORTGAGEE.

Possession.]—The mere fact of ownership, without a privity of contract, is not sufficient to render an owner liable for goods furnished on the ship's account; nor does it attach any obligation on a mortgagee merely as such, as he derives no profit until the ship comes into his actual possession. Baker v. Buckle, 7 Moore, 349; 24 R. R. 685.

A mere mortgagee of a ship, who does not take possession, is not liable for necessaries supplied for the use of the ship previously to a retransfer. Twentyman v. Hart, 1 Stark. 366.

Where a ship is mortgaged, and the mortgagor continues in possession, the master employed by him cannot maintain an action for wages and disbursements against the mortgagee. Annett v. Carstairs, 3 Camp. 354.

A reply in a cause of necessaries, leaving it doubtful whether the person in possession of the vessel at the time of the supply was the original mortgagee or the transferee of the mortgage, is bad. The Troubadour, L. R. 1 A. & E. 302; 16 L. T. 156.

A mortgagee in possession will not be liable for necessaries supplied, unless the master in ordering them acted as the agent of the mortgagee. Ib.

An allegation that a defendant was in possession of the vessel at the date of the supplies, and personally liable for them, will not be a good reply to an answer of a defendant claiming to be a mortgagee prior to the date of the supply. Ib.

A., the owner of a ship, executed an absolute bill of sale of it to B., and by another deed of the same date assigned other property to B., which deed of assignment (reciting that the bill of sale was for the better securing a sum of money lent by B. to A., and also reciting a bond and warrant of attorney given by A. to B. to secure the same sum) declared that these "several deeds and instruments were made to enable B., by sale of all the things comprised in them, to raise the sum lent without the concurrence of A., at any time before the money should be paid off"; but in the same deed there was a covenant that, upon payment of the money, "B. should reconvey to A., but so as not to prevent B. from selling, &c., at any time before the full payment," &c.:—Held, that under these conveyances B. was not absolute owner of the ship, but only mortgagee; and was not liable for necessaries provided for the ship before he took possession. Jackson v. Vernon, 1 H. Bl. 114.

Mortgagee and Broker.]—If a person, who is mortgagee as well as broker of a ship, gives directions for repairs to be done, the question for the jury will be, in an action by the tradesman against him, whether he gave the directions only in his character of broker, or as a person having an interest in the vessel. Castle v. Duke, 5 Car. & P. 359.

Repairs—Liability for—Lien.]—A mortgagor of a ship, who remains in the ostensible ownership, has an implied authority to confer a right of lien for repairs necessary to keep her seaworthy, notwithstanding s. 70 of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, which enacts that a mortgagee shall not by reason of his mortgage be deemed to be the owner of a ship, or any share therein, nor shall the mortgagor be deemed to have ceased to be owner of such mortgaged ship or share, except in so far as may be necessary for making such ship or share available as a security for the mortgaged debt. Williams v. Allsup, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 417; 30 L. J., C. P. 353; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 57; 4 L. T. 550.

Mortgagees are entitled to payment in priority to material men who at the time of supplying the materials were not in such actual possession of the ship as to give them a possessory lien over her. The Scio, L. R. 1 A. & E. 353; 16 L. T. 642.

Where a graving flat was attached to a vessel, and chisels and other implements were on board at the time of arrest, the property of the material men:—Held, that these facts were insufficient to prove possession. Ib.

—— Repairs prior to Transfer of Mortgage.]—A mortgagee by transfer is liable for repairs done prior to his transfer. The Skipwith, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 445; 10 L. T. 43.

Mortgagee in Possession—Liability for Goods Supplied.]—Mortgagees in possession are liable for goods supplied in a foreign port on the order of a manager acting under power of attorney, to the same extent as owners are liable, and it is not necessary for the person who supplied them to prove that they were used for the ship. Havilland v. Thompson, 3 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 313.

8. Jurisdiction of Admiralty Court.

Extent of.]—The enabling power conferred upon the court of admiralty by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 3, did not extend to all questions arising out of a deed of mortgage, but was confined to the ship itself being mortgaged. The Fortitude, 2 W. Rob. 217.

Therefore by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 11, the jurisdiction was enlarged to claims in respect of mortgages duly registered, whether the ship or the proceeds thereof were under arrest or not. Ib.

In Action of Restraint.]—Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 66, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 3, the court will look behind the register to the real character of transactions between co-owners, and treat as a mortgage that which is on the face of it an absolute transfer, if it should appear that such was the intention of the parties. The Innisfallen, 35 L. J., Adm. 110; L. R. 1 A. & E. 72; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 653.

Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 70, a mortgagee not in possession of the vessel cannot maintain an action of restraint. Ib.

A vessel having been arrested in a cause of restraint between co-owners, the court, on a motion by the charterer, to whom the vessel had been let for a voyage, ordered her release, it appearing that the alleged co-owner was only a mortgagee. Ib.

To appoint Receiver on Application of Second Mortgagee.]—Although a second mortgagee has no rights as against a prior incumbrancer, yet as against all other persons he has a right to possession of the ship, and the court will, at his instance, appoint a receiver. Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Wilson, 41 L. J., Ch. 798; L. R. 7 Ch. 507; 26 L. T. 717; 20 W. R. 665; 1 Asp. M. C. 323.

To decide Equities.]—Where an action has been brought by the registered transferee of a mortgage, and the ship arrested, the court will, in conformity with 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 3, enforce equities between the owner and the mortgagee; and will, in estimating the right of the mortgagee, consider not only the registered documents, but all the transactions between the parties relative to the mortgaged loan. The Cathcart, L. R. 1 A. & E. 314; 16 L. T. 211.

To Declare Title.]—A British ship was mortgaged by an instrument that was in the form prescribed by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and was duly registered. The mortgagor died intestate, and the mortgagees sold the ship under their power of sale, and executed a bill of sale to the purchaser. By mistake, a receipt for the payment of the mortgage-money was indorsed on the mortgage and signed by the mortgagee, and produced to the registrar of shipping, who recorded the same. Afterwards the bill of sale was produced to the registrar, who refused to register it, upon the ground that the property in the ship had vested in the representatives of the mortgagor. In order to complete the title of the purchaser a suit in rem was instituted on behalf of the mortgagee and purchaser:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to grant a decree declaring that the purchaser was entitled to possession of the ship. The Rose, 42 L. J., Adm. 11; L. R. 4 A. & E. 6; 28 L. T. 291; 21 W. R. 511; 1 Asp. M. C. 567.

To Order Sale.]—Sale of vessel at the suit of a mortgagee of three-fourths of the shares, decreed. The Fairlie, 37 L. J., Adm. 66.

Mortgages of Foreign Vessels—Jurisdiction.]—The arrest necessary to found the jurisdiction of the admiralty division of the high court over claims by mortgagees of foreign ships under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, must be in a cause over which the court has jurisdiction; a mere de facto arrest is not sufficient. The Evangelistria, 46 L. J., Adm. 1; 35 L. T. 410; 25 W. R. 255.

The admiralty division of the high court has jurisdiction, independently of the judicature acts, to and will entertain, on the intervention of the representative of a foreign state, or by the consent of parties, a cause of possession or mortgage of a foreign ship belonging to such state, so far as to ascertain the true position of the claimants and the nature of their title, and will, where it is for the advantage of all parties, order a sale of the ship. Ib.

To restrain Removal of Ship out of Jurisdiction to Enforce Mortgage.]—The defendant, a Spaniard, executed at Santander, in Spain, a mortgage to A. B. of a Spanish vessel, of which he was the master, to secure the repayment by the defendant to A. B., or whoever in future might represent his right, a sum of money and interest; and the mortgage deed contained a proviso that A. B., or whoever might represent him, might exact payment of the loan and interest at any time and in any manner. The plaintiff was the transferee of the mortgage, and the defendant and the vessel being at the port of Q., within the jurisdiction, the plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to enforce the mortgage, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from removing the vessel out of the jurisdiction, and duly served the defendant with a copy of the writ. He now moved for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendant from removing the vessel out of the jurisdiction until the hearing:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to grant such an injunction, and it was granted accordingly. Clavering v. Aguire, 5 L. R., Ir. 97.

No Original Jurisdiction in Admiralty.]—The admiralty court had no inherent jurisdiction in respect of mortgages of a ship. The Portsea, Hag. Adm. 84. The Exmouth, 2 Hag. Adm. 83, n.

See also XXVI. Admiralty Law and Practice.

9. Costs.

Taxation of.]—Mortgagees' costs will be taxed as between party and party, in accordance with the practice of the court of chancery, and not as between solicitors and clients, where a decree has been made by consent that the mortgagees are to receive their "costs, charges and expenses properly incurred." The Kestrel, L. R. 1 A. & E. 78; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 713.

Mortgagees are entitled to charges by their solicitors for attending to take particulars of other suits against the vessel to which they were not parties; to costs of negotiation between rival incumbrancers which led to nothing, and to which the owners were not parties; and costs of conference with counsel at a stage of the suit when it is not usual for a conference to be held. Ib.

Vexatious Arrest—Order to Pay.]—Mortgagee of four sixty-fourth shares of a vessel condemned in the costs, but not damages, occasioned by a wrongful arrest of the vessel. The Egerateia, 38 L. J., Adm. 40; 20 L. T. 965.

Priority over Material-men.]—See The Sherbro, infra.

First and Second Mortgagee.]—A first mortgagee of a ship, with the concurrence of the second mortgagee, sold the ship and received the proceeds. The second mortgagee, being unable to obtain an account, filed a bill for an account, also charging that the defendant was liable for stores which he had improperly allowed the mortgagor to retain. The defendant alleged that the proceeds of the sale were not sufficient to pay off his mortgage. The chief clerk, by his certificate, found in favour of the defendant as to the stores, but that he had received more than was due to him upon his mortgage. A motion by the defendant to vary the certificate was refused. Upon the question of costs:—Held, that the defendant must pay the costs of the motion, but no costs of the suit on either side. Tanner v. Heard, 23 Beav. 555; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 427; 5 W. R. 420.

Ship in Possession of Material-men—Costs of Suit to realise Security.]—A mortgagee brought his action to recover his mortgage debt. The ship was in possession of material-men, and, being sold, produced a sum less than their claim:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to his costs up to the date of the sale in priority to the material-men. The Sherbro, 52 L. J., Adm. 28; 48 L. T. 767; 5 Asp. M. C. 88.

1. Instruments Amounting to.

Maritime Risk essential Ingredient.]—A master, being in want of funds, and without credit, in a foreign port, executed an agreement with certain parties for advances to be made to him. This agreement contained the following conditions: that the master should draw a bill of exchange, to cover such advances, upon the consignees of the ship at the port to which he was proceeding; that within thirty-four days after his arrival at such port he should discharge and pay such bill of exchange, and all interest which might have become due upon it, together with the money paid by way of premium for effecting an insurance of the vessel during the intended voyage, and until the vessel had taken her departure from the port to which she was proceeding, on a further outward voyage, as also interest on all such money as last aforesaid, at the rate of 9*l.* per cent. per annum, from the time of payment up to the time of such repayment; and for securing the repayment of all such sums and interest, the master bound, pledged, mortgaged and hypothecated the ship, with her tackle, apparel and appurtenances:—Held, that such an agreement is not an instrument which can be enforced in the court of admiralty; it is not a bottomry bond, for there is no maritime risk, an ingredient essential to its vitality. The Indomitable, Swabey, 446; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 632; and see Hill v. Snow, infra, col. 206.

Personal Obligation—No Pledge on Cargo.]—In a respondentia bond, the condition, after reciting that the money was lent upon the goods laden and to be laden on board a ship on her voyage out and home, was that if the ship should proceed on her voyage, and return within thirty-six months (the dangers of the sea excepted), and if the borrower within thirty days after her arrival should pay to the lender the sum agreed on, or if in the voyage and within thirty-six months the ship should be lost by fire, enemies or other casualties, the borrower should within six months after such loss pay to the lender a proportionable average on all the goods carried out and acquired during the voyage which should be saved, then the obligation to be void:—Held, that this was no more than a personal obligation from the borrower to the lender, and did not give the latter any specific pledge or lien on the home cargo, or the proceeds thereof. Busk v. Fearon, 4 East, 319; 1 Smith, 103.

Payment not Dependent on Arrival of Ship.]—A vessel having put into a foreign port in a damaged state, the master borrowed money of a merchant there for necessary repairs and disbursements; to secure which he drew bills upon his owner, and also executed an instrument which purported to be an hypothecation of the ship, cargo and freight. By this instrument, the merchant who advanced the money forbore all interest beyond the amount necessary to insure the ship to cover the advances; and the master took upon himself and his owner the risk of the voyage, making the money payable at all events, and subjecting the ship to seizure and sale by virtue of process "out of the high court of admiralty of England, or any court of vice-admiralty possessing jurisdiction at the port at which the vessel might at any time happen to be lying or to be, according to the maritime law and custom of England," in the event of the bills being refused acceptance or dishonoured:—Held, that this not being such an hypothecation as could be enforced in the court of admiralty, the payment of the money borrowed not being made to depend upon the arrival of the vessel, the merchant had no insurable interest in the ship. Stainbank v. Sheppard, 13 C. B. 418; 1 C. L. R. 609; 22 L. J., Ex. 341; 17 Jur. 1032; 1 W. R. 505—Ex. Ch.

Bill of Sale cannot be Construed as Bottomry Bond.]—Where the master, in consequence of damage sustained on the voyage, and the ship becoming unseaworthy, and no advances on loan or bottomry could be obtained to repair her, sold her to the plaintiffs, who repaired and sent her with a cargo to her registered port in England, but the owners refusing to ratify the sale, or consent to the registry of the ship in the plaintiffs' names, put men on board to take possession of her and the cargo:—Held, that the bill of sale of the ship could not be treated as in the nature of a bottomry bond, as it was not intended so to operate. Ridgway v. Roberts, 4 Hare, 106.

Loan for Necessaries—Agreement that Lender may insure at Borrower's Cost.]—A foreign vessel was in an English port, and the owner, being temporarily in England and in want of funds for the purchase of necessaries, made an agreement with the plaintiffs, by which, in consideration of their advancing him by cash or acceptance 600*l.* for necessaries supplied to and for the use of the vessel, he thereby undertook to return them the amount so advanced, with interest and all charges, on the return of the vessel from her voyage. And the plaintiffs were thereby authorised "to cover the amount advanced the owner by insurance on ship, &c., out and home, at owner's cost." In an action in rem for necessaries in respect of the amount so advanced:—Held (Brett, M.R., doubting), that the agreement was not equivalent to a bottomry bond. The Heinrich Bjorn, 54 L. J., Adm. 33; 10 P. D. 44; 52 L. T. 560; 33 W. R. 719; 5 Asp. M. C. 391—C. A. See S. C. in H. L.; 55 L. J., Adm. 80; 11 App. Cas. 270; 55 L. T. 66; 6 Asp. M. C. 1—H. L. (E.)

How Construed.]—Instruments intended to effect bottomry are construed liberally, so as to effect the intention. It is not necessary that sea risk should be expressly mentioned, if it is clear that the lender undertakes it. Simonds v. Hodgson, 3 B. & Ad. 50; 1 L. J., K. B. 51. S. P., The Kennersley Castle, 3 Hag. Adm. 1.

Maritime Interest not Necessary but Material Element.]—Though maritime interest is not a necessary element of bottomry, the rate of interest is material in considering the character of the instrument. The Emancipation, 1 W. Rob. 124.

Master may hypothecate Ship Abroad, but cannot bind Owners Personally.]—The master may hypothecate the ship abroad for necessaries; but he cannot bind the owners so as to make them personally liable in admiralty. Johnson v. Shippin (or Shepwey or Shipway), 1 Salk. 35. S. C., Ld. Raym. 982; 11 Mod. Rep. 79; Holt, 48.

—— Cannot make Owner Liable Personally.]—The master may bottomry the ship, and also make the owner personally liable for the advance. Samson v. Braggington, 1 Ves. Sen. 442; Ibid., Suppl. 87, 202; but see Stainbank v. Sheppard, infra, col. 207; and The Dante, infra, col. 222.

No Maritime Risk no Bottomry.]—Articles appended to a charterparty signed by the master acknowledged the receipt of money on account of freight, for which he had paid insurance, which with other moneys he agreed should be deducted from his freight "on his safe arrival in London"; and in case his freight should not be sufficient to pay the same, "the debit shall be retained as a bottomry bond."—Held, that there being no maritime risk and no proof that the money was for the ship's necessities, the amount could not be paid out of the proceeds of the ship, as upon bottomry. The Grecia, 7 Not. of Cas. 410.

A bottomry bond can only hypothecate something which is in danger of perishing by maritime risk during the time that the bond is running, and therefore cannot validly pledge freight to be earned on a voyage after that maritime risk is ended and the bond is forfeited. The Staffordshire, Smith v. Bank of N. S. Wales, infra, col. 200.

Part not exposed to Maritime Risk.]—A bond, covering in part property not exposed to maritime risk is bad as to that part, but may be valid as to the residue. The Sultan, Swabey, 504; 5 Jur. (N.S) 1069.

Where a part only of goods hypothecated by a respondentia bond reaches its destination, such part is only liable to pay a proportional part of the money secured by the bond, namely, according to the proportion that the value of the goods brought to their destination bears to the total value of the property on which the bond was given. Ib.

Lender on Bottomry has no Property in the Ship.]—The lender on bottomry acquires no property in the vessel; his interest is jus in rem, not jus in re, until so declared by the court—Per Sir William Scott. The Tobago, 5 C. Rob. 218, 222.

Nature of Bottomry Discussed.]—Meretone v. Gibbons, 3 Term Rep. 247.

Action for Money Lent—Bottomry Bond given after Bills.]—Action in assumpsit for money lent; verdict for the plaintiff, though subsequently to bills being given for the debt a bottomry bond was given; new trial refused. Weston v. Foster, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 693; 3 Scott, 155; 5 L. J., C. P. 242.

Foreign Law as to Lien Material.]—The fact that by the law of the country in which the bond is given, there is a lien upon the ship furnishes a presumption in favour of bottomry as against personal credit. The Vibilia, 1 W. Rob. 1.

Admiralty Court—Prohibition refused.]—Money borrowed by one on board ship at sea of another on board the same ship for the necessary use of the ship upon bottomry is payable by the shipowner; and if not paid, the ship is bound. Prohibition refused. Scarreborrow v. Lyrius, and Cases, infra, XXVI. ADMIRALTY LAW AND PRACTICE.

2. VALIDITY.

a. Matters affecting.

Agreement for Purchase of Ship.]—A bottomry bond originally valid is not affected by any agreement by the bondholder for the purchase of the ship. The Heligoland, Swabey, 491; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1180.

Bondholder—Communication of Bond to Mortgagees.]—A bottomry bondholder is under no obligation to communicate the existence of the bond to the mortgagees of the ship, and is not affected by the owner concealing it from the mortgagees. Ib.

—— Laches.]—A mortgagee cannot set up, as a defence to a bond, the laches of the bondholder, unless his position has been thereby prejudiced. Ib.

Executed before Shipment of Cargo.]—A bottomry bond upon ship, freight, and cargo for necessary repairs to the ship, executed after the repairs done and the contract of affreightment, but before actual shipment of the cargo, is invalid as against cargo. The Jonathan Goodhue, Swabey, 355.

Voyage Illegal.]—Transactions between the owner and mortgagee of the vessel which might render the voyage illegal cannot invalidate a bottomry bond given by the master to a bonâ fide lender, who has only to look to the facts, that is, distress, absence of credit, and necessity. The Mary Ann, L. R. 1 A. & E. 13.

Consideration — Pledging Credit.]—A bond may be given, though money has not actually been advanced, to a person who has pledged his own credit for the expenses incurred. The Royal Arch, Swabey, 269; 6 W. R. 191.

Executed after Advance—Lien by Foreign Law.]—In a foreign port, where the law gave a lien for advances made for repairs, the master consigned the ship to a merchant to get the repairs done, without any agreement being made as to bottomry. Shortly before the ship sailed the master gave the merchant, at his request, a bottomry bond:—The bond was held valid. The Laurel, Br. & Lush. 317; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 46; 13 W. R. 352. S. C. on pleading; Br. & Lush. 191; 33 L. J., Adm. 17; 9 L. T. 457.

Advertising for Loan.]—It is proper to advertise before taking up money on bottomry; but the neglect of the master to do so does not affect the validity of the bond. Ib.

Maritime Interest.]—The absence of any provision for maritime interest does not make the bond invalid. Ib.

Given against Owners' Order.]—A bottomry bond given by the master trading abroad against the orders of his owners to the agents of the owners beyond the sum to which his credit was limited by the owners, and without necessity:—Held, invalid. The Reliance, 3 Hag. Adm. 66.

Lender not Bound to see to Expediency of Repairs.]—A foreign lender on bottomry is not bound to see that the repairs for which he lends the money are expedient. The Vibilia, 1 W. Rob. 1.

Agreement that Third Party should Repay the Loan.]—Bottomry bond pronounced for notwithstanding an alleged agreement with the owner that the charterer, a partner of the bondholder, should pay the bond. The Huntcliff, 2 Hag. Adm. 285.

Bills—Collateral Security.]—A ship being mortgaged to G., sailed on a voyage to Melbourne and back. On her arrival at Melbourne she required necessary repair, and the agents having refused to make further advances upon credit, the master entered into a bottomry bond, hypothecating the ship and her freight to Melbourne and back, and drew bills on G. for the amount secured by bottomry. Before the bills arrived in England G. died, and the holders of the bond and bills failing to obtain either acceptance or payment took proceedings on the bond:—Held, that they, having failed in obtaining acceptance or payment of the bills, were entitled to sue upon the bond, but that the bond could not validly hypothecate freight which had not been earned at the time the bond was payable. The Staffordshire, Smith v. Bank of New South Wales, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 443; 41 L. J., Adm. 49; L. R. 4 P. C. 194; 25 L. T. 137; 27 L. T. 46; 20 W. R. 557; 1 Asp. M. C. 365—P. C.

A bottomry bond may be given at the same time with, and as a collateral security for, bills drawn on the owners for money so borrowed. Stainbank v. Sheppard, ante, col. 196.

When a bottomry bond on ship, freight, and cargo has been given by the master of a ship as collateral security for a bill of exchange drawn by him upon the bondholders, on the understanding that if the bill is properly met by funds being placed in the hands of the latter, the bottomry bond will not be enforced, but the master or shipowners, having placed no funds in the bondholders' hands, give notice that they do not intend to meet it, the bond is not invalid as against the cargo, although the bondholders have conditionally accepted the bill, and have neither presented it to the master for payment nor protested it. The Onward, 42 L. J., Adm. 61; L. R. 4 A. & E. 38; 28 L. T. 204; 21 W. R. 601; 1 Asp. M. C. 40.

The lender on bottomry may take bills of exchange as collateral security. The Ariadne, 1 W. Rob. 411.

A bottomry bond is not invalid merely because it is given as security for bills of exchange given at the same time. The Emancipation, 1 W. Rob. 124.

Nothing Due on Bond—Held Invalid.]—On taking the accounts in a bottomry suit it was found that, after reducing the commission charged by the ship's agent, which was excessive, nothing was due upon the bond:—Bond held invalid. The Roderick Dhu, Swabey, 177; 5 W. R. 168.

Demurrage—Compromised Claim.]—A master of a chartered ship having sold a part of the cargo to pay expenses of demurrage, the ship was in course of a subsequent voyage arrested in a foreign port at the suit of the charterer. The charterer's claim was, with the sanction of the court, compromised for a sum of money, and a bond given to the charterer in payment of that sum:—Held, that the bond was invalid. The Ida, 41 L. J., Adm. 85; L. R. 3 A. & E. 542; 27 L. T. 457; 21 W. R. 39.

Freight Earned on Subsequent Voyage—Liability.]—Freight earned on a subsequent voyage held liable to satisfy a bottomry bond given on a previous voyage. The Jacob, 4 C. Rob. 245; commented on, L. R. 4 P. C. 194.

Bond given by a Master for Repairs in time of his Predecessor.]—Bottomry bonds given by successive masters for repairs done by order of their predecessors, who had died, sustained. The Wakefield, cited, 3 Hag. Adm. 8.

Excessive Premium.]—Excessive premium is not a reason for pronouncing the bond invalid.

The Lord Cochrane, 2 W. Rob. 312. S. P., The Laurel, supra, col. 199.

Bond given on Land—Admiralty Jurisdiction.]—Semble, a bottomry bond made on land cannot be sued on in admiralty. Anon., 1 Keb. 520.

Bottomry Abroad—Prohibition to the Admiralty Refused.]—The master bottomried the ship at Rotterdam for repairs. Prohibition to the admiralty in a suit upon the bond refused. Corset v. Huseley, Comb. 135; Holt, 48.

The admiralty has jurisdiction in bottomry whether the bond is given on land or at sea. Meretone v. Gibbons, 3 Term Rep. 267.

And see post, XXVI. ADMIRALTY LAW AND PRACTICE.

Usury—Maritime Risk.]—The usury laws are not infringed where the money lent is at maritime risk. Sharpeley v. Hurle, or Hurrell, cited, 2 Rolle, 48; Cro. Jac. 208.

Bond given by Master held Invalid as against Cargo Owner.]—A bottomry bond in ship, freight and cargo was granted by the master at the port where the owner of the cargo resided. Advertisements for a loan on bottomry were published, and the cargo owner was aware of them and of the distress of the ship, and that the cargo had been unloaded and reloaded, but no application had been made to him for an advance, nor any express notice given of the application for a loan:—Held, that the bond was invalid as against the cargo owner. The Nuova Loanese, 17 Jur. 263.

Bond to Debtor to the Ship.]—A debtor to the ship cannot lend on bottomry. The Hebe, 2 W. Rob. 146; 7 Jur. 564. But see next Case.

The bond is not vitiated by the fact that the lender was indebted to the ship when the advance was made; it is bad pro tanto only. The Hebe, 2 W. Rob. 412.

Bottomry Bond to Ship's Agents—Held Valid.]—A bottomry bond in favour of agents abroad who undertook the superintendence and ordering of repairs, after communicating with the owners of ship and cargo, without intimating that they intended to take bottomry security until just before the ship sails, pronounced against. The Wave, 15 Jur. 518.

A bottomry bond is not invalid merely because the advance secured by the bond is made by agents of the ship, provided that they could not be expected to advance on the personal credit of the owners, and gave the master an opportunity of obtaining an advance on the owners' personal credit elsewhere by refusing such an advance. The Staffordshire, Smith v. Bank of New South Wales, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 443; 41 L. J., Adm. 49; L. R. 4 P. C. 194; 27 L. T. 46; 20 W. R. 557; 1 Asp. M. C. 365—P. C.

Bond given to stranger in foreign port acting as ship's agent, she being in great distress, held valid. The Tartar, 1 Hag. Adm. 1. S. P., The Vibilia, 1 W. Rob. 1.

Bond given abroad, partly for the benefit of the shipowners' agent, who threatened to arrest the ship, intended to cover simple contract debts for goods supplied to the ship on the agent's guarantee, held valid. The Hersey, 3 Hag. Adm. 404.

Objections to bottomry bond, that it was given to the ship's agents, that the money disbursed was to be repaid by bills on the owner, that the repairs to the ship were improvident, and that she ought to have been sold, overruled. The Lord Cochrane, 2 W. Rob. 312.

—— Or Invalid, according to Circumstances.]—A. & Co. agreed to purchase at Akyab cargoes of rice for F. & Co., A. & Co. to be secured by hypothecation of the bills of lading and a fixed freight of 5*s.* per ton. Whilst the ship was loading one of the cargoes, A. & Co. advanced about 540*l.* for ship's disbursements, but upon hearing that F. & Co. had stopped payment, induced the master to execute a bottomry bond both for the advances already made and also for a further sum of small amount:—Held, that the first advances were made partly upon personal security and partly upon the margin of freight, and could not therefore be secured by a subsequent bottomry. The Empire of Peace, 39 L. J., Adm. 12; 21 L. T. 763.

Held, also, that the further advances were too trivial to render the bond valid with respect to them. Ib.

The ship's agent took a bottomry bond, without inquiry as to its necessity or application, for money lent partly to pay for landing charges of a cargo shipped by himself, which had heated. The bond was held invalid. The Royal Stuart, 2 Spinks, 258.

An agent lending on bottomry is bound to see to the application of the money. Ib. And see The Rhoderick Dhu, infra.

Bond given for Master's Private Debt.]—The master cannot hypothecate the ship for a debt of his own. King v. Perry, 3 Salk. 23.

Recapture — Hypothecation by Mate for Salvage.]—In case of capture and recapture, the mate in the absence of the master can hypothecate the ship for payment of salvage. Parmeter v. Todhunter, 1 Camp. 591.

Bottomry by Executor of Deceased Part Owner in Good Credit.]—A bottomry bondholder had advanced money bonâ fide, with knowledge of a previous mortgage of the ship and of all other circumstances. The bond was executed by the executor of the deceased sole owner, who had himself already made the necessary advances for the ship, and who had ample credit, and also by the master, who had been appointed by the executor. The bond, opposed by the mortgagees, was pronounced against. The Dunvegan Castle, 3 Hag. Adm. 331.

Necessity alone justifies Bottomry.]—To authorise a captain to hypothecate a ship or freight for repairs, the necessity for such hypothecation must exist; if, therefore, an agent of the shipowner in a foreign port has sufficient funds in his hands for the repairs, the captain cannot hypothecate. Lyall v. Hicks, 27 Beav. 616.

The consent of a managing part owner to a bottomry bond binds his co-owners, and is strong evidence of the necessity of the bond. The Royal Arch, Swabey, 269; 6 W. R. 191.

And see Cases, col. 207, infra.

—— Where no Personal Credit.]—Bottomry can only be given where money cannot be obtained on personal credit. The Sydney Cove, 2 Dods. 1.

It is the vital principle of bottomry bonds that they shall have been taken where the shipowner is known to have no credit—Per Lord Stowell. The Nelson, 1 Hag. Adm. 169, 175.

Before resorting to bottomry the master must ascertain that the supplies cannot be procured upon the owner's personal credit. The Eliza, Heathorn v. Darling, 1 Moore, P. C. 5.

The only ground upon which the master of a ship is justified in resorting to bottomry bonds, and upon which the court has jurisdiction to enforce such bonds, is the inability of the master to obtain money upon personal credit for refitting the ship, or for payment for the repairs and dispatch of the vessel. On a sale of a bottomry bond by auction at a foreign port at the lowest rate offered, an agent of the charterers and sole owners of the cargo, who was at the same port, expressed his willingness to advance what was necessary upon the personal credit of the owners; though it was not proved that the bondholders had notice of the offer at the time the bond was given, the admiralty court pronounced against the bond, and the sentence was affirmed on appeal. The Prince of Saxe-Coburg, Soares v. Rahn, 3 Moore, P. C. 1.

See also infra, b. AUTHORITY OF MASTER.

Shipowner may Bottomry in Case of Necessity.]—The shipowner may bottomry his ship, if he cannot otherwise obtain money, for the ship's necessities; though the master does not join in the bond. Such a bond will rank before a prior mortgage of the ship. The Duke of Bedford, 2 Hag. Adm. 294.

Lender must ascertain Necessity.] — The lender on bottomry must ascertain that necessity for bottomry exists, and that without the money the ship cannot proceed. Whether he is bound to see to the application of the money advanced, quære. The Orelia, 3 Hag. Adm. 75.

Bond for Repairs before Voyage begun, and given after Voyage ended.]—A bottomry bond may be valid whatever the number of voyages the adventure includes, provided such voyages are intended or consented to by the owners. A bond given in payment of repairs rendered necessary by an accident which occurred before the commencement of a voyage, and dated after the termination of the voyage, held valid. The Mary Anne, 4 Not. of Cas. 376; 10 Jur. 253.

—— Repairs Improvident.]—See The Lord Cochrane, supra, col. 202.

—— For Repairs, given to Consignees of Charterers—Bills of Exchange.]—A bottomry bond given just before the ship sailed, for money due for repairs, to the consignees of the charterers, they having been directed by the charterers to "value upon the owner" for other than trivial expenses, sustained. Bills of exchange given at the same time do not affect the validity of the bond. The St. Catherine, 3 Hag. Adm. 253.

Cargo—Bottomry or Sale for Repairs.]—The whole cargo may be bottomried, or part of it sold, to pay for repairs to the ship, provided the cargo owner is thereby benefited. The Gratitudine, 3 C. Rob. 240, 261.

—— Part of Cargo Saved.]—Bottomry bond on ship, freight and cargo, to be paid twenty-one days after the ship's arrival in London, and not to be payable if the ship and cargo be lost or cast away. The ship was abandoned as a total loss before reaching London; part of the cargo was sold and the proceeds brought to London, and part carried to England in another ship. There was no proof that the ship could not have been repaired. The bond pronounced for. The Elephanta, 15 Jur. 1185.

—— Bottomry of Cargo—When Valid.]—The cargo cannot be bottomried unless where the ship and freight are insufficient. Where the bond was upon ship and cargo only, the freight was applied in discharge of the bond before the cargo was resorted to. The Dowthorpe, 2 W. Rob. 73. And see Cases infra, cols. 209, 210.

By Substituted Master.] — Bond given by substituted master to the merchant who appointed him, held valid. The Rubicon, 3 Hag. Adm. 9.

Abandonment by Shipowner—Bond by Substituted Master.]—The shipowner having abandoned, a substituted master gave a bottomry bond to a holder of a collateral security. Bond sustained. The Kennersley Castle, 3 Hag. Adm. 1.

By Master under Arrest.]—Bond executed by master while under arrrest, held valid. The Heart of Oak, 1 W. Rob. 204.

Excessive Premium—Refusal of Chancery to Assist in Case of.]—A part owner borrowed money from the plaintiff on bottomry, payable on the return of the ship from the voyage, and he was then going in the service of the East India Company. The East India Company broke her up in the Indies, and the owner sued them and recovered damages, but not to the full value of the ship. The bottomry bondholder brought his bill in chancery to have satisfaction out of the money so recovered, but his bill was dismissed; for a court of equity will not assist a bottomry bond which carries an unreasonable interest. Dandy v. Turner, 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 372.

May be Good in Part and Bad in Part.]—A bottomry bond may be good in part and bad in part. The Tartar, 1 Hag. Adm. 1; The Hebe, 2 W. Rob. 412; The Augusta, 1 Dods. 283; The Osmanli, 3 W. Rob. 198; 7 Not. of Cas. 322; The Heart of Oak, 1 W. Rob. 204. And see The Empire of Peace, supra, col. 202.

The court of admiralty has power to reduce the premium on a bottomry bond, if excessive. The Heart of Oak, supra.

Bottomry bond pronounced for under suspicious circumstances; of 1,961*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* claimed upon the reference, 475*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* only allowed; no costs of suit given to either party; cost of the reference given to the shipowners. The Gauntlet, 13 Jur. 413.

A bottomry bond may be good in part, though void for the residue. Where, therefore, a bottomry bond was given by the master at New York, as well for advances to obtain his discharge from arrest, at the instance of the consignees, on account of damage done on the voyage to part of the cargo, as for payment of the port duties and other disbursements necessary to enable the ship to prosecute her voyage, the judicial committee (reversing so much of the decision of the admiralty court as rejected the bond in toto) sustained the bond to the extent of the sums advanced for necessary supplies and payments of the port duties. The Prince George, Smith v. Gould, 4 Moore, P. C. 21.

Bond given in Port of Owner's Country.]—The master may hypothecate ship and cargo though lying in a port of the country in which the owners reside, provided he has no means of communicating with the owners. La Ysabel, 1 Dods. 273.

Bond given before Voyage commences—Quære.]—Whether a bottomry bond given in port prior to the commencement of a voyage is valid. The Jenny, 2 W. Rob. 5.

Bond by Master of British Ship in this Country.]—Botttomry bond granted by the master of a British vessel in a port of this country upheld. The Trident, 1 W. Rob. 29.

Money lent at Cowes for repairs and service of a British ship, whose owners resided at Newcastle, held not to be matter for bottomry. The Lochiel, 2 W. Rob. 34.

—— In Jersey.]—Bond given upon a British ship in Jersey: quære, whether it is valid. The Barbara, 4 C. Rob. 1.

—— In Ireland.]—A bond given in Ireland on a British ship held valid. The Rhadamanthe, 1 Dods. 704.

Bond given to free Ship from Arrest.]—A bottomry bond given to free the ship from arrest at Malta for a debt due from the owner to his agent there on a general account, held valid. The Osmanli, 3 W. Rob. 198; 7 Not. of Cas. 322.

The mere fact that by the law of the port in which the bond is given the ship may be detained does not make a bond, otherwise invalid, to be valid. The Augusta, 1 Dods. 283. And see The Hersey, supra, col. 201.

—— Arrest for Salvage.]—See The Sultan, infra, col. 206.

Bond to meet Consul's Charges.]—Bond given at British consul's instigation, in great part for payment of his commission, upheld. The Zodiac, 1 Hag. Adm. 320.

—— To defray Debts incurred on previous Voyage.]—Money lent for the payment of debts incurred in a previous voyage not matter for bottomry. The Lochiel, 2 W. Rob. 34.

—— To pay off Previous Bond.]—The amount of a previous bond given in the same voyage, having been paid off, may be included in a new bond given on the same but not on a subsequent voyage. The Toivo, Spinks, 185.

Semble, that payment of one bottomry bond is a good consideration for a new bottomry bond. Dobson v. Lyall, 2 Ph. 323, n.; 3 Myl. & Cr. 453, n.; 11 Jur. 179, n. See S. C., 8 Jur. 969 (on exception to report).

For Insurance Premiums.]—The master putting into a foreign port of distress has no authority to insure the ship and freight for performing the residue of the voyage, and has no authority, therefore, to grant a bottomry bond on the ship to pay for the premiums of such insurance. The Serafina, Br. & Lush. 277.

To free from Arrest for Salvage.]—Where a vessel is lying stranded, and the master cannot communicate with the owner, the master, in order to tranship and send on, may on his own authority give a respondentia bond to release the cargo lying under arrest for salvage. The Sultan, Swabey, 504; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1369.

Charges for Unloading Outward Cargo.]—Every disbursement at a foreign port necessary to enable a ship to prosecute her voyage, made in or about the ship herself or her crew, is a proper subject for bottomry. Charges upon the unloading of the outward cargo are such necessary disbursements. The Edmond, Lush. 211; 30 L. J., Adm. 128; 2 L. T. 394. And see Lush. 57; 29 L. J., Adm. 76; 2 L. T. 192.

Such disbursements must be for charges for which the owner or master of the ship is liable; those for which the consignee of the cargo is liable are not the subject of bottomry. Ib.

Average Contribution.]—A debt for general average contribution, arising in respect of an outward voyage, being a personal debt only, is not a sufficient foundation for a bottomry bond on the ship for the voyage homeward. The North Star, Lush. 45; 29 L. J., Adm. 73; 2 L. T. 264.

Consul's Expenses in Suppressing Mutiny.]—Expenses incurred by the British consul in a foreign port, the crew being in possession of the ship and the master in irons, in connection with a mutiny on board, and reinstating the master in his command, held a good foundation for bottomry bond, although at the outset of the matter nothing was said as to giving a bond. The Gauntlet, 3 W. Rob. 82.

Usury Laws—Bottomry no Infringement of.]—Bottomry is not invalid as contrary to the usury laws, because of the sea risk. Sharpley v. Hurrell, Cro. Jac. 208; Soome v. Gleen, Siderf., pt. 1, 27; Mason v. Abdy, Holt, 738; Chesterfield (Earl of) v. Janson, 2 Ves. Sen. 27, 124, 142; Joy v. Kent, Hard. 418; Roberts v. Tremayn, 2 Rolle, 47; Cro. Jac. 508; Appleton v. Brian, 1 Keb. 711.

Bottomry bond payable whether the ship return or not sail, bad for usury. Hill v. Snow, 1 Keb. 358.

Foreign Ships trading to East Indies—7 Geo. 1, st. 1, c. 21.]—Validity of bottomry bonds on foreign ships trading to East Indies. Sumner v. Green, 1 H. Bl. 302.

b. Authority of Master.

Agent for Cargo Owners.]—The character of agent for the owners of the cargo is imposed upon the master by the necessity of the case, and by that alone. The master is invested by presumption of law with authority to hypothecate the cargo, on the ground that the owners have no means of expressing their wishes; but when such means exist, when communication can be made to the owners, the character of agent is no longer imposed on the master, because the necessity which creates it does not arise. The Hamburgh, infra.

Agent for Owner of Ship.]—If the master orders repairs for his ship, or borrows money on a bottomry bond in order to execute the repairs, he is the agent alone of the owner of the ship in ordering such repairs and borrowing money. Benson v. Duncan, 3 Ex. 644; 18 L. J., Ex. 169; 14 Jur. 218—Ex. Ch. See S. C., infra.

Master cannot bind Owner beyond Value of Ship.]—The master cannot by bottomry bind the owners beyond the value of the ship. Anon., Ca. in Ch., pt. 2, 238.

Necessity alone Justifies.]—The master may hypothecate the ship only in case of necessity. Anon., Holt, 651; 3 Salk. 23. S. P., Bridgeman's Case, Hob. 11.

A bottomry bond executed by the master of a ship cannot be supported against the owners if the master, at the time of executing the bond, had other resources for obtaining the necessary supplies for the ship. Dobson v. Lyall, 2 Ph. 323, n.; 3 Myl. & C. 453, n.; 6 L. J., Ch. 115; 11 Jur. 179, n. S. P., Lyall v. Hicks, supra, col. 202; The Royal Arch, supra, col. 199.

The obligee in a bottomry bond also chartered the ship for the homeward voyage:—Held, that, from the time the charterparty was made, the sum that would become due for the freight was a resource of the captain, applicable to procuring such sums as were necessary to discharge expenses. Dobson v. Lyall, supra. And see Cases supra, col. 202.

Law of the Flag.]—The extent of the authority conferred on the master of a vessel to bind the owners either of the ship or of the cargo is derived from, and governed by, the law of the flag. The Karnak, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 136; 38 L. J., Adm. 57; L. R. 2 P. C. 505; 21 L. T. 159; 17 W. R. 1028.

No Power to Bottomry before Voyage begun.]—The master has no power to hypothecate the ship before the voyage is begun. Lister v. Baxter, Str. 695.

Pledging Owner's Credit.]—A master has no authority to hypothecate for money borrowed at a foreign port for necessary repairs and disbursements, and by the same instrument pledge the personal credit of his owner for such advances, whether maritime interest be stipulated for or not. Stainbank v. Sheppard, 13 C. B. 418; 1 C. L. R. 609; 22 L. J., Ex. 341; 17 Jur. 1032; 1 W. R. 505—Ex. Ch.

The master of a vessel requiring supplies for the further prosecution of her voyage is bound to ascertain whether such supplies can be procured on the personal credit of the owner before he resorts to a bottomry bond as security for their amount. The Eliza, Heathorn v. Darling, 1 Moore, P. C. 5.

Master's Personal Credit.]—A bottomry bond given by a master upon a threat of arrest for supplies previously furnished on his personal credit is void. The Hessey, Gore v. Gardner, 3 Moore, P. C. 79.

To justify resort by a master of a ship to a bottomry bond, it is requisite by maritime law that the advances should be merely to enable the ship to refit; or to pay for the repairs and dispatch of the vessel for the completion of her voyage; and that the master should be unable to obtain such advances upon personal credit. The Prince of Saxe-Coburg, Soares v. Rahn, 3 Moore, P. C. 1.

Though the debts which a master in need of repairs in a foreign port has incurred may be personal, he may borrow money upon bottomry of ship, freight and cargo to pay them from any one not his creditor. The Karnak, supra.

By Mate—Capture and Recapture.]—A mate, in the absence of the captain, has a right to hypothecate the ship for the purpose of paying the salvage to the recaptors. Parmeter v. Todhunter, 1 Camp. 541.

Duty to Communicate with Owners.]—Before resorting to bottomry for raising necessary supplies, it is absolutely necessary, where practicable, that notice should be given by the master to the owner of the vessel, and an allegation that such owner was insolvent is no excuse for not communicating with him, unless he has been judicially declared insolvent, and the ownership of the vessel vested in his assignees, to whom such notice must then be given. The Panama, Barron v. Stewart, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 484; 39 L. J., Adm. 37; L. R. 3 P. C. 199; 23 L. T. 12; 18 W. R. 1011.

A British ship, under a charter from London to Callao, put into Melbourne for repairs. The master, who was also a part owner, fearing that the shipwrights would, unless their claims were paid, detain the vessel, and that she might thus be unable to fulfil her charter, raised the necessary funds from the ship's assets at Melbourne upon a bottomry bond of the ship and freight:—Held, that the bond was not invalidated by the absence of a previous communication between the master and the co-owner. The Staffordshire, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 443; 41 L. J., Adm. 49; L. R. 4 P. C. 194; 27 L. T. 46; 20 W. R. 557; 1 Asp. M. C. 365—P. C. And see S. C., 25 L. T. 137.

Held, also, that the mortgagee of a ship cannot, for the purposes of such previous communication as is necessary between the party hypothecating the ship and the owner, be deemed an owner: though it may be otherwise if the mortgagee is also the ship's agent and agent for the owner. Ib.

The authority of a master to pledge by bottomry for the purpose of raising money for the absolute necessaries of the ship, only arises when he cannot obtain the necessary advances upon the personal credit of the owner, and such power to raise money by bottomry is vested in the master, although the owner resides in the same country, provided there are no means of communication with the owners, and the exigency of the case requires it. The Oriental, Wallace v. Fielden, 7 Moore, P. C. 398.

A ship on a voyage from Galveston, United States, to Liverpool, put into Bermuda disabled. The master wrote to the owners of the ship and cargo, and meanwhile, to avoid delay and loss, commenced repairing the ship. The repairs were completed, and the master then, fearing detention of the ship, and having received no replies from the owners of the ship and cargo, raised money to pay for the repairs on bottomry of the ship, freight and cargo. The lenders were not the repairers of the ship:—Held, that the bond was valid, and bound the cargo. The Karnak, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 136; 38 L. J., Adm.

The possibility of communication with the owners of the ship or cargo must be construed by estimating the cost and risk incidental to the delay from the attempt to make such communication, and the probability of failure after every exertion made. Ib.

Bottomry bond granted at New York by master of a vessel whose owners lived at St. John's, New Brunswick, between which place and New York there was telegraphic communication. The lenders had previously acted as agents for the ship, and there had been no communication with the owners; bond held invalid. The Oriental, 7 Moore, P. C. 398—P. C. Reversing 3 W. Rob. 243.

Semble, a bottomry bond given by the captain of a ship at a foreign port is not necessarily void because there was time during the ship's stay at such port for the captain to have written home to his employers, and to have received an answer. Glascott v. Lang, 2 Ph. 310; 16 L. J., Ch. 429; 11 Jur. 642.

A plea, alleging that the bottomry bond was executed by the master without any express authority from the defendant; and that, at the time when the same was executed, the amount of the costs and expenses exceeded the amount of the value of the ship when repaired, and all the freight that could be earned by the voyage, should the vessel arrive at its destination; and that the defendant, so soon as he received notice, abandoned the ship, and all right and title to the same, and all freight in respect of the voyage, and did never ratify the act of the master:—Held, bad. Benson v. Duncan, 3 Ex. 344; 18 L. J., Ex. 169; 14 Jur. 218—Ex. Ch. See S. C. supra, col. 207.

See also supra, a. MATTERS AFFECTING VALIDITY, and infra, 3. ALLOWABLE ITEMS.

Power of Master to Bottomry for Repairs.]—See Miller v. Potter, ante, col. 17, and Cases supra, col. 203.

Cargo—Power to Hypothecate.]—A master has power to hypothecate the cargo as well as the ship for a reasonable purpose only, for the benefit of the ship and cargo. Hussey v. Christie, 13 Ves. 599; 9 East, 426; 9 R. R. 585.

Where it appeared that at a foreign port, at which the master had taken in necessary supplies, the owner of the vessel had a recognised agent within the possible and probable knowledge of the person making the advance:—Held, that the bottomry bond given for such advance was void. The Faithful, 31 L. J., Adm. 81.

The existence of the necessity which the maritime law requires to validate the hypothecation of the ship and cargo by bottomry, is to be ascertained by evidence in the usual manner, the meaning of the term "necessity" in respect of hypothecation by the master being analogous to its meaning in other parts of the law. The Karnak, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 136; 38 L. J., Adm. 57; L. R. 2 P. C. 505; 21 L. T. 159; 17 W. R. 1028—P. C. See S. C., supra.

The necessity, which will validate the hypothecation of a cargo by bottomry, is a high degree of need, arising when choice is to be made of one of several alternatives, under the peril of severe loss, if a wrong choice should be made. And any combination of events which should prevent the completion of the voyage with profit, unless money should be obtained by bottomry, would raise the question whether there was need for bottomry in such high degree as to create a necessity. If, though the repairs are complete, yet the ship cannot leave the port until they are paid for, the completion of repairs is an immaterial fact in estimating the degree of need for bottomry. Ib.

A shipmaster has authority to bottomry cargo as well as ship at a foreign port to enable the ship to prosecute her voyage; and the shipowners are liable to indemnify cargo owners if the cargo is attached or sold by the bondholders, without regard to the question of the validity of the bond. Anderston Foundry Co. v. Law, 7 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 836.

A ship on her voyage from Newcastle to Lisbon came into collison and put into Leith for repairs. The master and mate were owners of the ship and incurred a debt of 580*l.* to the shipbroker, which included damages payable to the other ship, repairs, and other charges. Only a small part of this was chargeable against cargo, the bulk being chargeable against ship and freight. The master had no means, except 80*l.*, and bottomried ship, freight and cargo for 500*l.* The cargo owners refused to consent to bottomry the cargo. The ship and cargo were sold for 155*l.*:—Held, that, except as to freight, the bondholder had no right against the cargo, as the master had no power to bottomry it under the circumstances. Dymond v. Scott, 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 196. And see Cases supra, cols. 203, 204.

Cargo Bottomried—Indemnity against Shipowner.]—A ship was damaged by perils of the sea, and the master hypothecated, by a bottomry bond, the ship, freight and cargo, amongst which were the goods of the plaintiff. The ship and freight not realising the amount borrowed, his goods were attached in the admiralty court until contribution was paid by him towards the difference due to the obligee of the bond, and he was obliged to pay his proportion of the costs of the suit instituted in the admiralty court:—Held, that he could maintain an action against the owner of the ship on an implied promise to indemnify. Benson v. Duncan, 3 Ex. 644; 18 L. J., Ex. 169; 14 Jur. 218—Ex. Ch.

Duty to communicate with Owner of Cargo.]—The master of a ship, being only the agent of the cargo in special cases of necessity, is bound, when circumstances permit, to communicate with the owner of the cargo before he does any act which seriously affects the value of the cargo. The Onward, 42 L. J., Adm. 61; L. R. 4 A. & E. 38; 28 L. T. 204; 21 W. R. 601; 1 Asp. M. C. 540.

A master, therefore, putting into Port Louis, Mauritius, for repairs to his ship, and intending to raise money for those repairs upon bottomry, not only on ship and freight, but also upon cargo of an imperishable nature and belonging to one firm residing in Great Britain, is bound to communicate with them before having recourse to bottomry; otherwise the bond is invalid. Ib.

Bottomry bond upon ship, freight, and cargo, taken up by the master of a small Swedish vessel at a port in Sweden. Part of the cargo was consigned to England:—Held, that, considering the distance between Sweden and England, and the means of communication, it was essential to the validity of the bond, so far as the cargo was concerned, that the master should communicate with the owners of the cargo before resorting to hypothecation of the cargo, as he could have obtained an answer within a period not inconvenient with regard to the exigency of the circumstances of the case. The Bonaparte, Wilkinson v. Wilson, 8 Moore, P. C. 459.

The master during the voyage executed a bottomry bond hypothecating the ship, freight, and cargo. The cargo was not perishable, and the master could have communicated with the owners of the cargo before executing the bond:—Held, that the master should have communicated with the owners of the cargo, and that the bond was invalid in respect of the cargo. The Hamburgh, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 289; Br. & Lush. 253; 33 L. J., Adm. 116; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 600; 10 L. T. 206; 12 W. R. 628—P. C.

Whether a master of a vessel without funds or credit must communicate with the owners of the cargo before hypothecating the ship, freight, and cargo, in order to enable him to pay the expense of the necessary repairs of the vessel, is a question which can only be decided by the circumstances of each particular case. Ib.

The master before giving a bottomry bond on ship, freight, and cargo, is bound, as against owners of cargo, to communicate both with the owners of ship and the shippers or consignees of cargo, where such communication is under all the circumstances reasonably practicable; but not otherwise. The Olivier, Lush. 484; 31 L. J., Adm. 137; 6 L. T. 259.

The defence that a bottomry bond is void for want of communication with the shipowner or cargo owner must be specially pleaded. Ib.

The master, before he hypothecates the cargo, ought, if he has the means of doing so, to communicate with the owner; and this is not merely to give the owner an opportunity of advancing the requisite funds, but also to give him an opportunity of unlading the cargo; although he cannot do this without payment of the entire freight. The Lizzie, L. R. 2 A. & E. 254; 19 L. T. 71.

What Communication to Owner Sufficient.]—To justify a master in giving a bottomry bond on cargo where communication with the owners is necessary, a mere statement of injuries sustained by the ship and of the consequent necessity for repairs entailing considerable expense, unaccompanied by a statement that a bottomry bond is proposed, is not a sufficient communication; the law does not require the owners from such premises to draw the conclusion that the ship and cargo must be bottomried; although it may not be required that the words "bottomry of cargo" should be used in the communication, the fact itself should be stated, or at least the necessity for a bottomry bond should be an obvious and irresistible inference from the circumstances stated. The Onward, supra.

A communication detailing the disasters to the ship, and the probable expense of repair, but not expressing the intention to bottomry the cargo, and requesting the owners of cargo to wait for further information, is not, where any communication is necessary, sufficient; more especially where the information as to the bottomry has been given to the shipowners, but withheld from the owners of cargo; and under such circumstances the owners of cargo are not bound to conclude that the master will resort to bottomry, or to reply to the communication. Ib.

A master cannot bottomry a ship without communication with his owner, if communication is practicable, and, a fortiori, he cannot hypothecate the cargo without communicating with the owner of it, if communication with such owner is practicable. Such communication must state not merely the necessity for expenditure, but also the necessity for hypothecation. Kleinwort v. Cassa Marrittima of Genoa, 2 App. Cas. 156; 36 L. T. 118; 25 W. R. 608; 3 Asp. M. C. 358—P. C.

A statement by the master of the injuries sustained by a ship and of the repairs necessary is not a sufficient communication with the owners to justify him in giving a bottomry bond upon the ship and cargo, if unaccompanied by a statement that such bond is necessary. Ib.

The mere receipt by the owners of the cargo of general information that the ship is damaged, and in need of repairs, does not impose upon them the duty of supplying money for such repairs without further information. Ib.

A Swedish vessel, bound from a port in Sweden to Hull, was driven, by stress of weather, to put back into another port in Sweden. This took place in November, 1848. Ten days afterwards the cargo was unladen, and the ship found to be greatly damaged. The repairs were completed, and the cargo reloaded. The master at once communicated with the owners of the ship resident in Sweden, who, being without funds, consented to the master taking up a bottomry bond for payment of the necessary repairs, and the British consul at the port where the vessel lay wrote on behalf of the master, and as his agent, to the consignees at Hull, informing them of the damage sustained by the vessel, but made no application for money, nor referred to the necessity of repairs. No answer was made to this letter, and the master, in March, 1849, hypothecated the ship, freight, and cargo, for the money borrowed for the repairs:—Held, that such letter to the consignees was a sufficient notice to authorise the master raising money by bottomry on the cargo. The Bonaparte, Wilkinson v. Wilson, 8 Moore, P. C. 459.

—— Bond given to meet Expenses caused by Cargo Owners' Delay—Deduction from Freight.]—Where the master was obliged to sell part of the cargo abroad to defray the ships' expenses and gave a bond on cargo for further advances, the owners of the cargo, if they caused the delay which occasioned the expenses, cannot refuse payment of any part of the freight or deduct it from the sum due on the bond. The Angerona, 1 Dods. 382.

—— Bond given to Consignee of Cargo.]—A bottomry bond given to consignee of cargo, there being a consignee of ship in the place, upheld; it not being shewn that the lender was aware that bottomry was not necessary. The Nelson, 1 Hag. Adm. 169.

Hypothecation of Cargo before Shipment.]—The Jonathan Goodhue, Swabey, 33, supra, col. 199.

Hypothecation of Freight—Advances Deducted.]—A. chartered a ship then on an outward voyage to load a cargo in Cuba for London, agreeing that his agent should make such advances in Cuba as he should think the ship required. The master bottomried the ship and freight before she reached Cuba. Certain sums were advanced by the agent in Cuba; and in the bondholder's suit against the ship and freight A. brought into the registry the freight less the sums advanced in Cuba:—Held, that such deduction was properly made. The Standard, 6 W. R. 222.

Hypothecation of Ship, Freight and Cargo—Rights of Cargo Owner.]—The holder of a bottomry bond on ship, freight, and cargo, is upon conclusion of proceedings by default against ship and freight, entitled to the full freight in payment of his bond and costs; the owner of cargo who has paid the freight into court, is not entitled to a reference as to the amount due on the bond, although part of the cargo was sold by the master and the proceeds applied to ships' expenses before the bond was executed. The Gem of the Nith, Br. & Lush. 72.

Amount of Freight—Deduction of Insurance.]—The charterer may deduct from the freight payable to a bottomry bondholder the premium for insurance of part of the freight advanced according to stipulations in the charterparty before the bond was granted. The Catherine, Swabey, 263; 5 W. R. 829.

c. By what Law.

Where Ship is Foreign.]—The owner of cargo who ships it on board a foreign vessel, ships it to be dealt with by the master according to the law of the flag, that is, the law of the country to which the vessel belongs, unless that authority be limited by express stipulation at the time of the shipment. Therefore a bond made by the master of a foreign ship hypothecating cargo laden on board such ship, if valid according to the law of the flag of the ship, will be enforced by the English admiralty court, on the arrest of the ship and cargo at the port of London (the port of discharge within the meaning of the bond), although the conditions imposed by English law as essential to the validity of such bond have not been complied with. The Gaetano and Maria, 51 L. J., Adm. 67; 7 P. D. 137; 46 L. T. 835; 30 W. R. 766; 4 Asp. M. C. 470—C. A.

The validity of a bottomry bond taken up in a foreign port upon a foreign ship, freight, and cargo, the owners of the cargo being English, and the ship and cargo being proceeded against in England, is to be governed by the general maritime law, and not by the lex loci contractûs, or the law of the country to which the vessel belongs. The Hamburgh, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 289; Br. & Lush. 253; 33 L. J., Adm. 116; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 600; 10 L. T. 206; 12 W. R. 628—P. C.

A master of a French ship contracted to carry a cargo, the property of the plaintiff, from the West Indies to Liverpool. The ship being sea damaged put into a port of refuge for repairs, to meet the charges of which the master hypothecated the ship, freight, and cargo. The French law is not in force either at the place where the charterparty was executed, or where the cargo was shipped, or the port of refuge where the ship was repaired. Upon the arrival of the ship at Liverpool, proceedings were instituted in the admiralty court upon the bottomry bonds executed by the master, to which suit the owners (the defendants) being French subjects and domiciled in France did not appear, relying on the French law that the owner of a ship may in all cases free himself from the acts and engagements of the master, in all that concerns the ship and voyage, by the abandonment of the ship and freight. The value of the ship being insufficient to satisfy the bonds, the plaintiff, in order to save his cargo, paid the remaining sum due upon the bonds, costs, &c., and then sued the defendants as upon an implied indemnity:—Held, that he was not entitled to recover. Lloyd v. Guibert, 6 B. & S. 100; 35 L. J., Q. B. 74; L. R. 1 Q. B. 115; 13 L. T. 602—Ex. Ch. Affirming 10 Jur. (N.S.) 949; 12 W. R. 953.

East India Trade.]—The 7 Geo. 1, c. 21, s. 2, which prohibits loans of money on bottomry of vessels designed to trade in the East Indies, has, since the other restrictions upon the East India trade have been removed, been repealed by implication. The India, Br. & Lush. 221; 33 L. J., Adm. 193; 12 L. T. 316.

Power of Master to Bottomry—Law of Flag.]—Per Erle, C.J. See The Karnak, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 136; 38 L. J., Adm. 57; L. R. 2 P. C. 505; 17 W. R. 1028.

3. Allowable Items.

Premiums of Insurance—Advance Freight.]—A charterer may deduct from the freight payable to a bondholder the premium for insurance of part of the freight advanced, according to stipulations in the charterparty before the bond was granted. The Catherine, Swabey, 263; 5 W. R. 829.

Expenses of Ship at Port.]—All expenses incurred in the port where the bond is given relating to the ship or crew, being expenses for which the master or owner of the ship is liable, and being necessary to enable the ship to proceed on her voyage, may be allowed. The Edmond, Lush. 211; 30 L. J., P. 128; 2 L. T. 394.

Law Expenses.]—The agent of a ship abroad applied a balance of freight in discharge of law expenses relating to the ship's business, and took a bottomry bond for other payments, for which there was a lien on the ship:—Held, that the amount of such law expenses could not be deducted from the bond. Ib.

Commissions.]—Where a cargo is unshipped, stored and transhipped at a foreign port, and a respondentia bond is given to defray the charges, the court, though considering the custom of the port, will not allow as items in the bond any commissions beyond a reasonable amount, calculated upon a principle of quantum meruit. The Glenmanna, Lush. 115.

Commissions charged at St. Thomas's of two per cent. on the value of cargo for storage, and of two and a half per cent. for landing and reshipping, disallowed, and in lieu thereof reasonable sums allowed. Ib.

Commissions of five per cent. on cash advances reduced to two and a half per cent., according to the practice observed in the registry. Ib.

Commissions on freight in respect of the vessels chartered to tranship disallowed. Ib.

A usage to establish a right to deduct commissions for obtaining the charter from the freight as against the holder of a bottomry bond must be distinctly proved. The Karnak, infra.

A commission of two per cent. on the value of ship and cargo, in addition to ten per cent. maritime interest on the sum advanced, charged for management of the ship's business in port of distress by the lenders on bottomry disallowed. The Calypso, 3 Hag. Adm. 162.

Commission for unshipping and care of cargo, and wages advanced to crew abroad, disallowed. The Cognac, 2 Hag. Adm. 377.

Advance to Master.]—Advance of money to master for alleged services in taking care of the cargo and for personal expenses was not allowed as charges on cargo. The Glenmanna, supra.

In a suit on a bottomry bond hypothecating "ship, cargo, and freight," it appeared that the master had before bottomry obtained advances on account of freight from the charterers:—Held, that the obligee had no claim to freight so advanced by the charterers prior to bottomry, provided the advances were made bonâ fide. The Karnak, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 136; 38 L. J., Adm. 57; L. R. 2 P. C. 505; 21 L. T. 159; 17 W. R. 1028.

Sums Advanced for Disbursements.]—Sums advanced for disbursements partly upon personal security and partly upon security of freight cannot be made the subject of bottomry. The Empire of Peace, 39 L. J., Adm. 12; 21 L. T. 763.

Cost of Insuring Bottomry Loan.]—Charge for insuring part of the money lent on bottomry at a bottomry premium disallowed. The lender must insure by a separate contract on his own account. The Boddingtons, 2 Hag. Adm. 422.

Simple Contract Debts—Wages.]—The inquiry before the master was, what sum of money on a particular day was due and payable upon a certain bottomry bond, and what was necessary for discharging such other demands against the ship as were necessary to be discharged, and of defraying such expenses as it was necessary to incur to enable the ship to proceed home:—Held, that a private debt of the captain was not within the meaning of the inquiry, although it might prevent his returning with the ship. Dobson v. Lyall, 2 Ph. 323, n.; 8 Jur. 969. See S. C., 3 Myl. & Cr. 453, n.; 6 L. J., Ch. 115; 11 Jur. 179, n., supra, cols. 205, 207.

Held, secondly, that a sum of money which was required for the purchase of stores and payment of wages at a port into which the ship put on the homeward voyage was within the meaning of such inquiry, although, on the particular day named, such sum could not be definitely foreseen. Ib.

Thirdly, that a sum which became payable for seamen's wages, dues, and other expenses, immediately upon the completion of the homeward voyage, was also within the meaning of the inquiry. Ib.

Price of Goods supplied on Personal Credit.]—Goods supplied in the first instance on personal security alone cannot afterwards be made the subject of bottomry. The Augusta, 1 Dods. 283.

Advances made on Personal Credit.]—Small advances made without express reference to bottomry may be included in a subsequent bond. The Vibilia, 1 W. Rob. 1.

Simple Contract Debts bought up by Lender on Bottomry.]—Debts owing upon personal credit bought up from the ship's creditors by the lender cannot be the subject of bottomry. The Ocean, 2 W. Rob. 429, 466.

Advances to pay previous Debts.]—Advances made for the ship's service, to pay debts incurred before the advances, may be included in a bottomry bond. The Hebe, 2 W. Rob. 412; 4 Not. of Cas. 361; 10 Jur. 227.

See further as to Allowable Items, supra, cols. 198 seq.

4. Priorities.

Marshalling.]—See infra, col. 220.

Master's Wages.]—The claim of a master for his wages earned and disbursements made subsequently to a voyage, during which a bottomry bond had been given on his ship, takes priority over the claim of a bondholder. The Hope, 28 L. T. 287; 1 Asp. M. C. 563.

A bottomry bondholder is entitled to priority over the claim of a master for wages earned on previous voyages. Ib.

The master of a French lugger executed bottomry bonds on ship, freight, and cargo, and bound himself personally by the bonds. The ship arrived at her port of destination, and the bonds were indorsed to the owners of the cargo, who instituted a suit against ship, freight and cargo, to enforce payment of the bonds. The master afterwards instituted a suit against the ship and freight for wages. The proceeds of the ship were insufficient to pay the bonds: but the proceeds of the ship, together with the freight and the value of the cargo, were sufficient to pay the bonds as well as the wages of the master:—Held, that the master was entitled to have his wages paid out of the proceeds of the ship before any portion of that fund was appropriated to the payment of the amount due on the bonds. The Eugénie, L. R. 4 A. & E. 123; 29 L. T. 314; 21 W. R. 957; 2 Asp. M. C. 104.

Bottomry bond on ship, freight and cargo; proceeds of ship and freight insufficient:—Held, that though the master bound himself by the bond, and was also a part owner of the vessel, the owners of part of the cargo could not oppose his right to be paid his wages and disbursements in priority to the bondholder. The Daring, 37 L. J., Adm. 29; L. R. 2 A. & E. 260.

The general rule that a master who has bound himself as well as ship and freight for the payment of a bottomry bond is not entitled to payment of his own claims in priority, will not be acted upon where the bottomry bondholder will not be prejudiced by the master being paid before him. The Edward Oliver, 36 L. J., Adm. 13; L. R. 1 A. & E. 379; 16 L. T. 575.

The master of a foreign ship having by the bottomry bond bound himself as well as the ship and freight cannot enforce his lien for wages as against the bondholder. The Jonathan Goodhue, Swabey, 524.

By a bottomry bond, the master covenanted that he had authority to charge the vessel, and that the vessel and cargo, with the freight, should at all times after the voyage be liable for the payment of the amount due under the bond:—Held, that this covenant did not affect the master's right to be paid his wages in priority to the bondholder. The Salacia, 32 L. J., Adm. 41; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 27; 7 L. T. 440; 11 W. R. 189.

Seamen's Wages.]—Seamen's wages earned before the giving of a bond are to be preferred to the bond. The Union, Lush. 128; 30 L. J., Adm. 17; 3 L. T. 280.

Bond on ship, freight and cargo, ship and freight insufficient to pay the same, suit by seamen against ship and freight for wages, the owners of the cargo allowed to defend, because having an interest in the administration of the fund, but the claim of the seamen ultimately pronounced for, as superior to that of the bondholder, and therefore to that of the owners of the cargo deriving through him. Ib.

—— Payment on Account of Wages.]—Wages are preferred to a bottomry bond given before the wages are earned; and one who has paid the wages at the master's request. The William F. Safford, infra. And see The Mary Ann, 9 Jur. 94.

Wages Paid by Bottomry Bondholder.]—Bottomry bondholder paying wages of crew in order to save expense of their detention by order of court given priority in respect of such payment over all other claims. The Kammerherre Rosenkrants, 1 Hag. Adm. 62.

The court will not, unless upon application being made to it, sanction the repayment of wages to bondholders out of the proceeds of the sale of a ship. The Cornelia Henrietta, L. R. 1 A. & E. 51; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 396; 14 W. R. 502.

Disbursements and Wages Paid by Shipowner.]—A shipowner paid wages and other necessary disbursements in respect of a ship upon which a bottomry bond had been given. The ship was sold at the suit of the bondholder:—Held, that such payments being made without leave of the court the shipowner was not entitled to priority over the bottomry bond. The Janet Wilson, 6 W. R. 329.

Ship, Freight and Cargo Bound—Priorities.]—Bottomry bond against ship, freight and cargo. Judgment by default against ship and freight; as against the cargo the bond contested:—Held, that the bondholder is entitled to payment out of the freight, and that the cargo owner has no right to have it kept in court for payment of his costs, in the event of the bond being pronounced invalid against cargo. The Lord Cochrane, 1 W. Rob. 312.

Scotch Law—Arrestment—Freight—General Average.]—Consignees of cargo subject to a claim for general average on board a ship subject to bottomry sold it upon the terms that the price should include freight, "the average and bottomry bond to be for account of and settled by sellers." The bill of lading was indorsed to the purchasers, who retained part of the price to meet a balance of freight. A creditor of the owner and master of the ship subsequently used arrestments in the hands of the holder of the bill of lading:—Held, that the arrestees were accountable for so much of the freight as remained in their hands at the date of the arrestment without deducting the amount of the bottomry bond, to which they had not acquired title until after the arrestments; and that the arrestments attached the amount due to the ship for general average. Ranking v. Tod, 8 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 914.

Necessaries—Broker's Advances.]—A broker, procuring necessaries to be supplied to a ship, and paying for them, gives credit to the master and owners, and stands in a different position from a tradesman supplying; his claim, therefore, does not take precedence as a claim under a bottomry bond. The Flor de Funchal, 35 L. J., Adm. 119; 13 W. R. 1000.

A bottomry bond is preferred to a claim of necessaries previously pronounced for, the necessaries having been supplied before the bond. The William F. Safford, Lush. 69; 29 L. J., P. 109; 2 L. T. 301.

Merging Claims.]—A cause of necessaries was instituted in a county court, and subsequently transferred to the court of admiralty. The petition in the court of admiralty alleged that a bottomry bond was given as security for the amount due for necessaries:—Held, first, that the claim for necessaries merged in the bottomry. The Elpis, 42 L. J., Adm. 43; L. R. 4 A. & E. 1; 27 L. T. 664; 21 W. R. 576; 1 Asp. M. C. 472.

Held, secondly, that the suit having been transferred as one for necessaries could not be retained as a cause of bottomry. Ib.

Purchaser without Notice of Bond.]—A British ship, upon which a bottomry bond had been taken payable on her arrival in England, was sold by her master at Bahia as unseaworthy to a foreigner who repaired her and sent her to England. There was no evidence of notice of the bottomry having been given at the sale:—Held, that the ship was subject to the bond. The Catherine, formerly The Croxdale, 15 Jur. 231.

Viaticum of Master and Crew.]—The viaticum of master and seamen of a foreign ship arrested in this country by bottomry bondholder is paid before the bond. The Constancia, 15 W. R. 183.

Mortgages.]—A bottomry bond is entitled to priority of payment over a mortgage during the voyage for which the bond was executed; but when due, should be enforced within reasonable time, and a voluntary agreement on the part of the holder to postpone payment under it alters its character totally, and substitutes a contract over which the admiralty court, at least, has no jurisdiction. The Royal Arch, Swabey, 269; 6 W. R. 191.

The charterer of a ship in a foreign port, who had notice of a prior mortgage on the ship and its future earnings, agreed with the master, who was also owner, to advance on bottomry such a sum as should be necessary to equip the ship for the homeward voyage, and a bottomry bond was accordingly executed; but the necessary cost of the outfit exceeded the amount of the bond:—Held, that as against the mortgagee he was not entitled to set off the excess against the sum coming due under the charterparty. Dobson v. Lyall, 2 Ph. 323, n.; 3 Myl. & Cr. 453, n.; 6 L. J., Ch. 115; 11 Jur. 1794. And see tit. IX. MORTGAGE.

Mortgagee Intervening—Freight not brought in—Payment of Bond out of Proceeds of Ship.]—A ship was sold in a bottomry suit; the owners and a mortgagee of the ship intervened and the mortgagees resisted payment out to the bondholder until freight (also part of the bottomry security) should be brought in:—Held, that the mortgagee had no right to impede payment to the bondholder. The Percy, 3 Hag. Adm. 402.

Execution Creditor and Bondholder.]—See Ladbroke v. Crickett, post, col. 227.

Later Bond preferred to Earlier.]—Bottomry bonds of later date are preferred in payment to those of earlier date. The Rhadamanthe, 1 Dods. 201. S. P. The Eliza, 3 Hag. Adm. 87.

As between bonds of different dates the last executed must be first discharged. The Sydney Cove, 2 Dods. 1; The Betsey, 1 Dods. 289.

Bonds of Different Dates Granted on same Occasion.]—Bottomry bonds of different dates granted to lenders upon one advertisement for tenders paid pro rotâ. The Exeter, 1 C. Rob. 173, 176.

Payment of Prior Charges.]—The court granted leave to bondholders to pay prior charges, and to have a lien on the ship, cargo and freight, in respect of such payments, which were small in amount, on an affidavit specifying the charges to be paid. The Fair Haven, L. R. 1 A. & E. 67; 14 W. R. 821.

Advances under Charterparty.]—A bottomry bond cannot affect a previous contract in a charterparty, so as to take precedence of money advances made subsequently to the bond under the authority of the charterparty. The Salacia, Lush. 578; 32 L. J., Adm. 43; 8 L. T. 91. S. P., The Standard, supra, col. 212.

Dock Dues.]—A person who has advanced money for the purpose of discharging dock dues stands in the same position as the dock company, and his claim ranks with pilotage and towage claims, and has priority over the claim of a holder of a bottomry bond of a previous date. The St. Lawrence, 49 L. J., Adm. 82; 5 P. D. 250.

Lien for Freight Preferred.]—W. shipped at Hayti, on board the ship "Galam," a cargo for Europe. The ship during the voyage became unseaworthy, and put in at Angra, where she was condemned and the cargo discharged. The captain took up a sum of money on the security of the cargo, and granted a respondentia bond for the amount, payable with interest on the arrival of the ship at the port of Falmouth. W. chartered the ship "Mary Jane," of which C. was master and owner, to proceed to Angra and fetch home the cargo. The "Mary Jane" proceeded on her voyage, and on her return she was by bad weather driven ashore at Scilly, and it became necessary to unship the cargo, which was received by B. & Co., on behalf of C., and subject to a right of lien in respect of freight. The respondentia bond had been transferred to M'A. & Co. W., in order to defeat this bond, ordered C. to proceed to Hamburg instead of Falmouth; M'A. & Co. thereupon instituted a suit in the admiralty court on the bond, and the cargo was arrested by an order of that court:—Held, first, that as the cargo could not be carried to its destination by reason of the order of the admiralty court, C. had earned his freight, and had a lien on the cargo for freight, and that such lien was preferable to the claims under the respondentia bond. Galam, Cargo ex, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 216; Br. & Lush. 167; 33 L. J., Adm. 97; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 477; 9 L. T. 550; 12 W. R. 495; 3 N. R. 254.

Held, secondly, that the subsequent carrying of the cargo by C. was essential to making it available either for the holder of the bond or anyone else, and was in the nature of salvage service; and that in a competition of liens, the shipowner, who has rendered a service of this description, is entitled to priority over the holder of a respondentia bond, who has done nothing, and whose money has contributed nothing towards forwarding the cargo to its destination. Ib.

5. Marshalling.

In what Cases.]—Where there is a creditor on two funds, and another creditor on one only of those funds, the assets will be marshalled, if it can be done without violating a rule entitled to preferential observance. The Priscilla, Lush. 1; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1421; 2 L. T. 272.

Where, therefore, there are two bottomry bonds, the first in date on ship and freight only, and the other or last bond on ship, freight and cargo, and ship and freight are insufficient to discharge both bonds, the last bond, which is entitled to priority, must be paid out of ship and freight. Ib.

A vessel being at Constantinople, in want of repairs, the master, with the knowledge and approbation of the owner, borrowed money on bottomry. The bond was dated the 12th October, 1858, and was secured on the ship and freight. A second bond on the ship, freight, and cargo, dated the 11th December, 1858, was granted at Odessa; and a third, also on the ship, freight, and cargo, dated the 13th January, 1859, at Syra. The balance of the proceeds arising from the sale of the ship and from the freight, was insufficient to discharge all the claims under these bonds:—Held, that, in order to leave a fund for the payment of the first bond, the court could not compel the owners of the cargo to contribute to the liquidation of the two last executed bonds, so long as the proceeds of the ship and freight were not exhausted. Ib.

The general rule that a master who has bound himself, as well as ship and freight, for the payment of a bottomry bond, is not entitled to payment of his own claims in priority, will not be acted upon, where the bottomry bondholder will not be prejudiced by the master being paid before him. Where the master gave bonds on ship, cargo, and freight:—Held, that his claim for wages and disbursements should have priority over those of the bondholders, and that the assets should be marshalled accordingly. The Edward Oliver, L. R. 1 A. & E. 41; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 27; 7 L. T. 440; 11 W. R. 189.

The court, acting upon equitable principles, will not direct assets to be marshalled except in cases where the two funds to which one of the creditors can resort belong to the same person. The Edward Oliver, supra, distinguished. The Chioggia, 66 L. J., Adm. 174; [1898] P. 1; 77 L. T. 472.

Where there are several bonds, some binding the ship and freight, others the ship, freight, and cargo, the court of admiralty will marshal the assets, directing one claim to be satisfied from the cargo, and another from the ship and freight. The Trident, 1 Wm. Rob. 29. S. P., The Mary Ann, 9 Jur. 94.

Ship and Freight Owners.]—Where a ship and freight are bottomried, the owners being different, the ordinary rule is that they pay ratably. The Dowthorpe, 2 W. Rob. 73.

Ship and Cargo Owners.]—Where there is a bottomry bond upon ship alone, and another upon cargo alone, claims for pilotage, towage, and wages satisfied out of proceeds of ship and freight pro rata, and not out of freight only. La Constancia, 2 W. Rob. 460; 4 Not. of Ca. 512; 10 Jur. 845.

Different Bonds on Ship and on Cargo.]—Three bonds of bottomry granted upon the same vessel; two of the bonds granted upon the ship alone, the third bond upon the cargo only. In marshalling the assets the court directed the two bonds upon the ship to be paid out of the proceeds of the ship exclusively; the bond upon the cargo to be paid out of the proceeds of the freight in the first instance, and the cargo only held liable if the proceeds of the freight should be insufficient. La Constancia, 2 W. Rob. 404; 4 Not. of Ca. 285; 10 Jur. 845.

Ship and Freight to be exhausted before Cargo.]—In bottomry, ship and freight must be first exhausted before resort can be had to cargo. The Prince Regent, cited in The Dowthorpe, 2 W. Rob. 73, 85.

6. Condition of Loss or Payment.

Abandonment of Voyage.]—A bond becomes payable upon the abandonment of the voyage agreed upon in the bond. The Heligoland, Swabey, 491; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1180.

"Constructive Total Loss."]—The master, in order to raise money for necessary repairs, hypothecated the ship and freight. The bottomry bond contained a clause which provided that the obligation should be void if the obligors should pay in consequence of the loss of the ship such an average as by custom would have become due on the salvage, or if the ship should be utterly lost, cast away or destroyed, in consequence of the perils of the sea. The ship, on her homeward voyage, met with such bad weather as to be obliged to put into an intermediate port, in a damaged state, and after being surveyed was found unseaworthy, and sold, while existing in specie, for a sum less than the amount of the bond:—Held, first, that the doctrine of constructive total loss does not apply to a bottomry bond, as in the case of an insurance between insurers and insured, and the bondholder was entitled to the entire proceeds of the sale of the ship. The Great Pacific, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 151; 38 L. J., Adm. 45; L. R. 2 P. C. 516; 21 L. T. 38; 17 W. R. 933.

Held, secondly, that the clause in the bond did not apply when the ship remained in specie, though so much damaged that it would have cost more to repair her than she was worth. Ib.

Insurance on Constructive Total Loss.]—The condition of a bottomry bond provided for its defeasance on payment of the amount of the bond, "or, in case of the loss of the ship or vessel, such an average as by custom shall have become due on the salvage, or if on the voyage the ship or vessel should be utterly lost, cast away, or destroyed." The ship having become a constructive total loss, the bondholder, by a decree in the admiralty court, obtained payment to him of the proceeds of the ship, which had been paid into court, and which were insufficient; the court holding that a bottomry bond was only discharged by payment or by an absolute total loss, and that the condition providing for defeasance on payment of such average as by custom should have become due, did not refer to the case of a constructive total loss. In an action by the bondholder on a policy of insurance upon the bond:—Held, that the doctrine of constructive total loss was not applicable to a policy of insurance on bottomry, and that the condition of defeasance did not apply to the case of a constructive total loss. Bloomfield v. Southern Insurance Co., 39 L. J., Ex. 186; L. R. 5 Ex. 192; 22 L. T. 371; 18 W. R. 810.

Voyage not completed through Act of Master, or impossible.]—When money has been advanced on bottomry, and the completion of the voyage is prevented by the act of the master, or by some impossibility which the bondholder cannot control, he may convert his security under the bond into a debt upon personal credit. Bond granted in London stipulating that the money should be paid within twenty-four hours of the ship's arrival in the United States. The ship sailed and put into Plymouth, where she was condemned as unseaworthy. The bond was pronounced for. The Dante, 2 W. Rob. 427.

A., intending to go a voyage, enters into a bottomry bond, but the ship not going the voyage, but lying all along safe in the port of London, the court decreed the defendant should lose the premium, and the bondholder accept of his principal with usual interest. Dequilder v. Depeister, 1 Vern. 263.

Ship arriving, but of no Value.]—A bottomried ship was captured, recaptured, repaired, salved, and then arrived at her destination. She was not worth the amount of the bond, repairs and salvage:—Held, that the holder could recover upon the bond. Joyce v. Williamson, 3 Dougl. 162.

Ship abandoned as Constructive Total Loss.]—The bond is payable although the vessel is driven to a port for repairs; and although she is abandoned as a constructive total loss. The Armadillo, 1 W. Rob. 251; 1 Not. of Cas. 75.

In this case the bottomry bondholder is not entitled to salvage. Ib.

Salvage—Total Loss.]—Where there is an actual loss, the lender in bottomry is not entitled to salvage. The Aline, 1 W. Rob. 111.

Money lent on Adventure—Ship lost by Fault of Owner.]—Debt on bond for 200*l.*; conditioned to be void on payment of 125*l.* within twenty days of the ship's arrival. Defence that the ship was disabled and did not arrive. Replication that she was disabled through the neglect of the defendant in allowing her to fall into disrepair:—Judgment for the plaintiff. Dottin v. Dowrich, Lutw. 268.

Deviation—Bond payable though Ship lost.]—Bill in chancery by obligor in a penal bottomry bond to pay 40*s.* per month for 50*l.* The ship was to go from Holland to the Spanish islands and so to England. She went to the Spanish islands, took in Moors in Africa, and so to Barbados, and perished afterwards. The plaintiff being sued on the bond, sought relief in chancery, pretending that the deviation was on necessity. The bill was dismissed save as to the penalty. Anon. Ca. in Ch., pt. 2, 130.

Money was lent upon an obligation to repay the same, with interest, upon return of the ship from the specified voyage, unless the borrower should prove her loss. She deviated from the voyage, and was afterwards lost:—Held, that the money was payable. Western v. Wildy, Skinner, 152.

—— Pleading.]—Action of debt on bottomry. Defendant pleads that the ship sailed from L. to B. without deviation, and was lost on her voyage home. Replication, that she deviated by sailing from B. to J. Rejoinder, that the alleged deviation was because of her being pressed into the king's service; absque hoc, that she deviated after being pressed. Demurrer; adjudged for the plaintiffs. Williams v. Steadman, Skinner, 345; Holt, 126.

Bill of Adventure—Pleading Loss by Perils of Sea.]—Action on bond to proceed on voyage and return, dangers of the sea excepted—"or if the ship be lost before the return or payment, to be void"; plea, the ship was lost; demurrer on the ground that loss by perils of sea was intended. Demurrer overruled, the plaintiff should have replied that the ship was lost by defendant's fault. Boddington v. Wotton, 2 Keb. 768.

Insurance by Lender on Bottomry.]—See post, Goddart v. Garrett, post, tit. B. MARINE INSURANCE; Stainbank v. Sheppard, ante, col. 196.

7. INTEREST OR PREMIUM.

Rate of.]—No particular rate of interest is essential, though when the ordinary or a low rate of interest is taken it raises a suspicion that sea risk was not intended, and sea risk is essential to the jurisdiction of the court. The Royal Arch, Swabey, 269; 6 W. R. 191.

The defendants having paid into the registry, by order of the court, a sum of money which proved larger than the amount finally pronounced to be due to the bondholder, the bondholder was nevertheless held entitled to the full ordinary interest upon the latter sum from the date of the bond becoming due. The Edmond, Lush. 211; 30 L. J., Adm. 128; 2 L. T. 394.

The rate of interest ordinarily payable upon a bottomry loan and the premium thereon after the safe arrival of the ship at the end of the risk is 4 per cent. per annum, and a provision in a bond entered into by the master of a ship, providing for the payment of 10 per cent. per annum interest is not binding on the owners of ship or cargo, provided the provision was entered into without their knowledge. The D. H. Bills, 38 L. T. 786; 4 Asp. M. C. 20.

Premiums besides Interest.]—A bottomry bond on ship, freight, and cargo provided for payment of a bottomry loan, together with interest at 8 per cent., at or before the expiration of five days after the arrival of the ship at her port of discharge. The bond further provided that an additional premium of 10 per cent. on the loan should become payable if default was made in payment. The ship having arrived at her port of discharge, default was made in payment of the bond, and a suit was instituted by the bondholder against ship, freight, and cargo, to recover the amount of the loan and interest, and the additional premium of 10 per cent.:—Held, that the additional premium of 10 per cent. could not be enforced against the cargo, but that the bondholder was entitled to interest at 4 per cent. from the date when the bond became payable until payment. The Sophia Cook, 4 P. D. 30.

Bottomry Bond not providing for Payment of Interest.]—The master of a Danish vessel being without funds or credit at Hamburg, in order to obtain necessaries to enable his vessel to proceed on a voyage to Africa and back to London, obtained a loan on the security of instruments by which he pledged his vessel and bound himself for the repayment of the sum advanced within six days after the arrival of the vessel in London. No stipulation was made for interest of any kind:—Held, in an action of bottomry instituted against the vessel, that the instruments were valid bottomry bonds, and that the holders were entitled to payment out of the proceeds of the vessel of the sum advanced, together with 4 per cent. interest from the time when the bonds became due. The Cécilie, 4 P. D. 210; 40 L. T. 200; 4 Asp. M. C. 78.

In a bottomry bond taken at Calcutta, blanks had been left where the rate of interest ought to have been expressed; the court pronounced for the bond, with such interest as the registrar should find to have been usual on such risks at the time and place the bond was taken. The Change, Swabey, 240; 5 W. R. 547.

Interest, from what Date.] — Where the bottomry bondholder is resident abroad, and has no agent in this country, interest will not be payable prior to the arrival of a power of attorney to receive the principal. The New Brunswick, 1 W. Rob. 28.

First decree in bottomry suit. Interest from decree to payment out of proceeds of ship refused. The Exeter, 1 C. Rob. 173.

Excessive Premium—Power of Court to reduce.]—The court of admiralty has power to reduce the premium on bottomry bonds, but exercises it with caution. Premium reduced from 20 to 12½ per cent. on a voyage from Rochelle to London. The Cognac, 2 Hag. Adm. 377. S. P., The Zodiac 1 Hag. Adm. 320.

The court, judging the premium to be excessive, will refer it to the registrar and merchants to be reduced. The Huntley, Lush. 24.

See also The Pontida, infra, col. 227, as to the power of the registrar to reduce excessive premium.

—— Court of Equity.]—The plaintiff lent money on bottomry of a ship chartered to the East India Company, who broke her up in India. The bondholder brought his bill to have satisfaction out of damages recovered against the company by the shipowner. Bill dismissed—"for a court of equity will never assist a bottomry bond which carries an unreasonable interest." Dandy v. Turner, Eq. Ca. Abr. 372.

—— Does not Invalidate the Bond.]—The Lord Cochrane, 2 W. Rob. 312. S. P., The Laurel, supra, cols. 199, 201.

—— Usury Laws.]—See Sharpley v. Hurle, supra, col. 201.

8. JURISDICTION.

A bottomry bond given by a master with the consent of the owner, upon a British ship, lying in a British port, for a new voyage, cannot be sued upon in the court of admiralty; but it is otherwise if the ship was lying in a foreign port. The Royal Arch, Swabey, 269; 6 W. R. 191.

The court has jurisdiction in the case of a bottomry bond given by a British subject on the occasion of his purchasing a British ship abroad, and raising money for her outfit to return home and a new voyage. The Heligoland, Swabey, 491: 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1179.

The court has jurisdiction over bonds of respondentia as over bottomry bonds. The Sultan, Swabey, 504; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1069.

Prohibition in bottomry refused. Lister v. Baxter, 2 Str. 695.

The admiralty court has jurisdiction in case of a bottomry bond given in the course of a voyage, though executed on land and under seal. Menetone v. Gibbons, 3 Term Rep. 267.

The court of admiralty has jurisdiction in a case of bottomry where a bond has been given, or an agreement to execute a bond, though the ship has never put to sea. The Aline, 2 W. Rob. 111.

See also post, XXVI. ADMIRALTY LAW AND PRACTICE—PROHIBITIONS.

Jurisdiction of Admiralty Court not Exclusive—Chancery.]—A bill was filed to set aside a bottomry bond which had been given at Trieste without any communication from the captain to the owners in England, and as was alleged, by a fraudulent conspiracy between the captain and the obligee. The court supported the bond, but, at the request of the obligee, directed inquiries as to the amount due on the bond. Glascott v. Lang, 2 Ph. 310; 2 Ph. 323; 16 L. J., Ch. 429; 11 Jur. 642. And see S. C., 3 Myl. & Cr. 451; 8 Sim. 358; 2 Jur. 909.

The court of chancery had jurisdiction in respect of bottomry bonds. Dobson v. Lyall, 2 Ph. 323, n; 6 L. J., Ch. 115; 11 Jur. 179, n.; 3 Myl. & Cr. 433, n. And see S. C., 8 Jur. 969.

Injunction granted by the court of chancery to restrain proceedings in the admiralty court upon a bottomry bond and as to freight, upon the ground that there were equities that could be determined only in chancery. Duncan v. McCalmont, 3 Beav. 409; 10 L. J., Ch. 335; 5 Jur. 262.

—— Of Registrar and Merchants.]—See The Pontida, infra, col. 227.

9. PRACTICE.

Action on Bond.]—In an action of bottomry the original bond must be brought in before the validity of the bond is pronounced for. The Rowena, 37 L. T. 366; 26 W. R. 82; 3 Asp. M. C. 506. See The Jeune Nanette, infra, col. 227.

Owners of Cargo—Persona standi.]—Where the result of the suit mainly affected the owners of the cargo bottomried, the court allowed them to have a persona standi through the bondholder. The Union, Lush. 128; 30 L. J., Adm. 17; 3 L. T. 280.

Proceedings by Default—Reference—Cargo Owner.]—The owner of a bottomry bond on ship, freight and cargo, is, upon the conclusion of proceedings by default against ship and freight, entitled as of course to have the full freight due upon delivery of the cargo paid to him, in order to satisfy the sum secured by the bond with costs; and the owner of the cargo, who has paid the freight into court, is not entitled to a reference of the amount due on the bond, notwithstanding that, before the execution of the bond, part of his cargo was sold by the master, and the proceeds applied to the ship's expenses. The Gem of the Nith, Br. & Lush. 72.

Claim of Holder to Sum awarded for Loss of Freight.]—Semble, where in an action for limitation of liability a sum of money is awarded as compensation for loss of freight to the owners of a vessel run down by the plaintiff's ship, the holder of a bottomry bond on the freight of the vessel run down is entitled to claim, in respect of the loan on bottomry, a portion of the sum awarded for loss of freight. The Empusa, 48 L. J., Adm. 36; 5 P. D. 6; 41 L. T. 383; 28 W. R. 263; 4 Asp. M. C. 185.

Proof of Good Faith.]—In disputed cases of bottomry bonds the court expects that, where it is practicable, the master will, by his affidavit, shew affirmatively the good faith of his own transaction, and the circumstances relating to it. The Faithful, 31 L. J., Adm. 81.

Onus—Primâ facie Validity.]—Where the court has decreed the sale of a ship and cargo at the suit of a bottomry bondholder, whose right has not been questioned by the owner of the property, the bond must be taken to be primâ facie valid, and a bondholder has a right to require any other claimant to the proceeds in the registry to prove his interest before he can be called on to defend and maintain his own claim. The India, 32 L. J., Adm. 185; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 417; 9 L. T. 234; 11 W. R. 536.

Liability of Bail.]—When in a bottomry suit bail has been given generally to cover ship and freight, but the ship only is held to be pledged by the bond, the bail is only liable to the extent of the value of the ship at the time of release from arrest, and an inquiry will be directed to ascertain that value. The Staffordshire, Smith v. Bank of New South Wales, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 443; 41 L. J., Adm. 49; L. R. 4 P. C. 194; 27 L. T. 46; 20 W. R. 557; 1 Asp. M. C. 365.

Consent to Decree not Rescinded.]—Where a defendant in adequate possession of the facts has given his consent to a decree, pronouncing for the validity of a bottomry bond, the court will not rescind the decree, though the facts might possibly raise a valid defence, according to a decision pronounced subsequently to the decree. The Glenburn, Br. & Lush. 62; 11 W. R. 685.

Pleading.]—Action on bond to proceed to sea and to return, perils of the sea excepted; and to repay money advanced if the ship return, and if the ship be lost the bond to be void. Plea, that the ship was lost; demurrer, that loss by peril of the sea was intended. Demurrer overruled, because if loss by defendant's default was intended it should have been pleaded. Boddington v. Wotton, 2 Keb. 768.

War—Enforcement of Bond after Termination of.]—Bottomry bond put in suit by a French merchant in 1792—suspended during the war—not enforced during the following peace; then further prosecuted by a British subject, the indorsee, in 1804:—Held, that the bond could not be enforced in the original proceedings. The Rebecca, 5 C. Rob. 102.

Payment out of Court of Proceeds of Ship.]—Bottomry bond against ship, freight and cargo; judgment against ship and freight by default, the consignees of cargo contesting the bond. The proceeds of ship and freight paid out of court to the bondholders, notwithstanding the opposition of the cargo owners, on the ground that such proceeds might be liable to claims by him in respect of cargo sold by the master to pay for repairs or in respect of costs. The Lord Cochrane, 1 W. Rob. 312.

Jurisdiction of Registrar and Merchants—Reduction of Premium.] — The validity of a respondentia bond having been admitted, it was referred to the registrar and merchants to decide what amount was payable thereunder. The registrar and merchants reduced the full amount of the bond by lessening the charges in respect of certain metal and felt supplied to the ship, commissions payable to the agents, and the premium on the bond, on the ground that the amounts charged were unreasonable. The plaintiffs objected to the reduction, and filed pleadings in objection to the report:—Held, that it was within the jurisdiction of the registrar and merchants to reduce the amount payable under the bond, since the defendants were not bound to pay more than such sum as was required to pay for things actually necessary for the ship, and at a reasonable rate. The Pontida, 53 L. J., Adm. 78; 9 P. D. 177; 51 L. T. 849; 33 W. R. 38; 5 Asp. M. C. 330—C. A.

Held, also, that as the premium on the bond was excessive it had been rightly reduced, and that the report must be confirmed. Ib.

See also 7. INTEREST OR PREMIUM, supra.

Rights of Execution Creditor and Bondholder.]—The owner of a ship charged her for repairs done in England by instrument under seal stated to be by way of bottomry. She was arrested by admiralty process, and sold to satisfy the claim for repairs, and no appeal from the decree. Whilst the suit was pending a writ of execution issued against the shipowner at the suit of another creditor. The sheriff cannot seize the ship, nor maintain trover for her against the admiralty officer. Ladbroke v. Crickett, 2 Term Rep. 649; 1 R. R. 571.

Original Bond in Foreign Court.]—The court will not proceed upon an official or notarial copy of a bottomry bond, the original of which is preserved in a foreign court, without a certificate that no further copy has been or will be issued. The Jeune Nanette, 4 W. R. 92. See The Rowena, 26 W. R. 82, supra, col. 225.

Amount of Freight to be paid into Court to meet Bond—Advances by Charterer—Part Cargo sold.]—A ship was chartered to go to a port of loading, there to load and return, freight payable as per sale. On the voyage out the master hypothecated the cargo to be shipped, and the ship and freight. At the port of loading advances were made to the master by the charterers' agent, with notice of the bond. On the voyage home the master sold part of the cargo to pay ship's expenses:—Held, that the charterers might deduct the advances made abroad according to the charter, and by the charter declared to be deducted on settling freight, from the amount of chartered freight to be paid into court in respect of the bond; also that the freight which would have been payable upon the goods sold should be deducted; also that advances made to the master beyond the sum stipulated for in the charter should not be deducted, nor the value of the goods sold. The Salacia, Lush. 578.

Liability of Freight earned from Sub-shippers.]—Freight earned from sub-shippers of goods by permission of charterers of the whole ship is liable, as against the charterers, in payment of a bottomry bond given at the charterers' port for advances subsequent to the charterparty. The Eliza, 3 Hag. Adm. 87.

Action against Master—Arrest of Ship.]—A master, not a part owner, gave a bottomry bond. The holder being unable to arrest the ship, the bond being not yet payable, was about to sue the master. He applied for a warrant to arrest the ship, which was at Leith, to prevent her going to sea. Form of order made. The Lucovitch, 12 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.), 1090.

Proceedings abandoned—Fresh Proceedings instituted.]—Parties who have abandoned proceedings upon an alleged bottomry bond will not be allowed, except upon strong grounds shewn, to institute fresh proceedings upon the same bond. The Fortitudo, 2 Dods. 58.

10. COSTS.

Validity admitted — Amounts disputed.] — Where the bond is admitted to be valid, and referred to the registrar and merchants to report the amount due, the plaintiff is usually entitled to the general costs of the reference, but will be condemned in costs clearly occasioned by improperly persisting in claims which cannot be sustained. The Kepler, Lush. 201.

Foreigners Ignorant of the Law.]—Where the holders of a bond (foreigners) had acted solely under a misapprehension of English law, the court pronounced against the bond, but without costs. The North Star, Lush. 45; 29 L. J., Adm. 73; 2 L. T. 264.

Arrest before Bond payable.]—Where the holders of a bottomry bond, on ship and freight, payable seven days after the arrival of the ship, being apprehensive that her cargo would be discharged forthwith, and their security diminished, instituted a bottomry suit, after the arrival of the ship and before the expiration of the seventh day, and arrested the ship, the court, on the application of the owners of the ship, who had paid the amount of the bonds and interest into court, condemned the plaintiffs in costs. The Endora, 48 L. J., Adm. 32; 4 P. D. 208; 40 L. T. 166; 4 Asp. M. C. 78.

Large Deductions made by Registrar.]—Where, the bond having been pronounced for, large deductions are made by the registrar and merchants, the bondholder will be liable to the costs of the reference. The Catherine, 3 W. Rob. 1.

1. STAMPING.

See 54 & 55 Vict. c. 39.

Under previous Statutes.]—Brokers signed a properly-stamped charterparty as agents for their principals, and then, at the request of the owner of the ship, signed a guarantee as follows: "In consideration of our having signed the charterparty of —— as agents of ——, we hereby guarantee the due fulfilment of same":—Held, that this document was sufficiently stamped with a sixpenny stamp, as an agreement, and need not be stamped as a charterparty or an agreement for or relating to the freight or conveyance of money, goods and effects on board a ship, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 79, s. 2. Rein v. Lane, 8 B. & S. 83; 36 L. J., Q. B. 81; L. R. 2 Q. B. 144; 15 L. T. 466; 15 W. R. 345.

A copy of the charter signed by or on behalf of the charterer, though that copy is signed by the shipowner, is a copy, and admissible unstamped, if there is any evidence that the original was stamped. Smith v. Maguire, 1 F. & F. 199. See S. C., 3 H. & N. 554; 27 L. J., Ex. 465; 6 W. R. 726.

It is for the objector to a copy, even if a charterparty, on the ground that the original was not stamped, to make out that fact; at all events, very slight evidence to the contrary will be sufficient to rebut the objection, and a memorandum on the charter, "the brokers hold the original, stamped," is sufficient. Ib.

An unstamped charterparty was, within fourteen days allowed, by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 79, s. 21, for stamping such an instrument without payment of a penalty, delivered at the office of the subdistributor of stamps at Cardiff, for the purpose of being transmitted to London to be stamped, the proper amount of stamp duty and postage being left with it. The clerk in that office, to whom it was delivered, proved that he sent to London all documents left with him for that purpose, but he had no recollection of the document in question. The clerks in the office in London were unable to say whether or not the document reached their hands, but they said that, if it did, it would, in the usual course, be returned to the district office in the country. The clerk at Cardiff could not say whether the document was returned to him or not, but he stated that, on search being made for it, no trace of it could be discovered:—Held, that this sufficiently raised a presumption that the document was stamped, so as to let in secondary evidence of its contents. Closmadeuc v. Carrel, 18 C. B. 36; 25 L. J., C. P. 216; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 474; 4 W. R. 547.

Executed Abroad—Evidence.]—A charterparty executed entirely abroad, and stamped within two months after it had been received in this country, can be received in evidence, since it falls within the provisions of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, s. 15, and not of ss. 67 & 68 of that act. The Belfort, 53 L. J., Adm. 88; 9 P. D. 215; 51 L. T. 271; 33 W. R. 171; 5 Asp. M. C. 291.

2. THE CONTRACT.

a. Parties.

Mistake as to.]—Action by charterer on a charterparty. Defence, that the charterparty was made between the defendant and a company, and not the plaintiff. Reply, that the agreement was between the plaintiff and the defendant; that in drawing up the charterparty one of the company's printed forms was used, on which the name of the company appeared as charterers; that by the mistake of the plaintiff and the defendant the company's name was omitted to be struck out, and remained instead of the plaintiff's name; that the charterparty was signed by the plaintiff and the defendant, and it was intended and agreed that the plaintiff should be liable and entitled under it:—Held, that it was unnecessary that the charterparty should be rectified, and that the reply was good. Breslauer v. Barwick, 36 L. T. 52; 3 Asp. M. C. 353.

To an action on a charterparty for not loading, the defendants pleaded that they entered into the charterparty solely as agents for D., and that, before they signed, it was agreed that they were only to sign as agents, so as to bind D., and not to render themselves liable as principals for the performance of the charterparty, and that they signed it as follows, "For D. T. and H., agents"; they and the plaintiff bonâ fide believing at the time that they, having so signed, would not be personally liable, and that they had power to bind D., and that he was bound by it, and liable to be sued, and that the plaintiff was inequitably taking advantage of the mistake in drawing the charterparty so as to make the defendants personally liable as charterers, contrary to the intention of the plaintiff and the defendants :—Held, that the plea was good on equitable grounds, and also a good plea at law. Wake v. Harrop, 1 H. & C. 202 ; 31 L. J., Ex. 451 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 845 ; 7 L. T. 96 ; 10 W. R. 626—Ex. Ch.

Charterparty under Seal — Execution by Agents.]—A charterparty under seal cannot be executed by an agent not authorised under seal. Horsley v. Rush, cited, 7 Term Rep. 209.

Master may Sue without joining Co-owners.]—The master, a part owner, may sue above upon a charterparty made between himself and the charterer, without joining the other part owners. Seeger v. Duthie, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 72 ; 30 L. J., C. P. 65 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 239 ; 3 L. T. 478 ; 9 W. R. 166—Ex. Ch.

Who entitled to Sue—Principal or Agent.]—In an action on a charterparty executed not by the plaintiff but by a third person, who in the contract described himself as "owner of the ship" :—Held, that evidence was not admissible to shew that such person contracted merely as the plaintiff's agent. Humble v. Hunter, 12 Q. B. 310 ; 17 L. J., Q. B. 350.

A declaration alleged a charterparty to be made "between A., therein described as the owner of the good ship called, &c., of the one part, and S., merchant and freighter, of the other part." The charterparty when produced was expressed to be made between A. of the one part and S., "as agent of the freighter," of the other part, and stipulated that, "being concluded on behalf of another party, it is agreed that all responsibility on the part of S. cease as soon as the cargo is shipped." No principal was named in the charterparty, and it appeared that S. was, in point of fact, himself the real freighter, and not merely an agent in the matter :—Held, that he was entitled to sue as principal for a breach of the charterparty, notwithstanding he had contracted as agent, and that the above stipulation applying only to his character of agent, had not the effect of limiting his responsibility as principal. Schalmtz or Schmalz v. Avery, 16 Q. B. 655 ; 20 L. J., Q. B. 228 ; 15 Jur. 291.

A contract for the conveyance of goods from Liverpool to Australia was entered into as follows : "It is this day mutually agreed between J. and R. W., owners of the ship 'Jessica,' of the first part, and S. J. C. of the other part," that the ship should be ready by a given day to take on board certain goods, and should proceed therewith to Geelong and there deliver the same ; "the rates of freight determined upon by the parties to this agreement are as under," &c., "one-third to be paid in London, on receipt of bills of lading, and the remainder by the Geelong and Melbourne Railway Company, at Geelong" ; "goods to be taken on board at Liverpool at ship's expense" ; and the agreement was signed "J. and R. W., S. J. C." :—Held, that S. J. C. was personally bound by this contract and entitled to sue for a breach of it. Cooke v. Wilson, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 153 ; 26 L. J., C. P. 15 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1094 ; 5 W. R. 24.

Whilst a vessel was yet to arrive, the charterer's agents (the consignees of the cargo) appropriated the cargo and indorsed the bill of lading through other persons to the plaintiffs. The ship was delayed and the cargo damaged. The plaintiffs sustained no loss by deterioration, for under their contract they paid for the cargo after deductions settled by arbitration for the damage done to it :—Held, that they were entitled to sue in their own names or even as trustees for the consignees. The Wilhelm Schmidt, 25 L. T. 34 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 82.

Broker for Commission under.]—A charterparty made between captain and charterers contained a clause providing for payment of commission to the broker for negotiating the charter :—Held, that the broker could not sue in rem under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 51), s. 2, sub-s. 1, as he was not a party to the charter. The Nuova Raffaelina, 41 L. J., Adm. 37 ; L. R. 3 A. & E. 483 ; 24 L. T. 321 ; 20 W. R. 216 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 16.

Liability to be Sued—Principal or Agent.]—The defendants, acting as agents for L., chartered a ship for the conveyance of a cargo of currants from the Ionian Islands. The charterparty was expressed to be made and was signed by the defendants as "agents to merchants," the name of the principal not being disclosed :—Held, that evidence was admissible in an action by the shipowners against the defendants upon the charterparty, of a trade usage, by which, if the name of the principal is not disclosed within a reasonable time, the agents themselves are personally liable. Hutchinson v. Tatham, 42 L. J., C. P. 260 ; L. R. 8 C. P. 482 ; 29 L. T. 103 ; 22 W. R. 18.

The plaintiffs and defendants entered into a charter of the ship R. to load a cargo of deals. In the body of the charter the defendants were described as follows : "It is this day mutually agreed between Messrs. J. H. & Co., of Newcastle, for owners of the good ship R." The defendants signed the charterparty at the foot, as follows : "For owners, J. H. & Co." A cargo was loaded on board the ship at Hudigsval, and the captain signed a bill of lading for it, stating that he had received it in good condition. The cargo was ultimately delivered to the plaintiffs at Gloucester, and was found on delivery to have been injured to the extent of 50*l*. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants for the damage, in a county court, three letters, which had passed between the plaintiffs and the defendants and their solicitors, were admitted, and as soon as the plaintiffs' evidence was closed, the defendants' solicitor objected that there was no evidence against the defendants as principals, and applied for a nonsuit, on the ground that it appeared upon the charterparty that the defendants were not principals but only agents of the owner. The judge overruled the objection, and decided that the defendants were liable as principals. On an appeal :—Held, that there was evidence to support the decision that the defendants were liable as principals. Adams v. Hall, 37 L. T. 70 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 1.

Action on a contract alleged to have been made by the defendant, to charter a ship for the plaintiff. Proof, that the defendant made a memorandum of charterparty in B.'s name, and purporting to be signed by the defendant as agent of B. ; that the defendant had no authority to contract for B., and knew that he had none, and that B. refused to adopt the contract :—Held, that the defendant was not liable as principal in an action on the contract itself, and a nonsuit was entered. Jenkins v. Hutchinson, 13 Q. B. 744 ; 18 L. J., Q. B. 274.

By charterparty it was agreed between the plaintiff, owner of a ship, and the defendants, of London, merchants, that the ship should proceed to T., and there load from the factors of the merchants a full and complete cargo at the merchants' risk and expense, which the merchants bound themselves to ship; and being so loaded should proceed to Memel, and deliver the same on being paid freight, half to be paid on unloading, in cash, and the remainder in good bills on London; thirty running days to be allowed the merchants for loading at T. and discharging at Memel. "By authority of and as agents for S. of Memel, R. and F., J. M. L." (signatures of the defendants and the plaintiff): —Held, that the defendants were contracting parties, and therefore were personally liable for breach of the charterparty. Lennard v. Robinson, 5 El. & Bl. 125; 3 C. L. R. 1363; 24 L. J., Q. B. 275; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 853.

A memorandum of charterparty was expressed to be made between "P., of the good ship 'C.,' and W., agent for E. W. & Son," to whom the ship was to be addressed. It was signed by W., without any restriction:—Held, that he was personally liable as charterer. Parker v. Winlow, 7 El. & Bl. 942; 27 L. J., Q. B. 49; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 64.

A charterparty was made in the following terms: "It is this day mutually agreed between George Deslandes & Son, owners of the ship called 'The Deslandes,' now lying in the port of London, of the one part, and Messrs. Gregory Brothers, as agents to Samuel Ferguson, of Anamaboo, merchants and charterers, of the other part," and was signed, "For George Deslandes & Son, of Jersey, owners, H. Gammon, as agent; for Samuel Ferguson, Esq., of Anamaboo, Gregory Brothers, as agents":—Held, that Gregory Brothers were not personally liable. Deslandes v. Gregory, 2 El. & El. 602; 30 L. J., Q. B. 36; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 651; 2 L T. 634; 8 W. R. 585—Ex. Ch.

On the 24th of June the defendants, who were shipbrokers, wrote to the plaintiffs, offering them "room" in a ship called "F. K. Dumas," for certain cement and stone from London to Callao. On the 25th of June the defendants chartered the ship for the voyage, the charterparty providing, inter alia, that the whole ship should be at the disposal of the charterers, except the space necessary for the crew and stores; that the master and owners should give the same attention to the cargo, and in every respect be responsible to all whom it might concern, as if the ship were loaded at her berth by and for the owners, independently of the charter; that the master was to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight the charterers might require, without prejudice to the charterparty; and that the charterers' responsibility, except for freight, should cease on the vessel being loaded. On the 26th of June an agreement was made between the defendants, acting for the owners of the "F. K. Dumas," and the plaintiffs, that the former should receive on board cement and stone, at certain freight, from London to Callao, and sail on a certain day: freight to be paid one-half on signing bills of lading, and the remainder on final discharge at Callao. The cement and stone were shipped, the half freight paid, and the master signed bills of lading, making the remainder payable at Callao. On her voyage, the ship, being damaged by bad weather, put into an intermediate port, where the vessel was condemned. The master, being unable to forward the plaintiffs' goods to their destination, sold them. In an action against the defendants for their value, the jury found that the sale was not justified:—Held, that, on the construction of the above documents, there was no contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants for the carriage of the goods from London to Callao. Wagstaff v. Anderson, 49 L. J., C. P. 485; 5 C. P. D. 171; 42 L. T. 720; 28 W. R. 856—C. A.

A charterparty, on its face, purported to be accepted by M. G. by procuration of T. G. To shew the authority of M. G., evidence was adduced that T. G., although resident in London, carried on business of a corn factor at Limerick, where the charterparty was executed, and that M. G. was his brother, and had the general management of his business and warehouses there, and was in the habit of sending great quantities of corn to London by vessels hired and the charterparties signed by him, by procuration of T. G.:—Held, that the jury was at liberty to find that M. G. had a general authority so as to bind the brother, although in fact no authority had been given by him to execute this charterparty, and it was one in which he had no interest. Smith v. M'Guire, 3 H. & N. 554; 27 L. J., Ex. 465; 6 W. R. 726. S. C., at nisi prius, 1 F. & F. 199.

—— Agent of Government.]—A person entering into a charterparty in his own name, on behalf of government, is personally liable. Cunningham v. Collier, 4 Dougl. 233.

—— Agent for the Charterer.]—See Hough v. Manzanos, infra, col. 294.

—— Partner.]—To a declaration for freight due on a charterparty made between the plaintiff as owner, and W. & Co. as merchants and freighters, they pleaded that they entered into the charterparty solely as agents for M.: and that, before they signed the charterparty, it was agreed and understood they were only to sign it as such agents, and were not to make themselves liable as principals for the payment of the freight to become due under such charter; that they signed as follows, "For M., of C., W. & Co., agents," the defendants and the plaintiff bonâ fide believing at the time the charter was made that they having so signed would not be liable to be sued on the charter; that they had power to bind M., and that the plaintiff was inequitably taking advantage of their mistake in drawing the charter. At the trial the defendant, who signed the charterparty on behalf of the defendants' firm, deposed to a conversation between himself and the plaintiff at the time of signing the charter, which supported the plea; the plaintiff admitted that the defendant had correctly testified to what he, the defendant, had said, but affirmed that he, the plaintiff, had said nothing, or if he had made any remark he could not then, at the trial, remember what he had said. The judge directed the jury that if they believed the defendant had at the time of signing expressed his intention not to render his firm personally liable by so doing they were to find for the defendants, which they accordingly did:—Held, on a motion for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, inasmuch as the judge should have gone on to tell the jury that they must find that the plaintiff was an assenting party to the defendant's expression of his intention not to render his firm liable by his signature to the charter, that the whole of the facts having been before the jury, the direction was sufficient to bring before the jury the issue they had to decide. Cowie v. Witt, 23 W. R. 76.

Adding Parties—Ord. XVI. rr. 11, 48—Non-joinder of Party residing out of the Jurisdiction.]—A defendant cannot claim as of right to have his joint contractor in a charterparty, who is resident out of the jurisdiction, added as a party under Ord. XVI. r. 11. Wilson v. Killick, 68 L. T. 312; 7 Asp. M. C. 275.

Recovery by One not a Party—Deed Poll.]—Charterparty by indenture sealed and delivered, but not being inter partes, whereby the defendant covenanted to pay for the hire of the ship a certain sum to B., master and part owner, and to C. 300*l.*:—Held, that the indenture being in the nature of a deed poll, C. could recover upon it. Cooker v. Child, 2 Lev. 74.

If a charterparty is expressed to be made between A., owner of the ship whereof B. is master, and C.; and contains covenants by C. with A. and B.: B. cannot sue thereon, although he seals and delivers the instrument. Scudamore v. Vandenstone, 2 Rol. Abr. 22; 2 Co. Inst. 673.

b. Legality.

Cargo of Hay—Landing Forbidden.]—By a charterparty made by the charterer's agent in France, a ship was chartered, and it was stipulated that the ship should load a cargo of pressed hay at Trouville, in France, and proceed direct to London; and all cargo was to be brought and taken from ship alongside. The agent verbally told the master that the consignees would require the hay to be delivered at a particular wharf in the port of London, to which the master assented. On arriving in that port the master was unable to land the hay at the wharf, by reason of an order in council under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1869, forbidding hay from a French port to be landed in the United Kingdom. The order had been made before the charterparty was entered into, but neither party knew of it. After some delay the charterer received the hay from alongside the ship into another vessel, and exported it. There was no legal obstacle to doing this, but eighteen days were allowed by the charterer to elapse beyond the lay days. The shipowner having brought an action for this detention of his ship, the charterer contended that the contract was for an illegal purpose, and therefore void:—Held, that although it was the intention of the parties, when the charterparty was entered into, to land the hay at London, yet as the contract was not made knowingly with the intention to violate the law, and as it could be carried out (as it ultimately was) without violating the law, it was not void; and the charterer was, therefore, liable for the demurrage. Waugh v. Morris, 42 L. J., Q. B. 57; L. R. 8 Q. B. 202; 28 L. T. 265; 21 W. R. 438. See also Haines v. Bush, post, col. 285.

Early Charterparty.]—Declaration reciting charterparty, dated 1698. Thornton c. Bethel, Lutw. 704.

Intention.]—It is important not to give to a mercantile instrument such as a charterparty an unnecessarily strict construction, but such a construction as with reference to the context and the object of the contract would effectuate the obvious and expressed intention of the parties. Dimech v. Corlett, 12 Moore, P. C. 199.

Agreement not in Writing.]—An agreement between the owners and the merchants for the employment of a ship on a voyage, not in writing, but acted upon by the parties, is equivalent to a charterparty. Lidgett v. Williams, 4 Hare, 462; 14 L. J., Ch. 459.

Ratification by Master of.]—G., a shipbroker at G. G., chartered the Finnish vessels F. and M. prior to their arrival at G. G., and without communication with the owners. G. had on several previous occasions chartered the F. and M. under similar circumstances, and all of these charterparties had been carried into effect. After the arrival of the F. and M. at G. G. their masters were on several occasions at G.'s office, and were shewn their charterparties. A fortnight after the vessels' arrival at G. G., during which time freights had risen, the masters refused to take up the charterparties:—Held, that the masters, by their conduct, had not ratified the charterparties in such a way as to make the act a complete ratification. The Funny, The Mathilda, 48 L. T. 771; 5 Asp. M. C. 75—C. A.

Insurance—Reference to Charterparty—Bill of Lading—Sale at Price to include Cost, Insurance and Freight.]—A. & Co., merchants in France, agreed with B., a merchant at Glasgow, to buy a cargo of 1,000 tons of coal at a certain price per ton, to include cost, insurance and freight to Rochefort. B. chartered a steamer in his own name to carry the coal, and at the request of A. & Co. put on board thirty tons of iron bought by him for A. & Co. The charterparty exempted the shipowners from liability for loss from dangers of navigation caused by negligence of master or crew. B. took a bill of lading in his own name, exempting the shipowners from liability for loss by dangers of navigation (no mention of negligence), and bound the shipowners to deliver "on being paid freight, all other conditions as per charter." The bill of lading for the iron was in similar form, but made no reference to the charter. B. insured the coals and iron in his own name and in the name of all to whom the same might appertain, for sums exceeding the invoice price. On the ship sailing, B. sent A. & Co. the bills of lading indorsed to them, and the charterparty. The ship and cargo were lost by negligence of master and crew. B. received the insurance moneys, and credited A. & Co. with the invoice prices of the iron and coals. A. & Co., in the interest of the insurers, sued B. for nondelivery according to bill of lading:—Held, as to the coals, that they became the property of A. & Co. on shipment, and that the pursuers were entitled to recover; the negligence clause not being imported into the bill of lading:—Held, also, as to the iron, that the pursuers, being subject to the conditions of the charterparty, were not entitled to recover. Delaurier v. Wyllie, 17 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 167.

Bill of Lading differing from Charterparty.]—The plaintiff chartered the defendant's ship for carriage of a cargo of cotton-seed from Alexandria to the United Kingdom. The charterparty provided that the master was to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight and as customary at port of lading without prejudice to the stipulation of the charterparty. There was also a cesser of liability clause. A cargo was shipped under the charterparty at Alexandria by and on account of the charterers, and a bill of lading was given containing an exception, which was not in the charterparty, protecting the shipowners from liability for damage arising from any act, neglect or default of the pilot, master or mariners. The cargo was lost by the negligence of the master. In an action for nondelivery of the cargo, the jury found that there was no special custom at Alexandria with regard to the form of bill of lading in use there:—Held, that, whether such finding were right or wrong, the terms of the charterparty did not authorise the giving of a bill of lading containing the before-mentioned exception; and that, even if they did, in the absence of express provision to the contrary, as between the shipowners and the charterers only the charterparty could be regarded as constituting the contract, and the bill of lading must be looked on as a mere receipt for the goods; and consequently that the defendants were liable for nondelivery of the cargo. Rodocanachi v. Milburn, 56 L. J., Q. B. 202; 18 Q. B. D. 67; 56 L. T. 594; 35 W. R. 241; 6 Asp. M. C. 100—C. A.

Reading with Bill of Lading.]—The excepted perils mentioned in the charterparty were more numerous than those in the bill of lading:—Held, that, under the circumstances, both instruments together contained the contract. The San Roman, 41 L. J., Adm. 72; L. R. 3 A. & E. 583; 26 L. T. 948. Affirmed, 42 L. J., Adm. 46; L. R. 5 P. C. 301; 21 W. R. 393; 1 Asp. M. C. 603.

A vessel was chartered to carry a cargo of coals from Cardiff to Rouen. The charterparty provided that the liability of the charterers should cease "when the ship is loaded and advance of freight with demurrage at Cardiff paid. Ship to have a lien on cargo for freight, dead freight and demurrage." The bill of lading contained no restriction on the liability of the charterers. In an action for balance of freight:—Held, that the charterparty and bill of lading must be read together, and construed according to the plain meaning on the face of them, and that the charterer's liability ceased on performance of the conditions in the charterparty. Barwick v. Burnyeat, 36 L. T. 250; 25 W. R. 395; 3 Asp. M. C. 376. See also Gullichsen v. Stewart, post, col. 449.

—— With Letters.]—A charterparty was explained and construed by letters for the purpose of fixing the liability under it upon persons signing the charterparty "for owners." Adams v. Hall, 37 L. T. 70; 3 Asp. M. C. 1.

General Ship—Inquiry by Shipper as to Charterparty.] — When a vessel about to sail is advertised as a general ship, an intending shipper is not bound to inquire as to the existence of any charterparty. Peek v. Larsen, 40 L. J., Ch. 763; L. R. 12 Eq. 378; 25 L. T. 580; 19 W. R. 1045; 1 Asp. M. C. 163.

A Norwegian vessel was advertised as a general ship by C. & Co., an English firm, described in the advertisement as brokers. The plaintiffs entered into an agreement with C. & Co. for the carriage of certain goods at a stipulated rate of freight, and placed the goods on board before they had notice of any charterparty affecting the ship. It was afterwards proved that C. & Co. were charterers of the vessel under a charterparty, which provided that the owner should have a lien for freight, dead freight and demurrage. The captain refused to sign bills of lading, except subject to the charterparty, or to return the goods to the plaintiffs:—Held, that the owners of the ship were not entitled to retain the goods in satisfaction of their claims under the charterparty, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the goods delivered to them free from any claim by the shipowners. Ib.

Sub-Charter—Notice to Shipper.]—A shipper, who has loaded on the terms of a sub-charter, is not affected by notice of a stipulation in the original charterparty that the owner is to have "a lien on the cargo for arrears of hire." He has a right to have bills of lading signed on the terms of the sub-charter. Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Mining Co. v. Culliford, 22 W. R. 46.

Bill of Lading—Notice to Shipper.]—The goods of a shipper in a general ship are not affected by a clause in a charterparty of which he has no notice or knowledge, giving the shipowner a lien on all cargo and freight for arrears of hire due under the charterparty. The Stornoway, 51 L. J., Adm. 27; 46 L. T. 773; 4 Asp. M. C. 529.

Captain to be Agent of Charterers—Liability of Owners for Captain's Acts.]—Where a charterparty contains a provision that the captain shall be the agent and servant of the charterers for all purposes, and shall sign bills of lading only as their agent, the liability of the owners to third parties in respect of his acts depends upon whether he was in fact their servant or the charterers' only; and upon that question the charterparty is not conclusive:—Held, in such a case, that the captain was the servant of the owners, who were therefore liable upon bills of lading signed by him. Scheibler v. Furness ([1893] A. C. 8) and Colvin v. Newberry (8 B. & C. 166) distinguished. Manchester Trust Co. v. Turner, or Furness, 64 L. J., Q. B. 766; [1895] 2 Q. B. 539; 14 R. 739; 73 L. T. 110; 44 W. Bill of Lading varying from Charterparty — Parol Proof.]—By charterparty a ship was to carry cement from London to Aberdeen and Cruden, a port north of Aberdeen, delivering 100 tons at Aberdeen and the rest at Cruden, the freight for the latter being higher than for the Aberdeen portion. In the bill of lading the order of the ports was reversed. In an action for freight:—Held, that parol evidence was admissible that the bill of lading was varied from the charterparty with consent of the consignees' agent, and that the master had complied with the contract by going to Cruden first and tendering delivery there. Davidson v. Bisset, 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 706.

"Port Charges"—Light Dues—Deviation.]—Upon a voyage from South American ports to Leith the charterers of a ship exercised an option, reserved to them upon payment of port charges, of discharging part of their cargo at Deptford. In consequence of the ship entering the port of London the whole of the light dues up to and including Leith became payable. But for this deviation the light dues would have been payable at Leith by the shipowners. To avoid detention in the port of London the charterers paid all the light dues demanded, but claimed to set them off against balance of freight, upon the ground that they were not port charges:—Held, that the light dues were port charges, payable by the charterers in the terms of the charterparty. Newman v. Lamport, 65 L. J., Q. B. 102; [1896] 1 Q. B. 20; 73 L. T. 475; 8 Asp. M. C. 76.

Towage—Delay—Extent of Deviation Authorised.]—A general clause giving a steamer "liberty to tow and be towed and assist vessels in all situations," must be construed as limited to deviations which do not frustrate the object of the contract. Potter v. Burrell, infra, col. 264.

Joint Account—Partnership.]—A clause in a charterparty, that "any profit or loss on the charter shall be equally divided between owners and charterers," does not create a partnership between the owners and charterers so as to deprive the former of their right of action against the latter for demurrage. Ib.

Consignees to take Cargo "from alongside Ship"—Custom—Lighters.]—A custom in the wood trade in the port of London which imposes an obligation on a shipowner to discharge a cargo of long lengths of timber into lighters, is not inconsistent with a clause in a charterparty under which the cargo is to be taken from alongside the ship at merchant's risk and expense. Aktieselkab Helios v. Ekman, 66 L. J., Q. B. 538; [1897] 2 Q. B. 83; 76 L. T. 537—C. A.

ii. Law Applicable.

Lex loci contractûs.]—Primâ facie, the law of the place where a contract is made is that which the parties intended, or ought to be presumed to have adopted, as the footing upon which they dealt, and such law ought to prevail in the absence of circumstances indicating a different intention; but a contract of affreightment made between a charterer and owners of the ship, being persons of different nationalities, in a place where both of them were foreigners, to be performed partly there by the ship breaking ground in order to start for the port of lading, a place where both parties would also have been foreigners; partly at the latter port, by taking the cargo on board; and partly on board the ship at sea, subject there to the laws of the country of the ship; and partly by final delivery at the port of discharge—is to be construed by the law of the nation of the ship. Lloyd v. Guibert, 6 B. & S. 100; 35 L. J., Q. B. 74; L. R. 1 Q. B. 115; 13 L. T. 602.—Ex. Ch.

A British subject at a Danish West India island chartered a ship belonging to French subjects, for a voyage from St. Marc, in Haiti, to Havre, London or Liverpool, at the charterer's option, he knowing that the ship was French. The charterparty was entered into by the master, in pursuance of his general authority as such, and not by any special authority from the owners. The charterer shipped a cargo at St. Marc for Liverpool. On her voyage the ship sustained damage from a storm, which compelled her to put into a Portuguese port. There the master properly borrowed money upon bottomry of the ship, freight and cargo, and repaired her, and she proceeded with the cargo, and arrived safely at Liverpool. The bondholder proceeded in the court of admiralty against the ship, freight and cargo, which being insufficient to satisfy the bond, he sued the owners to indemnify him for the deficiency. They abandoned the ship and freight in such a manner as, by the French law, absolved them from liability:—Held, that the charterer was not entitled to recover, because the French law, as being that of the ship, governed the case. Ib.

The master of a German ship while at Constantinople, by a charterparty, partly in English and partly in German, and entered into with Germans, chartered his ship to take a cargo from Taganrog to England, Havre or Hamburg:—Held, that the contract must be construed according to German law. The Express, 41 L. J., Adm. 79; L. R. 3 A. & E. 597; 26 L. T. 956; 1 Asp. M. C. 355.

A German ship, while in a German port, was chartered by a charterparty in the English language by English charterers, and the ports of call for orders and of final delivery of cargo were English. On a question of delay in delivery of cargo:—Held, that the contract must be governed by English law. The San Roman, 42 L. J., Adm. 46; L. R. 5 P. C. 301; 21 W. R. 393; 1 Asp. M. C. 603—P. C.

Intention of Parties.]—The master of a North German ship lying at Constantinople entered into a charterparty with North German subjects there resident, to carry a cargo to a port in the United Kingdom or on the Continent, to be delivered to English consignees. The charterparty and the bill of lading given under it were in the English language, and it was stipulated that the ship should call at one of three ports of the United Kingdom for orders. The ship duly called at Falmouth, and was ordered to proceed to an English port to discharge:—Held, that as the intention of the parties as to what law should govern was to be gathered from the circumstances of the case, and as the giving of the orders fixed the seat of the contract in England, the law of England applied. The Wilhelm Schmidt, 25 L. T. 34; 1 Asp. M. C. 82.

Law of the Flag.]—A claim was made by an American citizen in the winding-up of a British steamship company for damages for the loss of his cattle arising through the negligence of the master and crew. The ship in which the cattle were carried was a British ship trading between Boston and Liverpool. The charterparty contained express stipulations exempting the company from liability caused by the negligence of the master and crew. The cattle were shipped at Boston, and bills of lading were given there, in conformity with the contract. The ship stranded on the coast of North Wales, owing, as was admitted, to the negligence of the master and crew. According to the law of the state of Massachusetts, as at present ascertained, the stipulations exempting the owners from liability through negligent navigation were void; but according to English law such stipulations were good, and were usually inserted in English bills of lading. The question was whether the law of the flag (that is to say, the personal law of the shipowner) or the lex loci contractûs should govern the contract of affreightment:—Held, on the authority of Lloyd v. Guibert (1 L. R., Q. B. 155), that the stipulations were valid, first on the general ground that the contract was governed by the law of the flag; and, secondly, on the particular ground that from the special provisions of the contract itself it appeared that the parties were contracting with a view to the law of England. Missouri Steamship Co., Monroe's Claim, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 721; 42 Ch. D. 321; 61 L. T. 316; 37 W. R. 696—C. A.

Freight—Sale of Part of Cargo at Port of Distress.]—By a charterparty, in usual English form, made in London between the agents of the German owner of a German vessel and the defendants, who carried on business in England, the vessel was chartered to the defendants to load a cargo of rice at Bassein and deliver the same as ordered, at a port in the United Kingdom or on the continent between Havre and Hamburg, the freight to be paid on right delivery of the cargo. On the voyage the vessel encountered bad weather and had to put into a port of distress. A quantity of the rice was found to be so much damaged by sea water that it could not be carried on, and was condemned and sold. In an action by the shipowner to recover freight in respect of the rice so sold, the plaintiff contended that the charterparty was governed by the law of the flag, and that, under German law, full freight was payable in respect of the rice justifiably sold at the port of distress:—Held, that under the circumstances, the contract was an English contract, to be construed according to English law; and that, therefore, no freight was payable in respect of the rice sold at the port of distress. The Industrie, 63 L. J., Adm. 84; [1864] P. 58; 6 R. 681; 70 L. T. 791; 42 W. R. 280; 7 Asp. M. C. 457—C. A.

iii. Proceeding to a Port, or as near as the Ship can safely get.

Insufficient Water in Dock—Right of Charterers to order Ship to wait for Spring Tide.]—A charterparty made between English shipowners and English charterers provided that the ship should proceed to a dock in an English port, or so near thereunto as she might safely get, and there load a cargo always afloat as and where ordered by charterers. The depth of water in the dock was such that the ship could only load a full cargo always afloat during spring tides. The ship arrived in the dock and was ordered by the charterers to a berth, to which she proceeded, but after loading part of the cargo left the dock, because, the spring tides being over, she would otherwise have taken the ground, and demanded the rest of the cargo at the nearest place at which she could safely load always afloat:—Held (A. L. Smith, L.J., dissentiente), that the charterers were not bound to order the ship to a berth where she could load immediately, but were entitled to give an order for a berth in which the ship could load always afloat within a reasonable time, and that, as the shipowners must be taken to have known the ordinary conditions of the depth of water in the dock, and as the order given was such that it might have been obeyed at the next spring tides, it was a reasonable order, which the charterers were entitled to give. Carlton Steamship Co. v. Castle Mail Packets Co., 66 L. J., Q. B. 819; [1897] 2 Q. B. 485; 77 L. T. 332; 46 W. R. 68—C. A.

"And There load a full Cargo."]—A stipulation that a ship shall proceed to a certain place, or as near thereto as she can safely get, and there load a full cargo, means such a place to which she can safely get, and from which, when loaded, she can safely get away. Shield v. Wilkins, 5 Ex. 304; 19 L. J., Ex. 238.

Ship unable to lie Afloat without being lightened.]—Where a vessel is chartered to proceed with cargo to a "safe port . . . as ordered, or as near thereunto as she can safely get, and always lie and discharge afloat," the master is not bound to discharge at a port where she cannot, by reason of her draught of water, "always lie and discharge afloat" without being lightened, even if she can be lightened with reasonable dispatch and safety in the immediate vicinity of the port or in the port itself. A vessel was chartered to proceed with a cargo of grain from Baltimore to Falmouth for orders, "thence to a safe port in the United Kingdom as ordered, or as near thereunto as she could safely get, and always lie and discharge afloat." The vessel was ordered to Lowestoft. Her draught of water, when loaded, was such that she could not lie afloat in Lowestoft harbour without discharging a portion of her cargo, but the discharge of cargo might have been carried on with reasonable safety in Lowestoft roads. The consignee offered at his own expense to lighten the vessel in the roads, but the master refused to proceed to Lowestoft to discharge, and went to Harwich as the nearest safe port, and there discharged the cargo:—Held, that the consignee could not recover damages against the shipowner for the refusal of the master to discharge at Lowestoft. The Alhambra, 50 L. J., Adm. 36; 6 P. D. 68; 43 L. T. 636; 29 W. R. 655; 4 Asp. M. C. 410; —C. A.

To sail to London, Surrey Commercial Docks.]—A charterparty for a ship to sail to "London, Surrey Commercial Docks" is not satisfied by the ship arriving at the gate of the docks, but not entering into the docks. Dahl v. Donkin or Nelson, 50 L. J., Ch. 411; 6 App. Cas. 38; 44 L. T. 381; 29 W. R. 543; 4 Asp. M. C. 392—H. L. (E.)

Charterer's Duties as to securing a Discharging Berth.]—There is no established custom in the port of London by which the charterer of a timber-loaded ship is bound to secure for the vessel, on its arrival in the river, and in close contiguity to the docks named, the authority to enter into the docks. The charterparty was to "London, Surrey Commercial Docks, or as near thereto as she may safely get, and lie always afloat." As the docks were full the ship could not be given a discharging berth, and the dock manager therefore refused it entrance into the docks. Both parties having named these docks in the charterparty, this refusal of the dock authorities was held not to be the fault of either party. The cause of the delay as to being admitted into the docks was immaterial; the length of the delay was material. The charterer would not name any other dock to which the ship might be taken. The ship's master therefore took it to the Deptford buoys (the nearest place to the Surrey Commercial Docks where it could lie in safety afloat), and there discharged the cargo by lighters, carrying the timber into the Surrey Commercial Docks, where it was afterwards sorted and put in order on the wharf:—Held, that, under the circumstances existing in this case, the delay in discharging the cargo was to be attributed to the charterer, who therefore became liable to demurrage, and to the charges for unloading. Ib.

"So near thereto as She may safely get at all Times of Tide and always Afloat."]—A ship was chartered to unload at S. or "as near thereto as she might safely get at all times of tide and always afloat," and for delay in unloading the charterers were to pay demurrage. The state of the tide prevented the ship from reaching S. for four days after she arrived at the nearest point where she was able to float:—Held, that, according to the terms of the charterparty, this was a sufficient arrival of the ship at S. to found a claim for demurrage. Horsley v. Price, 52 L. J., Q. B. 603; 11 Q. B. D. 244; 49 L. T. 101; 31 W. R. 786; 5 Asp. M. C. 106.

—— "If sufficient Water."]—A condition in a charterparty that the ship shall "discharge in a dock as ordered on arriving, if sufficient water, or so near thereunto as she may safely get, always afloat," means that she is to discharge in the dock ordered, if there is sufficient water at the time of giving the order. Allen v. Coltart, 52 L. J., Q. B. 686; 11 Q. B. D. 782; 48 L. T. 944; 31 W. R. 841; 5 Asp. M. C. 104.

Expenses of Lightering to Place of Discharge.]—By the terms of a charterparty the ship was to take in a full cargo at Bombay, and proceed therewith to a safe port on the continent between Havre and Hamburg as ordered, "or so near thereto as she might safely get." The cargo was to be brought to and taken from alongside at merchant's risk and expense. The ship was ordered by the charterers to Koogerpolder, in Holland. Koogerpolder is some distance up a canal, and the vessel with her full cargo on board drew too much water to proceed up the canal. No arrangements had been made by the charterers or consignees for taking delivery of any part of the cargo at the mouth of the canal. The portion of the cargo that required to be unloaded in order to enable the vessel to enter the canal was at least a third. The question arising under these circumstances between the shipowners and the charterers was which of them ought to bear the expenses of lightering the cargo from the mouth of the canal to Koogerpolder:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the voyage under the charterparty ended at the mouth of the canal, and that consequently the charterers ought to bear the above-mentioned expenses. Meaning of the words "as near thereto as she may get" discussed. Capper v. Wallace, 49 L. J., Q. B. 350; 5 Q. B. D. 163; 42 L. T. 130; 28 W. R. 424; 4 Asp. M. C. 223.

Danube Bar.]—The defendant agreed by a charterparty that the ship should proceed to Galatz, or as near thereto as she could safely get, and there load a cargo, the act of God, &c., and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers and navigation during the voyage excepted. The ship arrived on the 5th November off the mouth of the Danube. At that time, and until the 7th January following, the water was unusually low on the bar and the ship was unable to cross. On the 11th December she was obliged by stress of weather to go to Odessa, as the nearest safe port, where she afterwards took in a cargo and sailed for England. On and after the 7th January there was sufficient water in the port for the ship to have crossed and to have gone up to Galatz, and there shipped a cargo:—Held, that there was a breach of the charterparty, and that the defendant was not justified in putting an end to the contract by any of the excepted causes. Schilizzi v. Derry, 4 El. & Bl. 873; 24 L. J., Q. B. 193; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 795; 3 W. R. 374.

Part Cargo unloaded to cross Bar—Expense of reloading—Duty of Ship to reload.]—A ship under charter to sail to a named port, or as near thereto as she could safely get, and to load as much cargo as she could reasonably and conveniently ship and stow, went over the bar of the port and took in a full cargo of hams and cattle, for which the master signed bills of lading. She sailed and grounded on the inner bar, and part of the cargo had to be lightened, the master offering to take that part of the cargo on board again after passing the outer bar, at the shipper's risk. The shipper's agent refused to put the cargo on board again on these terms, and the ship sailed with so much of the cargo as was left on board:—Held, that the shipowner was entitled neither to freight nor to damages for refusing to reship the cargo lightened, for that the master having signed bills of lading for the whole cargo, though not bound to go within the bar, was bound to carry to its destination the whole cargo signed for. General Steam Navigation Co. v. Slipper, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 493; 31 L. J., C. P. 185; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 821; 5 L. T. 641; 10 W. R. 311.

iv. Frost Preventing Loading.

Customary Manner of Loading.] — By the terms of the charterparty the ship was to proceed to the port of loading and there load a cargo of iron in the customary manner from the agents of the freighters. Cargo to be supplied as fast as steamer can receive. Time to commence from the vessel being ready to load, and ten days on demurrage over and above the said lay days at 40*l.* per day. ("Except in case of hands striking work, or frosts or floods, or any other unavoidable accidents preventing the loading; in which case owners to have the option of employing the steamer in some short-voyage trade until receipt of written notice from charterers that they are ready to resume employment without delay to the ship.") On the ship's arrival the loading was commenced, but shortly afterwards was wholly stopped for five days through frost:—Held, that the exception in the charterparty as to frost did not relieve the charterers from liability for demurrage, inasmuch as the detention of the cargo by ice occurred in the canals before the cargo reached the dock where the vessel was lying. Grant v. Coverdale, 53 L. J., Q. B. 462; 9 App. Cas. 470; 51 L. T. 472; 32 W. R. 831; 5 Asp. M. C. 353—H. L.

By the terms of the charterparty the ship was to proceed to Cardiff, East Bute Dock, and there load in the customary manner from the agents of the freighters a cargo of rail iron; the cargo to be loaded as fast as steamer could take on board and stow within the customary working hours of the port, commencing when steamer was in berth and ready to load; and if longer detained merchants to pay steamer 30*l.* per day demurrage. "Detention by frost, floods, &c., not to be reckoned as lay days." The shipowner, when the charterparty was made, did not know who were the freighters' agents at Cardiff. There were about six shippers of rail iron there, all of them (with the exception of the freighters' agents) having wharves in the West or East Bute Dock. The agents' wharf was at a distance from the docks upon a canal communicating with the West Bute Dock, and their rail iron was loaded on ships berthed in the East Bute Dock by means of lighters passing down this canal through the West Bute Dock, and from thence down a smaller canal connecting the two docks. The other shippers loaded in the East Bute Dock, either from the quay or by lighters coming alongside the ship from the wharves in the East Bute Dock, or by lighters from the West Bute Dock, passing down the connecting canal. The ship, on arrival, was berthed in the East Bute Dock, and the loading was commenced, but shortly afterwards was stopped for sixteen days by frost, which covered the canal from the agents' wharf to the West Bute Dock with ice and prevented the passage of the lighters, though the water in the docks was not frozen:—Held, that the exception in the charterparty with respect to detention by frost did not apply to relieve the freighters from liability to demurrage. Kay v. Field, 52 L. J., Q. B. 17; 10 Q. B. D. 241; 47 L. T. 423; 31 W. R. 332; 4 Asp. M. C. 588—C. A.

A. by charterparty engaged to load on board B.'s ships a cargo of coals "with due despatch." The goods had to be brought by A. along a canal to the dock, and frost prevented the completion of the loading:—Held, that A. was responsible for the delay consequent thereon. Kearon v. Pearson, 7 H. & N. 386; 31 L. J., Ex. 1; 10 W. R. 12.

The exception in a charterparty whereby a certain number of laying days is allowed to the charterer, detention by ice is not to be reckoned as such, applies where the ice not only renders access to the ship impracticable in the port itself, but blocks up a river by means of which alone the intended cargo can be conveyed to the port. Hudson v. Ede, 8 B. & S. 640; 37 L. J., Q. B. 166; L. R. 3 Q. B. 412; 18 L. T. 764; 16 W. R. 940—Ex. Ch. See White v. Steamship Winchester Co., infra, col. 265.

"Accident" — Snowstorm.] — A charterer agreed to load a ship with coal in regular and customary turn, "except in case of riots, strikes, or any other accidents beyond his control," which might prevent or delay her loading. To an action for breach of the above covenant in the charterparty, he pleaded that he was prevented loading the vessel by a snowstorm, which rendered it impossible to bring the cargo to the agreed place of shipment:—Held, that the snowstorm was not such an accident. Fenwick v. Schmalz, 37 L. J., C. P. 78; L. R. 3 C. P. 313; 18 L. T. 27; 16 W. R. 481.

And see 6, LIABILITY OF CHARTERER OR AGENT, infra.

v. Sailing.

Final Sailing.]—The term "final sailing" of a vessel from the port of loading, stated in a charterparty as the period for payment of freight, or part of it, means the final departure from the port, and being at sea ready to proceed on her voyage, and not merely having the clearances on board, and being ready to sail. Roelandts v. Harrison, 9 Ex. 444; 2 C. L. R. 995; 23 L. J., Ex. 169.

In determining a point at which a vessel has "finally sailed," the circumstances of the particular port of loading must be considered; and where the vessel was wrecked after having her clearances on board, and had left the dock gates, and had reached a ship canal between high and low water, where she was subject to certain regulations under a local act, and where she was liable to be stopped by the harbour-master:—Held, that she had not finally sailed within the meaning of the charterparty. Ib.

Extent of Port.]—By the terms of a charterparty the owners were entitled to an advance of one-third of the freight within eight days "from final sailing of the vessel from her last port in United Kingdom." The vessel was loaded at Penarth Dock, and was towed by a steam-tug seven or eight miles, bringing her out about three miles into the Bristol Channel. She there cast anchor, as the weather was threatening. Whilst she was lying at anchor a storm broke her cables, and she ultimately ran ashore on Penarth beach, and the cargo was spoiled. The vessel had never been beyond the limits of the port of Cardiff as defined for fiscal purposes, but she had left what, for commercial purposes, is considered the port, and had been out at sea. She went ashore within the limits of the port in its commercial sense. The owners sued for one-third of the freight, and the charterers resisted the claim on the ground that the vessel had never sailed from her last port in the United Kingdom :—Held, that the word "port" must be taken in its ordinary commercial sense, and that as the vessel had got out to sea without any intention of returning, she must be taken to have finally sailed from her last port, that her being driven back into it by the weather made no difference, and that the one-third of the freight was payable. Price v. Livingstone, 53 L. J., Q. B. 118 ; 9 Q. B. D. 679 ; 47 L. T. 629 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 13—C. A.

At the time a loss happened the ship had left the harbour, but her crew was not complete, the master and mate were not on board, her shrouds and cables were not in proper condition, and the bills of lading were not signed ; the intention was that she should remain at anchor in the roadstead until the preparations for her voyage were complete :—Held, that she had not sailed within the meaning of the charterparty. Thompson v. Gillespy, 5 El. & Bl. 209 ; 24 L. J., Q. B. 340 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 779 ; 3 W. R. 505.

A vessel being loaded and in a fit state for sailing, but the clearances not being completed, nor the bills of lading signed, left the harbour with the captain on board. She crossed the bar, and the captain returned to land in order to get the papers completed and sign the bills of lading. The vessel stood off and on waiting for the captain ; but it being found that she had been injured, she returned into harbour to repair and did not afterwards sail :—Held, that the vessel had not sailed. Hudson v. Bilton, 6 El. & Bl. 565 ; 26 L. J., Q. B. 27 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 784.

Hire of Tug—Commencement of Hiring.]—A tug was hired for salvage purposes "from the 8th of September, at which date the vessel is to be at the disposal of the charterer at Greenock." The tug, which might have left before, did not sail from Greenock until 2.30 p.m. on the 8th September, and the hirer lost the benefit of his salvage contract :—Held, that the tug owner was liable, as the tug should have sailed earlier. Mackenzie v. Liddell, 10 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 705.

vi. Other Provisions.

Commission — Inwards and Outwards.]—By a charterparty, a ship was to proceed with a cargo from Glasgow to San Francisco, where she was to be "consigned to the charterers' agents, inwards and outwards, paying the usual commissions" :—Held, that the effect of the expression "outwards" was not to bind the master to take a cargo home from San Francisco ; the meaning only was that, if a cargo was shipped from San Francisco, the charterers should be employed as shipbrokers to do all the business of the ship in respect of such cargo. Cross v. Pagliano, 40 L. J., Ex. 18 ; L. R. 6 Ex. 9 ; 23 L. T. 420 ; 19 W. R. 159.

—— Memorandum Part of Contract.]—A memorandum in a printed form between two brokers, used by a charterer, "commission to be paid to charterer, to whom the vessel is to be addressed, on her return to London," the charter being only for an outward voyage, and making no mention of a homeward voyage ; and the ship not having returned direct from the port of discharge, but taken a cargo elsewhere, requires evidence that the memorandum was understood by the parties to be part of the contract, and that in mercantile usage it applied in such a case to the return cargo, and meant that the charterer should collect the freight and receive commission on it. Hibbert v. Owen, 2 F. & F. 502.

Void or Voidable in Event of War.]—The plaintiff chartered the ship "Edgar" to C. by charterparty in which it was agreed that the ship after completing intermediate employment (which she was to be at liberty to take) should proceed to Galatz for orders to load there, &c., and being so loaded procced to Malta for orders. Upon the margin of the charterparty were the words, "In the event of war, blockade, or prohibition of export preventing loading, this charterparty to be cancelled." The plaintiffs then effected a policy with the defendants for the insurance of the freight of the ship against the perils of the sea, restraint of princes, &c. The "Edgar" sailed for Genoa under the charterparty on the 1st of May, 1877, war having been declared by Russia against Turkey on the 24th of April. Before her arrival at Genoa, the plaintiffs ascertained that Russia had closed the ports of loading mentioned in the charterparty. The "Edgar," however, discharged her cargo and took in ballast at Genoa, and sailed for Constantinople, and upon her arrival there on the 28th of May, found that the loading ports were closed, and that there was no reasonable probability of their being open in time for her to load her chartered cargo. She therefore did not proceed farther towards Galatz, but obtained a homeward cargo at a freight less than that stipulated for by the charterparty. In an action upon the policy :—Held, by Cockburn, C.J., and Manisty, J. (Lush, J., dissenting), that the plaintiffs could not recover, for according to the true construction of the charterparty the act of closing the ports by the Russian government was a prohibition of export preventing loading, and that upon the happening of that event the charterparty came to an end—without any election by either party. By Lush, J., that the effect of the memorandum in the margin was to make the charterparty voidable only at the option of either party, that neither party having elected to avoid it the charterparty continued in force up to the time when the loading became impracticable, and that the plaintiffs had sustained such a loss of the chartered freight as to entitle them to recover. Adamson v. Newcastle Steamship Freight Insurance Association, 48 L. J., Q. B. 670 ; 4 Q. B. D. 462 ; 41 L. T. 160 ; 27 W. R. 818 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 150.

And see 5. PERFORMANCE, infra.

"Ship Damage."]—In a charterparty, between the East India Company and the owners of a ship taken into their service, was the following clause : "But nevertheless the part-owners shall not be charged with any sum of money in respect of goods damaged on board the ship, either in her outward or homeward bound voyage, but such as shall, by the condition and appearance of the package thereof, or by some other reasonable proof, appear to be ship damage." Part of the homeward-bound cargo was damaged in a storm:—Held, that this was not ship damage within the meaning of the clause, which was imputable only to such damage as happens by the insufficiency of the ship, or the negligence of those who have the charge of her. East India Co. v. Todd, 1 Bro. P. C. 405.

Mistake as to.]—Although a clause, by way of condition or of warranty, contained in a charterparty, cannot be got rid of by reason of its being part of a printed form, not adverted to expressly by the parties, and intended by one of them to be omitted: yet, if the other party was aware at the time that it could not be complied with, and after shewing that it was broken, treated the charter as subsisting, it will afford him no defence to an action on the charter. Dixon v. Heriot, 2 F. & F. 760.

Provisions as to Lighterage—Writing and Print.]—Charterers agreed with a shipowner by charterparty that his ship should load at Barbadoes, St. Kitts, or Trinidad, a full cargo of West India produce, "to be brought to and taken from alongside at merchant's risk and expense." These words, with others, were in print. The charterparty also contained the words "cargo at Trinidad as customary." These words, with others, were in writing. The custom at Trinidad is, that the ship pays for the lighterage, and the shipowner allows the charterer the reasonable expense thereof. The ship loaded at Trinidad in the customary manner, but the captain refused to pay the lighterage, whereupon the charterers had to bear the expense of it:—Held, that the stipulation, "cargo at Trinidad as customary," worked an exception to the stipulation as to loading at merchant's risk, and that the charterers were entitled to recover the lighterage from the defendant. Scrutton v. Childs, 36 L. T. 212; 3 Asp. M. C. 373.

Disbursements—Coals—Liability of Shipowner or Charterer.]—By a charterparty between the defendants, the owners of a steamer and the charterers, it was agreed that the owners should maintain her in a thoroughly efficient state during the term of the charterparty, and that the charterers should provide and pay for coals and fuel, port charges, pilotages, agencies, commissions and all other charges whatsoever not appertaining to the working or efficiency of the steamer. It was also agreed that if in consequence of a breakdown of machinery the vessel put into a port other than that to which she was bound, "port charges, pilotages and other expenses" should be borne by the owners. The steamer put into Vigo, a port to which she was not bound; in consequence, as was alleged by the master, of the breakdown of the condenser. The master sued the defendants in an action for disbursements for the price of coals supplied to him at Vigo:—Held, that, even assuming that the putting into Vigo was a necessary consequence of the breakdown of the machinery of the steamer, the price of the coals supplied there was not part of the "port charges, pilotages, and other expenses at the port," within the meaning of the charterparty, and the defendants were not liable. The Durham City, 58 L. J., Adm. 46; 14 P. D. 85; 61 L. T. 339; 6 Asp. M. C. 411.

Court-martial—Condition precedent to Payment under Covenant.]—Covenant in a charterparty, whereby, if the ship should be lost, burnt, or taken, and it should appear to a court-martial that the master had made the best defence he could, the freighters covenanted to pay the value of the ship. The holding of the court-martial is a condition precedent. Davison v. Mure, 3 Dougl. 28.

Detention of Ship by Foreign Government—Expenses—Charterer or Shipowner.]—Expenses caused by unjust detention of a ship by a foreign government in respect of legal matters and repairs:—Held, not to be expenses incurred by the ship within the meaning of a clause throwing such expenses on the charterers. Sully v. Duranty, 3 H. & C. 270; 33 L. J., Ex. 319.

Disbursements on account of Ship—Master's Claim—Authority of Master.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that the owners should provide and pay for all the provisions and wages of the captain and crew, for the insurance of the vessel, and maintain her in a thoroughly efficient state. It was further agreed that the charterers should provide and pay for all the coals, port-charges, pilotages, commissions and all other charges whatsoever, except those before stated; and it was further agreed that the captain, although appointed by the owners, should be under the orders and directions of the charterers, as regards employment, agency, or other arrangements. The master ordered coals for the vessel at two different foreign ports, in order to enable the vessel to perform her voyage. These coals were ordered from the firm of W. & Co., with whom the charterers had a contract to supply their vessel with coal. The charterers were subsequently adjudicated bankrupts. In an action by the master against the vessel and her freight for disbursements on account of the ship:—Held, that he was not entitled to recover, as, by the terms of the charterparty, he had no power to pledge the owner's credit. The Castlegate, 62 L. J., P. C. 17; [1893] A. C. 38; 1 R. 97; 68 L. T. 99; 41 W. R. 349—H. L. (Ir.)

Despatch-money — "Sundays and Fête-days excepted."]—A charterparty contained the following provision: "The steamer to be discharged at the rate of 200 tons per day, weather permitting (Sundays and fête-days excepted), according to the custom of the port of discharge, and, if sooner discharged, to pay at the rate of 8*s.* 4*d.* for every hour saved":—Held, that in calculating despatch-money, the charterers were not entitled to include the hours of Sundays and fête-days. The Glenderon, 62 L. J., Adm. 123; [1893] P. 269; 1 R. 662; 70 L. T. 416; 7 Asp. M. C. 439.

Causes operating before Time of Shipment—Breakdown of Railway.]—The defendants chartered the plaintiffs' vessel for the carriage of a cargo of ore from Poti in the Black Sea, the charterparty containing amongst the excepted perils which might prevent or delay the loading of the vessel: "floods, stoppages of trains, miners or workmen, accidents to railways and to mines or piers from which the ore is to be shipped." In the ordinary course the ore was brought from the mines to the pier by lines of railway, and could not be brought in any other way, and was not generally brought until it was wanted for shipment. The vessel arrived at Poti, but no cargo was or could be supplied to her in consequence of the breakdown of the railway communication between the mines and the pier, caused by storms and floods, and the vessel sailed away without cargo. In an action by the plaintiffs against the charterers for not supplying the cargo :—Held, that the exceptions in the charterparty applied not only to causes operating at the port of loading, but also to causes operating to prevent the ore being brought from the mines to the pier, and that the charterers were therefore protected by the exceptions. Furness v. Forwood, 77 L. T. 95.

Master's Signature to Bills of Lading—Penalty for Delay in Signing.] — A stipulation in a charterparty that the master shall sign bills of lading within twenty-four hours after the cargo is on board, or pay 4*d.* per registered ton per day for each day's delay, is a stipulation for a penalty. Jones v. Hough (5 Ex. D. 115) followed. The Princess, 6 R. 723 ; 70 L. T. 388 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 432.

If the master eventually signs the bill of lading, the stipulation does not cease to be a stipulation for a penalty. Ib.

Freight—Master to sign at any Rate of Freight "without prejudice to this charterparty"—Cesser Clause coupled with Lien — Duty of Master.]—Where a charterparty provides that the captain is to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight required "without prejudice to this charterparty," the latter words impose no duty upon the captain to refuse to sign any bills of lading not containing provisions that preserve to the shipowner his lien for the full charterparty freight. They mean only that the shipowner's right of action against the charterer for the charterparty freight is not to be prejudiced. Hansen v. Harrold, 63 L. J., Q. B. 744 ; [1894] 1 Q. B. 612 ; 9 R. 315 ; 70 L. T. 475 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 464—C. A.

Advances for Disbursements on Account of Freight — Obligation to make Demand.] — A charterparty provided for the payment of certain lump sum freights, and contained the following clauses : "Cash for steamer's ordinary disbursements at port or ports of loading, not exceeding 150*l.* in all, to be advanced at the exchange of 50*d.* to the dollar on account of freight, subject to 3 per cent. to cover costs of insurance, &c. (captain's receipts to be conclusive evidence of the amount of such advances, and of their having been properly made), and balance of freight on right and true delivery of the cargo in cash" :—Held, that the master of the ship was not obliged to put the clause in force, but he was at liberty to take advantage of it or not as he in fact found it necessary, and that, therefore, if the shipowners provided him with money for disbursements, or he chose to advance it himself, it was unnecessary for him to ask the charterers for an advance on account of freight, and the owners could not be held liable for breach of contract if he did not ask for an advance. The Primula, 63 L. J., Adm. 118 ; [1894] P. 128 ; 6 R. 749 ; 70 L. T. 253 ; 42 W. R. 527 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 429.

Cesser Clause—Liability of Charterer as Holder of Bill of Lading.]—A clause in a charterparty providing for the cesser of the charterer's liability on the goods being loaded, does not absolve the charterer, if he be also the indorsee and holder of a bill of lading, incorporating the conditions of the charterparty, from liability for damage incurred at an intermediate port. Bryden v. Niebuhr, 1 Cab. & E. 241.

East India Company's Charter—Ship used for War Purposes.]—The East India Company's charterparties provided that the company should be at liberty to use the ship for war purposes, and to put her under the command of the king's officers. The company altered the upper works of a ship chartered by them, put more guns on board than stipulated in the charterparty, and put her under command of a king's officer :—Held, that the charterparty authorised such use of her. Dobree v. East India Co., 13 East, 290.

Ship Chartered for Trade or War—Loss on Voyage of Discovery.]—A ship chartered to the East India Company for trade or warfare was lost whilst upon a voyage of discovery ordered by the company :—Held, that her owners could recover damages for her loss against the company if they did not consent to the voyage ; but, it appearing that they had consented, nonsuit. Lewin v. East India Co., Peake, 243 ; 3 R. R. 700.

Agreement to pay Pilotage, &c.—Cargo Short Delivered—Liability.]—Upon an agreement to pay certain pilotage and port charges for an entire voyage, though a part only of the cargo is delivered, there will be no apportionment of the pilotage and port charges, but the whole must be paid. Christy v. Row, 1 Taunt. 300; 9 R. R. 776.

Causes beyond Charterers' Control.] — The words "or other causes beyond their control" in the exception clause of a charterparty do not relieve charterers from their liability to demurrage, where delay in loading a vessel is due to the disorganisation of workmen at the factory of the sellers of the goods, the results of which disorganisation could have been avoided had the charterers in the first instance made a better bargain with the sellers. Such delay is not due to causes outside the charterers' power or beyond their control. Richardsons and Samuels & Co., In re, 66 L. J., Q. B. 579 ; 66 L. J., Q. B. 868 ; 77 L. T. 479. S. C. in C. A.

vii. Evidence to Explain.

Custom—Lay Days.]—By a charterparty, made at Riga, the ship was to proceed with a cargo of timber, to Liverpool, and to deliver at such dock there as ordered on arrival. On arrival at Liverpool the ship duly entered into dock, but in consequence of the crowded state of the dock, was unable for some days to obtain a berth alongside the quay from which she was allowed to discharge :—Held, that in an action for demurrage, evidence was admissible tending to shew that, by the custom of the port of arrival, timber ships were not considered to have arrived until they had obtained a discharging berth within the dock. Steamship Co. Norden v. Dempsey, 45 L. J., C. P. 764 ; 1 C. P. D. 654 ; 24 W. R. 984.

—— "Always Lay and Discharge Afloat."]—Where a vessel is chartered to proceed with cargo to a "safe port . . . as ordered, or as near thereto as she can safely get, and always lay and discharge afloat," the master is not bound to discharge at a port where she cannot, by reason of her draught of water, always lie and discharge afloat, without being lightened. Evidence that it was the custom at the port of discharge for vessels to be lightened in the roads before proceeding into the harbour held to lie inadmissible. The Alhambra, 50 L. J., Adm. 36; 6 P. D. 68; 43 L. T. 636; 29 W. R. 655; 4 Asp. M. C. 410—C. A.

Cargo to be "taken from Alongside at Merchant's Expense," and "to be discharged according to Custom of the Port."]—A charterparty contained two clauses, "cargo to be taken from alongside at merchant's expense," and "to be discharged according to custom of the port":—Held, that these clauses were not contradictory, and therefore evidence of custom was inadmissible to charge the shipowner with the cost of unloading. The Nifa, 62 L. J., Adm. 12; [1892] P. 411; 1 R. 540; 69 L. T. 56; 7 Asp. M. C. 324.

Evidence of General Custom admissible.]—In construing a charterparty evidence of the existence of a general custom in the particular trade is admissible, but to affect the construction of the document the custom must be proved to exist. Cunningham v. Fonblanque, 6 Car. & P. 44.

—— Not where it adds New Term to Charterparty.]—Where the charterers attempted to set up against the shipowner a custom that, unless expressly excluded by the charterparty, and notwithstanding a provision in the charterparty that the cargo was to be consigned to the charterer's agents abroad free of commission on the charter, the agents were, on procuring an outward charter, to receive a commission on freight payable under it:—Held, that evidence of the alleged custom was not admissible, as it would not explain the charterparty, but would add a new term to it. Phillips v. Briard, 1 H. & M. 21.

—— Or is inconsistent with Charterparty.]—By a charterparty the vessel was to deliver at H., "or so near thereto as she could safely get"; to discharge as customary; the cargo to be brought to and taken from alongside the ship at merchant's risk and expense. The draught of water of the vessel with the cargo on board was too great to allow her to reach H. The nearest point to which she could safely get was S., where the merchant refused to accept delivery of any part of the cargo. In order to lighten the vessel, part of her cargo was discharged into lighters at S. and sent in them to H. Her owner having sued the charterer to recover the lighterage expenses:—Held, that a defence alleging that by the custom of the port of H. the defendant was not bound to take delivery elsewhere than at H. was bad on demurrer, inasmuch as it sought to set up a custom inconsistent with the written contract, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the lighterage expenses. Hayton v. Irwin, 5 C. P. D. 130; 41 L. T. 666; 28 W. R. 665; 4 Asp. M. C. 212—C. A.

—— Local.]—Semble. If the custom be local only, it must be known to both parties, or it will not control the charterparty. Holman v. Peruvian Nitrate Co., 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 657.

Evidence as to Meaning of "Cargo" and "Freight."]—A. engaged with B. to have a full cargo for the ship, the rates of freight for which would average 40*s.* per ton, and at least nine cabin passengers, passage-money to average 75*l.* The contract was fulfilled as to the passengers, but the average rate of freight for goods amounted to 30*s.* only per ton. A. shipped, however, steerage passengers, the net profits from whom made the average earnings of the ship over 40*s.*:—Held, that as this was an unusual contract, evidence was not admissible to shew that the terms "cargo" and "freight" used with reference to the voyage on which the ship was engaged would, by the general usage and course of the trade, be considered to comprise steerage passengers, and the net profit arising from their passage-money. Lewis v. Marshall, 7 Man. & G. 729; 8 Scott (N.R.) 729; 13 L. J., C. P. 193; 8 Jur. 848.

"Safe Port"—Evidence as to Custom to lighten Ship.]—Where a vessel is chartered to proceed with a cargo to a port of call for orders to discharge at a "safe port" in the United Kingdom, the contract of the shipowner is to deliver the cargo at a safe port in the ordinary sense; and if it would be necessary to discharge part of the cargo in order to proceed to the port named by the charterer's agents the captain is entitled, unless it is otherwise provided by the charterparty, to refuse to proceed to the port so named, and in such a case evidence of a custom to lighten vessels to enable them to proceed to the port named is not admissible. The Alhambra (50 L. J., Adm. 36; 6 P. D. 68) followed; Nielsen v. Wait (55 L. J., Q. B. 87; 16 Q. B. D. 67) distinguished. Reynolds v. Tomlinson, 65 L. J., Q. B. 496; [1896] 1 Q. B. 586; 74 L. T. 591; 8 Asp. M. C. 150.

d. Alteration, Variation and Cancellation.

Authority of Agent.]—An agent at a foreign port to whom a ship is addressed for loading under a charterparty has no implied authority to vary the contract by substituting another and a distant port of loading, or a different quality or description of cargo. Sickens v. Irving, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 165; 29 L. J., C. P. 25; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 200.

Effect of.]—The stipulations in a charterparty may be varied by subsequent instructions, which may amount to a new contract pro tanto; and an insurance of freight upon a new voyage, though different from that described in the charterparty, may be good. Hall v. Brown, 2 Dow, 367, 375.

In Margin.]—A merchant entered into a charterparty in the following terms: "It is agreed between the owner of the good ship "Zwaan," now at Amsterdam, and to sail from thence for Liverpool on or before the 15th of March next, and the charterer, that the ship, being tight, staunch and strong, shall with all convenient speed be made ready," &c. as in the usual printed form of charterparty. The exception was as follows: "Restrictions of princes and rulers, the dangers and accidents of the seas and navigation, the act of God, fire, pirates and enemies, throughout this charterparty always excepted." After the signing of the charter, the broker who had acted for the owner wrote in the margin, to come after the words "March next," "wind and weather permitting, with cargo or in ballast, for ship's benefit." He then took the charter to the charterer, and told him that he had made the note in the margin, which he said did not affect it. The charterer said that the note altered the matter, and he did not know that he would then accept the charter; and he ultimately refused to do so. The ship did not sail from Amsterdam, in consequence of what was admitted to be "the act of God":—Held, that the charterparty was avoided by the alteration so made in the margin. Crookewit v. Fletcher, 1 H. & N. 893; 26 L. J., Ex. 153; 5 W. R. 348.

By Parol.]—Assumpsit lies where a sealed charterparty was afterwards altered by parol, where the subsequent parol contract was distinct from, and not inconsistent with, the contract by deed being anterior to it in point of time and execution. White v. Parkin, 12 East, 578; 11 R. R. 488. And see Davies v. Hawkins, 3 M. & S. 488.

Where a shipowner covenanted to sail from London to Gibraltar, and there to deliver an outward cargo, and receive from the agents of the freighter at Gibraltar, or at Malaga, Cadiz, or Seville, as should be ordered by the agents at Gibraltar, such goods as they might load on board for the homeward cargo, and that the vessel should return direct to the port of London and deliver the homeward cargo; and the agents at Gibraltar ordered the captain to proceed to Cadiz, at which place other agents directed by parol that the homeward cargo should be delivered at Liverpool instead of London:—Held, that the shipowner having delivered the cargo at Liverpool could not recover the freight, the substitution by parol of Liverpool for London being inconsistent with the covenant contained in the charterparty. Thompson v. Brown, 1 Moore, 358; 7 Taunt. 656.

Cancellation—By Ship's Husband.]—A ship's husband cannot bind his owners by an agreement to cancel a charterparty, and pay a sum of money on such cancellation. Thomas v. Lewis or Oxley, 48 L. J., Ex. 7; 4 Ex. D. 18; 39 L. T. 669; 27 W. R. 111; 4 Asp. M. C. 31.

—— Option to Cancel—Ship not ready to load.]—A charterparty, provided that should the steamship not be ready to load on or before May 31, the charterer should have the option of cancelling the charter. On that day the vessel had discharged two holds only of her outward cargo, and was not completely discharged until the next day:—Held, that the charterers were entitled to cancel. Groves v. Volkart, 1 Cab. & E. 309.

Renunciation—Right to Sue for Breach.]—A mere intimation by the agent of the charterer to the master before the time of loading had expired that he had ceded the charterparty with all its rights and obligations to a third party, and that he must address himself to the third party for a cargo, does not amount to a renunciation of the charterparty so as to entitle the owner to sue as for a breach. Barrick v. Baba, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 563; 26 L. J., C. P. 280.

Alteration by Charterer's Agent abroad—Rate of Freight.]—See Wiggins v. Johnson, XIII. FREIGHT, infra, col. 418.

Freight — Substituted Voyage — Action on Charterparty.] — See Thompson v. Brown, XIII. FREIGHT, infra, col. 371.

Alteration of Voyage.] — See Davidson v. Gwynne, infra, col. 306.

e. Conditions and Warranties.

i. Class of Ship.

What is.]—In a charterparty made at New York, between British subjects, a vessel was described as "the A 1 Br. brig, 'Hannah Eastee,' of Liverpool":—Held that this description was a warranty by the owners that the vessel was at the time classed A 1 at Lloyds' in London. Routh v. MacMillan, 2 H. & C. 750; 33 L. J., Ex. 38; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 158; 9 L. T. 541; 12 W. R. 381.

Not Continuing.]—A description in a charterparty that a vessel is of a particular class is not a continuing warranty, but applies only to the classification at the time the charterparty is made. French v. Newgass, 47 L. J., C. P. 361; 3 C. P. D. 163; 38 L. T. 164; 26 W. R. 430; 3 Asp. M. C. 574.—C. A.

In a charterparty the ship was described as newly classed "A 1½. Record of American and Foreign Shipping Book." The ship was chartered to New Orleans to load cotton. Soon after her arrival there the certificate of her classification was cancelled, and the charterers were in consequence unable to obtain insurances on the cotton, and they refused to load the ship. In an action by the shipowners against the charterers for breach of the charterparty:—Held, that there was no breach of warranty by the shipowners, because the statement of the ship's classification in the charterparty was a warranty only that she was so classed at that time, and not that she was rightly, or would continue so classed, and that the shipowners were entitled to maintain their action. Ib.

The description of a vessel in a charterparty as A 1, warrants only that she was A 1 at the time of making the charterparty, not that she should continue to be so. Hurst v. Usborn, 18 C. B. 144; 25 L. J., C. P. 209; 4 W. R. 458.

Meaning of Term "Steamship."] — When a vessel by which goods are forwarded is described as a steamship, simpliciter, in the bill of lading forming the agreement between the freighter and the owner of the vessel, the contract is that the goods shall be transported in a ship whereof the primary and principal propelling power is steam, and the terms will not be satisfied by an auxiliary screw steamship making a sailing voyage with the occasional aid of her steam power. Fraser v. Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Co., 41 L. J., Q. B. 249; L. R. 7 Q. B. 566; 27 L. T. 373; 20 W. R. 724.

Meaning of Term "Efficient."] — The term "efficient," as applied in a charterparty to a ship, must be construed with reference to the several classes of work which she has from time to time to accomplish. Hogarth v. Miller, 60 L. J., P. C. 1; [1891] A. C. 48; 64 L. T. 205; 7 Asp. M. C. 1—H. L. (Sc.)

Nationality of Ship—Knowledge of Freighter.]—To prove that a ship is British built, a British register, so describing her, is by itself no evidence. A ship was described in a memorandum for a charterparty as "the Swedish ship or vessel called 'the Maria.'" In fact she was British built and had a British register, but she had Swedish papers and a licence to sail as a Swedish ship—which was known to the freighter. In an action against the freighter for not loading—Held, that he could not set up as a defence that she was not a Swedish ship. Reusse v. Meyers, 3 Camp. 474.

ii. Seaworthiness and Fitness.

Implied Warranty.]—In every charterparty there is an undertaking on the part of the shipowner that the ship shall be seaworthy. Lyon v. Mells, 5 East, 428; 7 R. R. 726. S. P., Dale v. Hall, 1 Wils. 281. And see Hollingworth v. Brodrick, 7 A. & E. 40; 2 N. & P. 608; 8 L. J., Q. B. 80; 1 Jur. 430.

—— Sufficiency of Crew.]—The owner is bound to provide a competent master and crew. Shore v. Bentall, 7 B. & C. 798; 31 R. R. 302, n.; and see Wynne v. Fellowes, infra, col. 300.

Extent of Warranty.]—If a chartered vessel is seaworthy at the commencement of the voyage, but is afterwards damaged by perils of the sea, though the owner is not bound to repair the vessel, yet if he elects not to do so, he ought not to proceed with the vessel in the unseaworthy condition. Worms v. Storey, 11 Ex. 427; 25 L. J., Ex. 1.

A shipowner who accepts goods which he is to deliver in good condition, impliedly contracts to perform the voyage in a ship which is seaworthy. Steel v. State Line Steamship Co., 3 App. Cas. 72; 37 L. T. 333; 3 Asp. M. C. 516.

The implied warranty of seaworthiness into which the owner of a ship enters with the owner of her cargo, attaches at a time when the perils of the intended voyage commence, that is, when she sets sail with the cargo on board for her port of destination; and this warranty is broken if she is then unfit to encounter these perils, although she may have been seaworthy whilst lying in the port of loading, and also at the time of starting from her anchorage for and arriving at the place of loading appointed by the charterer, and of commencing to take on board her cargo. Cohen or Cohn v. Davidson, 46 L. J., Q. B. 305; 2 Q. B. D. 455; 36 L. T. 244; 25 W. R. 369; 3 Asp. M. C. 374.

A vessel was chartered for a voyage to Dundee from the port of Sunderland, where she was lying in a seaworthy condition. Pursuant to the terms of the charterparty, and by the orders of the charterer, the vessel proceeded to a wharf situate in the port of Sunderland, and there loaded on board a cargo of cement. At the time when she commenced taking in the cargo she was seaworthy; but by the time of setting sail on her voyage she had from some unknown cause become unseaworthy. The owners of the vessel were not guilty of negligence in sending her to sea in the condition in which she then was. Soon after starting from Sunderland she began to leak; but the wind being fair for the voyage to Dundee, the master resolved to keep his course, and he was not guilty of any negligence in not returning to Sunderland. The vessel did not reach Dundee, but foundered at sea, and the cargo of cement was totally lost:—Held, that the warranty of seaworthiness implied by law upon entering into the charterparty had been broken, and that the charterer was entitled to recover the value of the cargo shipped by him on board the vessel. Ib.

In every contract for the conveyance of merchandise by sea there is, in the absence of express provision to the contrary, an implied warranty by the shipowner that his vessel is seaworthy. Kopitoff v. Wilson, 45 L. J., Q. B. 436; 1 Q. B. D. 377; 34 L. T. 677; 24 W. R. 706; 3 Asp. M. C. 163.

In an action to recover damages for the loss of iron armour-plates, which were lost on board a ship, it appeared that the shipowners, by their servants, stowed the ship, and that during rough weather one of the plates broke loose and went through the side of the ship, which in consequence was lost. At the trial the judge told the jury, as a matter of law, that a shipowner warrants the fitness of his ship when she sails, and not merely that he will honestly and bonâ fide endeavour to make her fit, and left to them the questions, was the vessel at the time of the sailing, in a state, as regards the stowing and receiving of these plates, reasonably fit to encounter the ordinary perils that might be expected on a voyage at that season? secondly, if she was not in a fit state, was the loss that happened caused by that unfitness?—Held, that the direction was right and correctly stated the liability of a shipowner, even though he did not hold himself out as a common carrier. Ib.

In the contract of a shipowner to carry goods shipped on board his vessel, there is no implied condition that the vessel shall be seaworthy. Schloss v. Heriot, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 59; 32 L. J., C. P. 211; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 76; 8 L. T. 246; 11 W. R. 596.

But to an action by the shipowner against the merchant who shipped goods on board, for the latter's share of an average loss, it is a good plea, on the ground of avoiding circuity of action, to plead that the ship was not seaworthy at the commencement of the voyage and that the average loss was caused and arose from and in consequence of such unseaworthiness. Ib.

Throwing up Charter by Reason of Unseaworthiness of Ship.]—A. agreed to charter a ship for twelve months after the completion of her then present voyage. After the completion of the voyage and when he was ready to load the ship she was detained as unseaworthy; and the repairs were not finished until more than two months after the completion of the voyage:—Held, that the charterer was entitled to throw up the charterparty. Tully v. Howling, 46 L. J., Q. B. 388; 2 Q. B. D. 182; 36 L. T. 163; 25 W. R. 290; 3 Asp. M. C. 61—C. A.

Voyage in Stages.]—By a charterparty a ship was to proceed to Oran, and there load a part cargo of esparto, for delivery at Garston, with liberty to fill up with ore, or other dead-weight cargo, for owner's benefit, and to call at any ports in any order. She loaded at Oran, and left with a supply of coal insufficient for a voyage thence to Garston. She called at Huelva, and was filled up with ore, but no further supply of coal was taken on board. After leaving Huelva, the ship went ashore, by reason of the insufficient supply of coal, and the cargo was lost. In an action for non-delivery of the esparto :—Held, by the court below, that the voyage was an entire voyage from Oran to Garston, and that the warranty of seaworthiness at the commencement of that voyage having been broken, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover :—Held, on appeal, that even if the voyage could be treated as one divided into stages, the warranty of seaworthiness, which attaches at the commencement of each stage, had been broken at Huelva, and the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Thin v. Richards, 62 L. J., Q. B. 39 ; [1892] 2 Q. B. 141 ; 66 L. T. 584 ; 40 W. R. 617 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 165—C. A.

Fitness for Cargo.]—A ship was chartered to sail to Manilla for orders to load there, or at Yloilo, a full and complete cargo of sugar in bags, hemp in compressed bales, $\frac{\text{and}}{\text{or}}$ measurement goods, and therewith to sail to Cork, &c., the freight to be at the rate of 4*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* for dry sugar, 4*l.* 5*s.* for wet sugar, and 4*l.* 15*s.* for hemp or measurement goods ; the master engaging that the vessel before and when receiving cargo should be a good risk for insurance, and that during the voyage he would take all proper means to keep the vessel tight, staunch and strong, and in every way fitted and provided for the voyage. At Yloilo the charterer provided a full cargo of wet sugar in bags. In the course of loading it was found that the quantity of molasses which had drained, and which might have been expected to drain, from the wet sugar was so great as to render the ship unseaworthy unless removed, and that the ship's pumps were unable to remove it. The ship was in all other respects seaworthy, but could not have been rendered seaworthy for that cargo without a delay which would have frustrated the objects of the voyage:—Held, that the charterer was entitled under the charterparty to supply a full cargo of wet sugar, and to have a ship provided which was fit for such a cargo. Stanton v. Richardson, 45 L. J., C. P. 78 ; 33 L. T. 193 ; 24 W. R. 324 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 23—H. L.

There is no undertaking on the part of a shipowner that his vessel (if really fit) shall be free from suspicion of unfitness to receive a cargo on board. Towse v. Henderson, 4 Ex. 890 ; 19 L. J., Ex. 163.

Damages.]—A ship was chartered and put up at the Mauritius as a general ship, and received on board sugars consigned to London. In consequence of the unseaworthiness of the ship she was forced to return to the Mauritius, and part of the sugars which were damaged was there landed and sold. The owners of the sugars brought actions against the charterers for the short delivery. They having no defence suffered judgment by default, and attended the execution of the writs of inquiry. The owner of the vessel had notice of the actions and of each step therein, and was invited to take on himself the defence, which he declined to do :—Held, that the charterers were entitled to recover the sums paid by them in those actions, and also the costs incurred by them therein. Blyth v. Smith, 6 Scott (N.R.) 360 ; 5 Man. & G. 405 ; 12 L. J., C. P. 203 ; 7 Jur. 948.

Declaration for freight on a charterparty, whereby the ship being tight and every way fitted for the voyage should, at Sunderland, load a cargo of coals and proceed to Constantinople, being paid freight on the quantity delivered, "one-fourth of the freight to be advanced to the owners' agent in London, on the ship having sailed, less five per cent. thereon for assurance, interest and commission." Averment, that the defendant caused the ship to be loaded with a cargo of coals, and "that she, being so loaded, sailed for C. pursuant to the charterparty." Plea, that the ship was not, at the commencement of the voyage, tight and every way fitted for the voyage, and that by reason thereof the ship and cargo were lost ; and a second plea, that after the ship sailed, the plaintiff was guilty of negligent and improper conduct with regard to the management of the ship, by reason whereof the ship and cargo were lost :—Held, that the first plea was not a good plea in avoidance of circuity of action, as the damages sustained by the defendant were not necessarily identical in amount with the sum claimed by the plaintiff ; but that it was a bar to the action, on the ground that the advance on the freight had never become payable. Thompson v. Gillespy, 5 El. & Bl. 209 ; 24 L. J., Q. B. 340 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 779 ; 3 W. R. 505.

Action for Breach of Contract as to Seaworthiness—Insurance—Pleading.]—Action by shipper against shipowner for breach of contract that the ship was seaworthy at commencement of voyage, whereby plaintiff was prevented from insuring : plea that before any damage accrued to the plaintiff the ship was made seaworthy :—Held, bad. Dunbar v. Smithwaite, 3 W. R. 68.

iii. Position and Sailing.

Position of Ship.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that the ship "Ceres," of the measurement, &c., "expected to be at Alexandria about the 15th of December," being tight, &c., "should with all convenient speed" sail and proceed to that port, and there receive from the charterers a cargo of cotton seed. In an action against the owner, the breach alleged in the declaration was, that the ship was not expected to be at Alexandria about the 15th of December, 1871, but was then in such part of the world and under such engagements that she could not perform those engagements and arrive at Alexandria about the said day :—Held, a good breach, the descriptive statement amounting to a warranty that the ship was in such a position that she might reasonably be expected to arrive at Alexandria by the day named. Corkling v. Massey, 42 L. J., C. P. 153 ; L. R. 8 C. P. 395 ; 28 L. T. 636 ; 21 W. R. 680 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 18.

A plea, that, at the time of making the charterparty, the ship was, to the charterer's knowledge, engaged for a certain voyage, and that the charterparty was made subject to a condition that she should with all convenient speed fulfil her engagement and then proceed to the port of loading, and that she did so, is a good plea. Ib.

"Ship now at Rangoon."]—In an action by the vendors against their vendees for refusal to accept, evidence was given to shew the circumstances under which the contract was made, and that it was of vital importance that the vessel should be in the port named at the time of making the contract. The jury found, that the condition "Ship now at Rangoon," had not been fulfilled, and that it was a condition absolutely vital:—Held, that it was rightly left to the jury to say under what circumstances the contract was made, and that the words "Ship now at Rangoon" amounted to a warranty justifying the defendants in saying that there had been a failure of performance of a condition precedent and in refusing to carry out the contract. Oppenheim v. Fraser, 34 L. T. 524; 3 Asp. M. C. 146.

"Now in port."]—By a charterparty, dated London, the 19th of October, 1860, A.'s ship was chartered to B. as follows: "It is this day mutually agreed between A., owner of the good ship or vessel called the M., of 420 tons or thereabouts, now in the port of Amsterdam, and B., of London, merchant, that the ship being tight, staunch, strong, and every way fitted and ready for the voyage, shall, with all possible despatch, proceed direct to Newport, Monmouthshire," and there take in cargo. On October 15th the ship was at Nieuwediep, sixty-two miles from Amsterdam, and not in the port of Amsterdam, and under favourable circumstances would have reached the docks at Amsterdam in twelve hours more, but in consequence of contrary winds and the absence of steam-tug power, she remained at Nieuwediep over the 19th of October, and did not reach the docks till the 23rd of October. She discharged her cargo with all possible dispatch, was immediately made ready for sea, and proceeded direct to Newport, where she arrived on the 1st of December. B. altogether refused to load the ship:—Held, that the words "now in the port of Amsterdam," in the charterparty, imported a warranty, and that as the ship was not in the port of Amsterdam at the time when the charterparty was made, he was justified in saying that there had been a failure of performance of a condition precedent, and in refusing altogether to carry out the contract. Behn v. Burness, 3 B. & S. 751; 32 L. J., Q. B. 204; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 620; 8 L. T. 207; 11 W. R. 496—Ex. Ch.

Time for Sailing—Warranty.]—To an action for not loading a vessel, in pursuance of the terms of a charterparty, the defendant pleaded that it was agreed by the charterparty, between the plaintiff, original charterer of the good ship called the "Dove," A 1, of the measurement of 149 tons or thereabouts, now at sea, having sailed three weeks ago or thereabouts, and the defendant, that the ship, being tight, staunch, &c., should proceed to Marseilles (after having delivered her cargo at Genoa), and there load goods of the defendant, and therewith proceed to a safe port in the United Kingdom, calling at Cork or Falmouth, for a certain rate of freight, thirty working days to be allowed, Sundays excepted. The plea then averred that time was an essential and material part of the contract; and the probable situation of the ship, with reference to the date of her sailing and the object of her voyage, was also an essential part of the contract; and that, in point of fact, at the time of making the charterparty, the ship had not sailed three weeks, but a materially and unreasonably later time, of which the defendant had no notice or knowledge, for which cause the defendant neglected and refused to load the ship:—Held, that the time at which the ship sailed was material, and that the statement in the charterparty amounted to a warranty. Ollive v. Booker, 1 Ex. 416; 17 L. J., Ex. 21.

Guarantee of Despatch twenty-four hours after Arrival.]—It was agreed by charterparty that a vessel should sail to Sydney $\frac{\text{and}}{\text{or}}$ Moreton Bay, and thence proceed to Callao, Peru, where the captain should report his arrival to G., who should send the captain orders for loading a cargo of guano at the Chincha Islands, to which place the vessel should at once proceed, and after completing her loading, proceed to any safe port in the United Kingdom; freight to be paid at the rate of 4*l.* sterling per ton weight of guano. "The owners guarantee that for the freight of 4*l.* per ton, the ship shall be despatched for Australia within twenty-one days after arrival; if detained over twenty-one days 3*l.* 10*s.* per ton to be the rate of freight; if ordered from Sydney to Moreton Bay, the time so occupied not to be reckoned in the days as above." The vessel sailed from Liverpool on the 5th July, 1853, and anchored inside Sydney Heads on the 25th October, 1853. She was ordered to Moreton Bay, but bad weather and the insubordination of a portion of the crew prevented the vessel from leaving Sydney Harbour until the 4th November, when she proceeded on her voyage, and on the 12th anchored inside the Flanders Rocks and outside Moreton Bay. She was taken in charge of a pilot, and on the 14th arrived at her anchorage, where she remained until the 5th December. Some of the crew having deserted, and others refused to work, the remainder was not sufficient to navigate the vessel safely to Callao, and no addition to the crew could be procured at Moreton Bay. On the 5th December the master caused the anchor to be got up and the sails set by the men who were willing to work, with the assistance of the harbour-master and pilot's crew, and the vessel proceeded on her voyage to Callao, but was shortly afterwards becalmed. During the night several of the seamen deserted. On the 6th the vessel proceeded some distance further, when the greater part of the crew refused to proceed to Callao, on the ground that the ship was not sufficiently manned, and they compelled the captain to return to Sydney. The vessel arrived at Sydney on the 18th December, and remained there until the 6th January, 1854, when she sailed to Callao, where she ultimately arrived and brought home a cargo of guano:—Held, that under these circumstances the ship was not despatched from Australia within twenty-one days after her arrival, and consequently that the owners of the vessel were not entitled to the freight of 4*l.* per ton. Sharp v. Gibbs, 1 H. & N. 801.

—— Condition precedent.]—Where a charterparty, dated 6th of February, but averred not to be executed till the 15th of March, contained a covenant by the owner that the ship should and would proceed from D., where she then lay, on or before the 12th of February, on her outward-bound voyage, and return, &c., and a covenant by the freighter, that, in consideration of everything above mentioned, he would pay freight for the voyage; the voyage being averred to be performed, and the freight earned, the owner may recover for it, without averring that the ship sailed on or before the 12th of February, such covenant that the ship should sail on or before the 12th of February being either no condition precedent, but only an independent covenant, for breach of which the party had his remedy in damages; or not of the substance of the contract, which was for the performing of the voyage for which the ship was chartered, and earning the freight; or being rendered impossible to be performed by the parties themselves not having executed the deed till after the time appointed for doing the act, and thereby dispensing with the performance of it. Hall v. Cazenove, 4 East, 477; 1 Smith, 272; 7 R. R. 611.

Stipulations in a charterparty, that the vessel, being tight, staunch and strong, shall sail with convenient speed, and within a reasonable time, are not conditions precedent to the performance of a contract to load on the part of the charterer, although if, by reason of the non-compliance with those stipulations, the object of the charterparty and of the voyage was wholly frustrated, that may be an answer to an action for breach of the contract. Tarrabochia v. Hickie, 1 H. & N. 183; 26 L. J., Ex. 26.

By a charterparty it was agreed, that the vessel should proceed to Trieste, and there load a full cargo of wheat, and, being so loaded, should therewith proceed to a port in the United Kingdom, "the vessel to sail from England on or before the 4th of February then next":—Held, that the sailing of the vessel from England on or before the day named was a condition precedent to the owner's right to sue the merchants for not providing a cargo at Trieste. Glaholm v. Hayes, 2 Scott (N.R.) 471; 2 Man. & G. 257; 10 L. J., C. P. 98.

The defendant chartered a ship of T. from Sunderland to Barcelona: by the charterparty, half the freight was to be advanced to the master on his signing the bills of lading. T., being indebted to the plaintiff, gave him an order on the defendant, requiring the defendant to pay to the plaintiff, on the ship "being loaded and sailed, out of the advance," 73*l.* The defendant wrote at the foot of the order, that he agreed to the above. The vessel being loaded and in a fit state for sailing, but the clearances not being completed, nor the bills of lading signed, left Sunderland Harbour, with the captain on board. She crossed the bar; and the captain returned to land, in order to get the papers completed, and sign the bills of lading; he signed them, and got the advance of freight from the defendant, who deducted a sum to meet the 73*l.* The vessel stood off and on, waiting for the captain; but it being found that she had been injured, she returned to Sunderland Harbour to repair, the captain not having joined her, and did not afterwards sail:—Held, that the sailing of the vessel was a condition precedent to the liability of the defendant to pay the 73*l.* Hudson v. Bilton, 6 El. & Bl. 565; 26 L. J., Q. B. 27; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 784.

—— "Ready to receive Cargo."]—In an action for damages for loss of freight and for demurrage, it was proved that the defendants made a contract with the plaintiff containing these clauses: "Steamer to load end of November or early December. Charterers having the option of cancelling if she is not ready to receive cargo by the 12th December next. Steamer to be loaded on usual berth terms, 2 per cent. commission to us." The vessel arrived on the 10th December, and her stern having been fastened to the breakwater, the captain gave the defendants notice that he was ready to receive cargo, but the merchants refused to take the notice that the vessel was "ready to receive cargo" until she was moored alongside the quay, which could not be done before the 18th December. Meantime the merchants cancelled their contracts with the defendants, and the vessel was loaded at a lower rate of freight than that specified in the contract:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages for the loss of freight, as the vessel was "ready to receive cargo" within the meaning of the contract, although not moored alongside the quay, and that the matter was not affected by an alleged custom at the port, that a vessel was not to be considered "ready to receive cargo" until moored alongside the quay; but that the plaintiff was not entitled to damages for demurrage or detention of the vessel after 12th December, as the contract came to an end on that date. Hick v. Tweedy, 63 L. T. 765; 6 Asp. M. C. 599.

—— "Ready to Load."]—A charterparty provided that, should the steamer not be ready to load on or before the 31st May, 1882, the charterer should have the option of cancelling the charter. On that day the vessel had discharged two holds only of its outward cargo, and was not completely discharged till the middle of the following day:—Held, that the charterers were entitled to cancel the charter. Groves v. Volkart, 1 Cab. & E. 309. Affirmed in C. A. And see The Austen Friars, Smith v. Dart, infra; Oliver v. Fielden, col. 504.

—— Obligation to Load—Date of Arrival.]—A condition that owners will provide "steamers to load between August and early December inclusive, at times to be in good time mutually arranged, but as nearly as possible a steamer a month," contained in a charterparty, under which the charterers assume absolutely the obligation of loading such ships, does not make the punctual arrival of the ship at dates mentioned in a subsequent letter a condition precedent to the arising of the charterers' obligation to load, where the ships have been delayed by perils of the sea, which are excepted, or by towage which is allowed by the charterparty. Potter v. Burrell, 66 L. J., Q. B. 63; [1897] 1 Q. B. 97; 75 L. T. 491; 45 W. R. 145; 8 Asp. M. C. 200—C. A.

—— "Now Sailed or about to Sail"—Waiver.]—The description in a charterparty of the ship as "now sailed, or about to sail," held to be of the substance of the contract, and not a representation; and that those words were a condition precedent to the contract, and not a mere warranty. The charterers could therefore have refused to load. Bentsen v. Taylor, 63 L. J., Q. B. 15; [1893] 2 Q. B. 274; 4 R. 510; 69 L. T. 487; 42 W. R. 8; 7 Asp. M. C. 385—C. A.

Where charterers have a right to repudiate the contract, but induce the shipowner to send the ship to the port of loading in the belief that they would only claim damages in respect of increased freight and insurance premium:—Held, that they had waived their right to insist on the non-fulfilment of the condition, and were, therefore, liable for the freight. Ib.

—— Sail with the next Wind.]—Defence to action for freight that the ship did not sail with the next wind:—Plea held bad. Constable v. Clavery, infra, col. 300.

—— Quarantine.]—By a charterparty of a steamship it was agreed that she should go to "three safe loading places" between two named ports, and there load from the charterers a cargo of oranges, and being so loaded proceed to London . . . and deliver the same pursuant to bills of lading . . . (the act of God . . . and all dangers of the seas, rivers, and steam navigation of what nature and kind soever during the said voyage, always excepted), and the charterers thereby promised to load the cargo, and stipulated, after a provision for working and lay days, that "should the steamer not be arrived at first loading port free of pratique, and ready to load on or before the 15th of December next, charterers have the option of cancelling or confirming this charterparty." By dangers of the seas the steamer, although arrived at the first loading port, was not free of pratique and ready to load on the 15th of December, and the charterers therefore cancelled the charterparty. At the trial of an action against them for not loading the cargo, the judge left to the jury the disputed question whether the port was a "safe loading place," and they found in the affirmative:—Held, that the excepted dangers clause applied only to the voyage, and not to the clause giving the option to cancel the charterparty if the ship was not ready to load on the day fixed, and therefore the cancellation was justified. Smith v. Dart, 54 L. J., Q. B. 121; 14 Q. B. D. 105; 52 L. T. 218; 33 W. R. 455; 5 Asp. M. C. 360.

A ship has not arrived within the meaning of a charterparty provision requiring the charterer to load within a fixed time after her arrival, if she cannot be loaded by reason of quarantine unknown to both parties when the charterparty was entered into. Lord Blackburn's opinion in Hudson v. Ede, and Postlethwaite v. Freeland, col. 472, considered. White v. Steamship Winchester Co., 13 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 524.

A ship that has not obtained pratique, and is prohibited by regulations of the port from communicating with the shore, is not "ready to load" within the meaning of those words in a charterparty. The Austen Friars, Smith v. Dart, 6 R. 739; 71 L. T. 27; 7 Asp. M. C. 503.

—— "Leave Amsterdam."]—A ship was chartered to "sail and proceed from Amsterdam with all convenient speed to Liverpool, to leave Amsterdam not later than all (sic) March." On the 30th of March the ship, having a portion of her ballast on board, left the docks at Amsterdam, and on the same evening got to the entrance of the North Holland Canal. On the 31st of March she proceeded to Alkmaar, where she remained during the 1st and 2nd of April, taking in the remainder of her ballast. On the 3rd of April she proceeded on her voyage, and quitted Nieuwediep, and arrived at Liverpool on the 17th:—Held, that the term "leave Amsterdam" did not mean "sail on her voyage from Amsterdam," and consequently the stipulation in the charterparty had been complied with. Van Buggen v. Baines, 9 Ex. 523; 2 C. L. R. 543; 23 L. J., Ex. 213.

—— Where Accident within Exceptions.]—A merchant at Liverpool entered into a charterparty with the owner of the ship as follows: "It is mutually agreed between the owner of the good ship 'Zwaan,' now at Amsterdam, and to sail from thence for Liverpool on or before the 15th of March next, and ——, of Liverpool, that the ship, being tight, staunch and strong, shall with all convenient speed be made ready," &c., as in the usual printed form of charterparty. The exception was as follows:—"Restrictions of princes and rulers, the dangers and accidents of the seas and navigation, the act of God, fire, pirates and enemies, throughout this charterparty always excepted." The ship did not sail from Amsterdam in consequence of what was admitted to be "the act of God":—Held, that notwithstanding the words "throughout this charterparty," the sailing of the ship from Amsterdam on the 15th of March was a condition precedent to the obligation of the charterer to take and load the ship. Crookewit v. Fletcher, 1 H. & N. 893; 26 L. J., Ex. 153; 5 W. R. 348. See also cases post, col. 277.

—— To Sail Direct.]—By a charterparty between the owner and the captain of a ship and the chartered agent abroad, for the carriage of timber from Riga to Portsmouth at a stipulated rate per load, the former bound himself, after receiving his cargo on board, to sail with the first favourable wind direct to the port of Portsmouth. The ship, however, unnecessarily entered the harbour of Copenhagen, where she was detained several weeks, by means whereof the charterer was put to considerable expense in having fresh insurances effected upon the cargo. In an action for the freight:—Held, that the covenant to sail direct to Portsmouth was not a condition precedent; and that the deviation could not be given in evidence either as a bar to the action or to diminish the damages. Bornmann v. Tonke, 1 Camp. 377; 10 R. R. 747.

A shipowner, by charterparty of October 20th, 1832, agreed to go in ballast from P. to St. M., and bring back a cargo of fruit direct to L.; the charterer was to be allowed thirty-five running days for loading and unloading, to commence on December 1st then next; and if the vessel did not arrive at St. M. by the 31st January, 1833, the charterer was to be at liberty to rescind the charterparty:—Held, that the shipowner was bound to proceed at once to St. M., and was not at liberty to make an intermediate voyage for his own purposes, although, notwithstanding such intermediate voyage, he arrived at St. M. before the 31st January, 1833. M'Andrew v. Adams, 4 M. & Sc. 517; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 29; 3 L. J., C. P. 236.

—— Waiver.]—By a charterparty made at Malta, dated the 24th of February, 1854, the chartered ship was described as "coppered A 1, of Malta," of a certain measurement, "now at anchor at this port," and it was agreed that she being tight, staunch, and strong, and properly manned, and every way fitted for the voyage, should, with all convenient speed, proceed in ballast to Alexandria, in Egypt, and there load from the charterer a cargo of beans and wheat. At the date of the charterparty the ship was not coppered, nor was she lying at anchor in port, nor had she obtained her register. She was an entire new vessel, in dry dock, her coppering being in course of completion. The ship was not ready to sail until the 28th of March, and, from the state of the weather, she did not sail until the 30th of that month, and reached Alexandria on the 12th of April. No objection was made by the charterer, at the time of the delay. On her arrival the master gave notice to the charterer's agent there that he would be ready to receive cargo on the 14th of that month. Before the ship's arrival at Alexandria, the charterer's agent had made a cession to the charterparty, and the agent referred the master to the cessionary, informing him that his principal had nothing more to do with the charterparty than to guarantee the solvency of the cessionary. Freights had fallen considerably below the rates named in the charterparty between the date of the charterparty and the date of the cession. The cessionary sought to invalidate the cession on account of the delay in the arrival of the ship, and on that ground refused to give the captain any cargo. The captain refused to acknowledge the cessionary or release the charterer, but at the same time expressed his readiness to receive a cargo from any one under the order of the charterer's agent. The ship lay at Alexandria waiting for cargo the whole of her lay days and the ten demurrage days, but received no cargo from the charterer. The captain afterwards took a small cargo and returned to Malta. In an action brought by the shipowner against the charterer in Malta :—Held, first, that it was unnecessary to determine whether the completion of the coppering of the ship was a condition precedent or not to the maintaining an action against the charterer, as it was clear that that statement had reference to the time of sailing and not to the date of the charterparty. Dimech v. Corlett, 12 Moore, P. C. 199. And see Bentson v. Taylor, supra, col. 265, as to waiver.

Held, secondly, as to the stipulation that the ship should sail "with all convenient speed," that as the parties had not expressly stated for themselves in the charterparty that unless the ship sailed on a specified day the charterparty was to be at an end, and as the charterer resided at Malta and had made no objection at the time to the delay, or had given evidence that any other loss than that occasioned by the falling of freights had taken place in consequence of the delay, his position was not thereby altered, and an action was therefore maintainable against the charterer upon the charterparty. Ib.

To Sail with Convoy.]—The owner of a ship is bound by a representation of his broker, who put up the ship at the Royal Exchange, and at the coffee-house, as a general ship warranted to sail with convoy, and distributed handbills to the same effect. Runquist v. Ditchell, 3 Esp. 64 ; 2 Camp. 556, n.

—— No Convoy — Loss of Insurance — Damages.]—The defendant put up a ship at Lloyd's as about to sail with the first convoy. The plaintiff shipped goods in her, and insured them with a warranty that the ship would sail with convoy. Before the ship sailed preliminaries of peace were signed, and the ship sailed without convoy, none being appointed by the government, but with French, Spanish, and American passports. No notice of her sailing without convoy was given to the plaintiffs. The ship was lost in collision the day after she sailed. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for breach of contract, whereby they lost the benefit of their insurance :—Held, that they were entitled to recover. Philips v. Baillie, 3 Dougl. 374.

—— To Sail with Convoy—Warranty or not.]—A ship advertised to sail with convoy was blown out of the Downs, whilst waiting for convoy, and eventually, after endeavouring to put into Falmouth to wait for convoy, sailed for Grenada without convoy, and was taken. There was no mention of convoy in the bill of lading. In an action by the cargo owner against the shipowner for having lost the benefit of his insurance through the ship sailing without convoy, a verdict was given for the defendant ; but a new trial was directed in order that the question whether the advertisement amounted to a warranty, and as to the effect of the omission of mention of convoy in the bill of lading might be argued. Snell v. Marryatt, Abbott on Shipping, 13th ed. 357.

To Arrive at Port of Loading.]—Proviso in a charterparty, that, if a ship did not arrive at her port of loading on or before, &c., unless prevented by stress of weather or unavoidable impediment, the freighter should not be obliged to ship a cargo :—Held, that, if ordinary diligence was used in the voyage to reach the port of loading, the owners were within the exception of the proviso, though the ship was delayed till after the stipulated time by causes which extraordinary exertion might have counteracted. Granger v. Dent, M. & M. 475 ; 31 R. R. 752.

Where a ship was freighted to go in ballast to Jamaica, and bring home a cargo, and the freighter undertook to provide a full cargo for her in time for the July convoy, provided she arrived out and was ready by the 25th of June :—Held, where she did not arrive out till after the 25th of June, that the freighter was entirely discharged from his contract to furnish a cargo. Shadforth v. Higgin, 3 Camp. 385.

Where the plaintiff covenanted that on the arrival of a ship at a certain port, he would receive the defendant's cargo, and sail for England therewith with the next June convoy, provided the ship arrived and was ready to load sixty-five running days before the sailing of such convoy :—Held, that it was not a condition precedent to the defendant's part of the contract that the ship should so arrive, but he was still bound to supply a cargo under a stipulation to that effect in the contract. Deffel v. Brocklebank, 4 Price, 36 ; 3 Bligh, 561.

"Always Afloat"—Neap Tides—Lighterage — Demurrage.] — By a charterparty the "C." (described as expected ready to load about the 10th of April) was to proceed to the North Dock, Swansea, and there load, always afloat, a full and complete cargo of about 2,100 tons of fuel. It was also agreed that if the "C." was unable to complete loading at the North Dock, the char-terers were to bear the expense of lighterage necessary to enable her to complete her loading elsewhere. The "C." arrived at the North Dock on the 30th of April, and having there loaded about 1,916 tons of fuel, was removed by her master from the dock, and the remainder of her cargo was taken to her in lighters. This was done because, the tides being neap, the "C." would have been unable to cross the sill of the North Dock when fully laden, and would have been detained there about a week, though there was sufficient water in the dock for her to have completed her loading remaining always afloat:—Held, that the "C." was not "unable to complete her loading at the North Dock," and that the fear of detention by being neaped did not justify her removal by the master. The Curfew, 60 L. J., Adm. 53; [1891] P. 131; 64 L. T. 330; 39 W. R. 367; 7 Asp. M. C. 29.

Damages.]—The defendant having guaranteed that, in consideration of the plaintiff's shipping goods by his ship, she should sail with or before any other vessel in the berth, under penalty of forfeiting half the freight, and another ship having sailed before her, and the only plea being, payment into court:—Held, that the sailing of the vessel with or before any other was the event intended to be secured; that the half freight was therefore recoverable as liquidated damages; and that it was unnecessary for the plaintiff to give evidence of any actual damage sustained by him. Sparrow v. Paris, 7 H. & N. 594; 31 L. J., Ex. 137; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 391; 5 L. T. 799.

When a contract was made in the following terms:—"We undertake to ship for you by the 'Warrior Queen,' guaranteeing that she sails not later than the first week in July, or forfeit 2*s.* 6*d.* per ton, 300 or 400 packages, one-third yarn, at a through rate of 42*s.* 6*d.*, free of commission, provided they are forwarded per M. & Co., on or before the 29th inst.;" and the defendant, in answer to a declaration for breach of the contract by reason of the nonshipment of a portion of the packages so sent, pleaded the payment of 2*s.* 6*d.* per ton on the packages as and for the forfeit according to the agreement:—Held, that the plea was good. Heugh v. Escombe, 4 L. T. 517.

Representation or Warranty—Ship not at Place Named.]—Assumpsit on charterparty by which defendant hired a ship from plaintiff to go to Cronstadt, and there take a full cargo of tallow and deals, &c., and proceed to London; allowance for lay days and demurrage; averment that the ship went to Cronstadt; breaches that the defendant did not load a cargo as agreed, but shipped deals only and not tallow; and that he detained the ship beyond the time agreed on, whereby the plaintiff earned less freight, and lost the use of his ship during her detention. Plea, that plaintiffs had represented that the ship was at W., and that plaintiff had entered into the charterparty on that understanding, whereas she was not at W. Replication, that at the time, &c., the plaintiffs also stated to the defendants, and it was mentioned in the charterparty, that the ship was on a voyage from W. to H., and the plaintiffs believed she was at W., whereas she had sailed from W. for H. Rejoinder, that the representation mentioned was in the charterparty, and was part of the contract, and that the ship was not at the time, &c., at W.:—Held, on special demurrer, that the mere representation as alleged in the plea was no answer to the declaration; and that the rejoinder, if it alleged a warranty, was a departure. Elliott v. Von Glehn, 13 Q. B. 632; 18 L. J., Q. B. 221.

Held, by Erle, J., that, if the rejoinder had not been a departure, the breach of warranty would not have been an answer to the action, the defendant having to some extent availed himself of the contract. Ib.

Covenant that Ship should Arrive by Named Day—Non-arrival—Refusal to Load.]—A shipowner covenanted that his ship should sail from M. for W., and the charterparty contained a proviso that if the ship should not arrive at W. by a day named the freighter should be at liberty to load her or not as he pleased. In an action by the freighter against the shipowner for not sailing for W., the defendant pleaded that he was prevented by weather from sailing and arriving at W. by the day named:—Held, on demurrer, that the defendant was liable, having undertaken that his ship should arrive by the day named. Shubrick v. Salmond, 3 Burr. 1637.

Covenant—Ready to Sail by Day Named.]—The plaintiff by charterparty covenanted that his ship should be ready to sail by a day named to load figs at Naples, and return to Topsham; and the defendant covenanted to pay freight for the same. The plaintiff sued the defendant for freight; the defendant pleaded that the ship was not ready to sail by the day named, whereby he lost his profit. Demurrer to plea allowed, the covenants being reciprocal. Shower v. Cudmore, Sir Th. Jones, 216.

Covenant to Unload and Sail.]—Covenant in charterparty that the ship having unloaded at T. would sail for D., and there load defendant's cargo. She did not unload at T.:—Held, that her unloading at T. was not a condition precedent to recovery of freight, but a separate covenant. Ohlsen v. Drummond, 4 Dougl. 357; 2 Chit. 705.

iv. Capacity.

Description of Warranty.]—To an action for not loading a ship according to the terms of a charterparty, in which the shipowner was described as "of the ship 'A.,' of the measurement of 180 to 200 tons, or thereabouts," the charterer pleaded that by the charterparty the ship was warranted to be of the measurement of 180 tons to 200 tons, or thereabouts; and that the ship was of a measurement greatly and unreasonably exceeding 200 tons, and was not of the measurement of 180 tons to 200 tons, or thereabouts; whereupon he did not load:—Held, that the plea was not proved, inasmuch as the statement of tonnage in the charterparty was matter of description only, and did not amount to a warranty Barker v. Windle, 6 El. & Bl. 675; 25 L. J., Q. B. 349; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1069; 4 W. R. 603—Ex. Ch.

A cargo of guano was shipped from the Chincha Islands to London, by the "Oriente." The "Oriente," having become disabled, put into Valparaiso, was condemned, and her cargo taken out of her. The captain, "for account and risk of the owner of the cargo," chartered the "Fairy Queen" to take on "the cargo brought by the 'Oriente,' being 470 tons more or less, not exceeding what she can reasonably stow," at the rate of 5*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* per ton. The owner of the cargo had an agent at Valparaiso, of which the captains of the "Oriente" and the "Fairy Queen" were aware, but no reference was made to him. After the guano had been loaded on board the "Fairy Queen," the captain of that vessel said that he had not more than 350 tons on board; and ultimately the captain of the "Oriente" agreed that freight should be paid on the full quantity of guano mentioned in the charterparty; and in order to carry out the agreement, a bill of lading was signed by the captain of the "Fairy Queen," making the guano deliverable to M. & Co., the agents for the general average settlement of the "Oriente," or their assigns, he or they paying freight for the guano as 470 tons, as per charterparty:—Held, that the charterparty contained no warranty that the cargo amounted to 470 tons more or less; and therefore the owners of the cargo were not liable under the charterparty for not loading a full cargo. Gibbs v. Grey, 2 H. & N. 22; 26 L. J., Ex. 286; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 543; 5 W. R. 608.

A charterparty provided that the ship should load a cargo of creosoted sleepers and timber, the charterers to have the option of shipping 200 tons of general cargo, and contained the following words: "Owners guarantee ship to carry at least about 90,000 cubic feet, or 1,500 tons deadweight." A lump sum was payable as freight. The ship was in fact able to load no more than 65,000 cubic feet, equivalent to 1,120 tons deadweight of such cargo. In an action by the charterers against the owners for damages:—Held, that the words above mentioned did not amount to a guarantee that the ship would carry 90,000 cubic feet of the specified cargo. Carnegie v. Conner, 59 L. J., Q. B. 122; 24 Q. B. D. 45; 61 L. T. 691; 6 Asp. M. C. 447.

Condition Precedent.]—Where, by a charterparty made at Liverpool for a voyage from Liverpool to Sydney, the charterer agreed to pay for the use and hire of the ship, in respect of the voyage, 1,550*l.* in full, on condition of her taking a cargo of not less than 1,000 tons of weight and measurement:—Held, that the stipulation or condition of the ship taking a cargo of not less than 1,000 tons of weight and measurement was not a condition precedent; and that, even if it was so originally, the charterer having had a substantial part of the consideration for his promise to pay, could not plead it in bar. Pust v. Dowie, 5 B. & S. 20; 34 L. J., Q. B. 127; 13 W. R. 459—Ex. Ch.

Measurement of Cargo, how ascertained.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that "a ship should load a cargo, and proceed to a port in Great Britain, and deliver the same on being paid freight at and after the rate of 35*s.* per 180 English cubic feet taken on board, as per Gothenburg custom":—Held, that the freight was to be ascertained by measuring the cargo, according to the method used at Gothenburg, and not according to the method used at the port of discharge. The Skandinav, 51 L. J., Adm. 9?—C. A.

As to Weight.]—By a charterparty made at Liverpool for a voyage from Liverpool to Sydney, the charterer agreed to pay for the use and hire of the ship, in respect of the voyage, 1,550*l.* in full, on condition of her taking a cargo of not less than 1,000 tons of weight and measurement:—Held, that 1,000 tons of weight and measurement meant 1,000 tons of a cargo of goods in the ordinary proportions of the port of lading, viz. one-third weight and two-thirds measurement, and not as for the Sydney market, in which the proportion is two-thirds weight and one-third measurement. Pust v. Dowie, supra.

In Fresh or Salt Water.]—A charterparty contained a guarantee that a vessel should carry 3,000 tons dead weight upon a draught of twenty-six feet of water:—Held, that both parties to the charter must have contemplated loading a cargo in the river, and that, consequently, the guarantee would apply to fresh as well as to salt water. The Norway (Owners) v. Ashburner, 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 245; Br. & Lush. 404; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 892; 13 L. T. 50; 13 W. R. 1085.

Marginal Note—Guarantee as to Ship's Capacity—Stowage of Machinery and Coal.]—By a charterparty made between the respondents and the appellants it was agreed that the appellants' vessel should proceed to Glasgow and there "load all such goods and merchandise as the charterers should tender alongside for shipment, not exceeding what she could reasonably stow and carry," &c. It was provided that the freight should be a lump sum of 2,200*l.*, and the charterparty contained this guarantee:—"Owners guarantee that the vessel shall carry not less than 2,000 tons dead weight," and this provision: "Should the vessel not carry the guaranteed dead weight as above any expenses incurred from this cause to be borne by the owners, and a pro ratâ reduction per ton to be made from the first payment of freight." The cargo intended to be carried was a general cargo consisting in part of railway locomotive machinery, and a note was by consent of the parties written upon the margin of the charterparty specifying the "largest pieces" of machinery which were to be included in the cargo by number, weight, and measurement. The charterers tendered a cargo not in excess of 2,000 tons dead weight, consisting of railway machinery, including locomotives and tenders, two parcels of coals, and general goods. The large pieces of machinery were much more numerous than specified in the marginal note. The vessel sailed with only 1,691 tons dead weight. It was not disputed that she contained a carrying capacity up to the guarantee; and it was admitted that 2,000 tons dead weight of the cargo tendered could not have been carried on the vessel unless the coal had been packed with the machinery, which was not done. The charterers claimed a deduction in the freight:—Held, that the marginal note amounted to a representation, and the cargo being such a cargo as was not contemplated, and the fact being that the vessel carried less than the guaranteed dead weight because the charterers tendered large machinery in excess of their representation, they were not entitled to the benefit of the stipulation for reduction of the freight, and the whole lump freight was payable:—Held, also, that the stowage of coal among machinery without the consent of the shippers of the machinery and of the coal was not proper stowage, and that it was the duty of the respondents and not the duty of the appellants to obtain such consent. Mackill v. Wright, 14 App. Cas. 106—H. L. (Sc.)

Quantity of Cargo — "About."] — Under a charterparty providing that the ship shall load empty petroleum barrels, as many as may be required by the master, say about 5,000; the word "about" entitles the master to require at his option the shipment of 10 per cent. more or less than the amount specified. Alcock v. Leeuw, 1 Cab. & E. 98.

Freight—Vacant Space.]—See Potter v. New Zealand Shipping Co., post, col. 424.

3. Exemptions from Liability.

"Perils of the Seas."]—Where there is an exception in a charterparty of perils of the sea, a loss from the ship's running foul of another by misfortune is within the exception, and is a loss by perils of the sea. Buller v. Fisher, 3 Esp. 67.

A vessel chartered for a voyage from the Cape to Hondeklip Bay, there to load a cargo of copper ore, and proceed therewith to Swansea, having loaded part of her cargo, received damage to her capstan in a storm, such that she was unable to load the rest of her cargo, 120 tons, which were ready, until the damage was repaired. The master, instead of running for the Cape, 180 miles distant, where the damage could have been repaired, proceeded to St. Helena, 1,800 miles distant, expecting to be able to repair there, and intending to return for the rest of the cargo; but not being able to get repairs at St. Helena, he proceeded to Swansea with a cargo short of the 120 tons. The shipowner having sued the underwriter upon a policy of insurance upon chartered freight, as for a total loss of freight upon the 120 tons by perils of the sea, the jury found that the master acted throughout as a prudent owner, uninsured, would have acted:—Held, that the shipowner could not recover, for that the master was not prevented by perils of the sea from procuring repairs and earning the freight. Philpot v. Swann, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 270; 30 L. J., C. P. 358; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1291; 5 L. T. 183.

The exception in a charterparty of perils of the sea applies not only to the voyage contracted for, but also to the preliminary voyage to the port of loading. Hudson v. Hill, 43 L. J., C. P. 273; 30 L. T. 555.

Pleading.] — See Wynne v. Fellows, Holt, 446, infra, col. 300.

Condemnation.]—The capture of a chartered ship, and condemnation and sale by a decree of a vice-admiralty court, do not, if the decree is reversed by the court of appeal (although more than three years afterwards), with costs and damages, amount to a prevention by the perils enumerated in the charter; but the shipowner is bound to perform his contract or to pay damages. The Newport, Swabey, 335; 6 W. R. 310—P. C.

Duration of Exception.]—A charterparty provided that a ship should proceed from a port where she was lying, to a usual loading-place, and there load a full and complete cargo, and proceed to a certain other port. The charterparty contained a clause, "The act of God, the Queen's enemies, restraints of princes and rulers, fire and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas and rivers and navigation, of whatever nature and kind soever, during the voyage, always excepted":—Held, that the passage from the port where the ship lay to a usual place of loading was part of the voyage, and within the exception. Barker v. M'Andrew, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 759; 34 L. J., C. P. 191; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 637; 12 L. T. 459; 13 W. R. 779. And see Bruce v. Nicolopulo, infra, col. 277.

Obligation to repair Vessel and complete Voyage.]—The exception of perils of the sea contained in a charterparty will not relieve the shipowner from his obligation to complete the voyage by carrying the cargo to the port of destination in the chartered ship, if the damage caused by such perils is capable of repair within a reasonable time and at a cost not exceeding the value of the ship when repaired. Assicurazioni Generali and Schenker v. Bessie Morris Steamship Co., 61 L. J., Q. B. 754; [1892] 2 Q. B. 652; 4 R. 33; 67 L. T. 218; 41 W. R. 83; 7 Asp. M. C. 217—C. A.

"Perils of Navigation."]—H., by a charterparty, engaged a vessel of G., name to be given up by G. to H. as soon as known, the vessel to proceed from the port of Hull to the port of Alexandria, with liberty to G. to ship cargo on the outward voyage to Alexandria, and to call at intermediate ports; the ship on arriving at the port of Alexandria to take in a cargo to be shipped by H.'s agents and proceed with the same at a certain stipulated rate of freight to be paid by H. to G. to the ports of Hull or London. The ship was to arrive at Alexandria within three weeks of November 15th, 1870, but the charterparty contained the usual exceptions as to perils of navigation. The ship did not arrive at the port of Alexandria until considerably after the margin of time allowed by the charterparty, whereby H., by losing the market for his cargo, sustained damage. The delay was caused by perils of navigation within the exception clause of the charterparty arising on the outward voyage from Hull to Alexandria to take in H.'s cargo. G. pleaded the exception and the delay:—Held, that the plea afforded an answer to the action, inasmuch as the exception in the charterparty covered dangers of navigation occurring on the outward voyage before H.'s cargo was shipped as well as the transit with his cargo on board from Alexandria to Hull or London. Harrison v. Garthorne, 26 L. T. 508; 20 W. R. 722; 1 Asp. M. C. 303.

Pirates.] — Pirates are a peril of the sea within the meaning of a charterparty relieving the shipowner from liability for perils of the sea. Pickering v. Barkley, Styles, 132.

Construction — "Accidents of the Seas" and "Unforeseen Circumstances" excepted—Stress of Weather—Deviation.]—The owners of a steamship agreed by charterparty, excepting "dangers and accidents of the seas," to send her to Barrow to load iron to be at Glasgow not later than October 14th, "unforeseen circumstances excepted." The steamer, which was loading coals at Glasgow, completed her cargo, which she delivered at Dublin, but owing to bad weather did not arrive at Barrow until October 16th. She loaded the iron on October 17th, but owing to bad weather did not arrive at Glasgow until October 26th:—Held, that, since under ordinary circumstances of weather, the ship could have delivered her coals at Dublin and arrived with the iron at Glasgow on October 14th, the jury were entitled to rely on that fact, and that the owners were not liable. Donaldson v. Little, 10 Ct. of Sess. Ca. (4th ser.) 413.

"Dangers and Accidents of Navigation"—Collision.]—A charterparty provided that a ship should load a cargo of coal and deliver the same at the port of discharge at a freight of so much per ton on the quantity delivered (the act of God, &c., and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers and navigation always excepted), the freight to be paid two-thirds in cash ten days after the vessel's sailing, and the remainder in cash on the right and true delivery of the cargo agreeably to bills of lading, less cost of coal delivered short of bill of lading quantity:—Held, that a collision attributable solely to the negligence of those in charge of the other vessel was a "danger or accident of navigation" within the meaning of the charterparty, and therefore that the shipowners were not liable in respect of non-delivery of part of the cargo shipped caused by such a collision; but that the charterers were entitled nevertheless under the charterparty to set off the cost of the coal so undelivered against the balance of freight payable on delivery of the remainder of the cargo at the port of discharge. Woodley v. Michell (11 Q. B. D. 47) distinguished. "Garston" Sailing Ship Co. v. Hickie, 56 L. J., Q. B. 38; 18 Q. B. D. 17; 55 L. T. 879; 35 W. R. 33; 6 Asp. M. C. 71—C. A.

"Dangers and Accidents of the Seas."]—Rice was shipped under a charterparty and bills of lading which excepted "dangers and accidents of the seas." During the voyage rats gnawed a hole in a pipe on board the ship, whereby sea-water escaped and damaged the rice, without neglect or default on the part of the shipowners or their servants:—Held, that the damage was within the exception, and that the shipowners were not liable. Hamilton v. Pandorf, 57 L. J., Q. B. 24; 12 App. Cas. 518; 57 L. T. 726; 36 W. R. 369; 52 J. P. 196; 6 Asp. M. C. 212—H. L. (E.)

"Dangers of the Seas and Rivers"—Timber Raft.]—Timber had been towed alongside a vessel lying in a river for shipment, and the master's receipts for the quantity delivered had been received, and owing to a rapid current and strong wind then prevailing the usual means for securing the timber proved inefficient and a large amount was lost:—Held, that the loss was a loss within the exception of a charterparty excluding all "dangers and accidents of seas and rivers." Pyman v. Burt, 1 Cab. & E. 207.

Effect of, on Option to Cancel.]—See Smith v. Dart, ante, col. 265.

Seaworthiness—Engineers' Neglect—Error or Negligence of Navigation.]—By charterparty the shipowner was exempted from liability for "act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers, and errors or negligence of navigation of whatsoever kind during the said voyage." The ship was lost through failure of steam power to keep off a lee shore. The failure of steam power was because the water had been allowed to get too low in the boilers, so that they heated and contracted suddenly and leaked:—Held, that the loss was by "error or negligence of navigation," and that the owners were not liable. Cunningham v. Colvils, 16 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 295.

Muddy Water in Boiler.]—A steamship charterparty exempted the owners from liability for "act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers and (or) errors or negligence of navigation of whatsoever nature and kind during the said voyage." The ship was lost through the break-down of her boiler owing to muddy water that was in it before she sailed. The charterers sued the owners for loss of cargo:—Held, that the owners were liable, as the ship was unseaworthy when she sailed. Seville Sulphur and Copper Co. v. Colvils, 15 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 616.

"Restraints of Princes."]—In an action for breach of a charterparty, by which it was agreed that a vessel should proceed to a port of loading, and after loading a cargo convey it to a foreign port, the act of God, Queen's enemies, restraints of princes and rulers, fire and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas . . . during the voyage excepted, it was pleaded that before breach there was a war between the country of the port of destination and another country, so that the performance of the charterparty became illegal, and the shipowner refused to perform it:—Held, that the plea was good, as the blockade was within the meaning of the exception, "restraints of princes," and that the shipowner was not bound to have proceeded to the port of loading, or to have waited in anticipation of the removal of the blockade, in the absence of anything to lead to the inference that it would be removed within a reasonable time. Geipel v. Smith, 41 L. J., Q. B. 153; L. R. 7 Q. B. 404; 26 L. T. 361; 20 W. R. 332; 1 Asp. M. C. 268.

Seizure by agents of British government without authority (semble) not within the exception of restraints of princes. Evans v. Hutton, 2 Man. & G. 954; 5 Scott (N.R.) 670; 2 D. P. C. 600; 12 L. J., C. P. 17.

Duration of Exception.]—The plaintiff and the defendants agreed, by charterparty, that a ship then at Liverpool, of which the plaintiff was master, should with all convenient speed be made ready, and should, at Liverpool, receive and load from the charterer's agents a full cargo, and, being so loaded, should proceed to Stettin and deliver the same, and so end the voyage, restraint of princes, &c., during the voyage, always excepted, and the ship was to be loaded at Liverpool without detention; and the defendant thereby agreed to load the vessel at Liverpool, as in the charterparty stated, with the cargo at Liverpool:—Held, that the exception was applicable only after the ship had quitted Liverpool. Crow v. Falk, 8 Q. B. 467; 15 L. J., Q. B. 183; 10 Jur. 374.

A vessel, after discharging her outward cargo for the owners' benefit, was to proceed to Galatz or Ibraila, as ordered at Constantinople or Sulina by the charterer's agents, and there load a cargo of corn, and therewith proceed homewards and discharge at a port in the United Kingdom, and so end the voyage; restraints of princes and rulers, the dangers of the seas, navigation, fire, pirates and enemies during the voyage always mutually excepted:—Held, that the voyage commenced from the period of the discharge of the outward cargo, and that the exception as to the restraints of princes applied to the loading at Ibraila, where the vessel proceeded; and, consequently, that it was a good plea to an action by the owner against the charterer, for not loading a cargo at Ibraila, that he was prevented from loading by the restraint and prohibition of the ruler of the country wherein Ibraila is situate. Bruce v. Nicolopulo, 11 Ex. 129; 3 C. L. R. 775; 24 L. J., Ex. 321; 3 W. R. 483. And see Barker v. M'Andrew, supra, col. 274.

"Queen's Enemies."]—When a charterparty contains the exception "Queen's enemies," an apprehension of capture, founded upon circumstances calculated to affect the mind of a master of ordinary courage, judgment and experience, will justify delay in port during the continuance of the risk; nor is such delay less justifiable in the case of a ship belonging to a belligerent nation, but carrying a neutral cargo. The San Roman, 41 L. J., Adm. 72; L. R. 3 Adm. 583; 26 L. T. 948; 1 Asp. M. C. 346. Affirmed, 42 L. J., Adm. 46; L. R. 5 P. C. 301; 28 L. T. 381; 21 W. R. 393; 1 Asp. M. C. 603.

—— Reading Charterparty with Bill of Lading.]—When a charterparty contains the exceptions "Queen's enemies, restraints of princes," &c., and a stipulation that the master is to sign bills of lading in pursuance thereof "without prejudice to this charterparty," and the bills of lading are signed containing no exception but "dangers of the seas only excepted," the cargo being thereby consigned to consignees named therein, who had notice of the terms of the charterparty at the time it was entered into, the contract is contained in both instruments, and the stipulation in the bills of lading does not supersede the stipulations in the charterparty. Ib.

Prevention from Loading by Accident, &c.]—When a charterer by his charterparty undertakes to load a ship within certain given lay days, "accidents or causes occurring beyond the control of the shippers or affreighters, which may prevent or delay her loading or discharging, including civil commotion, strikes, riots, stoppage of trains, always excepted," or to pay demurrage, he cannot excuse default in loading within the lay days by giving evidence of general disturbance and cessation of work in the district about the time; but to exempt himself from liability must shew a disturbing cause, actually preventing the loading of the particular ship. The Village Belle, 30 L. T. 232; 2 Asp. M. C. 228. See Crockewit v. Fletcher, ante, col. 266.

Want of Men.]—Where a charterparty provided that, in case of the "inability of the ship to execute or proceed on the service," certain persons should be at liberty to make such abatement out of the freight as they should think reasonable:—Held, that an inability of the ship to proceed to sea for want of men to navigate her, was within the proviso, although such want of men arose from the ravages of the smallpox amongst the original crew, the death of some, and the desertion of others from fear of the distemper, and an impossibility of procuring others on the spot in their room. Beatson v. Schank, 3 East, 233; 7 R. R. 436.

Lay Days—Demurrage.]—Where it was agreed by charterparty that the charterer should not be liable for delay in loading caused by neaps and stoppage of navigation and the lay days were exceeded in consequence of the lighters which were bringing the cargo (one of salt) down the rivers Weaver and Mersey to Birkenhead, the place of loading, being delayed by neaps of exceptional lowness at the junction of the Mersey and Weaver, and it was proved that it is the invariable practice for all salt intended for foreign exportation to be brought to Birkenhead from the Weaver by water; that there are no storehouses for salt at Birkenhead; and that it is never kept there to await the arrival of vessels:—The charterer was held to be relieved from liability under the above exceptions, upon the ground that they must be taken to apply to bringing the cargo to Birkenhead for loading purposes. Allerton Sailing Ship Co. v. Falk, 6 Asp. M. C. 287. Distinguishing Grant v. Coverdale, XIV. DEMURRAGE, post, col. 479.

Negligence of Crew "during Voyage."]—Under a charterparty, which provided that the shipowners were not to be responsible for "any act, neglect or default whatsoever of the crew or other servants of the shipowners during the voyage," the "C. P." proceeded to Newfairwater and commenced to load a cargo for Greenock. During the loading the cargo was damaged by water entering the ship through a valve, which had been negligently left open by one of the engineers belonging to the ship. In an action brought by the charterers to recover damages in respect of the loss so occasioned:—Held, that the loss was occasioned during the "voyage" within the meaning of the charterparty, and that the defendants were not liable:—Held, also (on a counter-claim by the defendants for general average contribution in respect of the loss), that the defendants were entitled to recover, as the negligence of their own servants which had caused the loss was negligence for which they were not responsible. The Carron Park, 59 L. J., Adm. 74; 15 P. D. 203; 63 L. T. 356; 39 W. R. 191; 6 Asp. M. C. 543.

See also cases as to exceptions, infra, XII. BILL OF LADING.

4. PROVISIONS AS TO BILLS OF LADING AND DOCUMENTS.

Master bound to sign Bills of Lading.]—It was stipulated by a charterparty made between the plaintiffs and the defendants that the master of the ship should sign bills of lading as presented, or pay a named penalty. He refused to do so, and sailed from the port of loading without having signed any bills of lading. He proceeded to the port of discharge, delivered a portion of the cargo to the consignees, but ceased doing so and warehoused the remainder, as they, acting under instructions from the charterers, claimed to deduct from the freight an amount equal to the penalty named in the charterparty. In an action by the charterers against the shipowners for conversion and for penalties:—Held, that the plaintiffs could recover nominal damages for the breach of contract in not signing bills of lading as presented. Jones v. Hough, 49 L. J., Ex. 211; 5 Ex. D. 115; 42 L. T. 108; 4 Asp. M. C. 248—C. A. See also Seeger v. Duthie, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 72; 30 L. J., C. P. 65; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 3 L. T. 478; 9 W. R. 166—Ex. Ch.

—— On Terms of Sub-charter—Notice of Lien.]—A shipper who has loaded on the terms of a sub-charter is not affected by notice of a stipulation in the original charterparty that the owner is to have "a lien on the cargo for arrears of hire." He has a right to have bills of lading signed on the terms of the sub-charter. Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Mining Co. v. Culliford, 22 W. R. 46.

—— Obligation to inquire as to Existence of Bills of Lading.]—The goods of a shipper in a general ship are not affected by a clause in a charterparty of which he has no notice or knowledge, giving the shipowner a lien on all cargo and freight for arrears of hire due under the charterparty. Semble, the fact that no bills of lading were given for the goods makes no difference in this respect as to the rights and liabilities of the parties. T. hired a ship from M., and by the charterparty gave M. a lien on all cargo and freight for arrears of hire. T. advertised the ship as a general ship, and gave no notice of the charterparty. B. shipped goods and obtained a receipt, but no bill of lading. The hire being in arrears, M. detained the goods of B. for the whole of the arrears:—Held, that M. was not entitled to detain the goods of B., and that B. was entitled to damages for their detention. The Stornoway, 51 L. J., Adm. 27; 46 L. T. 773; 4 Asp. M. C. 529.

To obtain Consular Manifest.]—In an action by the owners of a vessel against a charterer, the declaration alleged that it was customary at Liverpool for the shippers of goods by vessel to make out for the captain a correct copy of each bill of lading, and that the shippers of the cargo did make out copies of eight bills of lading for the captain, and did deliver the copies to the charterer for the captain, and that it was necessary, as the charterer knew, for the purposes of the voyage, that before sailing a consular manifest should be made out, and that it was his duty as charterer, and having in his possession the captain's copies of the bills of lading, on request of the owners of the ship, to hand over and give all such copies for the purpose of enabling a complete consular manifest to be made out, and that he was requested to do so, but only handed over six out of the eight bills of lading:—Held, that there was no such duty as alleged to hand over the copies of the bills of lading, and that, therefore, the declaration was bad, and there was no cause of action. Dutton v. Powles, 2 B. & S. 174; 31 L. J., Q. B. 191; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 970; 6 L. T. 224; 10 W. R. 408—Ex. Ch.

As to Bill of Health.]—In an action on a charterparty, in which the shipowner covenanted "that the vessel should be sufficiently furnished with everything necessary and needful for the voyage in question," which was to Cagliari, in Sardinia:—Held, that it was his duty to have a bill of health on board; and, the charterer having been put to great inconvenience and expense on account of the ship not being provided with such document, that the shipowner was responsible for the loss occasioned thereby. Levy v. Costerton, Holt, 167; 4 Camp. 389; 1 Stark. 212; 16 R. R. 808.

As to Passes.]—By a charterparty it was agreed between the owners of a vessel and the charterers that the vessel should sail to Callao; that the vessel being tight, staunch, strong and well conditioned for the voyage should load a cargo of guano at the Chincha Islands, to which place she should at once proceed, calling on her way at Pisco to obtain the necessary pass to load, which should be given to the captain by the charterers' agent free of expense, within twenty-four hours of his application. Breach, that the charterers made default in providing the agreed guano, and only provided an insufficient and a less quantity. Plea, that Callao and the Chincha Islands are a part of the republic of Peru, and that by the laws of that republic, a vessel proceeding from Callao to the Chincha Islands for guano is obliged to procure from the government a written pass so to do, and the vessel could not lawfully have proceeded from Callao to the Chincha Islands without such pass; that the government refused to give such pass; and thereupon the vessel was repaired at Callao, and the government did afterwards give a pass, for the vessel to proceed to take in guano, upon the condition that more guano should not be placed on board than would make the vessel draw eighteen and a half feet; that the vessel did, by virtue of such pass, proceed to the Chincha Islands, and the charterers caused to be loaded on board her sufficient guano to make her draw eighteen and a half feet, and they could not, without violating the laws of Peru, have loaded a greater quantity, and if they had done so, the vessel and cargo would have been liable to seizure:—Held, that the plea was bad, since the obligation was on the charterers to procure the proper pass, and it was not alleged that they were prevented from so doing by reason of the vessel not being well conditioned. Kirk v. Gibbs, 1 H. & N. 810; 26 L. J., Ex. 209.

5. Performance.

a. Nominating Port.

Duty of Captain to wait for Orders at Port of Call.]—The master of a ship, under a charterparty to load a cargo at a foreign port, and thence proceed to a port in Great Britain, as ordered, is not bound, in default of orders, to wait at the foreign port until he has communicated with the charterer. Sieveking v. Maas, 6 El. & Bl. 670; 25 L. J., Q. B. 358; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 515; 4 W. R. 606—Ex. Ch.

—— To obey Directions as to Place of Discharge.]—Under an open charterparty to deliver at a certain port it is the duty of the master to obey the directions of the owner of the cargo as to the place of discharge in such port. The Felix, 37 L. J., Adm. 48; L. R. 2 A. & E. 273; 18 L. T. 587; 17 W. R. 102.

At what Time.]—A charterparty, by which it is agreed that a ship, after delivering her outward cargo at Malta, shall, with all convenient speed, sail to one of the several ports as shall be ordered at Malta, contains an implied promise, on the part of the charterer, that the ship shall be ordered at Malta to sail to such port, within a reasonable time after her arrival at Malta. Woolley v. Reddelien, 5 Man. & G. 316; 6 Scott (N.R.) 199; 12 L. J., C. P. 152; 7 Jur. 930. S. P., Whitwell v. Scheer, 8 A. & E. 301; 3 N. & P. 398; 7 L. J., Q. B. 244.

What Port.]—A ship was to proceed to Honduras, and there load "at one of the usual and customary ports or places of loading, including the rivers Ulna and Dulce," a cargo of mahogany and logwood. The freighter by letter directed the captain to proceed to Belize, in the bay of Honduras, and address himself to S., "who will furnish you with a homeward cargo of mahogany and logwood agreeable to charterparty." The captain took the ship to Belize, where S. put a small quantity of logwood on board, and directed the ship to go to Ulna, where about half a cargo was put on board. S. then sent the ship to two other places of loading in Honduras, at which the cargo was completed:—Held, that it was a question for the jury, whether the ship was sent to Belize as her port of loading; and that, if she was, the freighter was liable for the extra expenses of her going to all the other places for the residue of her cargo; but that, if Belize was not to be considered her port of loading, Ulna certainly was, and the freighter would, at all events, be liable for the extra expense of her going for cargo to other places after Ulna, as by the charterparty the freighter was to load at one of the usual ports or places of loading in Honduras. Brown v. Johnson, Car. & M. 440; 10 M. & W. 331; 11 L. J., Ex. 373.

Duty to name Port before Voyage begins.]—Declaration on a charterparty stated that it was agreed thereby that the ship should sail in ballast to a safe and convenient port near Cape Town, and there load a full cargo; and the plaintiff agreed to load the vessel and pay freight. Averment, that though the plaintiff was ready and willing to appoint and put on board a proper person as supercargo, who would have indicated a safe and convenient port near Cape Town to receive the cargo, the defendant would not permit the ship to proceed in ballast on the voyage:—Held, bad on general demurrer for not averring that the plaintiff gave notice to the defendant of a safe and convenient port, &c., or anything equivalent in law to such notice; it being the duty of the charterer to select the port and give notice of it before the commencement of the voyage. Rae v. Hackett, 12 M. & W. 724; 13 L. J., Ex. 216; 8 Jur. 421.

Naming Place of Discharge at given Port.]—See Parker v. Winlow and cases, XIV. DEMURRAGE, post, cols. 463 seq.

b. Hostile and Blockaded Ports.

Operation of War on Contract.]—The master of a North German ship, lying at Constantinople, entered into a charterparty with North German subjects, there resident, to carry a cargo to a port in the United Kingdom or on the continent to be delivered to English consignees. The charterparty and the bill of lading given under it were in the English language, and it was stipulated that the ship should call at one of three ports of the United Kingdom for orders. The ship duly called at Falmouth, and was ordered to proceed to an English port to discharge:—Held, that as the intention of the parties as to what law should govern, was to be gathered from the circumstances of the case, and, as the giving of the orders fixed the seat of the contract in England, the law of England applied. The Wilhelm Schmidt, 25 L. T. 34; 1 Asp. M. C. 82. And see Bowden, Ex parte, 4 El. & Bl. 963.

War then existed between France and Germany. The master sailed from Falmouth, but through a reasonable fear of capture, put into Dunkirk. The ship remained there for two months, waiting for a steam tug, which was considered necessary by the charterers' agents to avoid capture, the master expressing himself ready to sail with the first fair wind. The ship was then sent forward by steam power, at the charterers' agents' expense. The cargo was damaged, and the plaintiffs lost profits by the delay:—Held, that the master was justified in putting into and remaining in port, and that the shipowners were not liable for the damage caused by the delay. Ib.

By a charterparty in the English language entered into at Constantinople between the master of a North German vessel, and North German merchants there resident, it was agreed that the vessel should load a cargo and proceed therewith to Falmouth, Plymouth or Queenstown, for orders for a safe town in the United Kingdom, or on the continent between Havre and Hamburg, Queen's enemies, &c., excepted. The cargo was laden, and the vessel sailed, but her master learning on his voyage that war existed between France and Germany, put into Gibraltar. During the war there would have been great risk of capture off that port, and off the port of call if the vessel had proceeded on her voyage; her master in consequence remained there until the end of the war (nine months). He then sailed, and arriving at a port of call was ordered to an English port. The cargo was damaged by the delay. In a claim by the consignees:—Held, that by both English and North German law the master was justified in putting into and remaining in port, and that the shipowners were not responsible for the damage caused by the delay. The Express, 41 L. J., Adm. 79; L. R. 3 A. & E. 597; 26 L. T. 956; 1 Asp. M. C. 355.

A charterparty for a voyage from Liverpool to Lima or Valparaiso provided that the vessel should proceed to the port of discharge, or as near thereto as she could safely get, and there deliver her cargo in the usual and customary manner. A specified number of days was agreed upon for loading the vessel at Liverpool; but there was no such agreement as to the discharge at her port of destination. The vessel arrived at the port of discharge, and remained there discharging till, owing to the apprehension of a bombardment by a hostile fleet, the authorities suspended all landing of goods for seven days, after which she returned and her discharge was completed:—Held, that the discharge of the cargo being an act to be done by the shipowner and freighter, the shipowner could not maintain an action against the freighter for the loss from the delay. Ford v. Cotesworth, 10 B. & S. 991; 39 L. J., Q. B. 188; L. R. 5 Q. B. 544; 23 L. T. 165; 18 W. R. 1169—Ex. Ch.

A Prussian ship, carrying a cargo of nitrate of soda (contraband of war), arrived off Dunkirk, to which port she had been ordered by the consignees of cargo, and whilst lying there waiting for the tide, her master heard that war had broken out between France and Prussia, and he thereupon put back to the Downs, where he arrived on July 17th, to make inquiries, but hearing nothing more, and being stopped by his owner, he put into Dover on the 18th, and there getting intelligence, refused to proceed to Dunkirk. The ship was running under charter entitling her to be sent to a safe port. War was not actually declared till July 19th, but was imminent on July 16th:—Held, that the ship on July 16th was not bound to go to Dunkirk, as she would have been liable to penalties for trading with the enemies of her country and capture by French cruisers; that even if war did not actually exist till July 19th the master was justified in pausing for a reasonable time to make inquiries, and that under the circumstances he did not exceed that time by staying in Dover till after the declaration of war. The Teutonia, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 411; 41 L. J., Adm. 57; L. R. 4 P. C. 171; 26 L. T. 48; 20 W. R. 421.

Whilst the ship was lying at Dover the consignees demanded the delivery of cargo without any payment of freight. The master refused to deliver without payment:—Held, that he was entitled to freight. Ib.

A North German vessel shipped goods in the Black Sea for a port in the United Kingdom or on the continent under an English charterparty, by which she was to call at Falmouth or Plymouth for orders, such orders to be given by the charterer's agents in London by return of post, on receipt of the master's announcement of his arrival. She arrived at Falmouth on August 9th. Orders were given, but not till September 3rd, to proceed to Leith; but from that date until the arrest of the ship, on September 21st, negotiations were going on for discharge of the cargo at Falmouth. Between those dates the winds were light and variable, and the master remained in port for fear of capture by French cruisers in the Channel, war then existing between France and North Germany:—Held, that the delay was reasonable, and that neither by English nor North German law was the master bound to proceed, and that the negotiations waived the orders to proceed. The Heinrich, L. R. 3 A. & E. 424; 24 L. T. 914; 1 Asp. M. C. 79.

A charterparty between two British subjects on a voyage to Constantinople and thence to Odessa, there to load a cargo from the agent of the defendant, contained a stipulation that "in case of war having commenced previously to and continuing on the ship's arrival at Constantinople," he was to load the ship there at a reduced rate of freight:—Held, that this stipulation related to war between Great Britain and Russia, and therefore an action could not be maintained for not loading at Constantinople, by reason of war between Russia and Turkey having commenced before and continuing on the ship's arrival there. Avery v. Bowden, 6 El. & Bl. 953; 26 L. J., Q. B. 3; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 238; 5 W. R. 45—Ex. Ch.

A declaration stated that the plaintiff and the defendant agreed by charterparty that the plaintiff's ship should proceed to Odessa, and there load a cargo from the defendant's agent, a certain number of running days to be allowed for loading; that the ship proceeded to Odessa; that the time for loading had elapsed, but the defendant made default in loading. Plea, that before breach of contract war was declared between Great Britain and Russia, by which the contract was rescinded. After the ship had arrived, and before the declaration of war, the defendant's agent repeatedly told the master that he should be unable to procure a cargo for the ship, and he endeavoured to persuade the master to quit Odessa without a cargo upon terms inconsistent with the charterparty. The master continued to demand a cargo until the declaration of war was known at Odessa; and on a later day, but before the expiration of the running days, left Odessa in ballast:—Held, that the declarations of the defendant's agent did not amount to a breach of contract, and therefore, inasmuch as the defendant had the whole of the running days for performing his contract, the plea was proved. Reid v. Hoskins, 6 El. & Bl. 953; 26 L. J., Q. B. 5; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 238; 5 W. R. 45—Ex. Ch.

A captain of an Austrian vessel which was chartered prior to the war between France and Sardinia and Austria, but which broke out before the charterparty was terminated, while the war was going on, and being then at Falmouth, was ordered by the charterers to go to Copenhagen, which he said he could not do then, but must go somewhere else, or wait till the war was over, as he should be captured by the French cruisers; and he was eventually ordered to go to Plymouth:—Held, that he was justified in thus delaying. Pole v. Cetcovitch, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 430; 30 L. J., C. P. 102; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 604; 3 L. T. 438; 9 W. R. 279. S.C., at Nisi Prius, 2 F. & F. 104.

—— Refusal to sail for.]—Semble, where performance of the charterparty becomes illegal by reason of blockade, the master may refuse to sail. The Tutela, 6 C. Rob. 180.

—— Knowledge of Blockade.]—It is no defence for not sailing on a voyage towards a port agreed on that the port was in a state of blockade, if the defendant knew the fact at the time of entering into the charterparty. Medeiros v. Hill, 8 Bing. 231; 1 M. & Sc. 311; 5 Car. & P. 182; 1 L. J., C. P. 77.

But whether the damages are to be nominal or otherwise must depend upon the opinion of the jury as to whether, if the vessel had gone to the place, she would have been able to get in. Ib.

Blockaded Port—Delivery Elsewhere.]—Under a charterparty that a ship should proceed to Taganrog, or "so near thereto as she may safely get," and there deliver cargo:—Held, that this port being under blockade, it was not a fulfilment of the contract for the vessel to discharge at Constantinople, even though that might be a reasonable course to adopt. Castel v. Trechman, 1 Cab. & E. 276.

Trade with Blockaded Port.]—It is not a municipal offence by the law of nations for a neutral to carry on trade with a blockaded port. The Helen, 35 L. J., Adm. 2; L. R. 1 A. & E. 1; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1025; 13 L. T. 305; 14 W. R. 136.

Refusal of Foreign Power to allow Ship to Load.]—Plaintiff knowing that the ship "R." was under a contract with the British government to load military stores as dead-weight at Malta, and that with such stores on board she would not, without special permission, be permitted by the Spanish government to load any cargo at a Spanish port, entered into a charterparty with her owners by which it was agreed that the "R.," "after loading dead-weight at Malta for owners' benefit," should proceed to a Spanish port, and there load a cargo of fruit. The ship proceeded with the military stores on board to Valencia to load plaintiff's cargo, but permission could not be obtained from the Spanish government to load. The ship was in all other respects ready to load:—Held, that no action could be maintained by the charterers against the shipowners for not being ready to load, as both parties were prevented from performing their contract to be ready with a ship and cargo by the action of the superior power. Cunningham v. Dunn, 48 L. J., C. P. 62; 3 C. P. D. 443; 38 L. T. 631; 3 Asp. M. C. 359—C. A.

Charterers nominating Unsafe Port.]—A ship was chartered to proceed from England to a safe port in Chili, with leave to call at Valparaiso. On her arrival at Valparaiso, the charterers' agent named the port of Carrisal Bajo as the port of discharge, and directed the master to proceed thither. At the time Carrisal Bajo was named as the port of discharge, that port was closed by order of the Chilian government, and the ship could not proceed thither without confiscation. The ship was consequently detained for some time at Valparaiso, and, on the port being opened, sailed for Carrisal Bajo, and there discharged her cargo:—Held, that the charterers were liable in damages to the shipowners for the detention of the ship at Valparaiso, as they had not named a safe port within the meaning of the charterparty. Ogden v. Graham, 1 B. & S. 773; 31 L. J., Q. B. 26; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 613; 5 L. T. 396; 10 W. R. 77.

Hostile or Neutral Port—Covenant to get Licence.]—If a vessel is chartered to any ports of an island, part of which is hostile and part neutral, and the freighter covenants to procure a licence; if the ship trades to a neutral port of the island, it is no breach of the covenant, that the freighter has procured a licence which would not authorise the like trade to a hostile port. Johnson v. Greaves, 2 Taunt. 344.

Licence—Illegal Contract.]—A. commissioned B. to get a charterparty effected on his ship, Russian built and British owned. She was accordingly chartered to go to America, and take in there a cargo of permitted goods, rice and cotton being specified, and to sail therewith to Cadiz, Lisbon or Gottenburgh, as directed by a previous agreement; it appeared to have been in the contemplation of the parties to carry the goods to some port in the United Kingdom, and that the ship should carry no licence:—Held, that this was not an illegal contract, so as to deprive A. of his right to his commission for procuring the charterparty to be effected. Haines v. Bush, 1 Marsh. 191; 5 Taunt. 521.

Condemnation of Cargo.]—The general, but not universal, rule is, that where a ship is condemned for breach of blockade, the cargo follows the same fate. Baltazzi v. Ryder, 12 Moore, P. C. 168.

The presumption is against a vessel captured in entering a blockaded port, and an imperative and overwhelming necessity for so doing must be established by the owner to exempt from condemnation. Ib.

It is not competent to owners of a cargo on board a vessel condemned for breach of blockade, to save the cargo from condemnation by shewing their innocence in the transaction, as the owners of the cargo are concluded by the illegal act of the master, although it was done without the privity of the owners of the cargo, and even if it was done contrary to their wishes. Ib.

When a blockade is known, or might have been known, to the owners of the cargo, at the time when the shipment was made, and they might, therefore, by possibility, be privy to an intention of violating the blockade, such privity will be assumed as an irresistible inference of law, and it is not competent to rebut it by evidence, as in cases of blockade, for the purpose of affecting the cargo with the rights of the belligerent. The master is to be treated as the agent for the cargo, as well as for the ship. Ib.

c. Deviation and Delay.

Deviation—Implied Contract.]—The law implies a contract by the owner of a vessel whether a general ship, or hired for the special purpose of the voyage, to proceed without unnecessary deviation in the usual and customary course. Davis v. Garrett, 4 M. & P. 540; 6 Bing. 716; 8 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 253; 31 R. R. 524.

The plaintiff chartered a ship to the defendant from London to Madeira, and the Cape of Good Hope, and thence to Bombay, and back to London. Instead of proceeding by the direct and usual course from the Cape of Good Hope to Bombay, the captain made a deviation to the Mauritius; and the defendant's agents at Bombay, in consequence of such deviation, refused to find a cargo. In an action by the owner against the defendant for not loading the ship with a cargo at Bombay, pursuant to the charterparty, it was left to the jury to say whether the deviation was of such a nature and description as to deprive the freighter of the benefit of the contract into which he had entered; and they were told, that, if such was their opinion, the defendant was excused by the act of the plaintiff from furnishing a cargo. The jury having found for the defendant, the court refused to grant a new trial, holding the direction right. Freeman v. Taylor, 1 M. & Scott, 182; 8 Bing. 124; 1 L. J., C. P. 26.

—— Justifiable.]—A deviation for the purpose of saving life is justifiable, but not a deviation for the mere purpose of saving property. The defendants' ship was chartered by the plaintiffs to carry a cargo of wheat from Cronstadt to the Mediterranean, the usual perils of the sea excepted. Whilst on her voyage she sighted and went to the assistance of a vessel in distress, called the "Arion," and the master in consideration of 1,000*l.* agreed to tow her into the Texel, which was out of his direct course. Whilst so doing, the defendants' vessel was stranded, and ultimately (with her cargo) was totally lost. In answer to questions put to them by the learned judge, the jury found that it was not reasonably necessary to take the "Arion" to the Texel in order to save the lives of those on board her; but that it was reasonably necessary to do so in order to save her and her cargo:—Held, that the deviation was unjustifiable, and consequently that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover against the owners the value of the cargo. Scaramanga v. Stamp, 49 L. J., C. P. 674; 5 C. P. D. 295; 42 L. T. 840; 28 W. R. 691; 4 Asp. M. C. 295—C. A.

Delay—To sail with Convoy.]—Where the plaintiff covenanted, that, on the arrival of a ship at a certain port, he would receive the defendant's cargo, and sail for England therewith, with the next June convoy, provided the ship arrived and was ready to load sixty-five running days before the sailing of such convoy; and the defendant covenanted to provide a cargo of produce in time for her to load the same, and join the June convoy for England, provided she arrived out and was ready to load and a notice thereof was given to his agents, sixty-five running days previously to the sailing of the convoy, and on her arrival to receive the cargo and pay the current freight:—Held, that it was not a condition precedent to the defendant's part of the contract that the ship should so arrive, but he was still bound to supply a cargo, though not in time to enable the plaintiff to sail with that convoy. Deffel v. Brocklebank, 4 Price, 36; 3 Bligh, 561.

—— Freighter Countermanding.]—Where the master covenanted with the freighter that the vessel should proceed with the first convoy from England for Spain and Portugal, or either, as he should be directed by the freighter or his agents; and there make a right and true delivery of the cargo, agreeably to the bills of lading signed for the same; and so to take in a home cargo, and return and make a right and true delivery thereof at London, in consideration whereof, and of everything above mentioned, the freighter covenanted to load the vessel out and home, and pay certain freight per ton per month, part before, and the remainder on the right and true delivery of the homeward cargo at London:—Held, first, that the freighter, having first ordered the master to proceed to Lisbon, in consequence of which the master had taken in goods and signed bills of lading for that port, could not afterwards countermand that order, and order him to proceed to Gibraltar, without first recalling the bills of lading, or at least tendering sufficient indemnity to the master against the consequence of his liability thereon: secondly, that, supposing the freighter had such a power, yet his supercargo and agent, who was on board the vessel, had the like authority in the absence of his principal, even before the vessel sailed from this country, to alter again the destination to Lisbon: thirdly, that the master having proceeded with the outward cargo to Lisbon under the first order, and brought home a return cargo and delivered the same to the freighter at London, was entitled to his freight for that voyage, though he had not sailed with the first convoy; the sailing with the first convoy not being a condition precedent to his recovering freight for the voyage actually performed under the first order, but a distinct covenant for the breach of which he was liable. Davidson v. Gwynne, 13 East, 381; 11 R. R. 420.

Delay without Damage.]—A declaration stated, that it was agreed by a charterparty that the plaintiff's ship should load from the agents of the defendant at Nantes a cargo of wheat, and deliver the same at London on being paid freight; that the ship went to Nantes, and that the defendant refused to load a cargo. Plea, that the charterparty was entered into at London, while the ship was at London, and that the plaintiff, without the defendant's consent, sailed from London to Newcastle, and thence to other places than Nantes, by reason of which the ship did not arrive at Nantes "within a reasonable and proper time in that behalf," but "after a long and unreasonable time, to wit, thirty-eight days, after she would have arrived at Nantes, according to the usual length of the voyage, if she had sailed direct":—Held, that the plea was bad, as it did not appear that the defendant had, in consequence of the delay, lost the benefit of the voyage. Clipsham v. Vertue, D. & M. 343; 5 Q. B. 265; 13 L. J., Q. B. 2; 8 Jur. 32.

Port of Refuge—Necessity.]—Where a ship is forced to put back for repairs, in selecting a port of refuge the master must not make any greater departure from the proper course of the voyage than is reasonably necessary, having regard to the interests of all parties; but in determining what is reasonably necessary, the question of expense may be taken into account. Phelps v. Hill, 60 L. J., Q. B. 382; [1891] 1 Q. B. 605; 64 L. T. 610; 7 Asp. M. C. 42—C. A.

Bringing back Ship—Refusal to Despatch again.]—In an action upon a charterparty, by which the owner covenanted to take on board at London the freighter's goods, and to proceed therewith to Monte Video, and there deliver them, and receive another cargo, and proceed therewith to the port of discharge in Great Britain, and there deliver the same and end the voyage; in consideration of which the freighter covenanted to pay so much per month for freight during the voyage to Monte Video and back to her port of discharge; it is not enough to allege in the declaration that the ship, after taking in a cargo in Great Britain, and proceeding in part on her outward voyage, was, against the will and without the default of the owner, and through the act of the supercargo, the servant of the freighter, seized and brought back to London, and detained until restored to the owner, in consequence of which she required repair, and which the plaintiff caused to be done with proper despatch, and was ready and willing to cause the ship to prosecute and complete her voyage, and offered her to the defendant for that purpose, and requested him to despatch her; and upon this to assign a breach that he refused to despatch her and renounced the charterparty and further prosecution of the voyage, and discharged the plaintiff from the same, per quod he was hindered from endeavouring to complete the voyage, and to earn the money stipulated by the charterparty to be paid at her port of discharge; for the defendant having once despatched the ship, there was no obligation upon him to despatch her a second time. Smith v. Wilson, 6 M. & S. 78; 8 East, 437.

Master not signing Bills of Lading—Refusal to receive Goods.]—It was stipulated in a charterparty made between the plaintiffs and the defendants that the master of the ship should sign bills of lading as presented, or pay a named penalty. He refused to do so, and sailed from the port of loading without having signed any bills of lading. He proceeded to the port of discharge, delivered a portion of the cargo to the consignees, but ceased doing so, and warehoused the remainder, as they, acting under instructions from the charterers, claimed to deduct from the freight an amount equal to the penalty named in the charterparty. In an action by the charterers against the shipowners for conversion and for penalties:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not recover against the defendants for conversion of the cargo, as they had carried it for the plaintiffs, had intended to deliver the whole of it to the consignees of the plaintiffs, and had been prevented by the acts of the plaintiffs from completing the delivery. Jones v. Hough, 49 L. J., Ex. 211; 5 Ex. D. 115; 42 L. T. 108; 4 Asp. M. C. 248—C. A.

Discharging Cargo, Means for.]—The duty of providing, and making proper use of, sufficient means for the discharge of a cargo, when a ship, which has been chartered, arrives at its destination, and is ready to discharge, lies upon the charterer. But that general duty may be qualified by words in the charterparty, and by the circumstances of the case. If, by the terms of the charterparty, the charterer has agreed to discharge the ship within a fixed period of time, that is an absolute and unconditional engagement, for the nonperformance of which he is answerable, whatever may be the nature of the impediments which prevent him from performing it. If there is no fixed time, the law implies an agreement, on his part, to discharge the cargo within a reasonable time. Postlethwaite v. Freeland, 49 L. J., Ex. 630; 5 App. Cas. 599; 42 L. T. 845; 28 W. R. 833; 7 Asp. M. C. 302—H. L. (E.) See also Petersen v. Freebody, infra, col. 535; White v. Steamship Winchester Co., supra, col. 265.

Per Lord Hatherley: When the covenant merely engages that the merchant shall with all despatch, according to the custom of the port, unload the vessel, he will fulfil his contract if he employs all the usual methods of despatch at the port. Ib.

——Expenses of.]—The contract in the charterparty as to demurrage was this: The cargo was to be supplied as fast as it could be taken on board, "and to be received at port of discharge as fast as steamer can deliver as above . . . and ten days' demurrage over and above the said laying days" (there were no laying days mentioned in the charterparty) "at 30*l.* per day, payable day by day, it being agreed that for the payment of all freight, dead freight and demurrage, the owner shall have absolute charge and lien on the said cargo . . ." "The cargo to be brought to and taken from alongside the ship at merchants' risk and expense." The ship did not fulfil an engagement in the charterparty to proceed to the Surrey Commercial Docks by merely going to the gates of the docks, but when it had fulfilled the alternative to go as near thereto as it could safely get, the charterer was bound to take the cargo from alongside at his risk and expense. The shipowner was not bound to wait for an unreasonable period, until the dock authorities should be able to assign the ship a discharging berth in the docks. When a difficulty arose about the ship being admitted into the Surrey Commercial Docks, and the charterer would not name any other docks or place where the vessel might be unloaded, the shipowner gave notice to the charterer of the discharge of the cargo by lighters, and, on taking the timber into the docks, gave notice to the dock authorities that it was delivered there subject to the claim for freight, demurrage and delivery charges:—Held, that he was warranted in so doing. Dahl or Donkin v. Nelson, 50 L. J., Ch. 411; 6 App. Cas. 38; 44 L. T. 381; 29 W. R. 453; 4 Asp. M. C. 392—H. L.

Duty to perform Voyages within limited Time.]—In an action for a breach of a charterparty by the freighter against the owner of the vessel, the declaration stated that it was agreed by the parties that the vessel should proceed with all convenient speed to S. H., and there load a cargo of coals, and therewith proceed to L., and deliver the cargo at a safe wharf, at a certain amount of freight being payable per ton; that the charterparty should be in force for six successive voyages, and that they should be made not later than the last day of February. A breach, that the defendant would not permit the vessel for the fourth successive time, or for any time except three times, after the making of the charterparty, to proceed to S. H., and there to load a cargo of coals on board. Plea, that before breach, the last day of February expired:—Held, that the plea was no answer. Wheeler v. Baridge, 9 Ex. 668; 2 C. L. R. 1077; 23 L. J., Ex. 221.

"Full and complete Cargo"—Liberty to call at any Port in Order.]—By a charterparty a sailing barge, whose dead weight capacity was stated to be 125 tons, was to load a cargo or estimated quantity of 470 quarters of wheat in sacks and (or) other lawful merchandise, and proceed to Gosport within the port of Portsmouth, and she also had liberty to call at any port in any order. The charterer shipped 470 quarters of wheat, which weighed about 102 tons. After the wheat was shipped the shipowner loaded fifteen tons of wire-netting belonging to other shippers to be delivered at Portsmouth dockyard. Both the dockyard and Gosport are in the port of Portsmouth. The netting was discharged at the dockyard, but the ship, whilst proceeding from the dockyard to Gosport, was injured by coming in contact with one of the piles of a pierhead, and the cargo of wheat was damaged by water:—Held, that the charterparty did not bind the shipowner to treat the cargo of wheat as an entire shipload to the exclusion of other cargo, and that there had been no deviation in the voyage to Gosport. Caffin v. Aldridge, 65 L. J., Q. B. 85; [1895] 2 Q. B. 648; 73 L. T. 426; 44 W. R. 129; 8 Asp. M.C. 233—C.A.

Fear of Capture—Delay in Voyage.]—An apprehension of capture founded on circumstances calculated to affect the mind of a master of ordinary courage, judgment and experience, will justify delay in the prosecution of a voyage; and a ship is not answerable in a suit under the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, s. 6, for damage to cargo caused by such delay. Anderson v. San Roman (Owners), 42 L. J., Adm. 46; L. R. 5 P. C. 301; 21 W. R. 393; 28 L. T. 381; 1 Asp. M. C. 603—P. C.

Additional Cargo taken in and discharged at same Port.]—See Caffin v. Aldridge, supra.

Master deviating without Cause.]—The shipowner is not liable to the charterer for deviation by the master without reason and ultra vires. Strickland v. Neilson, 7 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 400.

Abandonment of Ship—Ship brought by Salvors to Port of Delivery—Right of Cargo Owner to Cargo without Payment of Freight.]—See The Arno, and Cases, infra, col. 385.

Damage to Cargo—Unnecessary Deviation.]—By a charterparty the ship was to proceed to Marianople and there load a cargo of wheat, and being so loaded was to proceed therewith to a safe port in the United Kingdom or on the continent between Havre and Hamburg, as ordered at Gibraltar. The charterparty also contained the following clause: "Should frost ensue . . . after the steamer has arrived at port of loading and the vessel is compelled to leave to avoid being frozen in, the master is at liberty to leave . . . with part cargo, and to fill up for steamer's benefit at any open Black Sea, Azof, or Mediterranean port for United Kingdom, continent, or Mediterranean; but in case of leaving with part cargo the steamer shall complete the voyage as if a full cargo had been loaded, or shall forward such part cargo to its destination, provided that no extra expense be thereby caused to the receivers." Frost ensued, and, to avoid being frozen in, the ship left Marianople with a part cargo of wheat, shipped under bills of lading which incorporated all the conditions and exceptions contained in the charterparty, and proceeded to Novorissisk, where she filled up with linseed under bills of lading for delivery at King's Lynn docks. Upon the ship's arrival at Gibraltar she was ordered by the consignees of the wheat to proceed therewith to Cardiff; but instead of going there direct, she went in the first instance to King's Lynn, and there delivered the linseed before proceeding to Cardiff. On the voyage from King's Lynn to Cardiff the wheat was seriously damaged by one of the perils excepted in the bill of lading and charterparty. In an action by the holders of the bill of lading against the shipowners for breach of contract:—Held, that, by proceeding to King's Lynn, the ship had deviated from the voyage, and that her owners were therefore liable. The Dunbeth, 66 L. J., Adm. 66; [1897] P. 133; 76 L. T. 658; 8 Asp. M. C. 284.

d. Enforcing in Equity.

Parties who have mutually bound themselves, will be restrained from doing any act inconsistent with a charterparty which they have entered into bonâ fide. Levin v. Deslandes, 30 L. J., Ch. 457; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 837; 3 L. T. 461; 9 W. R. 218.

The court has jurisdiction to deal with questions relating to charterparties; and so when a charterparty has been entered into bonâ fide, it can, on a sufficient case being made, grant an injunction to restrain the breach of such a contract. Ib.

The master of an American vessel arriving in England, authorised by the owners to sell or charter the ship, entered into a charterparty with the plaintiff for a voyage to Ceylon and back. A few days afterwards the defendant purchased the ship from a party acting under a power of attorney from one of the owners to sell her. The greater part of the cargo had been put on board under the charterparty. The defendant attempted to stop the sailing of the ship:—Held, that the master having authority to charter the ship, which he had done, and the defendant knowing of the charterparty, an injunction would lie to restrain the purchasers from interfering with the sailing of the ship, in pursuance of the charterparty. Messageries Imperiales Co. v. Baines, 7 L. T. 763; 11 W. R. 322.

A vessel having been chartered to convey a cargo of coals to China and having become damaged, the master was forced to discharge the cargo, and the owner declined to reship it, on the ground that, having become wet, it was liable to spontaneous combustion. On a bill by the charterers to restrain the owner from employing the ship in any manner inconsistent with the charterparty, the court directed an inquiry as to the state of the cargo, and granted an injunction pending such inquiry. Heriot v. Nicholas, 12 W. R. 844.

The court of chancery cannot decree the specific performance of a charterparty, but it can restrain the parties from employing the ship in a manner inconsistent with the rights under a charterparty. Le Blanch v. Granger, 35 Beav. 187.

Although a court of equity cannot enforce the specific performance of a charterparty, yet it will restrain the employment of the vessel in a different manner, whether such employment is expressly or impliedly forbidden. De Mattos v. Gibson, 4 De G. & J. 276; 28 L. J., Ch. 165, 498; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 347, 555; 7 W. R. 100, 403, 514.

C. mortgaged a ship to D., with a power of sale. The ship was under contract by charterparty, to carry a cargo from U. to S., of which the mortgagee had notice. On a bill filed by the charterer of the vessel for a specific performance against the mortgagor, and for an injunction to restrain the mortgagee from interfering to interrupt the voyage:—Held, that the contract was not enforceable in a court of equity, and that the charterer was bound to shew that the mortgagee had done or threatened to do some act which had interfered with the performance of the contract, to entitle him to an injunction. Ib.

A shipowner entered into a contract to carry a cargo of coals from Birkenhead to Bombay. The charterparty contained the ordinary exception of perils of the sea. The ship, soon after sailing, was overtaken by a storm, and put into Belfast. The master of the ship had the coals unshipped, and, being advised that they were in too dangerous a state to be reshipped, he had them sold. The charterers filed a bill to restrain the shipowner from using the ship in a manner inconsistent with the charterparty. The vice-chancellor granted an injunction accordingly, with the intention of compelling the shipowner to send the ship back to Birkenhead to take on board a new cargo of coals for Bombay:—Held, upon appeal, that no such injunction could be granted. Adamson v. Gill, 18 L. T. 278; 16 W. R. 639.

6. LIABILITY OF CHARTERER OR AGENT.

Indefinite Period of Employment.]—By a charterparty to government for transporting emigrants from this country to the Cape of Good Hope, a shipbroker, on behalf of the owners, let a vessel to the commissioners of the navy for the space of —— calendar months certain, and thenceforward until they should give him notice that she was discharged, such notice to be given after her return to Deptford or Portsmouth; and the commissioners covenanted to pay freight at the rate of 14*s.* per ton per calendar month for so long time as the vessel should be continued in his majesty's service; and that after she had been in such service six months, the broker should have a bill of imprest for two months' freight more; and after ten months a like bill for two months; and a like bill whenever eight months should be due; and the following memorandum was written in the margin: "Notwithstanding, it is herein agreed that the ship shall be discharged at Deptford or Portsmouth, it is hereby covenanted that she shall be discharged at the Cape of Good Hope when the service will admit of it":—Held, that under the terms of the charterparty the voyage was general, and that the ship was chartered for an indefinite period; and that the broker was only entitled to claim commission as for a voyage of that description, and not for a specific voyage outwards. Holl v. Pincent, 6 Moore, 228.

Charterers' Duty to Clear Ship.]—Where a ship had been addressed to a consignee, who was not in a position to clear the ship, and the captain was led by the charterers to have recourse to brokers, who cleared the ship and charged commission for so doing, which the captain paid on behalf of the owner:—Held, that an action was maintainable by the shipowner against the charterers, who had agreed that the ship should be consigned to their agents free of commission, and the cargo cleared free of expense to the shipowner. Russell v. Griffith, 2 F. & F. 118.

Expenses incurred by Reason of additional Clause.]—D. chartered a vessel to Puerto Cabello and home from Maracaibo at a fixed freight, and an additional clause was subsequently inserted in the charterparty giving the charterer the option of sending a part of the outward cargo on to Maracaibo, and stipulating that "any and every expense the vessel may incur in consequence of this additional clause shall be borne by the charterers." The charterer loaded the vessel with a cargo, part for Puerto Cabello and part for Maracaibo, and made out two manifests. On arriving at Puerto Cabello, the custom-house authorities insisted on seeing both manifests, and prohibited the discharge of the part of the cargo intended for Puerto Cabello on the false ground that there were contraband goods on board, by which the cargo was confiscated, and they also imposed a fine of 500 dollars on the master for having two manifests, and prohibited the discharge of the cargo or the clearing out until the fine was paid. The master appealed to the tribunals of the country and made counter-claims for delay. A revolution occurred in Venezuela about the same time, which prevented all commercial and legal proceedings; but eventually the government agreed with the master to pay him 5,000 dollars as compensation for the detention of the ship, and after a further delay she proceeded to Maracaibo. The 5,000 dollars were not paid:—Held, that the owner of the vessel was not entitled to recover from the charterer the damages or expenses he had been put to, either in repairing damage to the vessel occasioned by delay or the costs attendant upon the proceedings or otherwise, such damages not being contemplated by the additional clause. Sully v. Duranty, 3 H. & C. 270; 33 L. J., Ex. 319.

Cesser Clause—Loading in regular Turn.]—By a charterparty between the owners of a ship and the agents for the charterers, who were persons resident in Spain, it was agreed that the ship should proceed to L., and there load in regular turn from the agents of the charterers a full and complete cargo. It was also agreed that all liability of the agents "in every respect, and as to all matters and things as well before and during as after the shipping of the cargo, shall cease as soon as they have shipped the cargo." A cargo was loaded and shipped, but not in regular turn:—Held, that the agents were protected by the clause from liability for not so loading in regular turn, they having loaded and shipped the cargo before the commencement of the action. Milvain v. Perez, 3 El. & El. 495; 30 L. J., Q. B. 90; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 336; 3 L. T. 736; 9 W. R. 269.

See also as to cesser clauses, post, XIII. FREIGHT—XIV. DEMURRAGE.

Loss of Vessel after Expiration—Liability of Charterer—Act of God.]—A vessel was lost, through stress of weather, and without negligence, after the expiration of a charterparty:—Held, in an action by the representative of the owner against the charterer, in the absence of express stipulation, that there was no liability implied by law on the part of the person in possession for loss so occasioned. Smith v. Drummond, 1 Cab. & E. 160.

Liability of Trustee in Bankruptcy.]—Where a charterparty and bill of lading were entered into with the concurrence of the trustee in sequestration, though not expressly authorised by him:—Held, that the trustee was liable thereon. Mackersack v. Molleson, 13 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 445.

Liability of one signing "as Agent for the Charterer."]—A charterparty was entered into between the plaintiffs, shipowners and defendants "as agents for charterers." It was signed by the defendants without qualification, but contained a clause that the ship was to load "from the agents of the said freighters," and a cesser clause, that the charter being entered into on behalf of others, the charterer's liability should cease on completion of loading and payment of advance. In an action on the charterparty:—Held, on demurrer, that the defendants were personally liable. Hough v. Manzanos, 48 L. J., Ex. 398; 4 Ex. D. 104; 27 W. R. 536.

7. DEMISE OF SHIP.

Liability of Owner for Negligence of Master and Crew.]—The plaintiffs hired from the defendant a vessel under a charterparty, by which the vessel was let to the plaintiffs for a specified time, and they were to have the whole reach of her holds, except what was reserved to the owner for the crew; the crew was to assist in loading and discharging, and the captain was to sign bills of lading and to furnish to the charterers a copy of the log. The defendant engaged and paid the master and crew. Whilst the vessel was upon a voyage under the charterparty, with a cargo on board belonging to the plaintiffs, she and her cargo were lost by the negligence of the master and crew:—Held, that the master and crew were the servants of the defendant for the purpose of navigating the vessel, and that he was liable to compensate the plaintiffs for the loss sustained by them. Omoa and Cleland Coal and Iron Co. v. Huntley, 2 C. P. D. 464; 37 L. T. 184; 25 W. R. 675; 3 Asp. M. C. 501.

The owner of a ship who, by a verbal agreement, gives up all control over her to the captain, but retains a right to one-third of the net profits, and is subsequently registered as managing owner under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1875, is liable for the negligent management of the vessel by the captain, though occurring under a charterparty of which the owner knew nothing. Steel v. Lester, 47 L. J., C. P. 43 ; 3 C. P. D. 121 ; 37 L. T. 642 ; 26 W. R. 212 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 537.

What Amounts to—Lien of Owner.]—By a charterparty it was covenanted that the owner should receive on board in London all such goods as the freighter thought fit to load, and should proceed therewith to Madras, and there, after delivering her outward cargo, receive from the freighter's agents a homeward cargo, and deliver the same in London ; and that all the cabins but one, which was reserved for the use of the captain, should be at the disposal of the freighter, who was to appoint a supercargo to superintend the stowage of the goods. Freight to be paid at so much per ton on the register tonnage of the ship. The captain and crew were employed and paid by the owner :—Held, that there being no express words of demise of the ship itself in the charterparty, the freighter did not thereby become the owner for the voyage, but that the possession continued in the owner, and that he, therefore, had a lien upon the cargo for his freight. Saville v. Campion, 2 B. & Ald. 503 ; 21 R. R. 376.

The owner of a ship entered into a charterparty with the freighter, by which the former granted and let, and the latter hired and took, the ship for a voyage out and home. The owner covenanted that, the vessel being well manned and furnished, the master should receive on board at London goods to be sent alongside by the freighter, and deliver them from alongside at Newfoundland to the agents of the freighter, according to his bills of lading ; and, such cargo having been discharged there, should receive other goods in like manner and deliver them at Demerara, and, having discharged the same, should receive other goods there and deliver them at London, agreeably to bills of lading. The owner agreed that the ship's boats should assist in unloading and loading the cargoes when required by the freighter, provided no impediment was thereby made in carrying on the exclusive duties of the ship ; in consideration whereof the freighter covenanted to send and take the goods from alongside, and to pay for the freight and hire of the vessel for the voyage 2,600*l.* with primage, one quarter part on delivery of the cargo at Newfoundland, by good bills at sixty days' sight on London, and the remainder by good bills at two months' date from the day of the ship's report inwards at the port of London. The voyage was performed, and goods of third persons brought from Demerara, under bills of lading deliverable to the consignees on payment of certain specified freight therein mentioned, which freight the owner received. Bills of exchange for one quarter's freight were drawn on the freighter at Newfoundland, which were afterwards accepted and dishonoured by him, and no sum or bill for the remaining three-quarters' freight per charterparty was given or tendered to him on the return of the ship :—Held, that, taking the whole of the charterparty into consideration, the possession of the ship did not pass to the freighter, but remained in the owner ; and that the circumstance of his having agreed with the charterer as to the mode of payment of freight did not divest him of his lien on the cargo for freight ; and that it made no difference that he had delivered the homeward cargo and received the freight due upon the bills of lading, which was different from that due upon the charterparty. Christie v. Lewis, 5 Moore, 211 ; 2 Br. & B. 410 ; 23 R. R. 483.

Where no Possession by Owner.]—The owner of the ship has no lien for the hire stipulated by a charterparty for the voyage on goods shipped by the charterer, because the latter is the owner of the ship for the voyage ; and the first owner has no possession of the ship or goods, without which there can be no lien. Hutton v. Bragg, 7 Taunt. 14 ; 2 Marsh. 339 ; 17 R. R. 431.

As Transport to Crown.]—Where A. chartered his ship to the commissioners of the transport service on behalf of the crown to be employed as a transport, and the ship in the course of such employment made several voyages from Deptford to foreign ports and back :—Held, that by the terms of the charterparty, coupled with the nature of the service, a temporary ownership passed to the crown, so that A., during the time of such service, was not to be considered as owner within the charters granted to the Trinity House, which impose lighthouse duties and for buoyage and beaconage on the owners of ships. Trinity House (Corporation) v. Clark, 4 M. & S. 288.

With Right to Surplus—Presence of Agent.]—The owners of a ship by deed appointed A. to the command of the ship on a voyage from London to Calcutta and back. A. was to load the ship out and home, and to secure to the owners a certain amount of freight, retaining the surplus or making good the deficiency. An agent of the owners was to go on board to superintend the management of the stores, with power to displace A. and appoint another commander, in case of his breaking the agreement on his part :—Held, that the deed released the owners from their liability, as such, to make good the loss upon goods sent from Calcutta to London by the ship, and lost or damaged on the voyage, and that A. alone was responsible to the shippers for such nondelivery, he being owner of the vessel pro hâc vice. Newberry v. Colvin, 4 M. & P. 876 ; 7 Bing. 190 ; 1 C. & J. 192 ; 1 Tyr. 55 ; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ex. 13—Ex. Ch. Affirmed in Dom. Proc. nom. Colvin v. Newberry, 1 Cl. & F. 283 ; 6 Bligh, 167.

Hire for Day—Owners' Servants.]—The defendants hired a steam vessel for the day to convey them to R. and back to L. The vessel was navigated by the master, engineer and crew of the owners, at their expense :—Held, that the defendants had not such exclusive possession of the vessel as to entitle them forcibly to expel the plaintiff, who had come on board with the master's permission for the purpose of being conveyed to R. Dean v. Hogg, 4 M. & Scott, 188 ; 10 Bing. 345 ; 3 L. J., C. P. 113.

Possession—Right to maintain Trespass.]—An owner of a ship, notwithstanding he has let her out by charterparty for twelve months, containing no terms of conveyance of possession, has a sufficient possession of her to maintain trespass. Lucas v. Nockells, 4 Bing. 729 ; 1 M. & P. 783 ; 2 Y. & J. 304 ; 1 Cl. & F. 438 ; 29 R. R. 721.

Tests of Possession.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that A. should let and B. should hire A.'s vessel for six months, during which time B. was to possess the entire and exclusive use and disposal of the whole vessel, with the exception of the cabin, with room for the accommodation of the crew and for the stowage of stores and provisions; that the master should, as often as B.'s interest should require, take on board and properly stow all such goods, to the extent of a full and complete cargo, as should be tendered to him for that purpose, and proceed therewith upon such voyage or voyages as B. or his agent should direct; and that he should deliver the goods agreeably to the bills of lading; that the freight and primage should be payable to B. or his order; that in the event of the completion of the six months' voyage, or after she had commenced taking goods on board for a voyage, the term should be prolonged until the discharge of her cargo after her arrival at, or return to, a port in Great Britain; and that the owners or master should keep the vessel tight and manned, and provisioned and fitted with necessary stores. In consideration whereof, B. agreed to pay to A., at a certain rate per ton per month, to be paid by—one month's pay in advance in cash,—one month's pay after the vessel should be entered outwards,—one month's pay that day two months, —and one month's pay at the expiration of each succeeding month till the end of the term she might be employed, and the balance in cash on her final discharge, together with port charges; and that B. should have the privilege of putting in a master of his own appointment, he finding the cabin with all stores, and paying his wages, A. allowing the wages paid to his own master; A. not to be responsible for such master's acts and conduct should he deviate from the charter; B. to be responsible to A. for the conduct and integrity of such master:—Held, that the possession of the vessel was given up by A. to B. during the continuance of the contract; that the master so appointed by B. was in possession of the cargo as his agent, and not as the servant of A.; that personal credit was given to B. for the payment of the hire of the vessel; and that no lien upon or right of stoppage of the goods was reserved to the owners as a security for the payment of such hire. Belcher v. Capper, 4 Man. & G. 502; 5 Scott (N.R.) 257; 11 L. J., C. P. 274.

Liability of Owner to Shipper—Bill of Lading —Master and Servant.]—A person who is registered as the owner of a ship, and also registered as the managing owner under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 80), is not liable to shippers under bills of lading signed by the master or ship's agent, for loss of cargo alleged to have arisen from the unseaworthiness of the ship, if he has divested himself by the charterparty of all control and possession of the vessel for the time being in favour of the charterers, who have all the use and benefit thereof, even if the shippers have no notice of the contents of the charterparty. Frazer v. Marsh (13 East, 238, ante, col. 65), followed. Baumwoll Manufactur von Carl Scheibler v. Furness, 62 L. J., Q. B. 201; [1893] A. C. 8; 68 L. T. 1; 1 R. 59; 7 Asp. M. C. 263—H. L. (E.)

8. Pleadings, Evidence and Damages.

Declarations.]—As to allowing several counts on a charterparty, varying its statements, see Hernod v. Wilkin, 11 Q. B. 1. See Hoggett v. Exley, 6 Bing. (N.C.) 207; 8 Scott, 480.

The owner of a ship covenanted by a charterparty with the freighters to take on board six pipes of brandy at Havre, and proceed therewith to Terceira, where the master was to take on board a full and complete cargo of green fruit, or other goods, as the freighters might think fit to send alongside, and despatch her therewith to London: and the freighters covenanted to pay freight for the fruit at certain terms therein specified, and on the brandy, at a certain rate therein also stipulated, and guaranteed the ship a complete cargo of fruit home. In an action by the owner against the freighters, for not putting a full cargo of fruit on board at Terceira, he averred a general performance of the covenants contained in the charterparty to be fulfilled:—Held, sufficient, as the covenant by the owner to take the brandy to Terceira was an independent and distinct covenant, and not to be considered as a condition precedent, as it went only to a part of the consideration of the contract. Fothergill v. Walton, 2 Moore, 630; 8 Taunt. 576; 20 R. R. 567.

Action on a charterparty by a freighter against a shipowner for not receiving cargo. Proof was given of a charterparty expressed to be between the defendant of one part, and G. S. & Co. (agents of the freighters) of the other, containing a memorandum, as follows:—"This charter being concluded on behalf of another party, it is agreed that all responsibility on the part of G. S. & Co. shall cease as soon as the cargo is shipped." No notice of this memorandum was taken in the declaration:—Held, that it was not necessary to notice the memorandum. Schmaltz or Schmalz v. Avery, 16 Q. B. 655; 20 L. J., Q. B. 228; 15 Jur. 291.

In an action for breach of a charterparty by the freighter against the owner of a ship, for not performing the terms of a charterparty, the declaration alleged that it was agreed by the parties that the ship should proceed with all convenient speed to St. Helena, and there load a cargo, and therewith proceed to Liverpool, and deliver the cargo at a safe wharf, for a certain amount of freight (the act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire and all other dangers of the seas and navigation during the voyage always excepted); that the charterparty should be in force for six voyages, and that they should all be made not later than a certain day specified. The declaration averred that the freighter had done all things necessary on his part to entitle him to have the voyages performed, yet the ship did not make the voyages as agreed:—Held, that the declaration was good, although it did not contain any averment negativing the fact of the owner being within any of the exceptions contained in the charterparty, and that if he relied upon such fact, he was bound to plead it. Wheeler v. Bavidge, 9 Ex. 668; 23 L. J., Ex. 221.

A declaration stated that by a charterparty between the defendant, the shipowner and the plaintiff, it was agreed that the ship should proceed to two ports in Sicily, or usual place of loading, on and after the delivery of her outward cargo, and there load from the plaintiff's factors a full cargo, and thence proceed to Bristol, and that the vessel should have her orders before leaving Messina. The declaration alleged that the ship arrived at Messina, and laid as a breach, that the defendant within a reasonable time after the delivery of her outward cargo, and before the plaintiff could have given orders for the ship to proceed to the ports, made a contract with a third party for the conveyance of goods from Messina, and therewith and within such reasonable time as aforesaid, and before such reasonable time had elapsed, loaded his ship, and afterwards proceeded to London, without taking on board the cargo agreed to be taken from the plaintiff and thereby wholly incapacitated and deprived himself of the power of fulfilling the charterparty, although the plaintiff within such reasonable time as aforesaid provided merchandise, and was ready and willing to load on board the ship the merchandise, and although the plaintiff would have been ready and willing to have named and appointed and given orders to the defendant to proceed to two ports and to have there loaded a full cargo :—Held, that the declaration was bad, as it did not shew that the vessel had sailed before the lapse of a reasonable time for the performance by the plaintiff of his part of the contract, and so did not shew that the defendant had incapacitated himself from performing his part of the contract, and that it ought to have contained an averment that the plaintiff had performed his part by giving orders, naming a port, &c., and by tendering a cargo within such reasonable time. Matthews v. Lowther, 5 Ex. 574 ; 19 L. J., Ex. 364.

Action on a charterparty, not under seal, varied by a subsequent agreement. The declaration stated, that, by a charterparty between G. L. J. & Sons, on behalf of the owners (not stating the plaintiffs to be the owners) of a ship at Pembroke, and the defendant described as the charterer, it was mutually agreed that the ship should, with all convenient speed, proceed to Cardiff, and there load a cargo of iron and coals at certain freight, and deliver the same at Alexandria ; forty running days to be allowed the charterer for loading at Cardiff and unloading. That the ship, with the consent of the plaintiffs, and at the request of the defendant, remained at Pembroke to receive coals, part of the cargo, instead of being loaded therewith at Cardiff, and that she there received coals on board. That the defendant did dispense with, and discharge the plaintiffs from, performing that part of the charterparty which related to the sailing of the ship with all convenient speed from Pembroke to Cardiff up to and until the time of the completing the loading of coals at Pembroke. That the ship sailed to Cardiff. Breach, that the defendant detained the ship there in loading for twenty days over and above the lay days and ten days of demurrage. It then stated, that the ship, being fully laden, proceeded to Alexandria ; assigning, as a second breach, that the defendant detained the ship there in unloading for a further time, viz. thirty days over and above the lay days and days of demurrage. There were two more breaches, one the nonpayment of freight for the cargo, which the plaintiffs duly delivered at Alexandria, and the other the nonpayment of demurrage :—Held, that the declaration was defective for not shewing by distinct averment or necessary implication that the plaintiffs were parties contracting by the charterparty as owners of the ship, and that such defect could not be cured by any admission in the pleas, whether found for or against the defendant. Galloway v. Jackson, 3 Man. & G. 960 ; 3 Scott (N.R.) 753 ; 12 L. J., Ex. 502—Ex. Ch.

Pleas.]—In a declaration on a charterparty, by which the ship was to sail from Hamburg, being tight, staunch, strong and every way fitted for the voyage, in the course of the next November, and proceed to Lima, and having discharged her outward cargo, forthwith to be made ready and proceed to Costa Rica, and there take on board a cargo, and then proceed to Liverpool ;—breaches were alleged as follows : that the vessel was not, in November or afterwards, until or when she sailed on the 20th December, tight, staunch, strong, or in any way fitted for the voyage : and that, though she did then sail from Hamburg, yet by reason of her not being tight, &c., when she so sailed, she was obliged to, and did, put back into Altona, and was detained there for a long time ; though she did then again set sail on her voyage from Altona, she did not proceed on the voyage according to its due course, or with proper despatch, but was unnecessarily delayed and deviated ; by means of which premises, the vessel did not arrive at Lima, and the plaintiff lost the benefit of a homeward cargo from Costa Rica. The defendant pleaded, as to so much of the declaration as related to the vessel not being fitted for the voyage, and by reason thereof being obliged to put back into Altona, and being detained there for such time as was necessary to put further ballast on board, payment into court of 1*s.* and no damages ultra ; and as to so much as related to her being detained at Altona beyond the time necessary to put the ballast on board, that she was not detained there by reason of her not being tight, staunch, &c. :—Held, that the latter plea was bad, as answering only a part of the breach to which it applied, viz. the detention at Altona, and the subsequent delay and deviation, even if that was a breach, and was not merely a statement of special damage. Porter v. Izat, 1 M. & W. 381 ; 1 Tyr. & G. 639.

—— Deviation.]—In an action upon a covenant to sail and not to deviate directly or indirectly, a plea of general performance is bad. Lathwell v. Fisher, 1 Keb. 334.

—— Sail with next Wind — Traverse.]—Action on freight on charterparty containing covenant to sail with next wind ; special plea and traverse, absque hoc, that plaintiff did not sail with next wind :—Held that the traverse is not well, for the voyage is the substance of the contract, and not sailing with the next wind. Constable v. Clobury, or Clovery, Noy, 75 ; Latch. 12.

—— Loss by Perils of Sea—Seaworthiness.]—Charterer covenants that the ship shall return within twelve months, perils of sea excepted ; the master warranting her seaworthy and well manned. Breach, that she did not return, not being delayed by perils of sea. Plea, that she was detained at Jamaica through seamen deserting and that the master did not provide others. Plea bad. Wynne v. Fellowes, Holt, 446.

—— Certainty—Average.]—Action of debt in charterparty. Breach assigned, nonpayment of freight, 200*l.* with average, not stating amount. Exception, uncertainty of average. Held, certain enough. Dodd v. Atkinson. See Cas. t. Hardw. 342.

Evidence—Letters as to Agency.]—A captain was instructed to apply for a cargo to A., and in the event of A. not being on the spot, then to apply to B. (both being agents of the charterers) for the same purpose. He applied to both accordingly, and was refused a cargo by both. An action was brought by the owners to recover the freight; and in order to do away with the effect of the proof as to B.'s refusal, a letter from B. to the charterers was tendered to shew that, prior to such refusal, B. had renounced their agency:—Held, to be inadmissible. Hassell v. Watson, 2 Car. & K. 141.

Held, also, that A. having been on the spot, what passed between B. and the captain was important only in so far as it was confirmed and adopted by A. Ib.

—— Notarial Copy of Charterparty made Abroad.]—In Batavia, parties about to make a contract go before a notary, who writes in his book the contract, which is then signed by them. Copies of this contract may be obtained by either party in the absence of the other. A notarial copy of a charterparty was entered into at Batavia:—Held, not to be evidence either of the original contract, nor properly secondary evidence of it. Brown v. Thornton, 1 N. & P. 339; 6 A. & E. 185.

—— Of Restraint of Princes.]—On an issue joined on a plea by the charterer that he was prevented from loading by restraint of princes, it was proved no corn was exported from Ibraila during the vessel's stay; and evidence was given that Wallachia, in which Ibraila is situate, was invaded by the Russians, and at the time in question was under the command of Prince Gortschakoff, a Russian general, who, while at Ibraila, being applied to, to allow grain to be exported, refused, and desired the applicant to petition the commissary at Bucharest. Evidence was also tendered of copies of placards, in the name of Gortschakoff, posted on the walls of Ibraila, at the period of the ship's arrival, prohibiting the exportation of grain:—Held, that such evidence was admissible, and, coupled with the other evidence, proved the plea. Bruce v. Nicolopulo, 11 Ex. 129; 3 C. L. R. 775; 24 L. J., Ex. 321; 3 W. R. 483.

—— Nature of Trade.]—When by a charterparty the owner agreed that the ship then bound for Havre should proceed with all convenient speed to the North of England for coals, thence to Limerick, and there load a cargo of grain or other merchandise for the charterer, and the ship having been delayed by bad weather did not arrive at Limerick till long after the time expected:—Held, in an action by the owner on the charterparty that evidence on behalf of the charterer that the Limerick export grain trade is carried on only at a certain season, which had expired before the ship arrived, was inadmissible. Hurst v. Usborn, 18 C. B. 144; 25 L. J., C. P. 209; 4 W. R. 458.

—— Custom to control Contract.]—See Cases ante, cols. 252, 253.

Charterparty to date from Condemnation of Ship — Averment of Condemnation.] — In an action on a charterparty, whereby it was agreed to employ a ship of which the plaintiff was the captor, as soon as sentence of condemnation should have passed, the sentence must be taken to mean a legal sentence; and the party who sues for the freight must aver that the ship was condemned by a court having competent jurisdiction. Unwin v. Wolseley, 1 Term Rep. 674.

Arbitration Clause — Jurisdiction.]—Arbitration clause in a charterparty held not to oust the jurisdiction of the court. Thompson v. Charnock, 8 Term Rep. 139.

Pratique—Stipulation as to—No Authority to grant Pratique — Proof.] — By charterparty a vessel was to have ninety running days and ten days on demurrage, to commence from her arrival at Whidah, she being ready to unload and having received pratique. Declaration for breach of charterparty stated that the vessel arrived at Whidah, and being ready to unload, and having received pratique, &c., which allegation was traversed by plea. The plaintiff proved that the ship arrived and was ready to unload, and did unload, but did not procure a written document of pratique, there being no authority at Whidah to give the same:—Held, that the plaintiff had proved the issue upon him, and that the ship must be taken to have received pratique. Balley v. De Arroyave, 7 A. & E. 919; 3 N. & P. 114; 7 L. J., Q. B. 91.

Damages—Penalty and Profits.]—A ship was chartered to go to New Zealand, where the charterers were to load her, or by an agent there to give the owner notice that they abandoned the adventure; in which case they were to pay him 500*l.* The ship went to New Zealand, but found neither agent nor cargo there, and the captain made a circuitous voyage home by way of Batavia. This voyage, after making every allowance for increased expenses and loss of time, was more profitable than the original adventure to New Zealand would have been. The owner sued the charterer on the charterparty for breach of covenant:—Held, that he could not recover the 500*l.* penalty in addition to the profit of the homeward voyage. Staniforth v. Lyall, 7 Bing. 169; 4 M. & P. 829; 9 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 23.

In an action against a charterer of a ship for not landing a cargo, the measure of damage is the amount of freight which would have been earned after deducting the expenses, and also any profit which the ship may have earned during the period over which the charter extended. Smith v. M'Guire, 3 H. & N. 554; 27 L. J., Ex. 465; 6 W. R. 726. S. C., Nisi Prius, 1 F. & F. 199.

Semble, that a shipowner is not bound to take a new cargo for the most he can get, in order to reduce the damages to be paid by the charterer. Ib.

Unliquidated Penalty.]—More than the penalty of a charterparty may be recovered in an action in the covenants. Winter v. Trimmer, 1 W. Bl. 395. S. P., Harrison v. Wright, 13 East, 343; 12 R. R. 369.

Ship not ready to Sail — Natural Result of Breach — Notice of Special Circumstances.]—By the terms of the contract the defendants agreed with the plaintiffs to have a certain ship ready on a certain date, in the south West India Docks, to receive a cargo of tiles for shipment to Australia. The ship was not ready on the agreed day, and the tiles being kept waiting in the trucks in which the plaintiffs had had them brought into the docks, the plaintiffs were obliged to pay the railway company, the owners of the trucks, a certain sum for the detention, which sum they now sought to recover from the defendants as damages for their breach of contract. If the plaintiffs had followed the ordinary course of business at the docks, they would have employed the dock company to bring the tiles into the docks up to the ship's side, and the dock company's scale of charges, which were slightly higher than the railway company's, would have included storage of the tiles at the docks for three weeks without further charge. The time during which the trucks were actually detained was less than three weeks:—Held, that the defendants had no right to assume that the plaintiffs would follow the ordinary course of business in the mode of bringing their goods into the docks, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to deliver the tiles in any manner they pleased, and that the detention of the trucks was the natural and ordinary consequence of the defendants' breach of contract. Welch v. Anderson, 61 L. J., Q. B. 167; 66 L. T. 442; 7 Asp. M. C. 177—C. A.

Legality of Voyage.]—The charterer of a ship from L. to B. and back, cannot plead to an action brought against him by the owner on the charterparty for not providing a cargo at B. that the ship sailed without convoy contrary to law, and that the plaintiff was privy thereto; it not being in the contemplation of the parties, when the contract was entered into, to violate the law. Wilson v. Foderingham, 1 M. & S. 469.

Amendment—Orders as to Port of Loading—Reasonable Time for giving Notice.]—Under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 28, the judge has power to give leave to amend a declaration in an action on a charterparty by inserting a statement of its legal effect with reference to the duty of the charterer to exercise his option of naming the port of loading within reasonable time. Whitwell v. Scheer, 8 A. & E. 301; 3 N. & P. 391; 7 L. J., Q. B. 244.

Condition precedent—Loss of Ship—Finding of Court Martial.]—Covenant in a charterparty of a government transport, whereby if the ship should be lost, burnt, or taken, and it should appear to a court-martial that the master and crew had made the best defence they could, the freighters covenanted to pay the value of the ship:—Held, that the holding of the court martial is a condition precedent. Davison v. Mure, 3 Dougl. 28.

1. STAMPING.

See 54 & 55 Vict. c. 39.

The indorsement and deposit of a bill of lading, as a security, did not require a stamp within 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, Sched. tit. "Mortgage." Harris v. Birch, 1 D. (N.S.) 899; 9 M. & W. 591; 11 L. J., Ex. 219.

2. FORM AND NATURE OF.

a. Form.

North German Code does not exclude Special Form.]—By the laws of England and of the North German confederation, a bill of lading is decisive as between shipowner and consignee, and the North German code, although providing a form of bill of lading, does not prevent a special form of contract. The Patria, 41 L. J., Adm. 23; L. R. 3 A. & E. 436; 24 L. T. 849; 1 Asp. M. C. 71.

Payment of Freight—Omission of usual Words.]—A bill of lading in mentioning the freight payable for a cargo, did not use the ordinary words "he or they paying freight for the same," but, after giving the names of the consignees to whose order the cargo was to be delivered, employed the words "freight for the goods 4*l.* 5*s.* per ton of twenty cwt. nett, delivered, with primage and average accustomed":—Held, that the two forms of expression were in effect the same, and constituted the ordinary condition that the goods were to be deliverable only on paying freight. Wegnelin v. Cellier, 42 L. J., Ch. 758; L. R. 6 H. L. 286; 22 W. R. 26.

Negotiability—"Or Order or Assigns."]—Semble, that a bill of lading, in which the words "or order or assigns" are omitted, is not a negotiable instrument. Henderson v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, 42 L. J., P. C. 60; L. R. 5 P. C. 253; 29 L. T. 192; 21 W. R. 873; 2 Asp. M. C. 98—P. C.

When goods have been delivered to the person to whom the bill of lading was made out, and they have then been delivered to indorsees of the bill of lading, so that the indorsees unite in themselves a legal and equitable title to the goods, the omission of the words "or order or assigns" in the bill of lading is not sufficient to give the indorsees constructive notice of some equitable arrangement between the person to whom the bill of lading was made out and the consignors. Ib. And see, as to negotiability, Evans v. Marlett, and Cases infra, col. 351.

Letters of Advice.]—Letters to a party who has accepted bills of exchange on the faith of a consignment, which gave him advice of the fact, are not equivalent to bills of lading indorsed. Nichols v. Clent, 3 Price, 547.

Clean Bill of Lading.]—See Arrompe v. Barr, infra, col. 317.

b. Duration and Currency.

Commencement.]—The liability of a shipowner for goods, the receipt of which is acknowledged by the master's signature to a bill of lading, commences from the time of delivery to the servants of the owner, although the goods are not put on board the ship. British Columbia and Vancouver Island Spar, Lumber and Saw Mill Co. v. Nettleship, 37 L. J., C. P. 235; L. R. 3 C. P. 499; 18 L. T. 291; 16 W. R. 1046.

Termination.]—A bill of lading remains in force until there has been a complete delivery of the goods thereunder to a person having a right to receive them. Barber v. Meyerstein, 39 L. J., C. P. 187; L. R. 4 H. L. 317; 22 L. T. 808; 18 W. R. 1041—H. L.

A. was indorsee of a bill of lading for cotton, drawn in a set of three, making the cotton deliverable in London on payment of freight. The cotton had been recently landed under an entry made by A., and carried to a sufferance wharf in the port of London, where it remained with a stop thereon for freight. On the 4th of March, 1865, A. obtained from B. an advance of 2,500*l.* on the deposit of two copies of the bill of lading; A. fraudulently retaining the third copy, which B. supposed to be in the hands of the captain. On the 6th and 7th of March (the stop for freight being then removed), A., who had in February instructed cotton brokers to take samples of the cotton and to offer it for sale, obtained from them advances to the amount of 2,000*l.* on the deposit of the third copy of the bill of lading; and on the 11th, being then informed of the prior advance by B., they sent such third copy of the bill of lading to the wharfinger, and procured the cotton to be transferred into their names, and afterwards sold it and received the proceeds:—Held, that the bill of lading, when deposited with B., retained its full force and effect, and consequently that there was a valid pledge of the cotton to B. before the advances made to A. by the brokers. Ib.

c. Revocability.

In what Cases.]—A bill of lading, by which goods are made deliverable to A., is revocable until the goods are or the bill of lading is delivered to A. The shipper of the goods, therefore, may change his purpose, and make the goods deliverable to anyone else. Mitchel v. Ede, 3 P. & D. 513; 11 A. & E. 888; 9 L. J., Q. B. 187.

Where a freighter of a ship to such ports as the master should be directed by himself or his agents, first ordered the master to proceed to one of them, in consequence of which he had taken in goods, and signed bills of lading for that port, he could not afterwards countermand that order, and order him to proceed to another port, without first recalling the bills of lading, or at least tendering a sufficient indemnity to the master, against the consequences of his liability thereon. Davidson v. Gwynne, 12 East, 381; 11 R. R. 420.

When goods have been put on board a ship to be conveyed on freight, and bills of lading have been signed by the master, the owner of the goods cannot before the sailing of the ship, insist on their being redelivered to him without paying the freight that would become due for their carriage, and indemnifying the master against the consequences of his signing the bills of lading. Tindall v. Taylor, 4 El. & Bl. 219; 3 C. L. R. 199; 24 L. J., Q. B. 12; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 112.

Of Indorsement.]—See Mitchel v. Ede, infra, col. 348.

Intention.]—In construing bills of lading the intention of the parties as expressed in the contract is to be looked at, for no exception, of a private nature at least, which is not contained in the contract itself, or arising therefrom by implication of law, can be engrafted upon it. Atkinson v. Ritchie, 10 East, 533; 10 R. R. 372. S. P., Spence v. Chadwick, 10 Q. B. 517; 16 L. J., Q. B. 313; 11 Jur. 872.

Contract created by — As to Goods to be carried.]—When a bill of lading described the goods shipped as "Thirteen packages books, woodwork, whalebones, Dutch clocks, shoes and linen goods," and was also stamped by the master with the words, "value, weight and contents unknown":—Held, that the proper construction of the contract was, that the shipowners contracted to carry whatever goods were contained in the packages, and that they were therefore bound to carry silk stuffs contained in one of the packages, there being no evidence of wilful or fraudulent misstatement on the part of the shippers. Lebeau v. General Steam Navigation Co., 42 L. J., C. P. 1; L. R. 8 C. P. 88; 27 L. T. 447; 21 W. R. 146; 1 Asp. M. C. 435.

Held, also, that, although the freight charged for linen goods was lower than that for silk stuffs, the shippers were not estopped from proving the delivery of silk stuffs to the shipowners. Ib.

As to Ships.]—Goods were shipped on board a vessel, under a bill of lading, "Shipped on board the steamship 'Hibernia' . . . from Singapore to London . . . with liberty to call at any ports, in or out of the route, to receive and discharge coals . . . &c., and to tranship the goods by any other steamer":—Held, that the contract of the shipowner was that the goods should be carried on board a ship in which the principal motive power during the voyage should be steam. Fraser v. Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Co., 41 L. J., Q. B. 249; L. R. 7 Q. B. 566; 27 L. T. 373; 20 W. R. 724; 1 Asp. M. C. 421.

Construction according to Foreign or English Law.]—A German master of a German ship, chartered by German charterers, signed bills of lading which were in the English language, and stipulated for payment of freight in English money by English consignees of goods to be carried to a German port:—Held, that the contract must be construed by reference to the following rules: First—that the rights and obligations of the parties are to be determined by the law which they have declared themselves to intend; secondly—that where there is no express declaration of intention, the presumption as to the law contemplated must be gathered from the circumstances of the case; thirdly—that where the contract is plain in its language, that language must receive the ordinary and natural construction, and does not admit the introduction of a law dehors the contract; fourthly—that the contract must be executed according to its terms, or abandoned, with due compensation to the party injured, unless supervening unforeseen circumstances have rendered the execution legally impossible; and, fifthly—that the happening of such circumstance may justify a reasonable delay in the execution of the contract, though not an abandonment of it. The Patria, 41 L. J., Adm. 23; L. R. 3 A. & E. 436; 24 L. T. 849.

The ship arrived at Falmouth on the 23rd of August, during the war between France and Germany. Hamburg was blockaded till the 18th of September. The consignees offered to take their cargo at Falmouth, and pay full freight, but were refused. The suit was commenced on the 1st of November:—Held, that whether the contract should be construed according to the general maritime law, or English or German law, the master was bound to have delivered the cargo at Hamburg or at Falmouth. Ib.

A bill of lading made in England is a contract to be governed and interpreted by English law, and therefore no substantive defence arising from delay in making the claim can be made apart from the express condition contained therein. Moore v. Harris, 45 L. J., P. C. 55; 1 App. Cas. 318; 34 L. T. 519; 24 W. R. 887; 3 Asp. M. C. 173—P. C.

Parol Evidence—Usage—Rate of Freight.]—By a bill of lading of wool from Odessa, freight was to be paid in London, on delivery, "at the rate of 80*s.* per cwt., gross weight, tallow, and other goods, grain, or seed, in proportion, as per London Baltic printed rates":—Held, that extrinsic evidence was admissible to shew, that, by usage of the trade, the meaning of the bill of lading was, that 80*s.* per cwt. of tallow was to be taken as the standard by which the rate of freight on all other goods was to be measured. Russian Steam Navigation Co. v. Silva, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 610.

Discount.]—A bill of lading provided that the goods specified therein should be deliverable to the order of the consignee or his assigns at Liverpool, he or they paying freight for the goods five-eighths of a penny sterling per pound, with primage and average accustomed:—Held, in an action by the shipowner against an indorsee of the bill of lading who had accepted the goods to recover the freight and primage, that the latter might give evidence of a mercantile custom existing at Liverpool, by which he was entitled to a deduction of three months' discount from the freight, inasmuch as the custom was binding, and was not inconsistent with the terms of the bill of lading. Brown v. Byrne, 3 El. & Bl. 703; 2 C. L. R. 1599; 23 L. J., Q. B. 313; 18 Jur. 700; 2 W. R. 471. See Hall v. Janson, 4 El. & Bl. 500.

The custom existing in Liverpool of allowing discount upon freights payable on bills of lading of ships from ports in North America, is applicable to freights from ports in California since its annexation to the United States. Falkner v. Earle, 3 B. & S. 360; 32 L. J., Q. B. 124; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 847; 7 L. T. 672; 11 W. R. 307.

Commission.]—The holder of a bill of lading comprising the whole cargo, has by custom a right to deduct "address commission" from the freight. The Norway, Br. & Lush. 404; 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 246; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 892; 13 L. T. 50; 13 W. R. 1085. On demurrer, Br. & Lush. 226.

Primage.]—By a charterparty the charterer engaged to ship in Australia a full cargo for a port in England at a freight of 60*s.* per ton in full; ship paying all port-charges, pilotages and towages: the freight to be paid in cash on right delivery of cargo at port of discharge, less advances, exchange and commission: the captain to sign bills of lading for cargo as presented, at any rate of freight required by charterer; but, should the total freight by bills of lading amount to less than the total chartered freight, the difference to be paid the master in cash before sailing. The master (who was paid a fixed salary, "to include all charges and allowances") signed a bill of lading for the whole cargo, making the goods deliverable to "order or assigns, freight to be paid in cash at port of discharge, the rate of discharge, rate of freight, and other conditions as per charterparty, with 5 per cent. primage in cash on delivery as customary." The cargo was received at the port of discharge by the indorsees of the bill of lading, as agents of the charterer, and the freight paid:—Held, that they were not liable for primage. Caughey v. Gordon, 3 C. P. D. 419; 27 W. R. 50. And see V. MASTER, ante, col. 92.

Incorporation of Conditions of Charterparty—"Baltic Clause."]—The charterers of a vessel shipped a cargo on board her under a bill of lading by which the cargo was to be delivered at a port therein named "(the act of God, the queen's enemies, fire and all and every other danger and accidents of the seas, rivers and navigation of whatever nature and kind soever excepted) unto order or to assigns, they paying freight for the said coals, and all other conditions as per charter." One of the provisions of the charterparty was "Negligence clause as per Baltic Bill of Lading, 1885":—Held, in an action by the indorsees of the bill of lading against the shipowners to recover damages for the non-delivery of the cargo, that the words "all other conditions as per charter" only incorporated into the bill of lading those provisions of the charterparty which, from their nature, were to be performed by the consignee, and did not incorporate the "negligence clause as per Baltic Bill of Lading, 1885." Russell v. Niemann (17 C. B. (N.S.) 163) and Gray v. Carr (L. R. 6 Q. B. 522) discussed. Serraino v. Campbell, 60 L. J., Q. B. 303; [1891] 1 Q. B. 283; 64 L. T. 615; 39 W. R. 356; 7 Asp. M. C. 48—C. A.

Cesser Clause—Liability for Freight.]—A vessel was chartered to carry a cargo of coals from Cardiff to Rouen. The charterparty provided that the liability of the charterers should cease "when the ship is loaded and advance of freight with demurrage at Cardiff paid." "Ship to have a lien on cargo for freight, dead freight and demurrage." The bill of lading contained no restriction on the liability of the charterers. In an action for balance of freight:—Held, that the charterparty and bill of lading must be read together, and construed according to the plain meaning on the face of them, and that the charterers' liability ceased on performance of the conditions in the charterparty. Barwick v. Burnyeat, 36 L. T. 250; 25 W. R. 395; 3 Asp. M. C. 376. And see Benzon v. Kenneth, post, col. 384.

—— Demurrage—Liability of Charterers.]—A charterparty contained stipulations for payment of freight and demurrage, and also a stipulation that "as this charterparty is entered into by the charterers on account of another party, their liability ceases as soon as the cargo is on board, the vessel holding a lien upon the cargo for freight and demurrage." The charterers having placed the cargo on board at the port of loading, a bill of lading was signed whereby the goods were made deliverable to themselves at the port of discharge, "they paying freight, and all other conditions as per charterparty." In an action by the shipowner against them as consignees of the cargo, for demurrage in respect of delay at the port of discharge:—Held, that the cesser clause in the charterparty must be rejected as inapplicable in reading the bill of lading, which incorporated all the conditions of the charterparty applicable to the reception of the goods at the port of discharge, and, therefore, that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the action. Gullischen v. Stewart, 53 L. J., Q. B. 173; 13 Q. B. D. 317; 50 L. T. 47; 32 W. R. 763; 5 Asp. M. C. 200—C. A. See also Bryden v. Niebuhr, ante, col. 252; and post, col. 466.

Exceptions and Perils — Conflict between Specific and General Provisions.]—Under a charterparty the appellants contracted to provide steamers for the purpose of bringing frozen meat to this country, and to fix and work proper refrigerating machinery, subject to the terms and conditions of a bill of lading of an agreed form, except as altered by the said charterparty. The bill of lading contained a wide exception clause. The refrigerating machinery proved defective, and the meat was damaged. In an action to recover damages from the appellants:—Held, that the general terms of the bill of lading were not incorporated into the agreement under the charterparty so as in any way to affect the express and specific stipulations of such agreement, and that if the said stipulations could not have full effect given to them in conjunction with the bill of lading, the bill of lading must be regarded as being to that extent altered by it. Houston v. Sansinena, 1 R. 203; 68 L. T. 567; 7 Asp. M. C. 311—H. L. (E.)

Deviation Clause—Perishable Cargo—Document partly consisting of Printed Common Form.]—A cargo of oranges consigned to Liverpool was shipped at Malaga under a bill of lading which described the ship as "bound for Liverpool," and contained a printed deviation clause whereby liberty was given "to proceed to and stay at any port or ports in any rotation in the Mediterranean, Levant, Black Sea or Adriatic, or on the coasts of Africa, Spain, Portugal, France, Great Britain and Ireland, for the purpose of delivering coals, cargo or passengers, or for any other purpose whatsoever." By another clause the shippers agreed to all the stipulations of the bill of lading whether written or printed. After leaving Malaga the ship proceeded to a port in Spain in the contrary direction to Liverpool, and returned thence to Liverpool. By reason of the delay so caused, the oranges were damaged. The shippers sued the owners of the ship for damages for breach of contract:—Held, that the main object of the contract being the carriage of the oranges to Liverpool, the liberty given by the general printed words must be limited so as to make it a liberty consistent with the main object, and that, upon the true construction of the bill of lading, the liberty to deviate was confined to ports which were in the course of the voyage from Malaga to Liverpool; consequently, that the deviation in a contrary direction to Liverpool was not justified, and that the shipowners were liable. Glynn v. Margetson, 62 L. J., Q. B. 466; [1893] A. C. 351; 1 R. 193; 69 L. T. 1; 7 Asp. M. C. 366—H. L. (E.)

And see further as to construction of bill of lading with reference to charterparty, ante, XI. CHARTERPARTY, cols. 236, seq.

Evidence to Vary—Deviation—Loss by Perils of the Sea.]—The plaintiffs having purchased goods to be shipped from a foreign port on the terms that payment of the price was to be made in exchange for shipping documents, the bill of lading signed upon the shipment of the goods was, upon payment of the price, indorsed to them. The bill of lading, which contained the usual exception of sea perils, stated that the goods were shipped for delivery at Dunkirk on board a vessel lying at Fiume and bound for Dunkirk, with liberty to call at any ports in any order. The ship, instead of proceeding direct for Dunkirk, sailed for Glasgow, and was lost, with her cargo, off the mouth of the Clyde, by perils of the sea. In an action brought by the plaintiffs against the shipowners for non-delivery of the goods, evidence was given to shew that the shippers of the goods, at the time when the bill of lading was given, knew that the vessel was intended to proceed viâ Glasgow:—Held, that such evidence was not admissible to vary the terms of the bill of lading, which imported a voyage direct from Fiume to Dunkirk, subject to the liberty to call at any ports of call substantially within the course of such voyage; that Glasgow, being altogether out of the course of such voyage, was not such a port; and that the vessel was therefore lost while deviating from the voyage contracted for, and excepted perils clause did not exonerate the defendants from liability in respect of non-delivery of the goods. Leduc v. Ward, 57 L. J., Q. B. 379; 20 Q. B. D. 475; 58 L. T. 908; 36 W. R. 537; 6 Asp. M. C. 290—C. A.

Freight—Delivery without Payment.]—The words, "he or they paying freight for the said goods," in a bill of lading, are for the benefit of the master and shipowner and not of the the consignor. The master, therefore, may deliver goods to the consignee or his assigns, whether freight be paid or not, without incurring any liability to the consignor. Shepard v. De Bernales, 13 East, 505; 12 R. R. 442.

"Shipped on Board"—Goods floated to Ship.]—Timber sleepers were floated alongside a vessel on rafts and there delivered to the mate, who gave a receipt for them:—Held, that the goods were not "shipped on board" within the meaning of a bill of lading. Thorman v. Burt, 1 Cab. & E. 596; 54 L. T. 349; 5 Asp. M. C. 563.

Quay Rates—Custom inconsistent with Bill of Lading.]—A bill of lading stipulated that "the merchandise shipped thereunder was to be received on the quay at London and delivered therefrom by the person appointed by the steamship's agents, &c., the merchandise to be received and delivered according to the custom and usages of the respective ports." A custom was proved as to grain cargoes coming to London, that if the merchant does not demand delivery of the grain within twenty-four hours after the ship's arrival, the ship is entitled to discharge on the quay. The merchant did not demand delivery, and the grain was discharged on the quay:—Held, that the custom was not inconsistent with the bill of lading; and that the merchant was liable for quay rates. Aste v. Stumore, 1 Cab. & E. 321, n. Reversing S. C., 1 Cab. & E. 219.

Right of Shipowner to land Goods at risk of Consignee.]—See Wilson v. London, Italian and Adriatic Steam Navigation Co., infra, col. 534.

Liberty to Tow.]—The plaintiffs shipped goods at Liverpool on board the "Liberia," a steam vessel belonging to a steamship company, to be carried for freight, payable by the plaintiffs to the company, to Benin, on the coast of Africa, which goods, on the arrival of the "Liberia" at Bonny, were, in the usual course of the business of the company, and according to the terms of the bill of lading, transhipped on board the "Kwara," a small branch steamer belonging to the company, to be forwarded thereby to their destination at Benin. The "Kwara," with the plaintiffs' goods on board, left Bonny, and proceeded on her voyage to Benin, calling on her way at Brass, where she had both to discharge and take in cargo. Whilst lying in the harbour at Brass, and after having discharged and taken in cargo, and within two or three hours of being ready to proceed on her onward voyage to Benin, the "Kwara" was taken by her captain, at the request of the captain and owners of another vessel, to the mouth of the Brass river, some three miles from the harbour, for the purpose of towing off such other vessel which had got stranded on the breakers in attempting to cross the bar at the entrance of the river, and in her efforts to tow that vessel off, the "Kwara" herself, in consequence of her screw getting fouled with a rope, was wrecked, and the plaintiffs' goods were lost. It did not appear that human life was in any imminent danger, or that the assistance of the "Kwara" was sought for, except to save property. The bill of lading, given by the company on receiving the goods at Liverpool, contained a clause giving to their vessels "liberty to tow and assist vessels in all situations"; and also a memorandum in the margin as follows: "The within goods to be transhipped at Bonny, and forwarded to destination by branch steamer at ship's expense but shipper's risk." In an action by the plaintiffs to recover the value of their goods:—Held, first, that, under the express words of the clause in the bill of lading giving liberty "to tow and assist vessels," &c., the "Kwara" was justified and protected in going to the assistance of the other vessel in the manner and under the circumstances stated. Stuart v. British and African Steam Navigation Co., 32 L. T. 257; 2 Asp. M. C. 497.

And see Drain v. Henderson, infra, col. 342.

Transhipment "at Shipper's Risk"—Ship's Expense.]—Held, secondly, that the words in the margin of the bill of lading "at shipper's risk," applied, as did also the words "at ship's expense," to the transhipment only of the goods from the one vessel to the other at Bonny, and not to the "forwarding of them from Bonny to Benin." Ib.

No Claim unless before Removal of Goods.]—By a bill of lading made in England by the master of an English ship certain packages of tea were "to be delivered from the ship's deck, where the ship's responsibility shall cease, at the port of Montreal . . . unto the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and by them to be forwarded thence per railway to the station nearest to Toronto, and at the aforesaid station delivered to the consignees or to their assigns." The instrument contained, in addition to a long list of excepted special risks, whether arising from negligence or otherwise, the following condition: "No damage that can be insured against will be paid for, nor will any claim whatever be admitted unless made before the goods are removed." In an action in Lower Canada against the shipowner for the value of damage done to the packages during the voyage, it appeared that they were landed, placed in shipping sheds, removed therefrom to railway freight-sheds in Montreal, and finally delivered to the consignees in Toronto. No notice of damages was given until thirteen days after the delivery was completed:—Held, that the condition, though in its first clause limited to insurable damage, clearly applied as regards its second clause to all damage, whether apparent or latent, which could by examination of the packages conducted with reasonable care and skill at the place of removal have been discovered. Moore v. Harris, 45 L. J., P. C. 55; 1 App. Cas. 318; 34 L. T. 519; 24 W. R. 887; 3 Asp. M. C. 173—P. C.

Excluding Merchant Shipping Act.]—A condition in a bill of lading provided, in effect, that, on the arrival of the vessel in dock, the consignee of a portion of the cargo should be ready to receive the goods, and that, in default, the master or agent of the ship should be at liberty to land the goods and warehouse them at the consignee's risk and expense. The vessel arrived, and the agent of the consignee made an immediate application for the goods, but was told that it was not known in what part of the ship they were. On receiving the same answer on the following day, the agent withdrew, handing to the mate a notice desiring him to give twenty-four hours' notice of his readiness to deliver the goods, in accordance, as the notice alleged, with 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, ss. 66, 67. No such notice of readiness was given, and, there being no one to receive the goods, they were placed in a warehouse by the master of the ship, a charge of 5*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* being thereby incurred. The consignee having threatened to charge his agent with the value of the goods unless he obtained delivery of the same, the agent paid the said sum under protest, and brought this action against the shipowner to recover such sum:—Held, that the special contract in the bill of lading excluded the operation of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act; and that the act did not apply to a case where the shipowner was in bonâ fide ignorance of the position of the goods, regard being had to the premature demand of the agent of the consignee. Oliver v. Colven, 27 W. R. 822.

Introduction of Novel Clause.]—If a shipowner wishes to introduce into his bill of lading so novel a clause as one exempting him from general average contribution, he ought not only to make it clear in words, but also to make it conspicuous by inserting it in such type and in such a part of the document as that a person of ordinary capacity and care could not fail to see it—Per Lush, J. Crookes v. Allen, 49 L. J., Q. B. 201; 5 Q. B. D. 38; 41 L. T. 800; 28 W. R. 304; 4 Asp. M. C. 216.

Notice of Alteration of Destination—Advertisement of Voyage.]—Where a general ship has been advertised for a particular voyage, if her destination is in any respect altered, the owner is bound to give specific notice of the alteration to every person who has shipped goods on board. Peel v. Price, 4 Camp. 243; 16 R. R. 785.

Liability of Indorsee.]—The indorsee of a bill of lading is only liable to be sued on so much of the contract in the charterparty as incorporates the bill of lading. Oliver v. Muggeridge, 7 W. R. 164. And see, as to effect of indorsement, infra, cols. 343, seq.

Foreign Bill of Lading—Foreign Law—Short Delivery.]—See Immanuel (Owners) v. Denholm, infra, col. 425.

e. Presentation.

Time for.]—A bill of lading should be delivered as soon after its arrival as possible, without reference to the arrival or unloading of the cargo. Barber v. Taylor, 5 M. & W. 527; 9 L. J., Ex. 21.

Custom.]—A. sold goods to B., to be delivered free on board at Liverpool, for Trieste. The goods were placed by A. on board a steamer to be delivered to the order of B. By the custom of the trade, where goods are sold, to be delivered free on board, the price is not payable until production of a bill of lading, or some other document, giving evidence of their being on board. The owners of the steamer refusing to give out the bill of lading until a greatly increased amount of freight was paid, and B., when informed of that fact, declining to have anything to do with the matter, A. (who had not contracted to pay the freight) was unable to comply with the custom by producing the bill of lading:—Held, that B., by his conduct, dispensed with the strict compliance with the custom, and that consequently A. was entitled to maintain an action for the price of the iron, without producing a bill of lading. Green v. Sichel, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 747; 29 L. J., C. P. 213; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 827; 2 L. T. 745; 8 W. R. 663.

Duty of Shipmaster—Delivery without Production of Bill.]—Where by the terms of a bill of lading the goods are to be delivered to a named consignee or his assigns, the master is not entitled to deliver the goods to such consignee without the production of one of the parts of the bill of lading. The plaintiffs shipped goods in London on board a German vessel belonging to the defendants, under a bill of lading, drawn in two parts, by which the goods were to be delivered at a German port to the consignee named in the bill of lading, or to his assigns. The master delivered the goods at the port of discharge to the consignee without the production of either part of the bill of lading:—Held, upon proof that the German law did not essentially differ from the English law, that the defendants were liable for wrongful delivery of the goods. The Stettin, 58 L. J., Adm. 81; 14 P. D. 142; 61 L. T. 200; 38 W. R. 96; 6 Asp. M. C. 395.

The master after waiting a reasonable time at a foreign port, and no person having produced the bill of lading, may deliver the goods to some person to keep till the bill of lading is produced. Howard v. Shepherd, 9 C. B. 297; 19 L. J., C. P. 349.

a. Signature by Master.

For what Goods.]—The master has no power to charge his owner by signing bills of lading for a greater quantity of goods than is on board. Hubbersty v. Ward, 8 Ex. 330; 22 L. J., Ex. 113.

He has no general authority from the owner to sign bills of lading for goods not received on board, and all persons taking a bill of lading by indorsement or otherwise have notice that his authority is limited to signing bills of lading for goods actually received on board. Grant v. Norway (10 C. B. 665; 20 L. J., C. P. 93; 15 Jur. 296) followed. Cox v. Bruce, infra, col. 323.

The captain of a merchant ship borrowed, in a foreign port, a certain sum for the ship's use, in consideration of which he took home goods for the lenders, and signed bills of lading, making the freight payable to them or their assigns at the port of discharge:—Held, that he exceeded his authority as improperly interfering with the shipowner's lien on the unpaid freight. Reynolds v. Jex, 7 B. & S. 86; 34 L. J., Q. B. 251; 13 W. R. 968.

Goods never on Board—Bill of Lading given.]—Where a master gives a bill of lading for goods not on board, whether fraudulently or not, the shipowner is not liable for damage thereby caused to an indorsee. Grieve v. König, 7 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 521.

Rate of Freight.]—A master has no authority to sign bills of lading for a lower rate of freight than that for which the owner has contracted. Pickernell v. Jauberry, 3 F. & F. 217.

Binding on whom.]—When a master puts up a ship as a general ship, and the shippers have no knowledge of the existence of a charterparty, the contract in the bill of lading is between the shippers and the owner, and not the shippers and the charterer. The Figlia Maggiore, 37 L. J., Adm. 52; L. R. 2 A. & E. 105; 18 L. T. 532.

F. & Co. requested the defendants to purchase, through their branch house in Calcutta, a quantity of cotton on their behalf, and to ship it for Liverpool on board two of F. & Co.'s ships. By arrangement goods shipped on account of F. & Co. by the house at Calcutta were to be shipped at a nominal rate of freight. One of the ships was addressed to the defendants' Calcutta house, as agents for F. & Co., and having arrived at Calcutta a quantity of cotton, in pursuance of the order of F. & Co., was shipped in her, for which the captain signed bills of lading making the cotton deliverable to order of the Calcutta house, and stating it to be "freight free on owners' account." The ship, while on her voyage to Calcutta, was sold by F. & Co., and became the property of the plaintiffs. No notice of this had reached the captain or the defendants when the shipment was effected. When the ship arrived at Liverpool, F. & Co. having become bankrupt, the defendants, to whom the house at Calcutta had indorsed the bill of lading, claimed to receive the cotton without paying any freight to the plaintiffs, in accordance with the terms of the bill of lading:—Held, that the terms of the bill of lading, under which the goods were shipped, were binding on the plaintiffs, and that no freight was payable by the defendants. Mercantile and Exchange Bank v. Gladstone, 37 L. J., Ex. 130; L. R. 3 Ex. 233; 18 L. T. 641; 17 W. R. 11.

A master signed bills of lading to deliver at Hamburg, "dangers of the seas only excepted":—Held, that though the charterparty contained other exceptions, the master was the agent of the owner as well as the charterer, and that, therefore, the terms of the bill of lading were binding. The Patria, 41 L. J., Adm. 23; L. R. 3 A. & E. 436; 24 L. T. 849; 1 Asp. M. C. 71.

Without Production of Receipt for Goods.]—Where the master gives a receipt for goods put on board, it behoves him not to sign a bill of lading till that receipt is given up. Thompson v. Trail, 2 Car. & P. 334; 6 B. & C. 36; 6 D. & R. 31; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 34; 30 R. R. 242.

Where the master receives goods on board, and gives a receipt for them, he is bound not to deliver the bill of lading, except to the person who can produce the receipt in exchange for it. Craven v. Ryder, 2 Marsh. 127; 6 Taunt. 433; Holt, 100; 16 R. R. 644. And see Mitchell v. Scaife, 4 Camp. 298; 16 R. R. 795.

When Goods on Board.]—The master of a vessel may properly sign bills of lading in favour of the shipper of goods, without production of the mate's receipts for the goods, if he is satisfied otherwise that the goods are on board the vessel and has no notice that anyone but the shipper claims any interest in them. Hathesing v. Laing, 43 L. J., Ch. 233; L. R. 17 Eq. 92; 29 L. T. 734; 2 Asp. M. C. 170.

The holder for value of bills of lading so given has a better title than an indorsee of the mate's receipts. Ib.

When Signature Fraudulently obtained—Property in Goods.]—The plaintiffs, merchants in London, purchased for C., but on their own credit, goods abroad, debiting C. with the price and a commission. The goods were warehoused in London in the plaintiffs' name. C., in his own name, engaged room for the goods in the ship "E.," which had been put up as a general ship for Calcutta. The plaintiffs, at C.'s request, delivered the goods to a lighterman, but with a view to preserve their lien, took the lighterman's engagement to give them the mate's receipt. The goods were shipped in the "E."; the mate's receipt in blank was handed to the lighterman, who gave it to the plaintiffs. C. promised the plaintiffs to redeem the mate's receipt, but never did so, and fraudulently induced the ship brokers to get bills of lading to C.'s order, to be signed by the master, though the mate's receipt was not produced. C. fraudulently indorsed these bills of lading for value to a bonâ fide indorsee. The plaintiffs had no communication with the ship brokers or captain till after the ship had sailed, when, the facts being discovered, they demanded the goods, both in this country and on the arrival of the ship at Calcutta. The goods were delivered by the captain at Calcutta to the holders of the bills of lading. An action was brought for this conversion against the shipowner and the captain. The captain and crew were appointed by the shipowner, but the ship was chartered for a lump sum to third parties, who put up the ship as a general ship. The refusal of the captain to deliver the goods at Calcutta was by the orders of the shipowners. The only question left to the jury was, whether the master was justified in signing the bills of lading without the production of the mate's receipt. The jury finding in the negative, the plaintiffs had the verdict against both defendants, on the pleas of not guilty and not possessed:—Held, that the property in the goods remained the property of the plaintiffs, there never having been any delivery animo transferendi to C.; and that the misdelivery at Calcutta was a conversion, and that the question, whether the plaintiffs were precluded from relying on their property or complaining of this conversion, was in effect properly left to the jury, and properly found by them. Schuster v. M'Kellar, 7 El. & Bl. 704; 26 L. J., Q. B. 281; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1320; 5 W. R. 656.

Held, also, that the shipowner having authorised the detention at Calcutta, the verdict was proper. Ib.

Goods never on Board—Bills of Lading Act—Signature of Master's Agent.]—To an action for freight by a shipowner against the indorsees of the bill of lading, the defendants counterclaimed in respect of short delivery. All the goods that were actually put on board had been delivered to them; but the bill of lading acknowledged the receipt of a larger quantity. All the goods mentioned in the bill of lading had been floated alongside the ship in rafts, and mate's receipts given for them; but some of them were lost before they were shipped. The bill of lading was signed, "By authority of the captain, Wilh. Ganswindt, as agent." Ganswindt was the ship's broker at the shipping port:—Held, that apart from the Bills of Lading Act, a bill of lading is not conclusive against a shipowner, and he is not liable in respect of any goods not actually shipped; and that in the present case he was not liable under that act, as the bill of lading was not signed by or for him. Thorman v. Burt, 54 L. T. 349; 5 Asp. M. C. 563—C. A.

Refusal to sign — Penalty or Liquidated Damages.] — A charterparty contained the clause, "The captain shall sign charterers' bills of lading as presented without qualification . . . within twenty-four hours after being loaded, or pay 10*l.* for every day's delay as and for liquidated damages until the ship is totally lost or the cargo delivered." The captain wrongfully refused to sign the bills of lading as presented; but the charterers were unable to shew that they had sustained any damage by his conduct:—Held, that the clause imposed a penalty and not liquidated damages, and that the plaintiffs were only entitled to nominal damages. Jones v. Hough (supra, col. 288) commented on. Rayner v. Rederiaktiebolaget Condor, 64 L. J., Q. B.

540; [1895] 2 Q. B. 289; 15 R. 542; 73 L. T. 96; 8 Asp. M. C. 43.

Refusal to sign, at Freight Lower than Agreed.]—See Hyde v. Willis, 3 Camp. 202; 13 R. R. 791, infra, col. 423.

—— Except subject to Charterparty.]—A person who, without notice of any charterparty, has placed goods on board a vessel which has been advertised as a general ship, is entitled to have his goods returned to him if the captain refuses to sign bills of lading except subject to a charterparty containing objectionable provisions. Peek v. Larsen, 40 L. J., Ch. 763; L. R. 12 Eq. 378; 25 L. T. 580; 19 W. R. 1045; 1 Asp. M. C. 163.

—— Clean Bill of Lading.]—By charterparty the master and charterer agreed that the ship should load a full and complete cargo to be delivered on payment of a specified freight—"the captain to sign bills of lading as presented at any rate of freight without prejudice to this charterparty." A lien was given on cargo for freight, dead freight and demurrage. At the end of the lay days the ship was short of a full cargo by thirty-five tons. The master claimed dead freight and demurrage, and refused to sign bills of lading, unless qualified by reference to the charterparty. It was afterwards agreed that the charterer should fill up the ship, and that the master should sign "clean bills of lading, but under protest for three days' demurrage incurred here, to be settled at the port of discharge." The master still refused to sign bills of lading, except with a reference to the charterparty inserted:—Held, that he was bound to sign clean bills, i.e. such as contained no reference to the charterparty or to the matters previously in dispute. Arrompe v. Barr, 8 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 602.

Signed in Blank—Negotiability.]—The validity of a bill of lading as a negotiable instrument is not affected by its having been signed by the master in blank as to the amount of cargo, which was afterwards filled in by the shipper. Cowdenbeath Coal Co. v. Clydesdale Bank, 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 682.

Power of Master to fill in—Days available for Unloading.]—A charterparty for carriage of grain from the Black Sea provided that there should be "eleven running days, Sundays excepted, for loading and unloading, and ten days on demurrage over and above the said lays at 6*d.* per ton running day. The 1885 bill of lading to be used under this charter, and its terms to be considered as part thereof." The printed bill of lading as filled up by the master at the loading port, stated "five and a half (5½) laying days remain for discharging cargo"; the words and figures in italics being in the master's handwriting:—Held, that the bill of lading, as filled in, was binding on the shipowners; and that the half day was available for the indorsees of the bill of lading for unloading. Allan v. Johnstone, 19 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 364.

b. Mate's Receipt.

Effect of.]—M. chartered a vessel with a cargo of salt, therewith to proceed to Calcutta; the freight to be paid on unloading, one third by freighter's acceptance at four months from the final sailing of the vessel, remainder on the right delivery of the cargo, agreeably to bills of lading. The captain to apply to F. for cargo and custom house business. F. proceeded to load the vessel, but before the whole cargo was on board M. stopped payment, and thereupon F. stopped the loading. F. presented bills of lading made out in his own name, which the owners of the ship refused to sign. M. presented none, and the ship sailed. On her arrival, F.'s agents tendered to the owners' agents the mate's receipt, and offered to pay freight, but they declined to deliver the salt. In an action for the conversion of the salt, the jury found that F. did not part with the control over the goods in putting them on board, and that the property did not pass to M.:—Held, that the sailing away with the goods was ample evidence of conversion, and that the conversion commenced from the time of sailing. Falk v. Fletcher, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 403; 34 L. J., C. P. 146; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 176; 13 W. R. 346.

A manufacturer at Newcastle consigned goods to E. & Co., his factors in London, specifically, to meet a bill of exchange drawn upon them, transmitting to them a receipt, signed by the mate of the vessel, acknowledging the goods to have been received on board to be delivered to E. & Co.:—Held, that E. & Co. had a sufficient property in the goods and right to the possession to entitle them to maintain trover against a wrongdoer, the consignor not having repudiated the contract upon which they were sent. Evans v. Nichol, 4 Scott (N.R.) 43; 3 Man. & G. 614; 11 L. J., C. P. 6.

—— Meaning of "Connaissements."]—The plaintiffs wrote to their agents, the defendants, regarding goods which S. had proposed to purchase: "Les informations sur S. sont telles que nous ne pouvons lui livrer les 2,500 caisses que contre connaissement. Si vous voulez, nous vous enverrons les connaissements, et vous ne les lui delivrerez que contre payement." The plaintiffs, who carried on business in Holland, consigned the goods to the defendants, with the bill of lading of a Dutch ship, and the defendants put them on board of a ship named by S., and they received and kept the mate's receipt, but no bills of lading of export ship was made up, nor was the price paid by S. when the ship sailed. In an action for delivering the goods without obtaining the price:—Held, that the instructions to the defendants were not carried out by obtaining the mate's receipt; that "connaissement" meant a bill of lading; and that, as the control over the goods had been lost without payment of the price, the defendants were liable. Stearine Co. v. Heintzmann, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 56; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 881; 11 L. T. 272.

Evidence—Short Delivery.]—The plaintiff having verbally chartered a ship to carry iron from Glasgow to Swansea, the ship was loaded with iron bought by the plaintiff from W. & Co. The iron was weighed by the agents of W. & Co., to whom the mate gave a receipt signed by him for 330 tons, but there was no bill of lading. On delivery at Swansea, the quantity of iron was discovered to be 326½ tons only, but the mate deposed, and was not contradicted, to the delivery of all that had been shipped. The plaintiff having paid on the full amount of 330 tons to W. & Co., who refused to repay him the difference, sued the shipowner for short delivery:—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence in the shipowner, and that if there had been, it would not be negligence causing loss to the plaintiff. Biddulph v. Bingham, 30 L. T. 30; 2 Asp. M. C. 225.

Custom as to.]—A local custom of trade was alleged to exist at Bombay by virtue of which the mate's receipts for goods shipped on board a vessel are negotiable instruments, and pass the property in the goods in the same manner as bills of lading, and that masters of ships are bound to have the mate's receipt returned to them before signing any bill of lading for the goods mentioned in that receipt; and that if a captain signed a bill of lading without production and delivery to him of the mate's receipt for the goods, he will be bound, on the production of that receipt, to sign a fresh bill of lading, and to deliver the same to the person producing the mate's receipt, and that the goods mentioned in the receipt ought to be delivered to the person who produced the second bill of lading:—Held, that such a custom, if proved to exist, would be inoperative as against the captain and the shipowners. Hathesing v. Laing, 43 L. J., Ch. 233; L. R. 17 Eq. 92; 29 L. T. 734; 2 Asp. M. C. 170.

Evidence of Quantity—Timber Cargo lost Alongside.]—See Pyman v. Burt, 1 Cab. & E. 207, col. 322.

c. As to Quality, Quantity and Date of Shipment.

Under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, s. 3.]—This provision only applies to persons who have actually signed bills of lading; therefore, the owners of a ship are not estopped from shewing that a statement of weight contained in a bill of lading of goods shipped, signed by the ship's agent, is incorrect. Jessel v. Bath, 36 L. J., Ex. 149; L. R. 2 Ex. 267; 15 W. R. 1041.

The above section does not make a bill of lading conclusive evidence against the owner that the goods were put on board. Meyer v. Dresser, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 646; 33 L. J., C. P. 289; 10 L. T. 612; 12 W. R. 983.

The statute operates where a bill of lading is signed by the master, who is part owner, and who sues on behalf of himself and his co-owners. Ib.

Liability of Master.]—A flour company abroad shipped on board a vessel 1,676 bags of rye-meal, some of which weighed twelve stone each, and some eight stone each. They were shipped from lighters, all mixed together, and the master knew nothing of their relative capacity. The master signed two bills of lading, one for 1,200 bags and the other for 467 bags deliverable to order. The latter bill of lading was for 467 bags rye-meal, gross 35 tons 9 cwt., and at the foot of it was "contents unknown and not responsible for weight." The bags were all marked alike, and no means were taken to identify by marks in the bills of lading any particular bags, and there was nothing on the face of the bills of lading from which the master could see that they were intended for different consignees. When the ship arrived, the master, by mistake, delivered to the consignee of the 467 bags of twelve stone each, several bags which weighed only eight stone:—Held, that the master was responsible for the non-delivery of 467 bags of the proper weight. Bradley v. Dunipace, 1 H. & C. 521; 32 L. J., Ex. 22—Ex. Ch.

The master having been sued to judgment on a bill of lading, the owner cannot be sued, although the judgment is unsatisfied. Priestly v. Fernie, 3 H. & C. 977; 34 L. J., Ex. 172; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 813; 13 L. T. 208; 13 W. R. 1089.

Weights—Mistake and Misdescription as to.]—In an action for freight, the master is at liberty, notwithstanding the terms of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, s. 3 (the Bills of Lading Act), to shew that the cargo actually received by him differs in weight from that signed for in the bill of lading; at all events where the weight mentioned in the bill of lading is a mere matter of measurement. Blanchet v. Powell's Llantrisit Collieries Co., 43 L. J., Ex. 50; L. R. 9 Ex. 74; 30 L. T. 28; 22 W. R. 490; 2 Asp. M. C. 224.

—— Signature of Master not Conclusive.]—Bills of lading signed by the master are prima facie evidence that the quantities named therein were received on board by him; the onus of rebutting this presumption, and of shewing that a less quantity than that specified was received, lies on the shipowner. M'Lean v. Fleming, L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. 128; 25 L. T. 317; 1 Asp. M. C. 160.

A shipowner is not estopped by the signature of the bill of lading by the master from shewing that the goods or some of them were never actually put on board. Brown v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., 44 L. J., C. P. 289; L. R. 10 C. P. 562; 32 L. T. 621; 23 W. R. 549; 2 Asp. M. C. 578.

By a charterparty for the conveyance of a cargo of coal from Cardiff to Buenos Ayres, it was stipulated that the master should "sign bills of lading for the cargo put on board as presented to him by the charterers, without prejudice to the terms of the charterparty." On arrival at the port of discharge, it was found that the coal delivered to the consignees was less by thirty-two tons than the quantity mentioned in the bills of lading, and the owners were called upon to pay, and paid, the difference of value to the consignees. In an action by the owners against the charterers to recover the amount so paid:—Held, that, inasmuch as the owners were under no legal liability, either at common law or under the Bills of Lading Act, to pay for such deficiency, the action was not maintainable. Ib.

In an action by consignees against a shipowner for the loss of one out of several boxes of machinery, which had been delivered on the quay to the people of the ship and the receipt of which had been acknowledged by the signatures of the mate and captain on the bill of lading :—Held, that the owner was responsible, although there was no proof that the missing box was ever on board the ship. British Columbia and Vancouver Island Co. v. Nettleship, 37 L. J., C. P. 235 ; L. R. 3 C. P. 499 ; 18 L. T. 291 ; 16 W. R. 1046.

"Weight, Value and Contents Unknown"—Effect of Words.]—When, on a closed package being shipped for carriage, a bill of lading, containing an innocent misdescription of its contents, is presented to the master of the ship, and he, without asking questions or examination, stamps thereon "weight, value and contents unknown," there is a contract to carry the package whatever its contents may be. Lebeau v. General Steam Navigation Co., 42 L. J., C. P. 1 ; L. R. 8 C. P. 88 ; 27 L. T. 447 ; 21 W. R. 146 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 435.

The plaintiffs delivered to the defendants, for carriage on board their ship, a closed case containing silk goods. The bill of lading, as tendered by the plaintiffs for signature, described the contents of the case as linen goods ; but before signing it the captain impressed upon it with a stamp the words "weight, value and contents unknown." The freight charged for silk was higher than that for linen goods, and the freight paid for the goods so delivered was that for linen goods ; but the plaintiffs represented the goods to be linen inadvertently, and without fraudulent intention. On the ship's arrival at her destination it was found that two pieces of silk had been abstracted from the case. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants as common carriers for non-delivery of the silk goods so lost :—Held, that the addition of the words "weight, value and contents unknown" to the bill of lading completely did away with the effect of the description of the goods as linen, and that consequently the contract was to carry the case and its contents, whatever they might be ; and the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the action. Ib.

The master of a Russian ship received on board goods under a bill of lading in the ordinary form :—"Shipped in good order and condition, to be delivered in the like good order and condition at the port of London ;" certain perils being excepted ; and in the margin were the words, "Weight, contents and value unknown." The ship arrived and the goods were delivered, but a great number of them were found to be damaged both externally and internally, and the damage was recent, and not traceable to any inherent vice in them :—Held, that in the absence of proof on the part of the shipowners that the goods were in a bad condition when shipped, it was not incumbent on the consignees, in order to establish their case to prove where or how the goods became damaged. The Peter der Grosse, 34 L. T. 749 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 195—C. A. Affirming 1 P. D. 414.

Held, also, that the bill of lading afforded evidence that externally, and so far as met the eye, the goods had been shipped in good order and condition. Ib.

A bill of lading for manganese shipped on board stated the weight in writing, but contained a printed clause, "weights, contents and value unknown" :—Semble, that the person signing the bill of lading would not be concluded from showing that the written statement of weight was erroneous. Jessel v. Bath, 36 L. J., Ex. 149 ; L. R. 2 Ex. 267 ; 15 W. R. 1041.

A bill of lading, signed by a master since deceased, for goods to be delivered to a consignee or his assigns, he paying freight, is admissible as evidence of the consignee having an insurable interest in the goods ; but if the master guards his acknowledgment by saying, "contents unknown," so that he does not charge himself with the receipt of any goods in particular, the bill of lading alone is not evidence either of the quantity of the goods or of property in the consignee. Haddow v. Parry, 3 Taunt. 303 ; 12 R. R. 666.

—— Whether conclusive as to Amount Shipped.]—A charterparty provided that the bill of lading should be conclusive evidence against the owners of the quantity of cargo received. The cargo (timber) was floated alongside the vessel, and receipts by the mate were then given for the same. Part of the cargo was lost by perils of the sea before shipment. The loss was notified by the master to the agent of the charterer, but, at the latter's request, the master was induced to sign bills of lading for the whole quantity received alongside :—Held, that the charterer had no claim against the shipowners in respect of the difference between the amount of cargo received alongside, and the amount shipped on board. Pyman v. Burt, 1 Cab. & E. 207.

The defendants chartered the plaintiff's ship for the carriage of a cargo of timber from Memel. The charterparty provided that the ship should there load from the agents of the said affreighters as customary a full cargo of fir sleepers, that the cargo should be brought to and taken from alongside the ship at merchants' risk and expense, and that the bill of lading should be conclusive evidence against the owners of the quantity of cargo received as stated therein. There was a custom at Memel, which, however, did not apply to charterparties in the form of the above-mentioned charterparty, that the captain should take delivery of the timber to be shipped at timber ponds up the river at some distance from the ship, the timber being then rafted down by fishermen to the ship, but being at the shipowner's risk during the process. The captain of the plaintiff's ship, on her arrival at Memel, not being aware of the provisions of the charterparty, allowed the mate to give receipts for the cargo at the timber ponds. Part of the timber included in such receipts was lost during the process of rafting the timber down to the ship, owing to the force of the current. The captain, having become aware of such loss and of the provisions of the charterparty, stated to the agent at Memel of the shippers, who had sold the timber to the defendants, that he did not see his way to signing clean bills of lading for the full quantity mentioned in the mate's receipt, a portion of the timber having been lost ; but, on being told by such agent and a clerk of the ship's brokers that he was bound to sign clean bills of lading for the full quantity, he did so. The bills of lading stated that such quantity was shipped in good order and well conditioned to be delivered on payment of freight and all other conditions as per charterparty. In an action for balance of chartered freight the defendants counterclaimed in respect of short delivery of cargo :—Held, that the bills of lading estopped the plaintiff from denying that the full amount of cargo stated therein was shipped. Lishman v.

Christie, 56 L. J., Q. B. 538; 19 Q. B. D. 333; 57 L. T. 552; 35 W. R. 744; 6 Asp. M. C. 186—C. A.

The master by signing the bill of lading does not bind the owner for more goods than were shipped. McLean v. Munck, 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 893.

Quality Marks—Estoppel.]—A bill of lading signed by the captain of a ship in respect of a shipment of bales of jute contained the following provision:—"If quality marks are used, they are to be of the same size as the leading marks and contiguous thereto, and, if such quality marks are inserted in the shipping notes and the goods are accepted by the mate, bills of lading in conformity therewith shall be signed by the captain, and the ship shall be responsible for the correct delivery of the goods." The bill of lading described the bales as marked in proportions specified with different quality marks indicating different qualities of jute, which marks corresponded with those inserted in the shipping notes made out by the shippers. When the ship was discharged, however, it was found that there had in fact been shipped fewer bales marked with one of such quality marks and more marked with another of such marks indicating an inferior quality than stated in the bill of lading:—Held, that an indorsee of the bill of lading for value without notice of the incorrectness of the description of the marks therein, had no right of action against the shipowners either for breach of contract or upon the ground that they were estopped by the representation contained in the bill of lading. Grant v. Norway, (10 C. B. 665), followed. Cox v. Bruce, 56 L. J., Q. B. 121; 18 Q. B. D. 147; 57 L. T. 128; 35 W. R. 207; 6 Asp. M. C. 152—C. A.

"Quantity and Quality unknown"—Effect of.]—A bill of lading stating that goods were shipped in good order and condition, but also containing an indorsement by the master, "quantity and quality unknown," does not admit, as against the shipowners, that the goods were shipped in good order and condition. The Prosperino Palasso, 29 L. T. 622; 2 Asp. M. C. 158.

Evidence of the condition of goods on delivery tending to shew that the damage sustained could not be accounted for by any damage existing at the time of shipment, and that such damage, had it existed, must have been noticed by the master or officer in charge of the ship at the time of shipment, will not, where goods are shipped under a bill of lading indorsed "quantity and quality unknown," satisfy the onus cast upon the plaintiff seeking to recover against shipowners for damage to the goods. Positive evidence of the condition of the goods when shipped must be given. Ib. See next case.

A bill of lading, stating goods to have been shipped in good order and condition, but indorsed by the master with the words "quality and quantity unknown," does not admit as against the shipowner that the goods were shipped in good order and condition. The Ida, 32 L. T. 541; 2 Asp. M. C. 551—P. C. See preceding case.

There is no rule of law by which the consignee of goods under a bill of lading, stating goods to have been shipped in good order and condition, but containing the words "quantity and quality unknown," is bound to show that the goods were shipped in good order and condition, or fail in his suit against the shipowner for damage done to the cargo; but failing proof of the condition of the cargo when shipped, the consignee is bound to show that the damage which it sustained is traceable to causes for which the shipowner is responsible. Ib.

—— Amount of Freight Payable.]—A charter-party under which a ship was chartered for a grain cargo from the Danube to the United Kingdom, for freight "per imperial quarter delivered," contained a provision that, in the event of the cargo or any part being delivered in a damaged or heated condition, the freight should be payable on the invoice quantity taken on board as per bill of lading, or half freight upon the damaged or heated portion at the captain's option. The bill of lading stated that 1,021 kilos were shipped on board; but the master added at the end of the bill of lading, before signing it, the words "quantity and quality unknown." The cargo having become heated on the voyage, the master claimed to exercise his option, and to be paid freight upon the invoice quantity, as per bill of lading:—Held, that the addition of the words, quantity and quality unknown" to the bill of lading by the master did not take away his right to be paid freight upon the invoice quantity in the bill of lading, and that the object and effect of that memorandum were merely to protect the captain against any mistake which might occur in the invoice quantity in the bill of lading, in case of alleged short delivery or deterioration not caused by his default. Tully v. Terry, 42 L. J., C. P. 240; L. R. 8 C. P. 679; 29 L. T. 36; 2 Asp. M. C. 51.

Liability of Joint Owner—Custom to Weigh.]—Bark was shipped (green) at Penang, under a bill of lading describing it to be of a certain weight, and making it deliverable to the consignees in London on payment of freight at a certain rate per ton of 20 cwt. nett weight delivered. On arrival in London, the agent appointed by the managing owner demanded freight on the weight mentioned in the bill of lading, and refused to deliver the bark unless the consignees would pay according to that weight, or (under an alleged custom) incur the expense of weighing over the ship's side or at a legal quay. The consignees paid the money under protest, and brought an action against one of the joint owners to recover back the excess. The jury having negatived the alleged custom:—Held, that he was liable, notwithstanding that he had not interfered or in any way assented to the appointment of the agent by the managing owner, and that no part of the money had come to his hands. Coulthurst v. Sweet, L. R. 1 C. P. 649.

Where Fraud.]—A bill of lading is not conclusive between the shippers of the goods and the owners of the ship, but the owners may show that less goods than specified in the bill of lading were shipped, the master who signed the bill of lading having been misled by the fraud of the agent of the shippers. Bates v. Todd, 1 M. & Rob. 106.

A bill of lading represented a larger number of bales to have been shipped on board a vessel than was really shipped. This arose from the mistake of the mate, which, there was some evidence to show, was caused by the fraud of the person who put the bales on board. The latter was either agent of the person named as shipper in the bill of lading, or of his vendor:—Held, that there was evidence that the misrepresentation was caused wholly by the fraud of the shipper, or of the holder, or some person under whom the holder claimed. Valieri v. Boyland, 35 L. J., C. P. 215; L. R. 1 C. P. 382; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 566; 14 L. T. 362; 14 W. R. 637.

A capias is not grantable to hold the defendant to bail in an action by the indorsee of a bill of lading against the master of the ship for deceit in the representation in the bill of lading, signed by him, that the goods were "shipped in good order and well conditioned." Gadsden v. McLean, 9 C. B. 283.

Date of Shipment wrongly stated—Liability of Master—Authority of Ship's Brokers.]—Ship's brokers at a foreign port have not, as such, authority to relieve the captain from the duty of seeing to the accuracy of statements contained in bills of lading which they present to him for signature. Stumore v. Breen, 56 L. J., Q. B. 401; 12 App. Cas. 698—H. L. (E.)

4. Exemptions from Liability.

a. Seaworthiness, Warranty.

Not excluded.]—When special clauses in a bill of lading exonerate the shipowner from the liability of even the perils induced by the negligence of his servants, it is necessary that the jury should find whether the vessel was or was not seaworthy when starting on the voyage. Steel v. State Line Steamship Co., 3 App. Cas. 72; 37 L. T. 333; 3 Asp. M. C. 516.

A cargo of wheat was shipped at the port of New York for conveyance to Glasgow, and a specially-worded bill of lading contained clauses excepting "peril of the seas of whatever nature or kind soever and howsoever caused," including negligence of the crew. On the voyage the sea burst through an insufficiently-fastened port-hole, damaging the cargo. A jury found by special verdict that this port-hole had been insufficiently fastened, but did not find whether this happened before starting on the voyage:—Held, that there was an implied engagement to supply a seaworthy ship. Ib.

Held, also, that the jury not having found whether the vessel started on her voyage in a seaworthy condition, there was no finding upon which judgment could be entered; therefore the case must be reheard. Ib.

There is in the bill of lading an engagement that the ship shall be seaworthy. Ib.

Exceptions limiting Implied Warranty of Seaworthiness.]—A steamship which had broken her main shaft was salved by another steamship belonging to the same line. The breakdown was caused by a latent defect in the shaft without negligence on the part of the owners or their servants. In a salvage action brought by the owners, masters, and crew of the salving ship against the owners of cargo on board the salved ship:—Held, first, that the ship was unseaworthy when she started on the voyage. Secondly, that the implied warranty of seaworthiness in the bill of lading was an absolute warranty that the ship should be reasonably fit to perform the voyage, and not merely that the shipowner would do his best to make her so. Thirdly, that the exceptions in the bill of lading, "all and every the dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers, and canal, and of navigation of whatever nature or kind," had not the effect of limiting the warranty of seaworthiness, but that such exceptions only protected the shipowner from liability to the owners of cargo for loss or damage sustained by the latter through "danger or accidents" happening to a seaworthy vessel. The Glenfruin, 54 L. J., P. 49; 10 P. D. 103; 52 L. T. 769; 33 W. R. 826; 5 Asp. M. C. 413.

A steamship became disabled at sea owing to the breaking of her fly-wheel shaft, through a flaw in the welding existing at the commencement of the voyage, but not discoverable by the exercise of any reasonable care. The cargo on board her was shipped under three bills of lading, the first of which contained, amongst other excepted perils, the clause:—"warranted seaworthy only so far as ordinary care can provide"; the second: "warranted seaworthy only as far as due care in the appointment or selection of agents, superintendents, pilots, masters, officers, engineers, and crew can ensure it"; and the third, "owners not to be liable for loss, detention, or damage . . . if arising directly or indirectly . . . from latent defects in boilers, machinery, or any part of the vessel in which steam is used, even existing at the time of shipment, provided all reasonable means have been taken to secure efficiency." A vessel belonging to the same owners towed the disabled vessel to a place of safety. In an action of salvage brought by the owners, master and crew of the salving vessel against the owners of cargo in the salved vessel:—Held, that the owners of the cargo had no remedy for breach of the contract of carriage, for the exceptions in the bills of lading were such as to constitute a limited warranty of seaworthiness at the commencement of the voyage, which limited warranty had been complied with by the shipowners. Laertes, Cargo ex, 56 L. J., P. 108; 12 P. D. 187; 57 L. T. 502; 36 W. R. 111; 6 Asp. M. C. 174.

Cattle—Limit of Value—Unfitness of Ship.]—The plaintiff shipped certain cattle on board the defendant's ship for carriage from London to New York under a bill of lading which provided as follows:—"These animals being in sole charge of shipper's servants, it is hereby expressly agreed that the shipowners, or their agents or servants, are, as respects these animals, in no way responsible either for their escape from the steamer or for accidents, disease, or mortality, and that under no circumstances shall they be held liable for more than 5*l.* for each of the animals." The ship had on her previous voyage carried cattle suffering from foot and mouth disease. Some of the cattle shipped under the bill of lading were during the voyage infected with that disease, owing to the negligence of the defendants' servants in not cleansing and disinfecting the ship before receiving the plaintiff's cattle on board and signing the bill of lading, and the plaintiff in consequence suffered damage amounting to more than 5*l.* for each of the said cattle: —Held, that the provision in the bill of lading limiting liability to 5*l.* for each of the cattle did not apply to damage occasioned by the defendants not providing a ship reasonably fit for the purposes of the carriage of the cattle which they had contracted to carry. Tattersall v. National Steamship Co. 53 L. J., Q. B. 332; 12 Q. B. D. 297; 50 L. T. 299; 32 W. R. 566; 5 Asp. M. C. 206.

Special Appliances necessary—Ship of Peculiar Construction—Stowage.]—The warranty of seaworthiness in a bill of lading is a warranty that the ship is seaworthy at the time and reasonably likely to continue so during the voyage. If special appliances are necessary for the preservation of the cargo by reason of the ship's peculiar construction, the shipowner is liable to provide them. The Marathon, 40 L. T. 163; 4 Asp. M. C. 75.

Implied Warranty that Ship is fit to carry Cargo—Breakdown of Refrigerating Machinery.]—Exceptions in a bill of lading that a steamer shall not be accountable for a breakdown of machinery, nor for accidents to or defects in machinery, nor for neglect of engineers, do not abrogate the implied warranty that the vessel is fit to carry the particular cargo in accordance with the contract contained in the bill of lading. Such exceptions apply only to matters which may occur during the voyage, and not to the fitness of the vessel at the time when the goods were shipped. Under such a bill of lading the owners of a cargo of frozen meat are entitled to claim that there shall be refrigerating machinery on board the ship fit to preserve the cargo during the voyage. Maori King v. Hughes, 65 L. J., Q. B. 168; [1895] 2 Q. B. 550; 14 R. 646; 73 L. T. 141; 44 W. R. 2; 8 Asp. M. C. 65—C. A.

b. Liability to General Average.

Injury to Goods by Water employed to extinguish Fire.]—When a bill of lading contained an exception of "fire on board," and the goods carried under it were injured in consequence of the water used to extinguish a fire occurring during the voyage:—Held, that the exception did not exempt the shipowners from liability to contribution in general average towards the loss sustained by the owner of the goods so injured. Nor were they exempted by virtue of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 503. Schmidt v. Royal Mail Steamship Co., 45 L. J., Q. B. 646; 4 Asp. M. C. 217, n.

The exception in the bill of lading and the above section of the act had reference only to the obligation on the contract to deliver the goods, and did not take away the ordinary liability of the shipowner to contribute in general average, as owner, when a fire had occurred and a sacrifice had been properly made to save the whole adventure. Ib.

A bill of lading, by which the shipowner undertook to deliver the goods at a port to a railway company, to be by them carried inland and delivered to the consignees, contained an exception, "that the shipowner or railway company are not to be liable for any damage to any goods which is capable of being covered by insurance, or for any claim, notice of which is not given before the removal of the goods." On the voyage a fire broke out, and the cargo was damaged by the admission of water to extinguish the fire. The ship put back, and the shipowners delivered the cargo up, without taking security from any of the cargo owners, or taking any step for procuring an adjustment of general average:—Held, following Schmidt v. Royal Mail Steamship Co. (45 L. J., Q. B. 646), that the shipowners were not exempted from contribution to general average by the clauses in the bill of lading. Crookes v. Allan, 49 L. J., Q. B. 201; 5 Q. B. D. 38; 41 L. T. 800; 28 W. R. 304; 4 Asp. M. C. 216.

If a shipowner wishes to introduce into his bill of lading so novel a clause as one exempting him from general average contribution, he ought not only to make it clear in words, but also to make it conspicuous by inserting it in such type and in such a part of the document as that a person of ordinary capacity and care could not fail to see it. Ib.—Per Lush, J. (5 Q. B. D.) at p. 40.

c. Statutory Limitation.

Robbery.]—The owner of a ship was not liable beyond the value of the ship and freight, under 7 Geo. 2. c. 15, s. 1, in case of a robbery, in which one of the mariners was concerned, by giving intelligence and afterwards sharing the spoil. Sutton v. Mitchell, 1 Term Rep. 18. See 26 Geo. 3, c. 86, s. 1, and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 503.

Fire.]—The 26 Geo. 3, c. 86, s. 2, did not apply to goods on board a lighter employed in carrying goods from the shore to be loaded on board ship. Morewood v. Pollok, 1 El. & Bl. 743; 1 C. L. R. 78; 22 L. J., Q. B. 250; 17 Jur. 881; 1 W. R. 304.

A gabbert (Anglicè, a lighter) was not a ship, or vessel, within 26 Geo. 3, c. 86, s. 2, and if goods on freight were shipped on board such vessel, and destroyed by fire accidentally or through the negligence of the master, the owners were not protected by that statute, but were responsible as at common law. Hunter v. M'Gown, 1 Bligh, 573; 20 R. R. 198.

Declaration of Value.]—A bill of lading, describing goods as "one box, containing about 248 ounces of gold dust," is not a declaration of the "true nature and value of such articles," within the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 503. Williams v. African Steamship Co., 1 H. & N. 300; 26 L. J., Ex. 69; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 693.

On a shipment of a cargo from Valparaiso to England, a bill of lading described the property as "1,338 hard dollars," which was a coin current at Valparaiso at the time:—Held, that this was a sufficient compliance with 26 Geo. 3, c. 86, s. 3, it being the current coin of the place where the shipment was made. Gibbs v. Potter, 10 M. & W. 70; 11 L. J., Ex. 376; 6 Jur. 586. And see 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 503.

See also XX. COLLISION, LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

d. Perils of the Sea.

Collision.]—Collision is a peril of the sea, semble. Martin v. Crokett, 14 East, 465; 13 R. R. 281.

Collision caused by Negligence.]—An exception of "accidents or damage of the seas, rivers, and steam navigation of whatever nature or kind soever," does not exempt a shipowner from responsibility for loss of goods by reason of a collision caused by the gross negligence of the master or crew. Lloyd v. General Iron Screw Collier Co., 3 H. & C. 284; 33 L. J., Ex. 269; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 661; 10 L. T. 586; 12 W. R. 882.

A collision between two vessels brought about by the negligence of either of them, without the waves or wind or difficulty of navigation contributing to the accident, is not "peril of the sea" within the term of that exception in a bill of lading. Woodley v. Michell, 52 L. J., Q. B. 325; 11 Q. B. D. 47; 48 L. T. 599; 31 W. R. 651; 5 Asp. M. C. 71—C. A.

Goods were shipped on board a vessel, which was called the "Black Prince," under a bill of lading which contained an exception of barratry of the master and mariners, and accidents or damage of the seas. In the course of the voyage the "Black Prince," meeting a vessel called the "Araxes" under circumstances which rendered it the duty of the "Black Prince" to port her helm, neglected to do so, and the result was that the "Black Prince," with the goods on board, was run down and totally lost:—Held, that the conduct of the master, though a wilful default by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 299, did not amount to barratry, nor was the loss a loss by accidents or damage of the seas within the exception. Grill v. General Iron Screw Collier Co., 35 L. J., C. P. 321; L. R. 1 C. P. 600; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 727; 14 W. R. 893. Affirmed, 37 L. J., C. P. 205; L. R. 3 C. P. 476; 18 L. T. 485; 16 W. R. 796—Ex. Ch.

—— Question for Jury.]—The judge left it to the jury to say whether the collision was caused by the negligence of the crew, and whether there was any want of ordinary care on the part of the "Araxes" by the exercise of which the collision might have been avoided:—Held, a proper direction, and that he was not bound to leave it to them to say whether the persons in charge of the "Araxes" might not have mitigated the calamity by stopping or backing when they found a collision inevitable. Ib.

—— Where no Fault of either Ship.]—Goods were laden on board a ship, the bill of lading containing an exception of the perils of the sea; the ship ran foul of another ship without any fault in the master of either:—Held, to be an injury by the perils of the sea within the exception. Buller v. Fisher, Peake's Add. Cas. 183; 4 R. R. 902.

Foundering caused by collision with another vessel is within the exception "dangers and accidents of the sea" in a bill of lading; and excuses the shipowner for non-delivery of the goods if it occurs without fault in the carrying ship. Woodley v. Michell (11 Q. B. D. 47) overruled. Wilson v. The Xantho, 56 L. J., Adm. 116; 12 App. Cas. 503; 57 L. T. 701; 36 W. R. 353; 6 Asp. M. C. 207—H. L. (E.)

Carrying away of Tackle—Amount of Care necessary—Discharging.]—A vessel laden with goods arrived in the port of London, and was taken into the Commercial Dock to discharge her cargo. For this purpose she was fastened by tackle, on the one side to a loaded lighter lying outside her, and on the other to a barge lying between her and the wharf. The crew was discharged, except the mate, and lumpers were being employed in unloading her, when the tackle broke whereby she was fastened to the lighter, and in consequence she canted over, water got in through her ports, and the goods still on board were damaged:—Held, that this was a loss within the exception in the bill of lading of "all and every the dangers and accidents of the seas and navigation." Laurie v. Douglas, 15 M. & W. 746.

Held, also in an action by the freighters against the shipowners to recover damages for this loss), that the jury was properly directed, that the owners were only bound to take the same care of the goods as a person would of his own goods, that is, an ordinary and a reasonable care. Ib.

Barratry of Crew.]—A shipowner carrying goods under a bill of lading, by which he contracts to deliver in good order and condition, certain perils excepted, is bound to deliver in that condition, unless prevented by those perils, and is responsible for any damage to goods occasioned otherwise than by those perils. The Chasca, 44 L. J., Adm. 17; L. R. 4 A. & E. 446; 32 L. T. 838; 2 Asp. M. C. 600.

Injury to cargo damaged by sea water during a voyage, in consequence of the barratrous act of the crew in boring holes through the sides of the ship for the purpose of scuttling her, is not a loss by perils of the seas, within the meaning of the exception in a bill of lading, such as will exempt the shipowner from his liability for the damage under his contract to deliver in good order and condition. Ib.

Even if such a loss would come within the meaning of the words, "perils of the seas," in a policy of insurance, it is not included in those words as used in a bill of lading. Ib.

Stowage—Due Ventilation.]—A cause of damage to cargo, instituted under 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 6, by the consignees, who were also assignees of the bills of lading to recover damages on account of breaches of contract and duty with respect to certain parcels of oilcake, which in the bills of lading were agreed to be delivered in the like good order and condition as when shipped, the dangers of the seas only excepted. The oilcake, when delivered, was in a greatly damaged and deteriorated condition, occasioned by the packing and stowage:—Held, that as the proximate cause of danger arose from the nature and collocation of the cargo, consisting of animal, vegetable, and to some extent putrescible matter, and the want of due ventilation, it was not brought within the legal exception of "dangers of the seas." The Freedom, L. R. 3 P. C. 594; 24 L. T. 452; 1 Asp. M. C. 136—P. C.

Held, also, that it was enough for the consignees to have established that the shipowners had not performed their contract, since they had failed to produce sufficient evidence of due provision for ventilation of the ship's hold, so as to throw the onus on the consignees of proving that the damage might have been prevented by reasonable care and skill on the part of the shipowners. Ib.

Insufficient Fastening of Port.]—A ship sailed from America for Scotland with a cargo of wheat, and in the bill of lading perils of the sea, however caused, were excepted. During the voyage the wheat was damaged by sea water. In an action by the indorsees of the bill of lading against the owners, the jury found that the water obtained access to the cargo in consequence of one of the ports being insufficiently fastened, and on this finding the court of session entered a verdict for the shipowners, on the ground that the loss was covered by the exception in the bill of lading:—Held, that, as in order to bring the loss within the exception it must be found that the ship sailed from the port in a seaworthy state, and the jury had not done so, a new trial must be had. Steel v. State Line Steamship Co., 3 App. Cas. 72; 37 L. T. 333; 3 Asp. M. C. 516.

Loss by Perils during Deviation.]—The plaintiffs having purchased goods to be shipped from a foreign port on the terms that payment of the price was to be made in exchange for shipping documents, the bill of lading signed upon the shipment of the goods was, upon payment of the price, indorsed to them. The bill of lading, which contained the usual exception of sea perils, stated that the goods were shipped for delivery at Dunkirk on board a vessel lying at Fiume and bound for Dunkirk, with liberty to call at any ports in any order. The ship, instead of proceeding direct for Dunkirk, sailed for Glasgow, and was lost, with her cargo, off the mouth of the Clyde, by perils of the sea. In an action brought by the plaintiffs against the shipowners for non-delivery of the goods, evidence was given to show that the shippers of the goods, at the time when the bill of lading was given, knew that the vessel was intended to proceed viâ Glasgow:—Held, that such evidence was not admissible to vary the terms of the bill of lading, which imported a voyage direct from Fiume to Dunkirk, subject to the liberty to call at any ports of call substantially within the course of such voyage; that Glasgow, being altogether out of the course of such voyage, was not such a port; and that the vessel was therefore lost while deviating from the voyage contracted for, and the excepted perils clause did not exonerate the defendants from liability in respect of non-delivery of the goods. Leduc v. Ward, 57 L. J., Q. B. 379; 20 Q. B. D. 475; 58 L. T. 908; 36 W. R. 537; 6 Asp. M. C. 290—C. A.

Piracy.]—Piracy is a peril of the sea within the meaning of those words in a bill of lading. Barton v. Wolliford, Comb. 56. Pickering v. Barclay, 2 Roll. Abr. 248.

Danger of War—Foreign Contract.]—The master of a North German vessel, under a North German charterparty, gave a bill of lading for goods shipped on board his vessel, in South America, as part of a general cargo to be delivered in North Germany to English consignees. The English language, money and weight were used in the bill of lading, which contained the proviso, "the dangers of the sea only excepted." The master of the vessel, on her arrival at Falmouth, refused to proceed on account of the outbreak of war between France and Germany:—Held, that, whether the contract was governed by English, general maritime, or North German law, the master was bound to proceed, as the bill of lading was precise in its terms, and contemplating the happening of certain events, exempted him in only one event. The Patria, 41 L. J., Adm. 23; L. R. 3 A. & E. 436; 24 L. T. 849.

Confiscation.]—To an action by a shipper of goods under a bill of lading for carrying goods to be shipped on board a ship lying at Gibraltar, and bound for London, calling at Cadiz, from Gibraltar to London, "the act of God, all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers and navigation, of what nature and kind soever excepted," a plea, that the ship, in the course of her voyage to London, called at Cadiz, and that the goods were within the jurisdiction of the officers of customs of Cadiz, and within the jurisdiction of a court held at Cadiz, and that the goods were, by the authorities having jurisdiction in that behalf, and according to the law of Spain, lawfully taken out of the ship and detained, without the default of the shipowner, on a charge which was duly preferred in the court; and, by a decree of the court, made according to the law of Spain, were confiscated:—Held, that the loss was not within any of the exceptions in the bill of lading, but was occasioned by inevitable necessity, against which the shipowner ought to have provided by his contract; and that the plea afforded no answer, inasmuch as it did not allege any wrongful act or default by the shipper, or knowledge by him that the goods were contraband at Cadiz, nor that they were taken to Cadiz by his desire. Spence v. Chadwick, 10 Q. B. 517; 16 L. J., Q. B. 313; 11 Jur. 872.

Risk of Boats.]—Goods were shipped in London, to be conveyed to Jamaica. The goods were then sent on shore, according to the custom of the West India trade, in a shallop belonging to the ship, and lost by perils of the sea. The clause of exception in the bill of lading was in the following terms: "The act of God, and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers and navigations, of whatever nature and kind soever, save risk of boats, so far as ships are liable thereto, excepted":—Held, that, the shipowner was not liable for such loss under the bill of lading as the saving clause only extended to the same risk as if the goods had been on board the ship. Johnston v. Benson, 4 Moore, 90; 1 Br. & B. 454.

Detention by Bottomry Suit.] — The non-delivery of goods occasioned by a suit instituted in the admiralty court on a bottomry bond, was not an exception, within the meaning of "perils of the seas," in the bill of lading. Benson v. Duncan, 3 Ex. 644; 18 L. J., Ex. 169; 14 Jur. 218.

Burden of Proof of Loss by.]—Action for non-delivery of goods shipped under bill of lading; the burden of proof of loss by perils of the sea is on the defendant. Beckford v. Clerke, 1 Keb. 830. See also The Xantho, post, col. 553.

Timber Cargo—Loss by Perils of Sea whilst alongside.]—See Pyman v. Burt, ante, col. 275.

"Accidents of the Seas"—Damage caused by Heating—Ventilators closed.]—A cargo of maize and oats shipped on the defendants' steamship was damaged by heat proceeding from the bulkheads enclosing the engine and boiler space, which was unable to escape owing to the necessary closing of the ventilators for a period of seven days during a storm of exceptional severity:

and duration :—Held, that the loss was occasioned by "accidents of the seas." The Thrunscoe, 66 L. J., Adm. 172 ; [1897] P. 301 ; 77 L. T. 407.

Perils caused by Negligence of Crew.]—See infra, e. NEGLIGENCE OR FAULT OF MASTER AND CREW.

Charterparty—Exception of Perils of Sea, in.] —See XI. CHARTERPARTY.

e. Negligence or Fault of Master and Crew.

Generally.]—When a bill of lading exempted a shipowner from liability for the negligence of his master and crew, and a suit was instituted for damages to the cargo sustained in consequence of their negligence :—Held, that the shipowner was not liable for the damage. The Duero, 38 L. J., Adm. 69 ; L. R. 2 A. & E. 393 ; 22 L. T. 37.

Collision between two Ships belonging to same Owner.]—The plaintiffs shipped goods on board the defendants' vessel, the "Crown Prince," under a bill of lading, which contained exceptions of, among other things, "collision," and "accidents, loss, or damage from any act, neglect, or default whatsoever of the pilots, master, or mariners, or other servants of the company in navigating the ship." In the course of the voyage the "Crown Prince" came into collision with another vessel of the defendants, the "Atjeh." The plaintiffs' goods were in consequence lost. The collision was due to negligence, for which the "Atjeh" was mainly in fault ; but the "Crown Prince" also was in some degree to blame :—Held, that the defendants had not committed a breach of the contract created by the bill of lading, and that no action could be maintained against them on the ground of failure to perform the undertaking therein contained to carry the goods safely upon the voyage. Per Brett, L.J. : No stipulation on the part of the defendants could be implied as to the conduct of those on board the "Atjeh," and although the negligence of the "Atjeh" was not within the exceptions, nevertheless it was not within the contract created by the bill of lading. Per Baggallay and Lindley, L.JJ. : The exception "collision," although it did not cover the negligence of the "Crown Prince," covered the negligence of the "Atjeh," and the defendants were expressly relieved from liability for the negligence of the "Crown Prince" by the other exceptions in the bill of lading. Chartered Mercantile Bank of India v. Netherlands India Steam Navigation Co., 52 L. J., Q. B. 220 ; 10 Q. B. D. 521 ; 48 L. T. 546 ; 31 W. R. 445 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 65 ; 47 J. P. 260—C. A.

Held, further, that the defendants were liable in tort for the negligence of those engaged in navigating the "Atjeh," but that the amount payable by the defendants must be limited to one-half of the loss sustained by the plaintiffs, pursuant to the supreme court of judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 9. Ib.

Damage by Seawater through Uncased Pipe —Seaworthiness.]—A cargo was shipped on a vessel under a bill of lading which contained an exemption from liability in respect of defaults of master and crew in the navigation in the ordinary course of the voyage. The pipe of a water closet which had been left uncased at the sailing of the vessel was broken during the voyage by the pressure on it of the cargo ; sea water was in consequence admitted, to the damage of the cargo. It was found as a fact that it was usual to case such a pipe before a ship was loaded, and that after loading the pipe was not accessible without the removal of some part of the cargo :—Held, in an action by the indorsers of the bill of lading against the shipowners to recover damages for the injury to the cargo upon the above facts, that the ship was not seaworthy when it started on the voyage, and that therefore the exception in the bill of lading did not protect the shipowners from liability. Steel v. State Line Steamship Co. (3 App. Cas. 72), followed. Gilroy v. Price, [1893] A. C. 56 ; 1 R. 76 ; 68 L. T. 302 ; 7 Asp., M. C. 314—H. L. (Sc.)

"Management" of the Ship — Stevedore's Negligence.]—A bill of lading exonerated the shipowners from liability for damage to the cargo shipped "from any act, neglect or default of the pilot, master or mariners in the navigation or management of the ship." The goods were damaged by the negligence of the stevedore in stowing the cargo :—Held, that the defendants were liable, as a stevedore was not included in the clause, and improper stowage did not fall within the words, "management of the ship." The Ferro, 62 L. J., Adm. 48 ; [1893] P. 38 ; 1 R. 562 ; 68 L. T. 418 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 309.

Thieves—Theft by Servants of Shipowners.] —The list of exceptions in a bill of lading contained the words "thieves of whatever kind, whether on board or not, or by land or sea" :—Held, that these words did not protect the shipowner from liability for thefts committed by persons in the service of the ship, and, therefore, that he was responsible for a theft committed by stevedore's men employed to store the cargo, the stevedore, though appointed by the charterer, being paid by and in the service of the shipowner. Steinman v. Angier Line, 60 L. J., Q. B. 425 ; [1891] 1 Q. B. 619 ; 64 L. T. 613 ; 39 W. R. 392 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 46—C. A. And see cases infra, col. 341.

Perils of Sea occasioned by Master's Negligence — Insufficient Dunnage.]—A cargo of grain, shipped on board the "C.," was, in the course of the voyage, damaged by sea-water, which entered the vessel's hold through a rivet-hole at the foot of one of the stanchions supporting the main rail, the rivet having become loose owing to the working of the ship during bad weather. The bill of lading under which the cargo was shipped contained the following exceptions : "Perils of the sea—collisions, stranding, and other accidents of navigation excepted, even when occasioned by the negligence, default or error of judgment of the pilot, master, mariners, or other servants of the shipowners." After discovering the leakage, the master neglected to take proper measures to prevent its continuance :—Held, that the shipowners were protected by the exceptions in the bill of lading from liability for the damage consequent on the master's neglect to take proper measures to stop the leak. The Cressington, 60 L. J., Adm. 25 ; [1891] P. 152 ; 64 L. T. 329 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 27. And see cases supra, d. PERILS OF THE SEA.

"Accidents of Navigation."] — Whilst the defendant's steamship was lying at her moorings loading the plaintiffs' cargo of grain, under charterparty and bill of lading in the ordinary form, the circulating pump delivery valve in the side of the ship was reasonably and properly opened by the defendants' engineer, but was negligently and improperly left open, whereby a quantity of sea water entered the ship and damaged the plaintiff's cargo. To prevent the vessel foundering at her moorings, where the water was deep, the master had her towed into shallower water, where she settled on the ground, and the water was subsequently pumped out. For the loss so sustained the plaintiffs sued the defendants:—Held, that the defendants were not liable, as the negligence clause applied to "dangers and accidents of the sea or other waters," as well as to "accidents of navigation," and the words "unless stranded, sunk or burnt," constituted a condition preventing liability attaching to the shipowner for the damage occasioned by the valve being improperly open. Semble, that the defendants were also protected because the damage resulting from the incursion of water into the ship—caused by the use of the valve, whilst she had cargo in her, though she was still at her moorings and not in motion—was an "accident of navigation" within the meaning of the exception in the first part of the clause in question. The Southgate, [1893] P. 329.

Act, Neglect or Default "in the Navigation" of the Ship.]— Goods were shipped under a charterparty, in which one of the excepted perils was "any act, neglect or default whatsoever of master or crew in the navigation of the ship and in the ordinary course of the voyage." After the ship had arrived at the docks at the port of discharge, and the discharge had proceeded for some days, the chief engineer, with a view of stiffening the ship so as to allow the discharge to be continued, negligently opened the sea-valve for the purpose of filling the ballast tanks. The ballast-filling pipe had previously been disconnected by the workmen of contractors employed to do repairs in the ship, and in consequence the sea water, instead of passing through the pipe into the ballast tanks, escaped and damaged the goods:—Held, that the damage was not due to an excepted peril, for the negligence of the chief engineer was not negligence "in the navigation" of the ship. Laurie v. Douglas (ante, col. 330), considered. The Accomac, 59 L. J., Adm. 91; 15 P. D. 208; 63 L. T. 737; 39 W. R. 133; 6 Asp., M. C. 579—C. A. And see The Carron Park, supra, col. 278.

Negligence in Navigating Ship "or otherwise"—Damage from Rain or Contact with other Goods.] — Cotton-seed cake was shipped and carried in the defendants' ship under a bill of lading of which the plaintiffs were indorsees. The exceptions in the bill of lading were "the act of God," &c., negligence or default of pilot, master mariners, engineers, or other persons in the service of the ship, whether in navigating the ship "or otherwise," and exempted the shipowner from loss or damage to cargo from rain and from contact with other goods. The plaintiffs' goods were loaded in the hold of the ship at the port of G. It became necessary to complete the loading outside a bar in the outer roads, and the ship, with the cotton seed cake on board, proceeded there and anchored. Cotton bales not the plaintiffs' were then brought alongside in lighters and loaded, and the cotton seed cake was damaged either by rain water or by wet bales of cotton being placed upon it:—Held, that under the bill of lading the defendants, the shipowners, were exempted from liability for damage by rain or contact with other goods, after the goods had been shipped, whether the ship had started on her voyage or not; and that the words "whether in navigating the ship or otherwise" absolved the defendants from liability to damage whether in negligently navigating the ship, or in negligently bringing about those other losses or damages from which they had exempted themselves in the bill of lading. Norman v. Binnington, 59 L. J., Q. B. 490; 25 Q. B. D. 475; 63 L. T. 108; 38 W. R. 702; 6 Asp. M. C. 528.

Damage by Leakage, &c. — Negligence — Verdict of Jury.]—A bill of lading provided that the shipowner should not be liable for damage by leakage, lighterage, corruption, torn wrappers, &c. The jury found that the cargo, sugar, was damaged by leakage, but there was no proof of the cause:—Held, that the verdict was a verdict in favour of the shipowner. Moes v. Leith and Aberdeen Shipping Co., 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 988.

Barratry of Crew.] — See The Cressington, supra, col. 334. Taylor v. Liverpool and Great Western Steamship Co., infra, col. 341.

Negligent Stowage.]—Bags of sugar shipped by the plaintiffs were carried in the defendants' steamship from H. to L. at an agreed freight. The vessel was chartered for the voyage by P. & K., who signed the bill of lading as agents. It contained a clause that the owners of the ship should not be liable for the default of the pilot, master, or mariners in navigating the ship, and a further clause that the captain, officers and crew in the transmission of the goods should be considered the servants of the shipper, owner, or consignee. The sugar was negligently stowed under oxide of zinc and was consequently damaged. It did not appear how the sugar came to be shipped, nor with whom the plaintiffs made the contract of carriage:—Held, that the defendants were liable to compensate the plaintiffs for the damage done to the sugar; for either the defendants had contracted to carry the sugar upon the terms set out in the bill of lading, which did not relieve them from responsibility for negligent stowage; or if they had not contracted with the plaintiffs, they were liable for misfeasance, that is, for stowing the goods in such a manner as to come into contact with a mischievous substance. Hayn v. Culliford, 48 L. J., C. P. 372; 4 C. P. D. 182; 40 L. T. 536; 27 W. R. 541; 4 Asp. M. C. 128—C. A.

Negligence Clause—Shipment by Wharfinger—Adoption of Contract by Goods Owner.]—A. purchased goods from B. to be sent from London to Dublin by sea. B. employed C., a wharfinger, to ship the goods on the defendant's vessel. C. shipped the goods upon the terms that the defendants were not to be liable for negligence of officers or crew. It was not proved that B. knew that the goods were shipped upon these terms.

The goods were lost by negligence of officers and crew. A. had paid B. for the goods, not knowing the terms of shipment:—Held, that A. could not recover against the defendants for loss of the goods; the condition being valid and knowledge of B. immaterial. Alexander v. Malcolmson, Ir. Rep. 2 C. L. 621.

Negligence of Carpenter—Unseaworthiness.]—Owing to the negligence of a carpenter employed by the shipowners to see that a ship started on her voyage in a seaworthy condition, the ship started on her voyage in an unseaworthy condition, and her cargo was damaged in consequence of her unseaworthiness. The bill of lading exempted the shipowners from liability for damage resulting from faults or errors in navigation, or in management of the ship provided due diligence had been exercised by her owners to make her seaworthy:—Held, that the owners were liable for the negligence of the carpenter, and that it was no answer for them to prove that they personally had not been guilty of negligence, and in selecting him had used due diligence to secure a fit and efficient servant. Dobell v. S. S. Rossmore Co., 64 L. J., Q. B. 777; [1895] 2 Q. B. 408; 14 R. 558; 73 L. T. 74; 44 W. R. 37; 8 Asp. M. C. 83—C. A.

Negligence of Stevedore.]—A clause in a bill of lading exempting the shipowner from liability "for any consequences, or any accident of navigation, or for any act, negligence, default or error in judgment of the pilot, master, mariners or other servants of the shipowners, in navigating the ship or otherwise," covers an injury to the cargo resulting from careless stowage by a stevedore employed by the shipowner. Baerselman v. Bailey, 64 L. J., Q. B. 707; [1895] 2 Q. B. 301; 14 R. 481; 72 L. T. 677; 43 W. R. 593; 8 Asp. M. C. 4—C. A.

"Ship Damage" — East India Company's Charter.]—Freighters of ships under charterparties with the East India Co.:—Held, not answerable for damage or loss occasioned by the act of God. "Ship damage" in those charterparties meaning damage from negligence, insufficient or bad stowage. Hotham v. East India Co. (1 Dougl. 272) disapproved. Thompson v. Brown, 7 Taunt. 656.

Burden of Proof—Sweating of Cargo—Negligence.]—A bill of lading of jute excepted "act of God, perils of the sea, fire, &c.," and continued—"but nothing herein contained shall exempt the shipowner from liability to pay for damage to cargo occasioned by bad stowage, by improper or insufficient dunnage or ventilation, or by improper opening of valves, sluices and ports, or by causes other than those above excepted." . . . "The ship to be liable for . . . sweat":—Held, that the shipowner was not liable for damage to cargo by sweat, unless it was proved that the sweat arose from fault of the ship. Moes v. Leith and Aberdeen Shipping Co. (supra) followed. Horseley v. Baxter Brothers, 20 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 333.

Loss by excepted Peril, but preventable—Negligence.]—See Laurie v. Douglas, ante, col. 330.

Incorporation of Harter Act—"Management" of Ship.]—During the discharge of a cargo of oil-cake, carried under a bill of lading which incorporated the provisions of the Harter Act, water was admitted into one of the water-ballast tanks of the vessel in order to stiffen her, but owing to straining during exceptionally heavy weather on the voyage, a sounding-pipe communicating with the tank had been broken, and the water forcing its way up the sounding-pipe, escaped into the hold, and damaged the cargo. The fact that the sounding-pipe was broken might have been ascertained by means of the sounding-rod before the water was admitted to the tank, but the engineer had negligently omitted to use the sounding-rod or to take any measures to inform himself of the condition of the sounding-pipe:—Held, that the damage was caused by negligence in the "management" of the ship within the meaning of s. 3 of the Harter Act, and that the shipowner was not liable. The Glenochil, 65 L. J., Adm. 1; [1896] P. 10; 73 L. T. 416; 8 Asp. M. C. 219.

Charterparty—Exception of Negligence in.]—See ante, XI. CHARTERPARTY.

Notice—Limitation of Liability by — Negligence.]—See Evans v. Soule, ante, col. 74.

f. Other Exceptions.

King's Enemies.]—A bill of lading for goods shipped in a Russian port, on board a Mecklenburgh ship, for a port in this country, contained an exception of the king's enemies:—Held, that "the king's enemies" meant, or at all events included, the enemies of the sovereign of the person who made the bill of lading, viz., the Duke of Mecklenburgh; and, consequently, that the exception protected the captain against the consequences of a hostile seizure by the Danes, then at war with Mecklenburgh. Russell v. Niemann, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 163; 34 L. J., C. P. 10; 10 L. T. 786; 13 W. R. 93.

By a bill of lading the goods were made deliverable to order or assigns, "paying freight for the goods, and all other conditions as per charterparty":—Held, that this did not incorporate an exception in the charterparty as to "acts of enemies" and "restraints of princes." Ib.

Acts of Princes.]—The acts or restraints of princes and rulers provided against in a bill of lading refer to the forcible interference of a state or the government of a country taking possession of the goods manu forti, and do not extend to legal proceedings in foreign courts, nor, in an action founded on contract, can the act of any court of law, or judicial tribunal, deciding that the shipowners should hold possession of the goods to the order of the true owner, relieve them from performing their contract, such act or decision not having been expressly excepted against in the bill of lading. Finlay v. Liverpool and Great Western Steamship Co., 23 L. T. 251.

Contraband of War — Reasonable Fear of Seizure—Cargo discharged short of Destination—Justification.]—The exception—restraint of princes—in a bill of lading under which the owner of a general ship contracts to carry goods contraband of war, entitles him upon war being declared to break his contract, although executed and not merely executory, and discharge the goods before reaching the port of destination, without any direct or specific act of interference by sovereign authority. Nobel's Explosives Co. v. Jenkins, 65 L. J., Q. B. 638; [1896] 2 Q. B. 326; 75 L. T. 163; 8 Asp. M. C. 181.

An exception—that in case of blockade or interdict of the port of discharge, or if the entering of or discharging in the port be considered by the master unsafe by reason of war disturbances, he may land the goods at the nearest safe and convenient port at the expense of the owners—operates as soon as the captain, having a reasonable and well-grounded fear of seizure, considers the limit of safety has been reached, and justifies him in landing goods contraband of war at a port neither near nor convenient to the port of destination. Ib.

Goods confiscated for Breach of Spanish Revenue Laws.]—Where the exceptions in the bill of lading were "the act of God, the queen's enemies, fire and dangers of the seas, rivers and navigation (save risk of boats)" the shipowner was held liable for non-delivery of goods shipped for Spain and there confiscated for breach of Spanish revenue laws. Spence v. Chadwick, 10 Q. B. 517; 16 L. J., Q. B. 313.

Rust, Leakage, or Breakage.]—The clause in a bill of lading by which the shipowner is "not accountable for rust, leakage or breakage," is limited to the rust, leakage or breakage of the goods themselves, and does not protect the shipowner from liability for damage done to other goods in consequence of such rust, leakage or breakage. Thrift v. Youle, 46 L. J., C. P. 402; 2 C. P. D. 432; 36 L. T. 114; 3 Asp. M. C. 357.

The defendants caused to be shipped on board a vessel bales of palm-baskets and barrels of oil, under a bill of lading containing the clause, "Not accountable for rust, leakage or breakage." During the voyage some of the oil escaped from the barrels, and damaged the palm-baskets:—Held, that the clause in the bill of lading exempting the plaintiff from responsibility for leakage, did not extend to damage caused by the oil which had escaped from the barrels, and that the plaintiff was liable to compensate the defendants for the injury done to the palm-baskets. Ib.

—— Where Gross Negligence.]—A stipulation in a bill of lading, that the shipowner is "not to be accountable for leakage or breakage," does not exempt him from responsibility for a loss by these means, arising from the gross negligence of himself and his servants. Phillips v. Clark, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 156; 26 L. J., C. P. 168; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 467; 5 W. R. 582. S. C., 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1081. And see Craig v. Delargy, col. 343.

A bill of lading containing the following memorandum: "Weights, measurement and contents unknown, and not accountable for leakage," protects the shipowner as to all leakage, whether ordinary or extraordinary, except that caused by negligence. Ohrloff v. Briscall, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 70; 35 L. J., P. C. 63; L. R. 1 P. C. 231; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 675; 14 L. T. 873; 15 W. R. 202. S. C., nom. The Helene, Br. & Lush. 429.

A bill of lading of forty-seven casks of oil contained a memorandum in the margin, "not accountable for leakage." The casks of oil were, at the desire of the charterers, stowed in the same hold with rags and wool (being part of the cargo), whereby the casks became heated and leaked:—Held, that the condition that the shipowner should not be accountable for leakage was not limited to the quantity of leakage, and that such memorandum protected the shipowner as to all leakage, unless caused by the negligence of the shipowner, and that ignorance that casks so packed would become heated and leak did not amount to negligence. Ib.

A bill of lading for a quantity of sugar contained a memorandum in the margin that the shipowner was "not liable for leakage." The sugar, in consequence of improper stowage, was damaged during the voyage by the drainage from other sugar stowed above, which caused it to heat:—Held, that this was not damage by leakage within the meaning of the memorandum. The Nepoter, 38 L. J., Adm. 63; L. R. 2 A. & E. 375; 22 L. T. 177; 18 W. R. 49.

Onus of Proof.]—Goods were shipped on board a steamer under a bill of lading which contained an exception from liability for breakage, leakage or damage. The goods were found at the end of the voyage to be injured by oil. It was proved that there was no oil in the cargo, but that there were two donkey engines on deck, near the place where the goods were stowed, in lubricating which oil was used; there was no direct evidence of how the injury to the goods occurred:—Held, that the exception did not protect the shipowners from liability for damage accruing through the negligence of their servants, but that it did shift the onus of proof, and that it was incumbent upon the shipper to prove affirmatively the negligence of the shipowners' servants. Czech v. General Steam Navigation Co., 37 L. J., C. P. 3; L. R. 3 C. P. 14; 17 L. T. 246; 16 W. R. 130. And see The Norway, infra.

Held, also that the above facts were evidence upon which a jury was justified in finding the existence of negligence. Ib.

In an action upon such a bill of lading to recover damages for loss by leakage of any kind, the burthen of proof is on the plaintiff to show that the leakage was caused by negligence. The Helene, Ohrloff v. Briscall, supra.

Damage by Rats.]—Under a bill of lading, whereby the shipowner undertakes to deliver goods "in good order, and well conditioned (the act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire, all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers and navigation, of whatsoever nature or kind soever excepted)," he is liable for damage done to the goods on board his ship by rats, though he has taken every precaution against them. Kay v. Wheeler, 36 L. J., C. P. 180; L. R. 2 C. P. 302; 16 L. T. 66; 15 W. R. 495—Ex. Ch. S. P., Laveroni v. Drury, 8 Ex. 166; 22 L. J., Ex. 2; 16 Jur. 1024; 1 W. R. 55.

By Stranding.]—In an action upon a bill of lading against the shipowner for loss of part of cargo alleged to have been jettisoned and sold in consequence of the ship stranding, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, unless he proves affirmatively that the stranding was occasioned by the negligent navigation of the ship. The Norway, Br. & Lush. 404; 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 245; 13 W. R. 1085.

"Thieves."]—A box of diamonds was shipped at Liverpool, on board a ship for New York, under a bill of lading by which were excepted

"pirates, robbers, thieves, vermin, barratry of master and mariners . . ." The box was stolen during the voyage or on the ship's arrival in port, before the time for delivery; but there was no evidence to show whether it was stolen by one of the crew or by a passenger, or, after her arrival, by some person from the shore:—Held, first, that "thieves" must be interpreted as in a policy of insurance, and only applied to thieves external to the ship. Taylor v. Liverpool and Great Western Steamship Co., 43 L. J., Q. B. 205; L. R. 9 Q. B. 546; 30 L. T. 714; 22 W. R. 752; 2 Asp. M. C. 275. And see Steinman v. Angier Line, supra, col. 334.

Held, secondly assuming theft by one of the crew to be barratry, that it lay on the shipowners to bring the loss within one of the exceptions, by showing by whom the theft had been committed; and that the shippers of the diamonds were therefore entitled to recover for the loss. Ib.

A company received at Panama goods to be delivered in London, "the act of God, the queen's enemies, pirates, robbers, fire, accidents from machinery, boilers and steam, the dangers of the seas, roads and rivers, of what nature or kind soever excepted." The goods were carried by the company across the isthmus of Panama to Chagres, where they were shipped to Southampton, and there placed in a railway truck, whence they were secretly stolen in the course of their transit to London:—Held, that this was not within the exception a loss by robbers, or by dangers of the roads, since the word "robbers" meant, not "thieves," but robbers by violence; and "dangers of the roads" meant dangers of marine roads; or if of land roads, such dangers as are immediately caused by roads, as the overturning of carriages in rough and precipitous places. De Rothschild v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., 7 Ex. 734; 21 L. J., Ex. 273.

Suffocation of Animals — Loss arising from Want of Ballast.]—A bill of lading of cattle to be carried from Rotterdam to London contained an exemption in the following terms: "Ship free in case of mortality, and from all damages arising from act of God, the queen's enemies, fire, accidents from machinery, or boiler, steam, or other dangers of the seas, rivers, roadsteads, or steam navigation whatsoever. The owners of the vessel will not be liable for the loss of or injury done to any horses, cattle, or other animals, except as to 50*l.* for horses, and 15*l.* per head of neat cattle, and 2*l.* per head as to sheep, pigs and dogs. The owners will not be liable for any loss arising from suffocation or other cause occurring to horses, dogs, cattle, or other animals; or from kicking, plunging or viciousness of the same in transit, nor for any damage arising from shipping or landing, or while in the possession of the owners or their agents before or after the voyage, from whatever cause they may remain in such possession." Several of the cattle were suffocated and killed from the vessel overturning, it having been sent to sea without proper ballast. The injury having been occasioned by the negligence of the owners of the vessel:—Held, that the owner of the cattle was entitled to recover notwithstanding the exception in the bill of lading. Leuw v. Dudgeon, 37 L. J., C. P. 5, n.; L. R. 3 C. P. 17, n.; 17 L. T. 145; 16 W. R. 80.

"Damage"—Construction—Does not include Theft.]—A bill of lading contained a clause: "The shipowner is not to be liable for any damage to any goods which is capable of being covered by insurance":—Held, that "damage" would include damage to the goods amounting to a total loss or destruction of them, but did not apply to the case of the abstraction of the goods. Taylor v. Liverpool and Great Western Steamship Co., supra.

Fruit Cargo—"Act of God Clause"—Shipped Wet.]—A bill of lading provided that freight should be payable as follows: "One-third in cash on arrival, and the remaining two-thirds on right delivery of cargo, less value of cargo short delivered or damaged (if any) not covered by the preceding 'act of God' clause." The cargo was shipped wet, but in other respects in sound condition, and the master signed bills of lading describing it as shipped "in good order and well conditioned." On arrival the cargo, which had been carried in the hold, was found, owing to the wet condition in which it had been shipped, to be damaged by sweating. This damage was not covered by the "act of God" clause:—Held, that the consignee was only entitled to make a deduction from the freight where the cargo was delivered in a damaged condition consequent upon a breach of contract by the shipowner. The Barcore, 65 L. J., Adm. 97; [1896] P. 294; 75 L. T. 168; 8 Asp. M. C. 189.

—— "Inherent Deterioration"—Fault of Shipowner.] — By charterparty the ship had liberty before loading fruit to load other cargo. By agreement between the master and the charter agent at the shipping port the fruit was loaded first and discharged last. Bills of lading for the fruit were signed, and expressed that the fruit was shipped "in good order and well conditioned," and were to be so delivered, except for "inherent deterioration." The fruit was delivered damaged, by reason, as alleged, of its being in the hold longer than if it had been shipped after the other cargo:—Held, that the shipowner was liable. Lindsay v. Schofield, 24 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 530.

Liberty to tow Vessels—Liability to Goods Owner for Delay.]—The plaintiff, a cattle dealer, shipped cattle on a steamer plying from Belfast to Fleetwood. The ticket delivered to the plaintiff contained a clause giving liberty to tow and assist vessels. The steamer fell in with a vessel in distress, which she towed to Carrickfergus; after which she returned to Belfast and sailed again for Fleetwood where she arrived some hours after her usual time, whereby the plaintiff could not send his cattle to the fair. Carrickfergus was the nearest safe port for her to take the distressed ship to; and owing to the state of the tide at Fleetwood, she was not delayed in fact by her return to and stay at Belfast:—Held, that the shipowner was not liable for the loss of market for the cattle. Drain v. Henderson, 11 Ir. C. L. R. 497.

Loss by Excepted Peril, but Preventable—Absence of Negligence.]—Where the damage was caused by one of the excepted perils, but it would not have happened if the ship had been more securely moored whilst unloading, it was held that the shipowner was not liable to the cargo owner if he had exercised ordinary and reasonable care. Laurie v. Douglas, 15 M. & W. 746. And see e. NEGLIGENCE OR FAULT OF MASTER AND CREW, supra.

Leakage — Liability of Shipowner — Bill of Lading Act, 1855, s. 1.]—The purchasers of an oil cargo received from the shipper's agent the bill of lading stating that 369 casks had been "shipped in good order and well conditioned"; the master had added in writing, "not responsible for weight, quality, breakage or leakage." The shippers guaranteed against leakage above 1 per cent. About fifteen tons of oil were lost on the voyage by leakage of bad casks. The purchaser, at the shipper's suggestion, sued the shipowners for non-delivery according to bill of lading:—Held, that the purchaser had no higher right than the shipper, whose fault caused the loss. Held, also, that the shipowners were not liable upon the bill of lading for leakage not proved to have been caused by their fault. Craig v. Delargy, 6 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1269. And see cases, col. 339.

5. Indorsement, Assignment and Transfer.

a. Generally.

Delivery or Indorsement.]—A bill of lading is the usual document entered into upon a contract for the carriage and delivery of goods by sea for freight. Lickbarrow v. Mason, 4 Bro. P. C. 57; 1 H. Bl. 360; 5 Term Rep. 683; 6 Term Rep. 131; 1 R. R. 425.

There is no distinction between a bill of lading indorsed in blank and an indorsement to a particular person. Ib.

A bill of lading is not a necessary instrument in the transfer of property of goods consigned to the owner. Meyer v. Sharpe, 5 Taunt. 74; 2 Rose, 124.

The property in a cargo, for which the master has signed bills of lading, may be transferred by delivery, without indorsement of the bill of lading. And the transfer will be good against all the world, except subsequent indorsees of the bill of lading for a valuable consideration. Nathan v. Giles, 5 Taunt. 558; 1 Marsh. 226; 15 R. R. 581.

By Shipper.]—Bills of lading, made out to the order of the shipper or his assigns, are negotiated and transferred by the shipper's indorsement. Haille v. Smith, 1 Bos. & P. 564.

Liability after Indorsement.]—Merchants in London received from a mere stranger residing abroad a bill of lading of goods, in a letter requesting them to effect insurance; they declined to do the business for the consignor, but acting bonâ fide with a view to his interest, indorsed the bill of lading to a friend of his, who received the goods, and afterwards failed with the proceeds in his hands:—Held, that the merchants, by indorsing the bill of lading, were liable to the consignor for the amount. Corlett v. Gordon, 3 Camp. 472; 14 R. R. 813.

Effect of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, s. 11.]—Before this enactment a bill of lading was not negotiable like a bill of exchange, so as to enable an indorsee to maintain an action upon it in his own name; the effect of the indorsement being only to transfer the right of property in the goods, but not the contract itself. Thompson v. Dominy, 14 M. & W. 403; 14 L. J., Ex. 320. S. P., Howard v. Shepherd, 9 C. B. 297; 19 L. J., C. P. 249.

Under the above statute the rights and liabilities of the consignee or indorsee of a bill of lading pass from him by indorsement over to a third person. Smurthwaite v. Wilkins, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 842; 31 L. J., C. P. 214; 5 L. T. 842; 10 W. R. 386. S. C., 7 L. T. 65.

A bare assignee to whom the property in the goods has not passed, and who cannot therefore sue at common law, is not entitled to sue in the admiralty court. The St. Cloud, Br. & Lush. 4; 8 L. T. 54.

By 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, s. 1, the consignee or indorsee of goods named in a bill of lading, and the indorsee of a bill of lading, to whom the property in the goods mentioned shall have passed by such indorsement, has transferred to and vested in him all rights of suit, and he is subject to the same liabilities, in respect of such goods, as if the contract in the bill of lading had been made with himself. The Freedom, L. R. 3 P. C. 594; 24 L. T. 452; 1 Asp. M. C. 136—P. C.

The right of suing upon a contract, under a bill of lading, follows the property in the goods therein specified; that is, the legal title to the goods as against the indorsee. Ib.

In a suit for damage to cargo and for improper delivery by the consignees, who were also assignees of the bills of lading:—Held, that they had a locus standi both as to negligence and breach of contract. Ib.

To entitle the indorsee of a bill of lading to have transferred to and vested in him a right of suit under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, the circumstances under which a bill of lading shall have been indorsed must be such that the property in the goods shall have passed to the indorsee by reason of the indorsement. Fox v. Nott, 6 H. & N. 637; 30 L. J., Ex. 259; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 663.

The plaintiff, who was the charterer, had taken an assignment of the bill of lading upon the terms that the freight should be paid:—Held, that he had not lost his right against the shipper for the freight. Ib.

The consignees named in a bill of lading are entitled to sue in the admiralty court for negligence in the carriage of the goods, or for a breach of the contract contained in the bill of lading, although the property in the goods has not passed to the consignees. The Nepoter, 38 L. J., Ad. 63; L. R. 2 A. & E. 375; 22 L. T. 177; 18 W. R. 49.

C., M. & Co. were in the habit of consigning goods to the plaintiffs for sale, and the plaintiffs from time to time accepted their bills and accredited them with the proceeds of sale of the goods. C., M. & Co. being at the time indebted to the plaintiffs upon the account current between them, consigned a cargo of sugar to the plaintiffs which was delivered in a damaged state:—Held, that as consignees of the cargo and creditors of

C., M. & Co., they were entitled to sue in the admiralty court for damage by reason of negligence or breach of duty. Ib.

The indorsees of a bill of lading of a cargo agreed to sell the cargo to B. & Co., but the purchase-money had not been paid, nor had the bill of lading been indorsed to B. & Co. In a suit in the court of admiralty for breach of contract for non-delivery of the cargo :—Held, that they were entitled to sue in the court under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 6, when construed with the Bills of Lading Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 111). The Felix, 37 L. J., Adm. 48 ; L. R. 2 A. & E. 273 ; 18 L. T. 587 ; 17 W. R. 102.

The plaintiffs were assignees for valuable consideration of bills of lading for 1,000 barrels of oil-cake shipped on board the "Figlia Maggiore," at New York, and which the master had agreed "to deliver in like good order and condition at the port of London." The vessel was at the time under a charterparty, of which the shippers were ignorant, the master having put up the ship as a general ship. The oil-cake was stowed with hogsheads of tobacco, oaken staves being placed between them. A suit having been brought by the assignees of the bills of lading against the shipowner for damage suffered by the oil-cake on the voyage :—Held, that as the vessel had been put up as a general ship, and as they had no knowledge of the charterparty, the owner was the proper person to be sued. The Figlia Maggiore, 37 L. J., Adm. 52 ; L. R. 2 A. & E. 106 ; 18 L. T. 532.

Held, also, that the property in the oil-cake had so vested in them as to entitle them to sue for breach of contract under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 10, construed with s. 1 of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, and that, in any case, they were entitled to sue under the former section on the ground of negligence, and that the onus of proving negligence lay on them. Ib.

The rights and liabilities which the assignee of a bill of lading under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, s. 1, has transferred to him, are the same rights and liabilities in respect of such goods as if the contract contained in the bill of lading had been made with him. In these are not included the right and liabilities as between the shipper and the master dehors that contract in respect of other goods or of the charterparty. The Helene, Br. & Lush. 415. S. C., nom. Ohrloff v. Briscall, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 70 ; 35 L. J., P. C. 63 ; L. R. 1 P. C. 231 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 675 ; 14 L. T. 873 ; 15 W. R. 202.

Danger of War—Refusal of Master to deliver.]—The master of a North German vessel under a North German charterparty gave a bill of lading for goods shipped on board his vessel in South America as part of a general cargo to be delivered in North Germany to English consignees. The master of the vessel, on her arrival at Falmouth, refused to proceed on account of the outbreak of war between France and Germany. The goods were stowed at the bottom of the hold under those of the other shippers, and as the charterers refused to consent to the unloading of the cargo at Falmouth, the master would not deliver to the consignees there, even on the offer of full freight :—Held, that the master was bound to deliver at Falmouth. The Patria, 41 L. J., Adm. 23 ; L. R. 3 A. & E. 436 ; 24 L. T. 849.

Consideration.]—The property of goods passes by the indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading by the consignee to another, if bonâ fide for a valuable consideration, and without collusion, although the indorsee knew at the time that the consignor had not received money payment for his goods, but had taken the consignee's acceptances payable at a future day not then arrived ; and after such assignment of the bill of lading the consignor cannot stop the goods in transitu upon the insolvency of the original consignee. Cuming v. Brown, 9 East, 506 ; 1 Camp. 104 ; 9 R. R. 603.

The forbearance or release of a pre-existing claim is not a sufficient consideration for the indorsement of a bill of lading so as to defeat an unpaid vendor's right of stoppage in transitu. Rodger v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 538 ; 38 L. J., P. C. 30 ; L. R. 2 P. C. 393 ; 21 L. T. 33 ; 17 W. R. 468.

L. & Co., merchants carrying on business at Hong Kong, purchased goods of a merchant in Manchester, to be shipped to their firm at Hong Kong, to be paid for at certain credit. The goods were shipped deliverable to the order of L. & Co., and bills of lading signed. Before the goods arrived at Hong Kong, L. & Co. being insolvent, and being indebted to R. & Co., the agent of L. & Co., at Hong Kong, agreed to assign to R. & Co. all the estate of L. & Co., including the bills of lading in respect of the goods, and such bills of lading were in pursuance of the agreement indorsed to R. & Co. At the time the bills of lading were so transferred, no money was advanced or benefit conferred on L. & Co. by R. & Co. :—Held, that there was no sufficient transfer of the bills of lading for a valuable consideration so as to defeat the right of an unpaid vendor to stop the goods in transitu. Ib.

A., a merchant in London and in Hong Kong, purchased goods for shipment from B., and paid for them by his acceptance of B.'s draft against the shipment on the terms that A. should send them to his firm at Hong Kong, and that the proceeds should be remitted to A. in bills specially to meet such acceptance. A.'s firm at Hong Kong owed a large sum to C., and were under engagement to secure the debt by depositing shipping documents with him. Being threatened by C. with immediate legal proceedings, they promised him that if he would forbear to take such proceedings, and would release them from their obligation to deposit shipping documents, they would deposit with him a bill of lading for goods of a certain value, upon the understanding that the bill of lading, or the goods represented therein, should be returned to them upon payment of a sum equivalent to the value thereof. The bill of lading of the goods purchased from B. was accordingly indorsed to C., who had no knowledge of the terms made with B., and it was returned by C. according to agreement, on receipt of an equivalent sum :—Held, that C., by such forbearance and release, gave valuable consideration ; that the legal interest in the goods passed by the indorsement of the bill of lading, and that B. could not enforce his claim against the proceeds of sale received by C. in respect thereof. Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China v. Henderson, L. R. 5 P. C. 501 ; 30 L. T. 578.

Indorsement to Third Party—Act of Bankruptcy—Title of Trustee in Bankruptcy.]—Plaintiff consigned to E. F. certain goods under a bill of lading. E. F. on receiving the bill of lading, and before he had taken physical possession of the goods, indorsed it to G., his clerk, and directed him to sell the goods and account for the proceeds to the plaintiff; he then executed a deed of assignment to G. for the benefit of his creditors, and was subsequently adjudged bankrupt. Plaintiff and the trustee in bankruptcy, the defendant in the action, both claimed the proceeds of the sale, and an interpleader issue was directed. At the trial the jury found that the property in the goods had passed to E. F., and that he had acted as he had done because he believed the goods were the plaintiff's, and not because he wished to prefer the latter:—Held, that the transaction was not fraudulent, and void within s. 48 (1) of the Bankruptcy Act of 1883, because the jury negatived a fraudulent preference, but that the indorsement of the bill of lading to G. did not pass the property to G. as agent for the plaintiff or otherwise, and that the goods were still part of E. F.'s estate at the moment of executing the deed of assignment, and that, therefore, under s. 43 the trustee in bankruptcy was entitled to recover the proceeds of the sale. Lauritzen v. Carr, 72 L. T. 56.

Delivery in Absence of Bill of Lading—Indorsee—Right to Sue.]—In an action for damages against the master and shipowners:—Held, that delivery of the cargo by the master in absence of a bill of lading being wrongful, did not preclude the pursuers, who were subsequent indorsees, from acquiring right to the cargo; and that they could sue for damages. Pirie v. Warden, 9 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 523.

Past Consideration.]—The vendee of goods may, by assignment of the bills of lading to a bonâ fide transferee, defeat the vendor's right to stop them in transitu in case of the vendee's insolvency, although the consideration for which the assignment is made is a past one, and has not been got by means of the bills of lading. Leask v. Scott, 46 L. J., Q. B. 576; 2 Q. B. D. 376; 36 L. T. 784; 25 W. R. 654; 3 Asp. M. C. 469—C. A.

G. & Co., the consignees of certain goods from the defendant from abroad, for which they had accepted a bill of exchange at three months, being already indebted to the plaintiff, obtained a further loan on the condition of giving security. They delivered to him the bill of lading of the goods, together with other securities to the amount required. After this and before the arrival of the goods G. & Co. became insolvent:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to stop the goods in transitu, for that it was not necessary that the consideration for the assignment of the bill of lading should be obtained by means of the bill of lading, and that there is in such case no difference between a past and present consideration. Ib.

A bill of lading assigned in part payment of a debt already due from the assignor to the assignee, is assigned for valuable consideration. The Emilien Marie, 44 L. J., Adm. 9; 32 L. T. 435; 2 Asp. M. C. 514. And see S.C., infra, col. 349.

Restriction on Right of Indorsement.]—If a consignee, under a bill of lading, while the goods are yet in transitu, indorses the bill and gives notice thereof to the party entitled to the freight, and upon the indorsement he states in express terms that the owner of the freight, the party who may be ultimately entitled thereto, is to look to other persons for payment of it, and that indorsement is accepted and acted upon without objection or qualification on the part of the owner of the freight, that of itself, in point of law, constitutes a transfer of the liability, and a defence to any subsequent action. Lewis v. M'Kee, 38 L. J., Ex. 62; L. R. 4 Ex. 58; 19 L. T. 522; 17 W. R. 325—Ex. Ch.

Re-indorsement.]—Goods were shipped for Bombay under a bill of lading, making them deliverable to order or assigns. The consignor indorsed the bill of lading in blank, and deposited it with a banker as security for an advance of money, and on his repaying the sum advanced, the bill of lading was re-indorsed and re-delivered to him:—Held, that such re-indorsement of the bill of lading to him remitted the consignor to all his rights as against the shipowners under the original contract; and consequently that he was entitled to sue them for a breach, whether occurring before or after such re-indorsement. Short v. Simpson, 1 H. & R. 181; 35 L. J., C. P. 147; L. R. 1 C. P. 248; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 258; 13 L. T. 674; 14 W. R. 307.

Proof of Indorsement.]—In an action upon a bill of lading by an indorsee against the shipowners, for not delivering the goods, he put in a bill of lading, and proved that the consignors indorsed and delivered it to A., and that A. indorsed and delivered it to him for value:—Held, evidence of such an indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading as to vest the property in the goods in him, and so to transfer to him the right of action under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, s. 1. Dracachi v. Anglo-Egyptian Navigation Co., 37 L. J., C. P. 71; L. R. 3 C. P. 190; 17 L. T. 472; 16 W. R. 277.

Indorsement after Loss—Insurable Interest.]—An indorsement made after loss of the cargo, in pursuance of a contract for sale made after the loss, does not give an insurable interest. Seagrave v. Union Marine Insurance Co., 1 H. & R. 302; 35 L. J., C. P. 172; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 358; 14 L. T. 479; 14 W. R. 690.

Right where no Indorsement.]—Where, from all the facts, it may fairly be inferred that it was the intention of a seller to pass the property in goods shipped to order, the mere circumstance of the bill of lading being taken in the name of the seller, and remaining unindorsed, will not prevent its passing. Joyce v. Swann, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 84.

Indorsement to Agent.]—But the mere indorsement of a bill of lading by the consignor to an agent, to authorise him to stop the goods in transitu on account of his principal, will not enable such agent to maintain an action for the goods in his own name. Waring v. Cox, 1 Camp. 369.

Revocation of Indorsement.]—The shipper of goods, who has indorsed a bill of lading, may, before the goods or the bill are delivered to the indorsee, revoke the indorsement. Mitchel v. Ede, 11 A. & E. 888; 3 P. & D. 513; 9 L. J., Q. B. 187.

Right of Equitable Assignee to Sue for Detention of Bill of Lading.]—The plaintiff was in the habit of receiving goods consigned to him by L. for sale upon commission, and in order to place

L. in funds for the purchase of the goods, agreed to allow him to draw upon him. The documents of title of the goods were hypothecated to the plaintiff to enable him to provide funds to meet the bills so drawn by L. The plaintiff accordingly, and at the request of L., arranged for the sale of a parcel of goods, to be shipped by a vessel chartered by the buyers, and L. having drawn upon the plaintiff for that purpose, purchased and shipped the goods. The bill of lading was handed to L., but never forwarded to the plaintiff, and L.'s affairs being put in liquidation, the liquidator placed the bill of lading in the hands of the defendants with instructions not to part with it until they were paid the value of the goods, and they accordingly refused to give it up to the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff had an equitable right to the bill of lading, and was entitled to sue the defendants for the wrongful detention of it. Lutscher v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, 1 Q. B. D. 709; 34 L. T. 798; 3 Asp. M. C. 209.

Extent of Right of Assignees to Cargo.]—An assignee of a bill of lading may have a better right against the shipowner to recover for breach of the contract of carriage than the assignor. The Emilien Marie, 44 L. J., Adm. 9; 32 L. T. 435; 2 Asp. M. C. 504. And see S. C., supra, col. 347.

An assignee of a bill of lading, who has given valuable consideration, without notice of any arrangement between the shipper and the various consignees giving priority to the holders of the other bills of lading in the case of short shipment, may claim from the shipowner full delivery of the cargo specified in his bill of lading, even though the arrangement has been made without the privity of the shipowner, and the master has indorsed the bill of lading, with the words "weight unknown." Ib.

A letter written by an assignor of a bill of lading to his assignee, informing the latter that the bankruptcy of the shipper and consignor (who has indorsed to the assignor) may possibly interfere with the proceeds of the shipment, so far as the assignor is concerned, and that he thinks it best to prevent the possibility of a hitch to send the bill of lading for the assignee to deal with, the latter having advanced money thereon, is not such a notice as will oblige the assignee to make inquiries as to the quantity of and the various rights to the cargo, so as to bind the assignee with constructive notice of any arrangement between the shipper and different consignees, giving priority to the holders of other bills of lading in the case of short shipment. Ib.

The rights of an innocent holder of a bill of lading are not affected by the fact that the master signed as agent for the charterers, unless the holder has notice of the charterparty, or that the master signed in that capacity. Ib.

An assignee of a bill of lading is entitled to the goods therein named, if he is a bonâ fide assignee for value, without notice of fraud or of insolvency on the part of the person to whom the goods were consigned. The Argentina, L. R. 1 A. & E. 370; 16 L. T. 743.

Set-off by Holders against Assignees of Freight.]—The holders of a bill of lading cannot, as against the assignees of the freight, set off a debt due to them from the original owner of the goods, who was also the assignor of the freight. Wegnelin v. Ceilier, 42 L. J., Ch. 758; L. R. 6 H. L. 286; 22 W. R. 26.

Liability of Consignee to take Delivery of Cargo.]—When there is no express stipulation in a bill of lading it is an implied term of the contract contained in it, that the consignee named in the bill of lading, or his assigns, will take delivery of the goods within a reasonable time; and the person to whom the property in the goods has passed, by reason of such consignment, is by virtue of the Bills of Lading Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 111), s. 1, subject to the liability so to take them. Fowler v. Knoop, 47 L. J., Q. B. 473. Affirmed, 48 L. J., Q. B. 333; 4 Q. B. D. 299; 40 L. T. 180; 27 W. R. 299—C. A.

Where the charterers and the shippers are the same persons, such contract will still be implied in the bill of lading, notwithstanding the existence of an express stipulation in the charterparty, between the charterers and the shipowner, in reference to the same matter. Ib.

Liability of Indorsee.]—See Oliver v. Muggeridge, supra, col. 313.

b. Passing Property.

Absolutely.]—Though the consignee named in the bill of lading should become insolvent, without having paid for the goods, yet his assignment made for a valuable consideration, and without notice to the assignee that the goods were not paid for, or that they were paid for by bills sure to be dishonoured:—Held, to pass them absolutely to his assignee, and to deprive the consignor of his right to stop in transitu, which, as against the original consignee, he might have exercised. Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 Term Rep. 63; 4 Bro. P. C. 57; 1 H. Bl. 360; 5 Term Rep. 683; 6 Term Rep. 63; 2 H. Bl. 211; 1 R. R. 425.

When goods are at sea, the parting with the bill of lading, which is the symbol of the goods, is parting with the ownership of the goods themselves. Barber v. Meyerstein, 39 L. J., C. P. 187; L. R. 4 H. L. 317; 22 L. T. 808; 18 W. R. 1041.

The same principle applies to goods which, for the convenience of parties, have been landed at a sufferance wharf. Ib.

As long as the engagement of the shipowner has not been completely fulfilled, the bill of lading is a living instrument, and the transfer of it for value passes the absolute property in the goods. Ib.

It has not been fulfilled when the goods, though actually landed at a wharf, are subject to a stop-order. Ib.

The person who first gets the bill of lading (though only one of a set of three) gets the property which it represents; he need not do any act to assert his title, which the transfer of the bill of lading of itself renders complete, and any subsequent dealings with the others of the set are subordinate to the rights passed by that one. Ib.

Though the shipowner or wharfinger, having no notice of the transfer of one bill of lading, may be excused for delivering the goods to a person who produces to him another bill of lading, which has in reality been subsequently taken, that does not affect the legal ownership of the goods as between the holders of the two bills of lading. Ib.

—— As Security.]—The shipper of goods indorsed the bill of lading in blank, and delivered it to the defendants' bankers, by way of security for money advanced by them. The goods, upon their arrival at the port of destination, were sold for an amount insufficient to pay the freight:—Held, that the property in the goods had not passed to the defendants within the meaning of the Bills of Lading Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 111), s. 1, so as to make them liable in an action by the shipowner for the freight. Sewell v. Burdick, 54 L. J., Q. B. 156; 10 App. Cas. 74; 52 L. T. 445; 33 W. R. 461; 5 Asp. M. C. 376—H. L.

Bill of Lading a Negotiable Instrument.]—A bill of lading is a negotiable instrument, and the property in the goods is transferred by indorsement or delivery of the bill. Evans v. Marlett, 1 Ld. Raym. 271. Wright v. Campbell, 4 Burr. 2051; 1 H. Bl. 628. Caldwell v. Ball, 1 Term Rep. 250, infra; 1 R. R. 187. Hibbert v. Carter, 1 Term Rep. 745; 1 R. R. 388.

Goods not expressed to be delivered to Assignee.]—Indorsement of bill of lading is not a valid assignment, unless goods are directed to be delivered to assignee. Brown v. Heathcote, 1 Atk. 160.

Where the bill of lading provides for delivery to the order of the shipper who has sold the goods, the property is not transferred to the purchaser. The Packet de Bilboa, 2 C. Rob. 133, 136.

Delivery to Holder of Second Part of Bill of Lading—Goods Pledged to Holder of First Part—Liability of Warehouseman.]—Goods shipped to C., as owner, were, before arrival, pledged by him to the plaintiffs as security for an advance. The bill of lading was, as is customary, in three sets, "the one being accomplished, the rest to stand void," and made the goods deliverable to "C. or assigns," freight payable in London. C. indorsed one copy of the bill of lading marked "first" to the plaintiffs, and also gave them a letter of charge, making the bill of lading a collateral security for the advance, and empowering them to sell the goods represented by the bill of lading should default be made in the repayment of the advance. The vessel went on arrival into the dock of the defendants. C. duly entered the goods at the custom house, and they were afterwards, at the request of C., landed and deposited with the defendants, the freight being unpaid. The manifest, a copy of which the captain lodged with the defendants, authorised the defendants to deliver the goods to the holders of the bill of lading. On the following day the captain lodged with the defendants a stop-order for freight, pursuant to the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862. C. then produced and gave to the defendants, unindorsed, the second part of the bill of lading; the defendants then entered C. as the proprietor of the goods. C. paid the freight, the stop was taken off, and the defendants delivered the goods to W., on the production by him of a delivery order from C. C. shortly after went into liquidation, when the plaintiffs, producing the indorsed bill of lading, in vain demanded the goods of the defendant. In an action for conversion:—Held, that the dock company had not been guilty of conversion, and that the bank could not maintain an action against them. Fearon v. Bowers (1 H. Bl. 364) commented on. Glyn, Mills & Co. v. East and West India Dock Co., 52 L. J., Q. B. 146; 7 App. Cas. 591; 47 L. T. 309; 31 W. R. 206; 4 Asp. M. C. 580—H. L. (E.)

In Three Parts.]—One part of a set of three bills of lading was indorsed to the partner of the vendor, and another to the vendee. The vendee made default in payment, and the vendor obtained delivery of the goods. In an action of detinue against the master, brought by an indorsee from the vendee, it appearing that by usage of trade the captain was not concerned to examine into the rights of different holders, the jury were directed to find a verdict for the defendant. Fearon v. Bowers, 1 H. Bl. 364.

Bonâ fide Assignment of Bill of Lading transfers the Property.]—"If the goods are bonâ fide sold by the factor at sea (as they may be where no delivery is given), the sale will be good; the vendee shall hold them by virtue of the bill of sale, though no actual possession is delivered; and the owner can never dispute with the vendee because the goods were sold bonâ fide and with the owner's own authority"—Per Lord Mansfield. Wright v. Campbell, 4 Burr. 2046, 2051; 1 H. Bl. 628.

But new trial ordered, that the jury might determine whether the sale was fraudulent. Ib.

Priorities between different Holders.]—K., a miller in England, agreed with F. & Co., a firm in California, that they should send him cargoes of wheat, he accepting bills of exchange against the bills of lading. A cargo was sent, and a bill of lading, with a bill of exchange annexed, was sent to the agents in England of F. & Co., and by them the acceptance of K. to the bill of exchange was obtained. The bill of exchange was subsequently negotiated, and a bill of lading deposited by F. & Co. Six bills of lading were drawn, and one of them was inadvertently, as F. & Co. alleged, sent to K., who deposited it with a bank at Exeter by way of security. K. failed, and a bill was filed by the bank claiming the cargo as against the holders of the other bill of lading:—Held, that F. & Co. had full right to negotiate the bill of exchange with the bill of lading annexed, and that the bank must, at the time when they made an advance on the bill of lading, have known that there would be several bills of lading, and that one could not be negotiated without the other. The English bank had, therefore, no priority. Gilbert v. Guignon, L. R. 8 Ch. 16; 27 L. T. 733; 21 W. R. 281; 1 Asp. M. C. 498.

Where several bills of lading have been signed of different imports, no reference is to be had to the time when they were signed by the captain, but the person who first gets one of them, by a legal title from the owner or shipper, has a right to the consignment. Caldwell v. Ball, 1 Term Rep. 205; 1 R. R. 87.

And where such bills of lading, though different upon the face of them, are constructively the same, and the captain has acted bonâ fide, a delivery according to such legal title will discharge him from them all. Ib.

A master is justified in delivering goods to the holder of the first bill of lading presented. The Tigress, Br. & Lush. 38; 32 L. J., Adm. 97; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 361; 8 L. T. 117; 11 W. R. 538.

The indorsement or delivery of one of a triplicate set of bills of lading does not necessarily operate as an indorsement or a delivery of all. Ib.

The mere indorsement and delivery of one of a triplicate set of bills of lading is not necessarily such a negotiation as to preclude a vendor from exercising his right of stoppage in transitu. Ib.

A. bought coal of B., to be shipped in a ship chartered by A., payment in cash against bill of lading in the hands of B.'s agent. Before shipment A. sold to C., and at the time of both sales the coal was unascertained. The coal was shipped, and three bills of lading signed for delivery to A. or order; one only was stamped and retained by B., another was sent to A. Not being paid, B. sent the stamped bill of lading to D., and the captain delivered the coal to him:—Held, that C. had no right of action against D. Moakes v. Nicolson, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 290; 34 L. J., C. P. 273; 12 L. T. 573.

Where the consignor of goods abroad advised the consignee by letter that he had chartered a ship on his account, and inclosed him an invoice of the goods laden on board, which were therein expressed to be for account and risk of the consignee, and also a bill of lading, expressing the delivery to be made to order, &c., he paying freight for the goods according to charterparty; and the letter of advice also informed the consignee that the consignor had drawn bills on him at three months for the value of the cargo:—Held, that the invoice and bill of lading sent to the consignee, and the delivery of the goods to the captain, vested the property in the consignee, subject only to be divested by the consignor's right to stop the goods in transitu in case of the insolvency of the other. Walley v. Montgomery, 3 East, 585; 7 R. R. 526.

The consignor's agent having obtained possession of the cargo under another bill of lading, and having refused to deliver it up unless the consignee would make immediate payment, which he declined doing, but offered his acceptances at three months in the manner before stipulated:—Held, that the consignee might maintain trover against such agent without having tendered payment of the freight either to him or the captain, the agent having possessed himself of the goods wrongfully. Ib.

Jus disponendi Reserved.]—B. sold to A. wheat, the price to be paid by bankers' draft on London at two months, to be remitted on receipt of invoice and bill of lading, which B. shipped by order of A., to be carried to M., for the account and at the risk of A., there to be delivered to A.; B. delivered the wheat to the master of the vessel, who took possession of it; the master signed a bill of lading to deliver the wheat to the order of B., who indorsed such bill of lading to A., and made an invoice, and sent the invoice and bill of lading to A. in a letter, requiring A. to remit in course, which letter, with the invoice and bill of lading, was received by A. A. having received the bill of lading and invoice, and having failed to remit the bankers' draft, B. assumed to revoke and rescind the sale, and caused the wheat to be stopped in its passage to A.:—Held, that, by the delivery of the wheat to the master of the vessel, for the account and at the risk of A., and the transmission of the indorsed bill of lading, B. had so parted with the property and right of possession as not to be entitled to intercept the delivery. Wilmhurst v. Bowker, 7 Man. & G. 882; 8 Scott (N.R.) 571; 12 L. J., Ex. 475—Ex. Ch.

The plaintiff, a merchant at Leeds, contracted with the London partner of a firm carrying on business as merchants at London and Odessa for the purchase of linseed, to be paid for half by drafts on the buyer, at three months from the time of advice of the sale reaching Odessa, and the remainder at three months from the date of shipment. The London partner forwarded the contract to the Odessa partner, and the latter drew upon the plaintiff two bills of exchange on account of the linseed, which were accepted and paid when due. In order to fetch the linseed the plaintiff chartered a vessel, which was to proceed with an outward cargo to Odessa, and there take on board, from the agents of the freighter, the linseed, and, being loaded, proceed to Hull, and deliver the same to the order of the freighter on being paid freight. The vessel having arrived at Odessa, the master applied for the linseed, and produced a copy of the charterparty, when he was informed that the cargo should be shipped in time. A letter was also sent by the Odessa partner to the London partner, informing him of the arrival of the vessel, and stating that a portion of the linseed was ready for her. The Odessa house commenced loading the vessel, but not being able to procure the entire quantity of linseed, the master consented to receive wheat in substitution, which was accordingly shipped. When the loading of the linseed was completed, the Odessa partner wrote to the London partner, stating that he should have the bill of lading by the next post. The Odessa partner afterwards procured the master to sign bills, making the goods deliverable "unto order or to assigns," and indorsed the bills of lading for value to a third person, who transferred them to the defendant:—Held, that there was no such delivery of the goods as to vest the right of property or possession in the plaintiff. Ellershaw v. Magniac, 6 Ex. 570.

B. & Co., merchants at Liverpool, sent orders to M. & Co., merchants of Charleston, to ship on account of B. & Co. cotton for the homeward voyage of their ship the "Charlotte." M. & Co. accordingly made considerable purchases of cotton, and shipped it on board the vessel of B. & Co. The master signed the bill of lading of the cotton to be delivered at Liverpool, "to order, or to our assigns, paying for freight for the cotton nothing, being owners' property," and M. & Co. indorsed the bill of lading, "Deliver the within to the bank of Liverpool, or order." M. & Co. informed B. & Co. that they had drawn bills upon them for the cargo on their account, by the "Charlotte," and desired them to insure the cotton. M. & Co. also sent to B. & Co. an abstract invoice, which stated that the cotton was shipped by M. & Co. on board the "Charlotte" for Liverpool, "by order and for account of B. & Co. there, and addressed to order." M. & Co. afterwards sent a full invoice, stating that the cotton was shipped for Liverpool "by order and for account of B. & Co. there, and to them consigned." M. & Co. not having sufficient funds of B. & Co. to pay for the cotton, sold the bills to a bank at Charleston, and delivered to the bank the bill of lading so indorsed, as a security for payment of the bills, which were dishonoured and taken up by M. & Co. B. & Co. became bankrupts before the arrival of the vessel, and on its arrival M. & Co. by their agent claimed to stop the cargo in transitu, and it was afterwards stowed in the warehouse of the defendants:—Held, first, that the property in the cotton did not vest absolutely in B. & Co., notwithstanding the delivery on board their ship, for by the terms of the bill of lading M. & Co. reserved to themselves a jus disponendi of the goods which the master acknowledged by signing the bill of lading, making the cotton deliverable to their order or assigns, although by so doing the master might have exceeded his authority. Turner v. Liverpool Docks, 6 Ex. 543 ; 20 L. J., Ex. 393—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, that M. & Co. did not by their indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading to the bank, divest themselves of their property in or possession of the goods. Ib.

When by a bill of lading goods are made deliverable to the shipper, or his order, and not to the consignee, the jus disponendi, or control over the property in the goods shipped, remains with the shippers, although the invoice states that the goods were shipped "on account of and at the risk of" the consignee ; such statement being not conclusive, of itself, that the right to the possession of, as well as the property in, the goods was intended to be unconditionally passed to the consignee. Shepherd v. Harrison, 40 L. J., Q. B. 148 ; L. R. 5 H. L. 116 ; 24 L. T. 857 ; 20 W. R. 1 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 66.

The burthen of showing the existence of a different state of things lies on the person who contradicts what would be the ordinary legal conclusion from the transaction. Ib.

When a vendor for his own protection takes and keeps a bill of lading making the goods sold deliverable to his own order, and the goods are deliverable by the contract of sale on certain conditions, the vendor thereby preserves a hold over the goods until the conditions are fulfilled and the bill of lading handed over, or until the vendee offers to fulfil the conditions ; and such a hold confers, not only a right to the possession of the goods, but also a power to dispose of them, at least so long as the vendee continues in default. Ogg v. Shuter, 45 L. J., C. P. 44 ; 1 C. P. D. 47 ; 33 L. T. 492 ; 24 W. R. 100 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 77—C. A.

Imperfect Assignment by Indorsee.] — The delivery of a bill of lading indorsed puts it in the power of the indorsee to transfer the property to a bonâ fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, and deprives the original owner of any right of stoppage in transitu ; but, as between the original parties, the consignor and consignee, the question, whether the property passed, will depend upon what the real contract was. Jenkyns v. Usborne, 8 Scott (N.R.) 505 ; 7 Man. & G. 678 ; 13 L. J., C. P. 196.

A., of London, had ordered beans of B. & C., of Leghorn, through D., their agent. B. & C. shipped more than the quantity ordered, and drew two bills on A.—one for the quantity ordered, and the other for the residue ; and they transmitted those bills to A. through D., with a letter of advice and an indorsed bill of lading for the whole cargo. A. accepted the bill for the beans ordered, but declined to take the residue or to accept the bill drawn against them. D. consented to take the residue, and A. thereupon wrote a letter to him acknowledging such residue to be his, and inclosed an order to the captain to deliver them to D. D. thereupon handed over the bill of lading to A. D. accepted the bill drawn against the residue of the cargo, and paid it at maturity. Before the arrival of the ship D. sold the residue to E., who accepted a bill for the amount drawn by B., who happened to be in London, and handed to E. A.'s letter and delivery order. E. afterwards applied to F. for an advance of cash, and handed over to him such letter and delivery order ; and F. gave his acceptance to E. for the amount of cash required. Before E.'s acceptance became due, and before the arrival of the ship, E. stopped payment :—Held, that D. might stop the residue not taken by A. in transitu, and that the delivery order given by A. was not equivalent to a bill of lading. Ib.

Where no Property in Indorser.]—Unless the indorser of a bill of lading really and bonâ fide has property in the goods at the time of indorseing it, the Bills of Lading Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 111) passes no property to the indorsee, and upon the intervention of the true owner the latter is entitled to receive the goods from the shipowner, who is thereupon relieved from the liability of delivering them according to the bill of lading. Finlay v. Liverpool and Great Western Steamship Co., 23 L. T. 251.

Knowledge of Assignee of previous Transfer.] —If A. has an equitable title to goods on board a ship, and B., knowing of such a title, gets an indorsement of the bill of lading, he cannot recover such goods in an action of trover, but the captain will be justified in delivering the goods to A. Dick v. Lumsden, Peake, 251.

Wrongful Delivery under, by Captain.]—The consignor of goods abroad, upon a receipt of orders from a correspondent here, shipped goods on account and at the risk of the consignee, and took bills of lading from the captain making the goods deliverable to the consignor's own order, and transmitted one of such bills unindorsed with the invoice to the consignee, inclosed in a letter, informing him that he had drawn upon him for the amount, which he doubted not would meet due honour, and close the account, and the consignor, by way of precaution, also sent another bill of lading indorsed to his own agent :—Held, that upon the shipment, on account and at the risk of the consignee, the property in the goods vested in him, subject only to be divested by the consignor's stopping them while in transitu, and that upon the arrival of the goods, the consignee having obtained possession of them from the captain by the production of his indorsed bill of lading, the property became absolute in the consignee, however wrongfully parted with by the captain without authority from the shipper, and however liable the captain might be to him on that account. Coxe v. Harden, 4 East, 211 ; 1 Smith, 20 ; 7 R. R. 570.

London Dock Company—Delivery of Wine—Legal Owner or Holder of Bill of Lading.]—By a printed regulation of the London Dock Company orders for delivery cannot be acted upon unless signed by the party in whose name the goods stand in the company's books, or by a person duly authorised, in writing under the hand of the principal, to sign them. Wine was entered in the books of the company in the name of S., clerk to W., but the bills of lading were in the hands of H., the consignee of the wine. The wine not having been approved by W., H. agreed to take it back, and applied to W. to return a part of it ; but W. refused to do so until his acceptance for the wine should be returned to him. H. then exhibited the bills of lading to the company, which informed W. that it would deliver the wine to H. unless it should be restrained from so doing. W. and S. thereupon filed a bill against the company and H. for an injunction to restrain the company from delivering the wine to H. without the written order of W. and S., or one of them, and praying that the company and H. might be ordered to pay the costs of the suit:—Held, that as the legal title to the wine was in H. by virtue of the bill of lading, the company was entitled to its costs, which, under the circumstances of the case, were ordered to be paid equally by W. and S. and H., W. and S. and H. also bearing their own costs equally. Wright v. London Dock Co., 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1411—L.JJ.

"Passing of Property" in Goods—Indorsement by Way of Pledge.]—The mere indorsement and delivery of a bill of lading by way of pledge for a loan does not pass "the property in the goods" to the indorsee, so as to transfer to him all liabilities in respect of the goods within the meaning of the Bills of Lading Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 111), s. 1. Sewell v. Burdick, 54 L. J., Q. B. 156; 10 App. Cas. 74; 52 L. T. 445; 33 W. R. 461; 5 Asp. M. C. 376—H. L. (E.)

Goods were shipped to a foreign port under bills of lading making the goods deliverable to the shipper or assigns. After the goods had arrived, and been warehoused, the shipper indorsed the bills of lading in blank, and deposited them with the indorsees as security for a loan. The indorsees never took possession of or dealt with the goods:—Held, that "the property" in the goods did not "pass" to the indorsees within the meaning of the Bills of Lading Act so as to make them liable in an action by the shipowner for the freight. Ib.

Liability for demurrage under a bill of lading is imposed on the holder by way of security only who presented the bill and demanded the delivery. Allen v. Coltart, 52 L. J., Q. B. 686; 11 Q. B. D. 782; 48 L. T. 944; 31 W. R. 841; 5 Asp. M. C. 104.

Adverse Claimants to Goods—Interpleader.]—Captain of ship may file interpleader where parties claim adversely under bill of lading; but otherwise where paramount to it. Lowe v. Richardson, 3 Madd. 277.

Hypothecation Note—Delivery Order—Property in Goods—Trover—Pledge.]—In an action for wrongfully depriving the plaintiffs of goods, it appeared that the goods had been consigned to England from a colony. The bills of lading provided that the goods were to be delivered to the order of the consignor or his assigns. The consignor drew bills of exchange on the consignee against the consignment, and sold the bills of exchange, with the bills of lading annexed, which he had indorsed in blank, to a colonial bank, who sent them to a bank in London, with a hypothecation note empowering the London bank to sell the goods if the bills of exchange were not accepted or not paid at maturity. The goods arrived in England, and were delivered to the defendants, who were a railway company, to be delivered to the order of the shipowners. The consignee paid the freight and other shipping charges and accepted the bills of exchange, but before the bills became due, he induced the defendants wrongfully to deliver the goods to him without producing a delivery order from the shipowners. When the bills became due the consignee requested the plaintiffs to advance the money and take up the bills. They did so, and received the bills of exchange and the bills of lading from the London bank, and ultimately obtained delivery orders from the shipowners in exchange for the bills of lading. When they presented the delivery orders to the defendants they found that the goods had already been given up to the consignee, and they thereupon commenced the present action:—Held, first, that the plaintiffs must be taken to be pledgees of the goods, and had therefore a property sufficient to entitle them to maintain the action independently of the Bills of Lading Act. Secondly, that the plaintiffs' right of action was not affected by the fact that at the date of the wrongful delivery they had not acquired their title to the goods. Bristol Bank v. Midland Railway, 61 L. J., Q. B. 115; [1891] 2 Q. B. 653; 65 L. T. 234; 40 W. R. 148; 7 Asp. M. C. 69—C. A.

"Contents Unknown"—No Evidence of Property in Consignee.]—If the bill of lading contains the words "contents unknown," so that it does not amount to a receipt for any goods in particular, it is not by itself evidence either of the quantity of the goods or of property in the consignee. Haddow v. Parry, 3 Taunt. 305; 12 R. R. 666.

Bill of Lading sent with Bill of Exchange—Conversion of Goods—Measure of Damages.]—A shipload of timber having been consigned to the defendants, the shipper sent the bill of lading and other shipping documents, and also a bill of exchange, to the plaintiffs in the usual course of business, to cover advances made by them to him. The plaintiffs handed the shipping documents and bill of exchange to agents who acted for them and for the defendants. The agents, at the plaintiffs' request, forwarded the bill of exchange to the defendants to be accepted by them. Shortly afterwards the defendants informed the agents that the cargo was out of condition, and that they could not accept it as it then was. The agents replied that the defendants should either return the bill accepted or the shipping documents. This the defendants refused to do, as they had paid part of the freight and intended to take possession of the cargo. Subsequently they stated that they had been compelled by the dock company to remove the cargo, but that, if the agents would repay them the freight and certain charges, and their profits on part of the cargo which they had sold, they would return the shipping documents. The agents replied that the matter must be left in the hands of the plaintiffs, the owners of the cargo. The defendants then returned to the agents the bill of exchange unaccepted, but retained the bill of lading as security against the freight and charges; offering to give it up upon payment of the freight and charges. Thereupon the plaintiffs brought an action against the defendants, claiming that they should be ordered to accept and deliver up the bill of exchange; and a declaration that until such acceptance and delivery they were not entitled to retain the bill of lading; and asking for a receiver, an injunction and damages. The action, owing to the delay of both parties, did not come on for hearing for four years:—Held, that the defendants, having refused to accept the bill of exchange, were bound to return the shipping documents; and that their taking possession of and dealing with the cargo was wrongful; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to damages, namely, the value of the cargo, less freight and charges of selling part of the cargo; and to further damages in the nature of interest for being kept out of possession of the cargo, at the rate, under the circumstances of delay in the action, of 2½ per cent. Rew v. Payne, 53 L. T. 982; 5 Asp. M. C. 515.

c. Conditionally—Drawn against Bills of Exchange.

Effect of.]—P. shipped 600 tons of umber upon a vessel chartered for the plaintiff. The bill of lading made the umber deliverable to the order of P. or assigns. The plaintiff insured the umber. A bill of exchange drawn by P. on the plaintiff, which had been discounted by the defendants, to whom the bills of lading had been transferred, having been refused acceptance, a second bill was drawn by P. to the order of C. on the plaintiff, and was given to the defendants in exchange for the first bill, upon the terms that the plaintiff should accept and pay the second bill against the delivery of the bill of lading. The umber and the bill of exchange reached their destination at the same time, but the plaintiff declined to accept the bill. The umber was, therefore, entered at the custom house in the defendants' name. Subsequently the plaintiff tendered the amount of the bill of exchange and demanded the bill of lading, but the defendants refused to give up the bill of lading; the plaintiff offered a guarantee for the freight, which offer was not accepted by the defendants, and they sold the cargo:—Held, in an action by the plaintiff for the value of the umber so sold by the defendants, that the property in the umber passed to the plaintiff, and therefore that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Mirabita v. Imperial Ottoman Bank, 47 L. J., Ex. 418; 3 Ex. D. 164; 38 L. T. 597; 3 Asp. M. C. 591.

K. & Co., merchants in New Orleans, purchased with their own money corn, as agents for the plaintiff in England, for the price of which they drew bills of exchange upon the plaintiff, which he accepted. The corn was shipped under bills of lading, making it deliverable to K. & Co. or their order, and invoices and a letter of advice were forwarded to the plaintiff, stating that the corn was shipped on his account. The bills of exchange drawn upon the plaintiff were purchased for their full amount by the defendant, of K. & Co., who indorsed and delivered to them the bills of lading as a security for the due payment of the bills of exchange, with a power of sale in case of non-payment. On the day when the bills of exchange fell due, the plaintiff offered payment to the holder of them, but the bills being accidentally mislaid, the money was not then received, but he was desired to pay the following morning, which he was unable to do: and the bills had never, in fact, been paid. The defendant having sold the corn under the power, the plaintiff brought trover:—Held, that he could not recover, as by the indorsement of the bills of lading to the defendant a special property passed to him in the corn, subject to which the plaintiff had a general property by the invoice and letter of advice, and that the offer of payment by the plaintiff did not discharge the plaintiff from his duty to pay the bills before the right to the possession of the corn attached. Jenkyns v. Brown, 14 Q. B. 496; 19 L. J., Q. B. 286; 14 Jur. 505.

The plaintiffs, merchants at New York, by direction and on account of B., forwarded to the defendant, a commission agent at Hull, employed by B., the invoices and bills of lading of two cargoes, against which they drew upon the defendant bills which he accepted and paid. The defendant sold the cargoes, which did not realise enough to cover his acceptances. The plaintiffs afterwards, and by direction of B., forwarded to the defendant the invoice and bill of lading of another cargo which had been purchased by B. with money supplied by the plaintiffs, and the bills of lading of which had been specially indorsed to them as a security, and were by them specially indorsed to the defendant; the plaintiffs at the same time stating that they had, by direction of B., drawn upon the defendant for part of the price. The defendant, without knowing that the plaintiffs had made advances to B., took the bill of lading, disposed of the cargo, and placed the proceeds to the credit of B.:—Held, that the defendant was not bound as between himself and the plaintiffs to accept the bills drawn against the last cargo, because no privity could arise between the plaintiffs and the defendant except by express contract, and the indorsement of the bill of lading by the plaintiffs to the defendant, and his receiving it and disposing of the cargo, did not, under the circumstances, create such a contract. Depperman v. Hubbersty, 17 Q. B. 767.

A. consigned goods to B. abroad, and ordered a cargo in return, for which he sent his own ship. The return cargo was delivered to A.'s captain, B. stating it to be "on A.'s account, as A.'s own goods, and to be delivered to A." The return cargo consisting of more goods than the proceeds of those consigned to B., B. drew bills on A. for the difference, which he sent to his agent with a bill of lading drawn in blank, and desiring the agent, in case of A.'s refusal to accept the bills, to indorse the bill of lading to C.; A. refused to accept the bills, and the bill of lading was accordingly indorsed to C. The ship arrived, and C. demanded the cargo, as indorsee of the bill of lading; the captain, however, refused, and delivered them to A., who deposited them with D. as his warehouseman; D. then received notice from B. to hold the goods for B. as his property; in consequence of which D. refused to redeliver them to A. In an action of trover by A. against D.:—Held, that D. was not estopped by having received the goods as warehouseman of A. from setting up the claim of a third person as a defence, supposing that claim to be a good one, and that though the goods might have been delivered to the captain, on condition of A.'s accepting the bills, yet, as no such condition was imposed at the time of the delivery, that the delivery was complete, and vested the property absolutely in A. Ogle v. Atkinson, 1 Marsh. 323; 5 Taunt. 759; 15 R. R. 647.

A continental bank, having contracted to sell and ship 1,400 quarters of rye, to be paid for by an acceptance at three months, put the rye on board the "Agatha." The vessel proved to be capable of containing from 200 to 300 quarters more grain than the quantity shipped, and therefore the bank filled up the vacant space with maize. One bill of lading only was given for the cargo, and the bank wrote on the 24th April to the purchasers, with the invoices and drafts: "The maize is on the same bill of lading as the rye . . . as there would, no doubt, be a loss on the maize, we presume you will wish to leave it for account of shippers; but if you will accept the bill we will get an undertaking from the bank to hold you harmless for so doing." The purchasers, who had made a sub-sale of the cargo, replied: "The drafts and invoices of this cargo are to hand, and we observe that the bills of lading are in the hands of the . . . bank. We think . . . we are entitled to ask a guarantee from the bank that the 'Agatha' shall deliver the weight specified in the invoice. Would you have the kindness to ask the bank for this, and telegraph to us . . . their acquiescence, or the contrary. We would be obliged also by a copy, or the original, of the charterparty, and copy of the bill of lading for our government. We leave, as you suggest, the maize to the shippers; the transaction in rye is a very bad one. We return you inclosed draft invoices of maize." On the 8th May the purchasers refused to accept the bill of exchange for the rye, upon the ground that the bank had not given them a proper bill of lading. In an action for such non-acceptance:—Held, that the purchasers had, by a new agreement, waived any objection to the bill of lading in respect of the maize being included therein, and were therefore liable. Imperial Ottoman Bank v. Cowan, 31 L. T. 336—Ex. Ch.

In 1845 the defendants, commission agents in London, wrote to the plaintiffs, merchants at Madras, as follows: "At the request of K. and L. of Glasgow, we beg to open a credit in your favour to the extent of 1,500*l.*, to be applied to the execution of an order they have given you for Madras handkerchiefs, and for costs of which, as produced, you draw on us at the customary date, on forwarding bills of lading to our order." In consequence of this letter, two orders given by K. and L. were executed by the plaintiffs, who forwarded the goods and bills of lading to the defendants, and they accepted and paid bills drawn on them in accordance with the letter. In February, 1847, K. and L. wrote to the plaintiffs, inclosing patterns for a third order, and saying, "You will draw for cost, and consign goods as before." The plaintiffs executed this order, and on the 21st of August shipped the goods on account of K. and L., and sent to the defendants the invoice and bill of lading inclosed in a letter, saying, "We have, as usual, drawn upon you at six months for the equivalent of the amount of invoice." The bill of lading stated the goods to have been "shipped by the plaintiffs, and to be deliverable to the defendants or their assigns, on payment of freight." The invoice stated that the goods were consigned to the defendants on account and risk of K. and L. The letter containing the bill of lading and invoice was received by the defendants on the 26th of August, and the goods arrived in London on the 21st of October. On the same day the plaintiffs' agent received a bill drawn against the goods, and presented it to the defendants for acceptance, but they refused to accept it. On the 27th of October K. and L. stopped payment. The goods were received by the defendants under the bill of lading, and sold, and the proceeds retained by them. On the 4th of March, 1848, the plaintiffs gave the defendants notice that they claimed to stop the goods in transitu, the defendants having refused to accept the bills; and the plaintiffs subsequently brought an action to recover the proceeds of the sale:—Held, first, that it was a question for the judge, and not for the jury, to decide whether, under the circumstances, the property in the goods vested absolutely in K. and L., or merely conditionally on the acceptance of the bill by the defendants. Key v. Cotesworth, 7 Ex. 595; 22 L. J., Ex. 4.

Held, secondly, that the contract was not subject to the condition, either precedent or subsequent, that the defendants should accept the bill, but that the property in the goods vested absolutely in K. and L. upon the delivery on board the ship, and transmission of the bill of lading to the defendants. Ib.

Held, also, that if the plaintiffs had intended to preserve their right of property in the goods until the bill was accepted, they should have transmitted the bill of lading indorsed in blank to an agent, to be delivered over only in case the bill was accepted. Ib.

Representation that Bills would be Accepted—Right to Bills of Lading.]—An agent and manager of a London firm, who resided in Sweden, assured a merchant there about to draw bills on that firm that the bills would be accepted; whereupon bills of lading for timber were sent to the London firm and bills were drawn against them:—Held, that this assurance, though acted on, was not to be treated as equivalent to an acceptance of the bills, so as to vest in the London firm legal rights as from the time of the assurance given. Hoare v. Dresser, 7 H. L. Cas. 290; 28 L. J., Ch. 611; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 371; 7 W. R. 374.

Part of the timber did not arrive; the agent having obtained the shipping documents from a purchaser to whom he had sold it, and who had accepted the bills, by stating that he would return them, which he did not do:—Held, not entitled to retain them, he having misled the purchaser into accepting the bills. Ib.

Carrier Setting up Jus tertii.]—A., who resided at Manchester, contracted to buy of B. at Dumfries a quantity of oak-bark, to be shipped for delivery at Liverpool. B. accordingly shipped the bark, to be delivered at Liverpool to the defendants, who were wharfingers and carriers there, to be by them forwarded to A. at Manchester. The bark was to be paid for in cash, and B. sent a bill of lading, making it deliverable to A. or his assigns, together with a bill of exchange payable on demand, through his bankers, to the Manchester and Salford Bank, with instructions to present the bill for acceptance. The bank at Manchester was unable to find A., and accordingly they returned the bill of lading and draft to B. Before the bill of lading had been so returned, B., who was at Liverpool when the bark arrived there, believing, from the representations of an agent of the plaintiff (who had bought the bark of A.), that the bill of lading had been duly handed over to A., assented to the bark being delivered to the defendants for the purpose of its being carried to Manchester for the plaintiff; but, upon subsequently discovering that A. had not got the bill of lading or paid for the bark, B. claimed and received it from the defendants:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the property in the bark never passed to A., and consequently that B. had a right to countermand the delivery; and that it was competent to the defendants, notwithstanding that they had received the bark, to be carried for the plaintiff, to set up the title of B. in an action brought against them by the plaintiff. Sheridan v. New Quay Co., 4 C. B. (N.S.) 618; 28 L. J., C. P. 58; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 248.

Accompanying Bills of Exchange.]—When a bill of lading, and a bill of exchange to cover the goods included in the bill of lading, are sent in a letter to a vendee of the goods, it is a well-understood rule that the bill of exchange must be accepted, or the bill of lading cannot be retained. Shepherd v. Harrison, 40 L. J., Q. B. 148; L. R. 5 H. L. 116; 24 L. T. 857; 20 W. R. 1; 1 Asp. M. C. 66—H. L. (E.)

When the bill of exchange is not accepted, but the bill of lading is retained, the bill of lading, acquired in that manner, gives no right of property to the person so acquiring it. Ib.

It is not necessary for the shipper to advise the consignee expressly that he is not to use the bill of lading unless he accepts the bill of exchange. Ib.

Where A. having sent orders to his correspondents abroad to ship cargoes of wheat, afterwards withdrew his orders, but his correspondents, nevertheless, shipped a cargo of wheat on his account and at his risk, sending with it an indorsed bill of lading enclosed to A., informing him of their having drawn bills on their agents in town for the amount, and requesting him to furnish funds for their acceptance, which bills were afterwards dishonoured, A. giving orders not to accept them:—Held, that no property vested in A. to enable him to receive the goods, he not having accepted the bills drawn upon the agents in town. Brandt v. Bowlby, 2 B. & Ad. 932; 1 L. J., K. B. 14.

Proof in Bankruptcy—Amount Due on Bills.]—A party accepted bills to meet goods consigned to him. The acceptances were made payable "on delivery of the bills of lading." The bills of lading remained, with the bills of exchange, in the possession of the bank who had discounted the latter for the drawers:—Held, on the bankruptcy of the acceptor, that the goods were part of his estate, which the bank held as security for their debt, and therefore that the bank could only prove for the amount due on the bills of exchange after deducting the value of the goods. Brett, Ex parte, Howe, In re, 40 L. J., Bk. 54; L. R. 6 Ch. 838; 25 L. T. 252; 19 W. R. 1101.

Right on Transfer.]—Corn merchants in California agreed to send cargoes of wheat to a miller in England, the reimbursement to be by his acceptance against bill of lading. The corn merchants shipped a cargo, and made out the bill of lading in six parts. Three parts, with corresponding bills of exchange drawn on the miller for the price of the cargo, were indorsed by the corn merchants, and transferred to a Californian bank for valuable consideration. These bills of exchange were, with the bills of lading annexed, accepted by the miller. One indorsed part of the bill of lading was inadvertently sent by the corn dealers to the miller, and by him transferred to an English bank for valuable consideration. The bills of exchange were not met by the miller:—Held, that the corn merchants were entitled to deal as they did with the cargo by transferring the bills of lading; that the English bank could not, under the circumstances, claim as holders of the bill of lading without notice; and that the English bank had no priority. Gilbert v. Guignon, L. R. 8 Ch. 16; 27 L. T. 733; 21 W. R. 281; 1 Asp. M. C. 498.

Stoppage in transitu—Bill of Lading, to what Extent Negotiable.]—B., a Dantzic merchant, sold wheat to W., an Amsterdam merchant, to be paid for by drafts, to be drawn by B. on C., a London merchant, against bills of lading. W. was in fact, though that was not disclosed to B., acting for P., another London merchant. W. wrote to C., opening a credit on account of P., in favour of B., to be drawn on against bills of lading, P. to be debited with the amount. B. forwarded a bill of lading, indorsed by him in blank to C., in a letter, stating that, "according to instructions from W., we hand you bill of lading, and request you to follow his instructions respecting the document, by whose order and for whose account we draw on you; which draft we recommend to your kind protection." On the day after C.'s receipt of this letter, the draft was left with C. for acceptance; P. on the same day, being in actual possession of the bill of lading, pledged it with G., who bonâ fide gave value for it. On the evening of the same day P. was arrested on a criminal charge, and he afterwards became bankrupt. W. also failed. B. stopped the cargo in transitu. G. brought trover against him for the cargo:—Held, that B., primâ facie, had the right to stop in transitu, and that G., though a bonâ fide transferee for value of the indorsed bill of lading from P., was not entitled to the cargo, unless P. had not merely possession of the bill of lading, but a right to transfer it, inasmuch as bills of lading are not negotiable to the same extent as bills of exchange. Gurney v. Behrend, 3 El. & Bl. 622; 23 L. J., Q. B. 265; 18 Jur. 856; 2 W. R. 425.

But held, that C. was entitled to hand over the bill of lading to P., the letter from B. not imposing any condition to prevent C. from doing so. Ib.

By a bill of lading, goods were deliverable to S. if he should accept and pay a bill of exchange; if not, to the holder of the bill of exchange; S. accepted the bill, and indorsed the bill of lading for a valuable consideration, but did not pay the bill when due:—Held, that upon its dishonour the property in the goods vested in the holder of it, and that he might maintain trover for the goods against the indorser of the bill of lading. Barrow v. Coles, 3 Camp. 92; 13 R. R. 763.

Appropriation of Policy Moneys.]—Bills were drawn against cotton consigned to England. The cotton was hypothecated, by means of a letter in favour of a bank which bought the bills; at the same time bills of lading and a policy were handed to the bank. The letter contained a power to keep insured, and a power to sell the cotton in case of non-payment, and to apply any balance, after satisfaction of the bills, towards other debts due from the consignor to the bank:—Held, that money received on the policy could not be applied in payment of anything beyond what was due on the bills. Latham v. Chartered Bank of India, 43 L. J., Ch. 612; L. R. 17 Eq. 205; 29 L. T. 795; 2 Asp. M. C. 178.

Other Conditions—Authority of Captain.]—The plaintiffs were indorsees for value of bills of lading indorsed to them for value by M. under the following circumstances:—The defendants had agreed to buy of M. all the ore of a certain mine, the ore to be shipped at a Spanish port by him, f. o. b., on vessels chartered by the defendants or by him, and to be paid for by bills of exchange against bills of lading on the execution of a charter, and on a certificate that there was enough iron in dock to load the vessel chartered. On being so paid for, the ore was to be the property of the defendants. Some cargoes of the ore having been taken, and all of it paid for, the "Trowbridge," a vessel chartered by the defendants, was loaded with ore by M., who had, however, no intention to ship it for them, and previously informed them thereof. He then presented to the captain the bills of lading, which stated that the shipment was by S., and made the cargo deliverable to the order of S.; but no such person as S. existed. The captain, being bound by the charter to sign bills of lading as presented, signed the bills. M. indorsed the name of S. and his own name on the bills of lading, and then pledged them to the plaintiffs:—Held, that they were entitled to the ore represented by such bills. Gabarrow v. Kreeft, 44 L. J., Ex. 238; L. R. 10 Ex. 274; 33 L. T. 365; 24 W. R. 146; 3 Asp. M. C. 36.

Another vessel, the "Macedonia," having been also sent by the purchasers of the ore, under a charterparty, by which the shipowner agreed to deliver the cargo to the freighters or assignees, but which did not authorise the captain to sign bills of lading as presented, she was loaded by M., who at the commencement of the loading intended that it should be in fulfilment of his contract. He, however, obtained bills of lading as in the former case, and indorsed them to a third person, to whom the cargo was delivered. In an action by the purchasers of the ore against the shipowner for non-delivery of the cargo to them, according to the charterparty:—Held, that as the cargo had been delivered according to the bills of lading, the defendant was not liable. Ib.

6. Pledging.

By Owners of Ship and Cargo.]—The owner of a vessel, and part owner of the cargo, sanctioning a pledge by his partners of the bills of lading, which were signed for the delivery of the goods on payment of freight, pledges the goods and the freight of them together, unless the freight is expressed to be excepted. Grote v. Milne, 4 Taunt. 133.

Effect of, on Stoppage in transitu.]—See cases post, col. 570.

Pledge by Holder of Bill of Lading of Goods belonging to Third Party.]—B., having sold 500 sacks of flour to H., consigned them to him by sea, with 500 more to sell on commission. The captain of the vessel executed and handed to B. two duplicate bills of lading, expressed to be "to order or assigns"; and one of them having been forwarded by B. to H. unindorsed, the latter, on the 9th February, 1878, deposited it with a discount company (who carried on business in the same town as himself) to secure an advance of 600*l.* then made to him. On the 11th February H., who, in the meantime, and without informing B. of the transaction of the 9th, had obtained from him the duplicate bill of lading duly indorsed, deposited it also with the company, at whose instance he, on the 13th, further executed to them a letter of lien, antedated the 9th, upon the whole cargo, in respect both of the 600*l.* advance and of about 800*l.*, the amount of certain bills of exchange previously discounted for him by the company, and just reaching maturity. The vessel arrived shortly afterwards, and the company discovered that H. was owner of only half the flour, whereupon B., having brought an action to have his own half relieved from the company's lien:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief sought. Blake v. Belfast Discount Co., 5 L. R., Ir. 410.

7. Lien of Shipping Agent.

A shipping agent, having a lien on the bill of lading of goods which he has shipped, may, if the lien is not satisfied before they have reached their destination, have the goods brought home in order to retain his lien on them, and is not liable to an action for so doing. Edwards v. Southgate, 10 W. R. 528.

8. Forged.

Bills of Exchange Accepted in Respect of—Rights of Acceptor.]—A cotton broker of New Orleans was in the habit of sending cotton over to England, and the plaintiff was in the habit of accepting his bills, in consideration of the assignment to him of bills of lading for the cotton. In 1870, in the course of this business, a bank, to whom two bills of the cotton broker on the plaintiff were indorsed, sent them for the plaintiff's acceptance, and with the bills they sent a memorandum, "The bank holds bills of lading for 504 bales of cotton." The plaintiff thereupon accepted the bills, and retiring them before they became due received the bills of lading, and went to the captain of the ship on his arrival and presented the bills of lading, which turned out to be forgeries:—Held, that, notwithstanding the representation contained in the memorandum sent by the bank, the plaintiff could not call on the bank to repay him the value of the bills. Leather v. Simpson, 40 L. J., Ch. 177; L. R. 11 Eq. 398; 24 L. T. 286; 19 W. R. 431; 1 Asp. M. C. 5.

A bank presented a bill of exchange to the drawees for their acceptance, accompanied by a ticket representing that the bank held bills of lading to cover it. The drawees thereupon accepted the bill, relying on the statement that the bank held bills of lading, which both parties thought to be genuine. The bills of lading had been forged by the drawer of the bill of exchange:—Held, that the drawees were not entitled to demand from the bank genuine bills of lading before paying the amount of the bill of exchange. Baxter v. Chapman, 29 L. T. 642; 2 Asp. M. C. 170.

1. NATURE OF.

Admissibility of Evidence to Explain.]—Evidence is not admissible to explain the meaning of the word "freight," which is not an ambiguous term. Krall v. Burnett, 25 W. R. 305.

What it is.]—Freight is the reward payable to a carrier for the safe carriage and delivery of goods. It is payable only on safe carriage and delivery. If the goods are safely carried, the master has a lien on the goods for the amount of the freight due for such carriage, and cannot be compelled to part with the goods till such freight is paid. Kirchner v. Venus, 12 Moore, P. C. 361; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 395; 7 W. R. 455.

Freight, for many purposes, is considered as part of the ship, inseparably appurtenant thereto. Willis v. Palmer, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 340; 29 L. J., C. P. 194; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 732; 2 L. T. 626; 8 W. R. 295.

The term "freight," in common parlance, is ambiguous, and may mean a sum of money to be paid at all events upon the taking of goods on board to be carried on a voyage, in lieu of the expectation of earning freight upon the contingency of the ship's arrival. Andrew v. Moorhouse, 5 Taunt. 435; 1 Marsh. 122; 15 R. R. 544.

On Shipowner's Own Goods.]—Where the owner of a ship is also the owner of the cargo on board, no freight can be earned by the voyage, and therefore where an owner of a ship and cargo had bills of lading drawn reserving a nominal freight, on the security of which he obtained certain bills of exchange:—Held, that the acceptors of the bills had no claim against the produce of the sale of the cargo. Cellier v. Hinde, 17 L. T. 341; 16 W. R. 184.

Though freight may not be payable in respect of a man's own goods conveyed in his own ship, it becomes so if he makes third persons, who have advanced him money, the consignees of those goods, and the goods are by the bill of lading deliverable to their order. Wequelin v. Cellier, 42 L. J., Ch. 758; L. R. 6 H. L. 286; 22 W. R. 26.

Nominal.]—Goods, which by the terms of the bill of lading have been carried upon a nominal amount of freight, can be lawfully demanded by the holder of the bill of lading, on payment of that amount. Keith v. Burrows, 46 L. J., C. P. 801; 2 App. Cas. 636; 37 L. T. 291; 25 W. R. 831; 3 Asp. M. C. 481—H. L. (E.)

The owner of a ship cannot, by his subsequent acts, give to his mortgagees, as against the holder of a bill of lading, rights different from those possessed by himself under it. Ib.

2. WHEN PAYABLE.

a. Generally.

Legality.]—A vessel freighted from Dantzic to London was, on her arrival, and after a delivery of part of her cargo, seized by the revenue officers on suspicion that she was not Prussian built; the treasury on petition ordered the ship to be restored on condition that the cargo should be exported, and on payment of 50*l.* as a satisfaction to the seizing officers:—Held, that this was sufficient to show that the voyage was illegal without condemnation; and that, although the freighters afterwards accepted and exported the cargo according to the terms of the order, the master was precluded from recovering freight. Blanck v. Solly, 1 Moore, 531; Holt, 554; 19 R. R. 469.

Payable on Completion of Voyage.]—Freight cannot be recovered on a charterparty, unless the stipulated voyage has been actually performed; and there is no implied promise to pay a compensation for carrying goods a part of the vogage, unless they are voluntarily accepted at a place short of the port of destination. Osgood v. Groning, 2 Camp. 466; 11 R. R. 765.

Although freight should be made payable by the shipper on the shipment of the goods, it is not merely on that account earned without a performance of the voyage. Mashiter v. Buller, 1 Camp. 84. S. P., Clark v. Druisina, 1 Marsh. 123.

The freight upon a charterparty is not earned until the unloading and delivery of the whole cargo has been completed. Brown v. Tanner, 37 L. J., Ch. 923; L. R. 3 Ch. 597; 18 L. T. 624; 16 W. R. 882. See also Metcalfe v. Britannia Ironworks Co., post, col. 375.

The shipowner gets no freight unless the ship delivers her cargo. Anon., Siderf., pt. 1, 236.

Where Cargo-owner prevents Completion of Voyage.]—The master is entitled to recover his freight, if he has either carried his cargo to its destination, or if he has been precluded from carrying it by the act or default of the owner. Cargo ex Galam, 3 N. R. 254; Br. & Lush. 167; 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 216; 33 L. J., Adm. 97; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 477; 9 L. T. 550; 12 W. R. 495.

The whole freight is payable if the owner of the cargo prevents the master of the ship from forwarding the goods from an intermediate port to their destination. The Soblomsten, 36 L. J., Adm. 5; L. R. 3 A. & E. 293; 15 L. T. 393; 15 W. R. 591. S. P., Christy v. Row, 1 Taunt. 300; 9 R. R. 776.

Special Contract—Freight Payable though Ship Lost.]—Freight held to be due from the last port of unlading to the time the ship was cast away, upon the words of the charterparty. Cullen v. Mico, 1 Keb. 831.

A ship was lost on a voyage from London to the Cape. The bill of lading contained the words "freight for the said goods being paid." The jury found that the shipper had a choice of paying a higher rate on delivery of the goods at the Cape, or a lower rate on shipping the goods in London, and that he had elected to pay the lower rate. In an action for freight at the lower rate, judgment for the plaintiff. Andrew v. Moorhouse, 5 Taunt. 435; 1 Marsh. 123; 15 R. R. 544.

Additional Freight—Agreement between Charterers' Agent and Master.]—Charterer held liable on an agreement between his agent and the master for additional freight for taking the ship to a loading port other than that for which she was chartered. Simey v. Peter, 3 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 883.

Condition of Cargo preventing Delivery.]—Where cargo cannot be carried to its destination by reason of its condition alone, the shipper cannot refuse payment of freight on the ground that the contract is not performed. The Fortuna, Edwards, 57.

Cargo not allowed to be Landed—Freight back to Port of Loading.]—A ship with a general cargo sailed from London for Havre with some petroleum on board. Under the bill of lading the shipowner was to deliver the petroleum at Havre, and it was to be taken out by the defendant within twenty-four hours after arriving at Havre, or ten guineas a day was to be paid for demurrage. On the ship's arriving at Havre, the authorities of the port made the captain take her away in consequence of the petroleum being on board. Thereupon he went to neighbouring ports, but was not allowed to stay there. Returning to Havre, he discharged his general cargo, and no bill of lading having been presented to him, and no application having been made to him for the delivery of the petroleum, he brought it back to London. On the shipowner claiming freight, back freight, demurrage, and expenses:—Held, that he was entitled to freight, back freight, and expenses. Freight is earned by the carriage and arrival of the goods ready to be delivered to the merchant, so that, although the petroleum could not be landed at Havre, it was in the port a reasonable time, during which the owner might have received it; and the freight was accordingly earned. Argos, Cargo ex, Gaudet v. Brown, L. R. 5 P. C. 134; 28 L. T. 745; 21 W. R. 707. Affirming, 42 L. J., Adm. 49. See also cases, infra, col. 377.

Special Contract—Freight not Payable unless Ship Return—Ship abandoned as Unseaworthy—Payment for Use of Ship.]—Where the charterparty (to the East India Co.) was so worded that no freight was payable unless the ship returned and discharged her lading; and after being used for two years under the charterparty, she was condemned at Bombay as unfit to return to England:—Held, in chancery, that the company were bound to account for what they had made of the ship, and to pay freight and demurrage. Edwin v. East India Co., 2 Vern. 210.

Mahogany Cargo — Delivery of Freight — Measurement—Condition Precedent.]—By charterparty it was agreed that the shipowner should ship a cargo of mahogany at Honduras, and carry it to Norfolk, in Virginia, and there make a delivery of the same according to bills of lading, the freighter covenanting to pay freight on such true delivery at the rate of 3*l.* 8*s.* per ton of 400 superficial feet freight measurement. In an action for non-payment of freight, the defendant pleaded that by usage of the Honduras trade an account for the freight of the cargo, called a freight measurement, should be produced to the freighter by the master or owner on receiving the cargo before freight is payable; and that no such account was delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant. Also, secondly, that it was the duty of the plaintiff to deliver a freight measurement of the cargo, and that he had not done so:—Held, that both pleas were bad, one because evidence of usage could have been admitted at the trial to explain the terms of measurement, and the other because the alleged condition precedent of delivery of an account could not be added to the charterparty. Gibbon v. Young, 2 Moore, 224; 19 R. R. 510.

Non-payment of Freight—Demurrage.]—See Moeller v. Young, infra, col. 488.

Hire of Ship for Six Months certain—Ship Captured before Six Months expired.]—A master and part owner of a ship lying at Liverpool by charterparty let the ship to freight for a voyage to Madeira, and thence to Barbados and back to Liverpool, Greenock, or Bristol, with liberty for the freighters to order the ship from Barbados to any other West Indian island except Jamaica, they paying port charges and pilotage dues; the ship to be loaded by the freighters with a cargo for Madeira, to be delivered there according to the freighters' orders, and to take on board there such cargo as the freighters should direct, and to deliver such cargo in Barbados; and to load cargo at Barbados to be carried to Liverpool, Greenock, or Bristol, and so end the intended voyage; the freighters to pay for hire of the ship 136*l.* 10*s.* per month for six months certain, to commence eight days after she was ready to receive cargo at Liverpool, and to continue until she was discharged at Liverpool, Greenock, or Bristol, together with two-thirds of all pilotage, &c., charges; payment thereof to be made as follows: 136*l.* 10*s.* to be advanced before sailing from Liverpool by three months' bill and port charges and disbursements at Madeira and Barbados to be paid in part of freight; and the remainder of the freight to be paid on discharge at Liverpool, &c. The ship sailed and delivered cargo and took in more at Madeira, and sailed from thence for Barbados on the 9th October. On 10th November she was captured. Part of the freight for the first month had been paid, and the shipowner claimed further freight for goods delivered at Madeira, or for the hire of the ship up to the date of her capture:—Held, that no freight could be recovered. Byrne v. Pattinson, Abbot on Shipping, 13th ed. 619.

Hire of Ship so long as Efficient—Breakdown of Machinery.]—See Hogarth v. Miller, infra, col. 388.

Delivery of Goods without receiving Freight—Liability for Freight continues.]—The bills of lading were for delivery to the defendant (the charterer) or his assigns, he or they paying freight. The defendant indorsed them to K.

& Co. specially, upon condition that they would accept, or promise to accept, certain bills of exchange, and would also promise to account with R. & Co., to whom half the cargo belonged, for a moiety of the proceeds, and on their refusal to do so, then to deliver to D. & Co., first obtaining from them a similar promise to accept the bills, and account to the defendant for a moiety of the proceeds. K. & Co. refused, and the cargo was delivered to D. & Co., but no promise was obtained from them. They did, however, pay the bills and account for the defendant's moiety, and gave him credit for the freight; but, notwithstanding, he was still in their debt:—Held, that the defendant was liable to the shipowner for the freight. Penrose v. Wilkes, stated, 13 East, 570.

In indebitatus assumpsit for freight, it appeared that goods were laden in Jamaica on board the plaintiff's ship, according to a bill of lading which stated them to have been shipped by W. J. on a vessel bound for London on account of the defendant, and that they were to be delivered in London to the consignees, they paying freight for the same at the rate therein mentioned. The goods, &c., shipped were the property of the defendant. The captain having delivered the goods to the consignees without receiving the freight, it was held that the defendant was liable by law to pay the freight to the shipowners, and that independent of any contract by the charterparty. Domett v. Beckford, 5 B. & Ad. 521; 2 N. & M. 374; 3 L. J., K. B. 10.

Substituted Voyage—Action on Charterparty.]—The plaintiff covenanted that his ship would receive from the freighter's agent at Gibraltar or elsewhere as specified as should be directed by the agent, a cargo, and therewith proceed to London, and there deliver it; and the freighter covenanted to pay freight for the ship for the voyage out and home 550*l.*—200*l.* on clearing outwards, 100*l.* at Gibraltar, a moiety of the rest in cash on delivery of the cargo in London, and the other moiety by a bill at two months from the completion of the delivery. The plaintiff, by direction of the plaintiff's agent, sailed for Cadiz, and from Cadiz to Seville, and there loaded a cargo which, by direction of the plaintiff's agent, he carried to and delivered at Liverpool:—Held, that the plaintiff could not, in an action upon the charterparty, recover the freight covenanted to be paid on delivery in London. Thompson v. Brown, 1 Moore, 358; 7 Taunt. 656.

Condition precedent or Separate Covenant—Ship "having unloaded at T."]—See Ohlsen v. Drummond, supra, col. 270. Shower v. Cudmore, supra, col. 270.

Action for Freight—Money in Court in Foreign Action.]—The freight having been paid into court in Spain by the Spanish consignee of cargo, at the suit of the charterer, quære, whether the shipowner can sue the charterer for freight in England. Newland v. Horseman, Cas. in Ch., pt. 2, 74.

b. On Transhipment.

Whole Freight Payable.]—The freighter of goods on which freight was to be paid on delivery at the port of destination, is bound to pay the whole freight originally contracted for, where transhipment has been found necessary, and the goods have been delivered at the port of destination, although the master consigned the goods under fresh bills of lading in the second vessel to his own agent, and the freight was at a much lower rate than that originally contracted for. Shipton v. Thornton, 1 P. & D. 216; 9 A. & E. 314; 8 L. J., Q. B. 73.

If a vessel during her voyage is injured, and is compelled to put into a port of refuge, then, by English law, the master is not bound to tranship. He is allowed a reasonable time, either to repair and carry on or to tranship. If he declines to do either, he may be called upon to deliver without payment of freight; but before a reasonable time has elapsed he cannot be required to deliver, except on payment of full freight and waiver thereof. The Bahia, Br. & Lush. 292; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 90; 12 L. T. 145.

Where a vessel is disabled at an intermediate port, the master is allowed a reasonable time to reship and tranship so as to earn his freight. The Soblomsten, 36 L. J., Adm. 5; L. R. 1 A. & E. 293; 15 L. T. 393; 15 W. R. 591.

German Law—Vessel Liable to Capture.]—By German law, if a vessel is liable to risk of capture, either party may withdraw from the contract of affreightment; but the master is not obliged to part with the cargo or to tranship it, unless distance freight, as well as all other claims of the shipowner and the contributions due from the cargo for general average, have been paid or secured:—Held, that a demand upon the master to tranship at his own risk and expense was not such a compliance with the German law as obliged him to tranship. The Express, 41 L. J., Adm. 79; L. R. 3 A. & E. 597; 26 L. T. 956; 1 Asp. M. C. 355.

Fraudulent Contract by Master.]—Merchants in London chartered the "Planter" to bring a cargo of guano to this country at a freight of 70*s.* a ton. Advances to a considerable amount on account of freight were made by the agents of the charterers to the captain of the "Planter" in South America. After the guano had been shipped, the "Planter," in consequence of sea damage, became incapable of proceeding on her voyage; and the agents of the charterers declining to take upon themselves the transhipment of the cargo to any other vessel for the purpose of its being conveyed to its destination, C., the master of the "Planter," chartered the "Alarm" for that purpose in his own name, and took a bill of lading from the plaintiff, who was the captain, which was made out to him as the shipper, the charterers being named therein as the consignees to whom the guano was to be delivered in this country. In that charterparty C. agreed to pay the same amount of freight as his owners had stipulated for in the original charterparty; but, by a private agreement between himself and the plaintiff he stipulated, that while the 70*s.* per ton should be required of the consignees on the delivery of the cargo, the plaintiff was to keep only 40*s.* per ton as the rate of freight as between him and C., and was to hand the difference to C. The guano having arrived in the "Alarm," the charterers demanded to have the cargo, offering to pay the difference between the amount of freight at the rate which they had contracted to pay by the original charterparty, and the advances which their agents in South America had made to the captain of the "Planter." The plaintiff insisted on the payment of the full freight, viz., 70*s.* per ton After some discussion, the guano was delivered to the charterers, without prejudice to the lien of the plaintiff, if any, for freight:—

Held, first, that the contract made by C. when he chartered the "Alarm" must be considered as a contract entered into by him on behalf of his owners, and not on behalf of the charterers. Matthews v. Gibbs, 30 L. J., Q. B. 55; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 186; 3 L. T. 551; 9 W. R. 200.

Held, secondly, that if the contract was entered into by C. as agent of the charterers, it was bad on two grounds; first, as being fraudulent, and fraudulent to the knowledge of the plaintiff; and, secondly, as being beyond the limits of any authority which C. could exercise in the position in which he was placed, and therefore the charterers were not bound by it. Ib.

c. Pro Ratâ Itineris.

Goods accepted at Intermediate Port.]—A shipowner has no claim to freight pro ratâ itineris peracti, except there is an acceptance of the goods by the shipper at the shorter destination, such that the law will imply a new agreement for freight pro ratâ. The Newport, Swabey, 335; 6 W. R. 310—P. C. And see Osgood v. Groning, ante, col. 368.

No freight is payable if the owner of the cargo is compelled against his will to take the cargo at an intermediate port. The Soblomsten, 36 L. J., Adm. 5; L. R. 1 A. & E. 293; 15 L. T. 393; 15 W. R. 591.

To sustain a claim for pro ratâ freight, there must be such a voluntary acceptance of the goods by their owner at an intermediate port, as to raise a fair inference that further carriage of the goods was dispensed with. Ib.

In an action on a charterparty, in which the defendant covenanted to pay so much for freight for "goods delivered at A.," freight cannot be recovered pro ratâ itineris if the ship is wrecked at B. before her arrival at A., though the defendant accepted his goods at B. Cook v. Jennings, 7 Term Rep. 381; 4 R. R. 468.

Goods Sold at Intermediate Port.]—Freight was payable by the terms of a charterparty upon delivery of cargo at the port of destination. The ship meeting with sea damage from heavy weather, the captain at an intermediate port justifiably sold part of the cargo shipped by the charterer, in order to raise funds for the necessary repairs. The cargo so sold realised more than it would have done if carried to the port of destination. The ship, having completed her repairs, proceeded to the port of destination with the remainder of the cargo. A general average statement was afterwards made up, under which the charterer received from the shipowner the amount realised by the cargo sold at the intermediate port. The shipowner claimed from the charterer freight pro ratâ itineris on the cargo so sold:—Held, that he was not entitled to such freight. Hopper v. Burness, 45 L. J., C. P. 377; 1 C. P. D. 137; 34 L. T. 528; 24 W. R. 612; 3 Asp. M. C. 149.

Where goods damaged on the voyage are landed at an intermediate port and sold without the assent of their owner, the shipowners are not entitled to freight pro ratâ itineris. Acatos v. Burns, 47 L. J., Ex. 566; 3 Ex. D. 282; 26 W. R. 624—C. A.

To entitle a shipowner, in the absence of a special contract, to demand pro ratâ freight, where the goods have been sold at an intermediate port (being so much damaged as not to be worth forwarding), it must be shown that the owner of the goods had an option of having them sent on or of accepting them at such intermediate port. Hill v. Wilson, 48 L. J., C. P. 764; 4 C. P. D. 329; 41 L. T. 412; 4 Asp. M. C. 198.

A cargo of rice shipped at Batavia, was by the bill of lading to be delivered at Rotterdam to the plaintiff, he paying freight for the same. The vessel, having encountered a hurricane, was compelled to put into the Mauritius, where the rice, having been found to be damaged and in a state of rapid putrefaction, was, of necessity, sold by the master, who acted bonâ fide, but without the knowledge of either the shipper or shipowner:—Held, that no freight was due, either for the whole voyage or pro ratâ itineris. Vlierboom v. Chapman, 13 M. & W. 230; 13 L. J., Ex. 384; 8 Jur. 811.

Where freight was to be paid at so much per ton, on a right and true delivery of the homeward-bound cargo, from Honduras Bay to London, and the ship and cargo, after capture and re-capture, having been wrecked at St. Kitt's, into which they were carried by the re-captors, a sale of the cargo was directed by the vice-admiralty courts there, on the application of the master, acting bonâ fide for the benefit of all concerned, but without orders from any; and the proceeds of the sale were remitted to the shipowners:—Held, that the freighter might recover such proceeds in an action for money had and received, without allowing freight pro ratâ itineris; for such form of action is only a waiver of any claim for damages for the tortious act, taking the actual proceeds of the sale as the value of the goods (subject to the legal consequences of considering the demand as a debt, which admits of a set-off), but does not recognise the right of the vendor so to convert the goods. And here, the act of conversion (for such it must be taken to be) being made by the master, who is the general agent of the shipowners (and not, as in Baillie v. Modigliani, 6 Term Rep. 421, by the act of a court of competent jurisdiction), was unlawful, and discharged the claim of the shipowners for freight pro ratâ itineris. Hunter v. Prinsep, 10 East, 378; 10 R. R. 328. And see Morris v. Robinson, 5 D. & R. 35; 3 B. & C. 196; 27 R. R. 322.

Delivery at Port as near as Ship could safely get.]—A cargo of railway bars was shipped under a charterparty to be carried from a port in England to Taganrog, in the Sea of Azof, or so near thereto as the ship could safely get, freight to be paid in London against certificate of right delivery of cargo. On the arrival of the ship, on the 17th of December, at Kertch, which was as near as she could then get to Taganrog, the captain found the sea blocked with ice till the ensuing spring; and he proceeded to discharge the cargo, notwithstanding the opposition of the charterers' agent. By the bill of lading the cargo was deliverable at Taganrog to a Russian railway company "freight and other conditions as per charterparty." As no bill of lading was produced at Kertch, the captain placed the cargo in charge of the custom-house authorities; and they on the 27th of December delivered it to the agent of the railway company on his producing a written authority from the company, together with copies of the charterparty and bill of lading, notwithstanding the captain's claim to retain it until the claim was paid. The agent of the company gave a written acknowledgment that he had received the cargo on the power of the charterparty and bill of lading passed to him by the railway company. The ship then sailed from Kertch. The shipowner having sued the charterers for freight :—Held, first, that he was not entitled to full freight, as the delivery at Kertch was not a delivery within the charterparty. Metcalfe v. Britannia Ironworks Co., 46 L. J., Q. B. 443 ; 2 Q. B. D. 423 ; 36 L. T. 451 ; 25 W. R. 720 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 407—C. A.

Held, secondly, that he was not entitled to freight pro ratâ, as no new contract for such freight had been made. Ib.

See also cases under next sub-heads.

Abandonment—Salvage.]—Where a salving ship takes a crew off a vessel in distress and puts men on board of her, refusing to allow her own crew to return, and the two vessels are in company navigated into port, there is no such abandonment of the ship as to put an end to the contract of carriage, and consequently there will be freight due upon the consignees requiring delivery of the cargo, such freight being pro ratâ, assuming the port not to be the port to which the cargo ought to have been taken under the contract of carriage. The Leptir, 52 L. T. 768 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 411.

Blockade of Port of Loading—Delivery elsewhere.]—Under a charterparty that a ship should proceed to Taganrog, or "so near thereto as she may safely get," and there deliver cargo :—Held, that this port being under blockade, it was not a fulfilment of the contract for the vessel to discharge at Constantinople, even though that might be a reasonable course to adopt, and that no contract to pay freight pro ratâ could be implied, and that the charterers having paid the freight at Constantinople, under protest, were entitled to recover it back. Castel v. Trechman, 1 Cab. & E. 276.

Ship Lost during Voyage — Goods taken possession of by Owner.]—Where the goods were to have been carried to Glasgow and the ship was lost near Glasgow, the owners of part of the goods abandoned them to the assurers, who carried them to Bristol. As to these goods the master offered to carry them on in another ship to Glasgow, but delivery having been taken at Bristol, it was held that the whole freight was payable. As to other goods which the master declined to carry on to Glasgow, and which were taken possession of and carried on by the owners, it was held that pro ratâ freight was payable. Lutwidge v. Grey, cited in Luke v. Lyde, 4 Burr. 886, 887 ; stated Abbot on Shipping, 13th ed. 591. See Luke v. Lyde, infra, col. 382.

d. Capture.

Advances for Disbursements.]—Covenant by charterparty made between the master of the ship and the freighter, upon a voyage from Liverpool to Maranham, and thence back to L., that the freighter should pay for the freight from L. to M. 120*l.*, and from M. to L. at the rate of 2½*d.* per lb. for cotton, which should be delivered at L., such freight to be paid as follows, viz. 120*l.* for freight of the outward cargo, to M., and as much cash as might be found necessary for the vessel's disbursements in M., to be advanced by the freighter, his agents or assigns, to the master when required, free from interest and commission, at the current exchange of the place, and the residue of such freight to be paid on delivery of the cargo in L. The ship arrived at M., where the 120*l.* outward freight, and also 192*l.* for the necessary disbursements of the ship, were paid or advanced by the freighter to the master ; and the ship received her homeward cargo and sailed for L., but was lost by capture :—Held, that the freighter was not entitled to recover back the 192*l.* De Silvale v. Kendall, 4 M. & S. 37 ; 16 R. R. 373.

Freight Payable to Captor.]—Where the captor brings the cargo to its port of destination he is entitled to freight, but not otherwise ; pro ratâ freight not given, even where the goods are nearly at their destination and sold beneficially. The Vrow Anna Catharina, 6 C. Rob. 271.

Freight is not earned by the ship being brought by captors to Plymouth, the ship being bound to London. The Wilhelmina Eleonora, 3 C. Rob. 234.

Freight allowed to captors in respect of neutral goods carried to the claimants' own country, though not to their port of destination, the voyage under special circumstances having been substantially performed. The Vrouw Henrietta, 5 C. Rob. 75, n.

Freight on Enemy Goods in Neutral Ship.]—A neutral ship carrying enemy goods is entitled, on condemnation of the goods, to the whole freight ; capture being equivalent to delivery. The Copenhagen, 1 C. Rob. 289, infra ; The Prosper, Edwards, 76.

The freight payable upon enemy goods in neutral ships is not necessarily the chartered freight, as raised by war risk. The Twilling Riget, 5 C. Rob. 85.

The captor of enemy goods in neutral ship takes them with the liability to pay freight—per Lord Stowell. The Tobago, 5 C. Rob. 218, 222.

Contraband.]—Freight is not allowed to the owner of a neutral ship carrying contraband of war. The Oster Risver, 4 C. Rob. 199.

Capture and Restitution—Pro ratâ Freight.]—A ship put into an English port in distress, the greater part of the voyage having been performed. The cargo was discharged in order to repair the ship. The ship and cargo were seized as prize, but afterwards restored. The ship and part of the cargo were afterwards sent to London, and the rest of the cargo forwarded to its destination :—Held, that the owners were entitled to pro ratâ freight. The Copenhagen, 1 C. Rob. 289. S. C., supra.

Ship captured and restored with freight :—Held, that the whole freight was a charge on the cargo, though not carried to its destination. The Martha, 3 C. Rob. 106, n.

A ship and cargo having been condemned and sold by a French court, and the sentence afterwards reversed, freight pro ratâ, held payable, the shipowners having been prevented from carrying the cargo to the port of delivery by no fault of their own. Baillie v. Moudigliani, Park on Insurance, 8th ed. 116. See The Fortuna, Edwards, 57.

Capture and Recapture.]—A British ship, freighted from Liverpool in ballast to Lisbon, there took in a cargo for Ireland, and was captured off Falmouth ; afterwards recaptured and taken into Falmouth :—Held, that the whole of the freight was due to the shipowners from the cargo owners. The Racehorse, 3 C. Rob. 101.

Sale for Salvage—Common Incapacity to perform Voyage—Half Freight Decreed.]—A ship bound for Lisbon reached the Tagus, but was unable to get in by reason of blockade. She was blown off the coast, captured, recaptured and sold at Madeira by the recaptors for salvage :—Held, that upon principles of equity the loss arising from the common incapacity of the parties to the charterparty should be divided, and half the freight decreed to be paid. The Friends, Edwards, 246.

Pro ratâ Freight.]—Freight pro ratâ on capture and recapture not given to a ship brought back to the port or quasi port of her departure. The Hiram, 3 C. Rob. 180.

A ship bound for London, after taking in her cargo, but before breaking ground, was cut out of her port of lading in Jamaica by a French privateer; but was afterwards recaptured and carried into another port in the same island, where the cargo was sold by order of the Court of Admiralty for the benefit of the freighters :—Held, that the owners of the ship were not entitled to any part of the freight, though by the usage of the trade the ship was loaded at their expense. Curling v. Long, 1 Bos. & P. 634 ; 4 R. R. 747.

e. Restraint of Princes—Prohibited Cargo.

Restraint.]—If a ship freighted to H. is prevented by restraint of princes from arriving, and the consignees direct the master to deliver the cargo at G., and accept it there, he may maintain an action upon an implied contract to pay freight pro ratâ itineris. Christy v. Row, 1 Taunt. 300 ; 9 R. R. 776.

And if the master is prevented by the default of the consignees, or restraints of princes, from delivering the whole cargo there, he will be entitled to freight pro ratâ for the part delivered. Ib.

—— Delay — Safe Port.] — A charterparty made between English merchants at Valparaiso, and the owners of a Prussian ship, provided that the ship should proceed and deliver cargo at a port to be named by the charterers in Great Britain, or on the continent between Havre and Hamburg. The charterer named Dunkirk. On the arrival of the ship off Dunkirk, the master was informed by a pilot that war had commenced between Prussia and France. The master thereupon took the ship into Dover, and refused to deliver the cargo without payment of full freight. War was not in fact declared until three days afterwards :—Held, that as the port named by the charterer was an unsafe port, and Dover being a port which might have been named within the terms of the charterparty, the owners were entitled to full freight. The Teutonia, Duncan v. Koster, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 411 ; 41 L. J., Adm. 57 ; L. R. 4 P. C. 171 ; 26 L. T. 48 ; 20 W. R. 421 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 214—P. C.

Detention.]—A ship let to freight by the month, in attempting to enter a blockaded port by order of the freighters, was seized, and her cargo condemned ; but, being afterwards released, took in other goods, and delivered them to the freighters, according to the charterparty :—Held, that there was no suspension of the freight during the detention of the ship. Moorsom v. Greaves, 2 Camp. 627 ; 12 R. R. 763.

Convoy Recalled—Cargo Sold.]—Under an agreement in the nature of a charterparty, whereby the plaintiff let his ship to freight to the defendant on a voyage from Shields to Lisbon, with convoy, the freight to be paid on right delivery of the cargo ; the ship having sailed from Shields with her cargo, and joined convoy at Portsmouth ; and, after being detained near a month off Lymington, her sailing orders being recalled by the convoy, in consequence of the occupation of Portugal by the enemy ; and the defendant having refused to accept the cargo at Portsmouth, to which the ship returned, it was unloaded by the plaintiff, after notice to the defendant, and then was sold by consent of both parties, without prejudice :—Held, that he could not recover freight pro ratâ, or demurrage. Liddard v. Lopes, 10 East, 526 ; 10 R. R. 368.

Embargo taken off—Continuing Voyage.]—If a British merchant charters a Swedish ship on a voyage to St. Michael's for a cargo of fruit, and the charterparty contains the usual exception against the restraint of princes, and the ship is prevented from reaching St. Michael's within the fruit season by an embargo laid on Swedish vessels by the British government, the Swedish owner cannot, by proceeding on the voyage after the embargo is taken off, entitle himself to recover the freight against the British merchant. Touteng v. Hubbard, 3 Bos. & P. 291 ; 6 R. R. 791.

Position of Blockading Squadron.]—A blockading squadron may lawfully be at any distance convenient for shutting up the port blockaded, provided it does not obstruct any other ; and a ship will be considered as guilty of a wilful breach of the blockade which actually comes within reach of capture by the squadron, if the circumstances were such that a prudent man would have inquired whether that were the blockading squadron, although the captain was actually ignorant of its being so, not having inquired. Naylor v. Taylor, M. & M. 205 ; 9 B. & C. 718 ; 4 M. & Ry. 526 ; 31 R. R. 731.

Prohibition.]—A ship was let to freight for a voyage, to take out a small cargo of lead, and to bring home a return cargo, for which freight was to be paid at eleven guineas per ton for the whole ship's admeasurement. If, from political circumstances, she should be unable to discharge her cargo, and consequently to obtain a return cargo, the freighters agreed to pay a gross sum, less than the amount of the freight per ton ; the ship being prevented from discharging, and the freighter supplying no homeward cargo, the master took in goods on freight, and brought them home together with the lead :—Held, that he was entitled to receive the gross sum stipulated, and also to retain the freight which the ship had earned. Bell v. Puller, 2 Taunt. 285 ; 12 East, 496, n. ; 11 R. R. 574.

Upon a contract to fetch a cargo of corn from a particular place, where, on arriving, it is found that the government has prohibited the exportation of corn, freight is payable though the ship returns in ballast, after staying out her days of demurrage. Blight v. Page, 3 Bos. & P. 295, n. ; 6 R. R. 795, n.

Embargo.]—A ship was brought in under an embargo, with cargo on board not under the embargo. A claim by the ship for freight against the cargo, which was unloaded and sent on by another conveyance, dismissed. The Werldsborgaren, 4 C. Rob. 17.

A cargo belonging to Englishmen on board a Swedish ship bound to Venice was detained under an embargo on Swedish ships at Falmouth, where the ship put in for shelter :—Held, that the cargo owners were bound to pay expenses incurred by the ship on account of cargo, but not freight. Isabella Jacobina, 4 C. Rob. 77.

—— Knowledge of.]—Where the plaintiff by charterparty, dated the 1st March, let to the defendant a ship to freight, and by its terms the plaintiff was to carry an outward-bound cargo of goods (not prohibited by restraint of princes) from Liverpool to Carolina in America, and to bring back a cargo of rice for the defendant, he paying freight for the same; and the plaintiff cleared out on the 22nd March from Liverpool with a cargo of salt, and on the 22nd May following arrived at Carolina, where the importation of British goods was prohibited by an order issued on the 1st March, the day the charterparty was dated; and also a further order prohibiting the exportation of goods to England, so that the plaintiff could not unload the salt nor bring back a cargo of rice :—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover for freight homewards, if it could be established that he knew of the prohibition at the time of the ship's clearance from Liverpool. Heslop v. Jones, 2 Chit. 550.

Back Freight.] — A ship with a general cargo sailed from London for Havre with some petroleum on board. Under the bill of lading the shipowner was to deliver the petroleum at Havre, and it was to be taken out by the defendant within twenty-four hours after arriving at Havre, or ten guineas a day was to be paid for demurrage. On the ship's arriving at Havre, the authorities of the port made the captain take her away in consequence of the petroleum being on board. Thereupon he went to neighbouring ports, but was not allowed to stay there. Returning to Havre, he discharged his general cargo, and no bill of lading having been presented to him, and no application having been made to him for the delivery of the petroleum, he brought it back to London. On the shipowner claiming freight, back freight, demurrage and expenses :—Held, that he was entitled to freight, back freight and expenses. Freight is earned by the carriage and arrival of the goods ready to be delivered to the merchant. And although the petroleum could not be landed at Havre, it was in the port a reasonable time, during which the owner might have received it; and the freight was accordingly earned. Argos, Cargo ex, Gaudet v. Brown, L. R. 5 P. C. 134; 28 L. T. 745; 21 W. R. 707. Affirming 42 L. J., Adm. 49.

Where no application for delivery is made, the captain may land and warehouse the cargo at the expense of the merchant; and where that is forbidden by the authorities of the port, he is not justified in destroying the cargo; but, in the absence of advices, he may take it to such a place as in his judgment is most convenient for the merchant, and may charge to the merchant all expenses properly incurred; consequently, here the shipowner was entitled to back freight and expenses. The demurrage and the expenses incurred in the ineffectual attempt to land at the neighbouring ports were not allowed, but were looked on as part of the expenses of the voyage. Ib.

f. Damage to Cargo—Short Delivery.

Consignee Accepting.]—If the consignee of goods accepts any benefit by the carriage, he cannot defend himself from the payment of freight, on the ground that the goods have been damaged by the master in carrying them, though the damage exceeds the amount of the freight. Shields v. Davis, 6 Taunt. 65; 4 Camp. 119.

Effect of, in Action for Freight by Shipowner.]—Freight is recoverable as upon a right and true delivery of the cargo agreeably to the bills of lading, upon proof of having delivered the entire number of chests, for which bills of lading had been signed; though it appeared that the contents of the chests were damaged by the negligence of the master and crew on board, in not ventilating them sufficiently; the party injured having his counter-remedy by action for such negligence. Davidson v. Gwynne, 12 East, 381; 11 R. R. 420.

Where the master and freighter of a vessel of 400 tons mutually agreed in writing, that the ship, being every way fitted for the voyage, should with all convenient speed proceed to St. Petersburg, and there load from the freighter's factors a complete cargo of hemp and iron, and proceed therewith to London, and deliver the same on being paid freight for hemp 5*l.* per ton, for iron 5*s.* a ton, one-half to be paid on right delivery the other at three months :—Held, that the delivery of a complete cargo was not a condition precedent; and that the master might recover freight for a short cargo at the stipulated rates per ton, the freighter having his remedy in damages for such short delivery. Ritchie v. Atkinson, 10 East, 295; 10 R. R. 307.

If a shipper of goods sustains a loss by reason of the misconduct or negligence of the shipowner or his agents, his remedy is by action, and he cannot resist payment of freight on the ground that the goods were unfit for use when they arrived at the port of destination. Garrett v. Melhuish, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 943; 6 W. R. 491.

In cases of short delivery under a bill of lading, a deduction may be made from the freight of such proportion of the freight as would have been payable if the goods had been delivered, and this, even though the freight is lump freight; but the value of the goods not brought to destination may not be deducted from freight, but must, if necessary, be the subject of a separate action. The Norway, 12 L. T. 57; 13 W. R. 296.

A consignee of goods under a bill of lading has no right to deduct from the freight payable on delivery of goods the value of articles which, though mentioned in the bill of lading, turn out not to have been put on board. Meyer v. Dresser, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 646; 33 L. J., C. P. 289; 10 L. T. 612; 12 W. R. 983.

The whole freight named in a bill of lading is payable to the shipowner carrying under it, although a less quantity of goods than the quantity named in the bill of lading is delivered, if the quantity delivered is no less than the quantity received by the shipowner. Blanchet v. Powell's Llantivit Collieries Co., 43 L. J., Ex.

50 ; L. R. 9 Ex. 74 ; 30 L. T. 28 ; 22 W. R. 490 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 224.

—— Custom.]—This being the general law, it cannot be altered by a universal practice of merchants, which is not confined to any particular place or trade, to have the value of such goods deducted from the freight. Meyer v. Dresser, supra.

—— Foreign Law.]—By French law, the whole freight is payable whether the whole quantity named in the bill of lading is carried or not, and therefore, in the case of a bill of lading executed in France, it is immaterial whether or not the shipowner received the whole quantity named in the bill of lading. Blanchet v. Powell's Llantivit Collieries Co., supra.

The law of a foreign country, entitling a consignee to reduce the claim against him for freight by the value of goods put on board and lost, but which amounts to an allowance by way of set-off, and not to an extinguishment of the claim for freight, is matter of procedure only, and therefore does not apply to an action for freight brought in this country against the consignee. Meyer v. Dresser, supra.

—— Charterer cannot Abandon Goods when Damaged.]—A charterer, whose cargo has been damaged by the fault of the master and crew, so as, upon arrival at the port of discharge, to be worth less than the freight, is not entitled to excuse himself from payment of freight by abandoning the cargo to the shipowner. Dakin v. Oxley, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 646 ; 33 L. J., C. P. 115 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 655 ; 10 L. T. 268 ; 12 W. R. 557.

Lump Freight—Part of Cargo Lost by Perils of Sea.]—A charterparty from Riga to London provided that the ship should load a full and complete cargo of lath-wood, and deliver the same on being paid freight as follows : a lump sum of 315*l*. There was the usual exception of sea risks, and the freight was to be paid half on arrival and the remainder on unloading and right delivery of cargo. Part of the cargo, loaded in accordance with the charterparty, was lost by perils of the sea, without any default of the master or crew :—Held, that the shipowner was, on delivery of the remainder of the cargo, entitled to the full sum. Robinson v. Knights or Knight, 42 L. J., C. P. 211 ; L. R. 8 C. P. 465 ; 28 L. T. 820 ; 21 W. R. 683 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 10.

Loss by Pirates.]—Covenant to pay freight on delivery. Cargo partly spoiled by pirates :—Held, freight not payable. Bright v. Cowper Brownl. & G. pt. 1, 21.

Loss by Fire.]—By a charterparty a ship was to load at Colombo or Cochin, from the charterers' agents, a full and complete lading, and proceed to London, and discharge there, fire and other dangers of the sea excepted, a lump sum freight of 5,000*l*., to be paid after entire discharge and right delivery of the cargo in cash two months after the date of the ship's report inwards at the custom house. Part of the cargo loaded in accordance with the charterparty was lost by fire, without any default of the master or crew, and the remainder was delivered in London :—Held, that the shipowner was entitled under the charterparty to the full sum of 5,000*l*. Merchant Shipping Co. v. Armitage, 43 L. J., Q. B. 24 ; L. R. 9 Q. B. 99 ; 29 L. T. 809 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 185—Ex. Ch.

Loss of Cargo before Delivery.] — Cement was shipped under a bill of lading which stipulated that freight should be paid "within three days after arrival of ship, and before delivery of any portion of the goods." The ship arrived in port with the cement on board, but was within the three days, in consequence of an accidental fire, scuttled with a view to the saving of ship and cargo ; and on her being raised the cement was found to be useless, having ceased to exist as cement, and the consignees refused to accept it or to pay freight :—Held, that the shipowners, not being ready to perform their part of the contract, were not entitled to sue for freight. Duthie v. Hilton, 38 L. J., C. P. 93 ; L. R. 4 C. P. 138 ; 19 L. T. 285 ; 17 W. R. 55.

When Payable Pro rata.]—In case of a loss at sea, freight must be paid only in proportion to the goods saved, and the part of the voyage which has been performed. Luke v. Lyde, 2 Burr. 882 ; 1 W. Bl. 190.

Memorandum of Charter — Consideration.]—A., owner of a vessel, took in a cargo at Calcutta, to be carried thence to St. Petersburg, which was purchased by his supercargo on his account ; but B. & Co. advanced 26,000*l*. towards such purchase, and bills of lading were made out by the captain, stating the cargo to be shipped by B. & Co. on account of A., to be delivered at St. Petersburg to B. & Co.'s order or their assigns. The words, "he or they paying freight," were struck out of the bills of lading, which were indorsed by B. & Co. and transmitted to the defendants, their correspondents in London. Before the ship sailed, a memorandum for charter was entered into at Calcutta, between A.'s supercargo and the captain, whereby it was agreed that the ship should be despatched with a cargo for St. Petersburg, to be there delivered to the order of the freighter, on being paid freight at a certain rate therein stipulated. The ship, in proceeding on the voyage, was lost, but part of the cargo was saved, and sold with the consent of the captain for 13,000*l*. The defendants, as indorsees of the bills of lading, applied for the proceeds of the salvage, which had been previously claimed by the plaintiffs, as agents on the part of A. ; and the captain also claimed a lien thereon for pro ratâ freight ; on which the defendants agreed by letter (if the plaintiffs would cause the claims of A. and the captain to be withdrawn) to be accountable to them, as the agents of A., for whatever might appear to be due for the pro ratâ freight the ship was entitled to, agreeably to the charterparty entered into by A.'s supercargo and the captain. In pursuance of this agreement these claims were withdrawn, and the defendants received the amount of the salvage, and then refused to pay the pro ratâ freight, as the instrument entered into at Calcutta was merely a memorandum for charter ; and insisted that there was no consideration for the defendants' promise. But, in an action for nonpayment of the pro ratâ freight under the agreement :—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, as the defendants were aware of the circumstances which had happened before the agreement was entered into. Thornton v. Fairlie, 2 Moore, 397 ; 8 Taunt. 354.

Reloading and Continuing Voyage.]—A ship was chartered from London to B., there to deliver her cargo, reload, and proceed to a port between G. & A.; freight for voyage out and home, 1,300*l.*, if delivered at G., in S., London or Liverpool; 200*l.* to be paid in London on the vessel's departure, the remainder on final delivery of the homeward cargo. The ship proceeded to B., delivered her cargo there, and sailed again with a cargo of hides, which the charterers consigned to G. At F. the ship and about one-third of the hides were lost. The vice-consul of F., acting on behalf of the charterers, at the request of the captain of the ship, transmitted the residue of the hides, by another vessel, to the consignees of the charterers at G., where they were accepted, and the freight from F. to G. paid by the charterers:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the 1,300*l.* freight; that he was not entitled pro ratâ itineris for freight to B., or from F. to G., but that he was entitled to freight, pro ratâ, from B. to F. Mitchell v. Darthez, 2 Scott, 771; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 555; 1 Hodges, 418; 5 L. J., C. P. 154.

Short Cargo—Charterparty and Bill of Lading Freight—Cargo Shipped by Shipowner in place of Part Burnt—Amount of Freight Due.] — See Aithen v. Ernsthausen, post, col. 500.

Full Cargo not taken.]—Covenant to carry 180 men to Jamaica at 5*l.* per head; 160 carried, and alleged by plaintiff to be all that were offered; defendant alleging that 180 were offered. Judgment for plaintiff. (Anon.) v. Noell, 1 Keb. 100.

Freight Payable on 240 tons whether Shipped or not—Refusal to ship 240 tons tendered.]—Plaintiff, by charterparty, agreed with defendants to carry a cargo from B. to L. at 15*s.* per ton; the defendants agreeing to pay for 240 tons whether that weight were shipped or not, freight to be paid on right delivery. The plaintiff alleged right delivery, and that the freight amounted to 180*l.*; that the defendants paid 146*l.* only, and claimed the difference. The defendants pleaded that they tendered 240 tons for shipment, and that the plaintiff refused to carry more than a part of the 240 tons, and that the ship might reasonably have carried the whole. Held, on demurrer, that the plea was a good defence. Clements v. Russell, 4 Ir. Ch. R. 318.

Commission on Freight — Ship Lost before loading.]—"Commission" on freight expressed to be payable to charterers "on completion of the loading or should the vessel be lost." The vessel was lost before arriving at the loading port:—Held, commission not payable. Sibson v. Ship Barcraig Co., 2 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 91.

Dates Damaged—Not Merchantable as Dates, but of value for Distillation.]—A vessel with dates on board was sunk and afterwards raised. The dates, which were shipped under bill of lading making freight payable on right delivery, were not merchantable as dates, but were of considerable value for purposes of distillation. Held, that no freight was payable. Asfar v. Blundell, 65 L. J., Q. B. 138; [1895] 2 Q. B. 196; 15 R. 481; 73 L. T. 648; 44 W. R. 130; 8 Asp. M. C. 106—C. A.

Charterparty—Ceaser Clause—Bill of Lading—Short Delivery.]—A ship was chartered for a voyage from Greenock to Monte Video for a lump freight of 550*l.*, of which 150*l.* was to be paid on clearing at Greenock, and "bills of lading for the balance payable abroad to be taken (sic) by the captain, on receipt of which documents all responsibility in charterer to cease." The cargo was chiefly coal. The charterer divided the 550*l.* freight amongst the various items of cargo, and presented bills of lading together making up that sum for the master's signature, the charterer being consignee. The bill of lading for the coal was for 453½ tons at 22*s.* 6*d.* per ton freight. The master signed this, with a note "weight and contents unknown." The coal was discharged at Monte Video, turning out 398 tons only, the master waiving his lieu for freight. The charterer's agents, in settling for the balance of freight, retained for coal short delivered 24*l.*, and 6*2l.* freight thereon. The owners sued the charterers for the balance of the chartered freight:—Held, that the bills of lading having been granted put an end to the charterer's liability on the charterparty; that the shipowners could recover freight on 398 tons only; that, in absence of proof that any of the coal shipped had not been delivered, the charterer could not retain the 24*l.* Benyon v. Kenneth, 8 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 594.

g. Abandonment, Loss, or Detention of Ship.

Loss of Ship — Freight Payable at fixed Periods.]—A ship employed by a charterparty on both an outward and a homeward voyage at so much per month, and which was lost in the homeward voyage was held to have earned the freight due for the outward voyage. Mackrell v. Simond, 2 Chit. 666.

The freight, being reserved at so much per month, was earned at the end of each month, although the stipulated time of payment was from four months to four months, and the ship was lost at the end of fourteen months. Havelock v. Geddes, 10 East, 555; 10 R. R. 380.

By a charterparty the freighter covenanted to pay to the owner freight at and after the rate of so much per ton per month, for the term of six months at least, and so in proportion for less than a month, or for such further time than six months as the ship might be detained in the service of the freighter, until her final discharge, or until the day of her being lost, captured, or last seen or heard of; such freight to be paid to the commander of the ship in manner following, viz., so much as might be earned at the time of the arrival of the ship at her first destined port abroad, to be paid within ten days next after her arrival there, and the remainder of the freight at specified periods:—Held, that this constituted one entire covenant, and that the arrival of the ship at her first destined port abroad was a condition precedent to the owner's right to recover any freight; and that the ship, having been lost on her outward voyage, the owner was not entitled to recover freight at so much per calendar month to the day of the loss. Gibbon v. Mendez, 2 B. & Ald. 17; 20 R. R. 337.

By charterparty freight was payable one month after the ship sailed; the voyage, Glasgow to Demerara, usually lasting six weeks. The ship was lost three days after sailing:—Held, that freight was payable. Leitch v. Wilson, 7 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 150.

Abandonment — Effect on Freight.] — By the abandonment of a ship by the crew during a voyage, without any intention to retake possession, a right is given to the owner of cargo on board to treat the contract of affreightment as at an end. A ship with a cargo of resin in barrels, on a voyage from America to Rotterdam, was, owing to the perils of the sea, abandoned by her crew off the American coast. She was afterwards saved by another vessel, and brought with her cargo by the salvors into a port in England, and there arrested in an action for salvage by her salvors. Before the shipowner had released the ship or cargo, the owners of the cargo applied for and obtained from the admiralty court an order for the release of the cargo to them without payment of any freight, upon their giving bail to the salvors:—Held, that the cargo owners were entitled to treat the contract of affreightment as at an end, and that therefore the order of the admiralty court was rightly made. The Cito, 51 L. J., Adm. 1; 7 P. D. 5; 45 L. T. 663; 30 W. R. 836; 4 Asp. M. C. 468—C. A.

—— Derelict—Recovery by Shipowner at Port of Discharge — Cargo Owner's Right to Cargo without Payment of Freight.]—If a ship is abandoned by her master and crew during a voyage, and the cargo owner exercises his right of treating the abandonment as a determination of the contract of affreightment, the subsequent recovery of the vessel by the shipowner from salvors at the port of discharge will not revive the contract, and the owner of the cargo will be entitled to have it returned to him without payment of freight. The Arno, 72 L. T. 621; 8 Asp. M. C. 5—C. A.

—— Cargo Rescued by Salvors.]—A barque bound from Charleston with a cargo of cotton, shipped under bills of lading for Bremen, the dangers of the seas excepted, was abandoned in the English Channel in consequence of damage received in a collision, and was taken possession of as a derelict by salvors, who towed her into an English port, and there placed her in safety. To recover salvage reward for their services the salvors promoted causes of salvage in the high court of admiralty against the barque, her cargo and freight, and caused her and her cargo to be arrested at the port to which they had so towed her. Under an order of unlivery obtained in one of these causes the cargo was unladen and found to be much damaged by sea water, and on the application of some of the salvors, and with the consent of the cargo owners, but contrary to the wishes of the owners of the ship, who offered to give bail and carry the cargo on to Bremen, the court, considering that a sale would be for the benefit of all interested, decreed that the cargo should be sold, but reserved all questions of freight. Pleadings as to freight were afterwards entered into, and the shipowners claimed to be paid, out of the proceeds of the cargo in the registry, the full amount of the freight stipulated to be paid on delivery of the cargo at Bremen:—Held, that under the circumstances the shipowners were not entitled to any freight. The Kathleen, 43 L. J., Adm. 39; L. R. 4 A. & E. 269; 31 L. T. 204; 23 W. R. 350; 2 Asp. M. C. 367.

—— Ship Abandoned as Unseaworthy.] — Freight held to be payable though the ship was abandoned abroad as unfit to come home. Edwin v. East India Co., 2 Vern. 210. Citing Westland v. Robinson, not reported.

—— Right of Underwriters.]—When on the abandonment of a ship on the voyage the cargo is taken to its destination in another vessel hired by the captain, the underwriters of the ship are not entitled to the freight due on the delivery of the cargo. Hickie v. Rodocanachi, 4 H. & N. 455; 28 L. J., Ex. 273; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 550; 7 W. R. 545.

A shipowner loaded his ship, which was bound for Liverpool, with goods on his own account, and he insured the ship and the freight of the goods by distinct insurances. The ship was stranded at S., on the English coast, twenty miles from Liverpool. The shipowner abandoned the ship to the insurers on the ship. After the abandonment the shipowner, at his own expense, had a part of his goods taken out and conveyed by lighters to Liverpool, and he, at his own expense, procured assistance, by which the ship, with the remainder of his goods on board, was brought to Liverpool. Afterwards the assurers accepted the abandonment. On the assured claiming for the loss of the ship from the assurer, the assurer claimed credit for the freight of the goods of the shipowner:—Held, that nothing in the nature of freight for the carriage of the shipowner's goods to S. passed to the abandonees; but that they were entitled to an allowance for the carriage of the part of the goods from S. to Liverpool in the ship, after the abandonment, to be estimated at the current rate of freight, as if brought from Liverpool by another ship. Miller v. Woodfall, 8 El. & Bl. 493; 27 L. J., Q. B. 120; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 302.

Guarantee of Freight — Ship Lost.] — The charterer of a ship, being unable to provide a cargo, agreed with the shipowner for the cancellation of the charterparty upon the terms that he should guarantee a freight of 900*l*. The ship sailed with a cargo of which the freight was 556*l*. 14*s*., and was lost:—Held, that the charterer was liable at least for the difference between 900*l*. and 556*l*. 14*s*. Carr v. Wallachian Petroleum Co., 36 L. J., C. P. 236; L. R. 2 C. P. 468; 16 L. T. 460; 15 W. R. 874.

Contract with several Companies.] — The plaintiffs shipped goods at Liverpool on board the defendant's ship, to be carried, as stated by the bill of lading, "viâ Colon (Aspinwall) and Panama to San Francisco; that is to say, by arrangement between the West India and Pacific Steamship Company, the Panama Railway Company, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, to be carried to Colon (Aspinwall) by the packets of the West India and Pacific Steamship Company, from Colon (Aspinwall) to Panama by the Panama Railroad Company, and thence to the port of destination by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company . . . freight and primage to be considered as earned, ship lost or not lost"; the freight being 14*l*. 5*s*. per ton payable in Liverpool. The whole freight at the aforesaid rate was paid to the defendants' agent at Liverpool, and the bill of lading was signed by him "for the service from London to Colon (Aspinwall)," and by the agent of the two other companies "for the service from Colon (Aspinwall) to San Francisco." The private arrangement entered into between the three companies for the division of the freight between themselves was set forth in the case, to which was added also a copy of the handbook published by the defendants containing the rates of freight charged for the carriage of goods from Liverpool to Colon (Aspinwall), to Panama, and to San Francisco, but not the charges for conveyance from one to another of the three last-mentioned places. The ship, having sailed from Liverpool, was lost with all her cargo before reaching Colon (Aspinwall), and the defendants, after receiving notice of the loss, paid over to the two other companies their proportion of the freight, which had been paid by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs having brought an action against the defendants for money had and received to recover the proportion of freight so paid over to the two other companies, viz. for the carriage of the goods from Colon (Aspinwall) to Panama, and from Panama to San Francisco:—Held, that the bill of lading formed one contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants for the conveyance of the goods from Liverpool to San Francisco, for one entire consideration, viz. the amount of freight paid, and not several contracts between the plaintiffs and each of the companies; and therefore, as the consideration for which the freight was paid had not wholly failed, the plaintiffs could not maintain the action against the defendants. Greeves v. West India and Pacific Steamship Co., 22 L. T. 615—Ex. Ch.

Charterers Absolved from Loading — Insurance.]—By a charterparty, which contained the exceptions of dangers and accidents of navigation, the vessel was to proceed with all convenient speed from Liverpool to Newport, and there load a cargo of iron rails for San Francisco, and the freight was to be paid on right delivery of the cargo. The vessel duly proceeded on her voyage from Liverpool to Newport, but before arriving there she took the rocks at Carnarvon Bay. She was ultimately got off the rocks, and though the damage she sustained was not such as to constitute a total loss, either actual or constructive, the time necessary for getting her off and repairing her so as to be a cargo-carrying ship, was so long as to put an end, in a commercial sense, to the commercial speculation entered upon by the shipowner and the charterers, and the latter accordingly abandoned the contract, and hired another vessel, by which they forwarded the rails to San Francisco:—Held, by a majority of the court, that under these circumstances there was a total loss of chartered freight by perils of the sea within the meaning of a policy of insurance on chartered freight on the voyage. Jackson v. Union Marine Insurance Co., 44 L. J., C. P. 27; L. R. 10 C. P. 125; 31 L. T. 789; 23 W. R. 169; 2 Asp. M. C. 435—Ex. Ch.

Cesser of Payment of Hire.]—In a charterparty it was stipulated that the appellants should provide and pay for the provisions and wages of the captain and crew, and maintain the ship in a thoroughly efficient state in hull and machinery for the service; and that "in the event of loss of time from deficiency of men or stores, breakdown of machinery, want of repairs, or damage whereby the working of the vessel was stopped for more than forty-eight consecutive hours, the payment of hire should cease until she should be again in an efficient state to resume her service." When the vessel was on a voyage under the charterparty, her high-pressure engine broke down, and it was found necessary to employ a tug in aid of the ship's low-pressure engine, to tow the ship to her destination:—Held (Lord Bramwell dissenting), that the appellants had no claim for hire for the voyage on which the tug's assistance was required, the ship not being independently efficient for that purpose. Hogarth v. Miller, 60 L. J., P. C. 1; [1891] App. Cas. 48; 64 L. T. 205; 7 Asp. M. C. 1—H. L. (Sc.). And see cases as to CESSER CLAUSE, cols. 309, 447, seq.

Hire during Discharge of Cargo.]—On the ship's arrival in port, she discharged her cargo, for which her steam winches were available:—Held (Lord Morris dissenting), that the appellants were entitled to payment of hire for the full time actually occupied in discharging the cargo, the ship being in an efficient state for that particular employment. Ib.

During Repairs.]—Where a vessel was chartered for six months certain, the freighter to pay 200*l.* per month, and so in proportion for any longer time she might be employed, the owner to keep the ship in repair during the voyage; and, in consequence of perils of the sea, the vessel was obliged to be repaired twice in the course of the voyage, which detained her uselessly to the freighter for twenty-eight days:—Held, that he was still liable for freight during such detention. Ripley v. Scaife, 7 D. & R. 818; 5 B. & C. 167; 2 Car. & P. 132.

A covenant in a charterparty, that the owner shall at his expense forthwith make the ship tight and strong for a voyage for twelve months, and keep her so, is not a condition precedent to the recovery of freight after the freighter has taken the ship into his service, and used her for a certain period; but if the freighter is afterwards delayed or injured by the necessity of repairing her, he has his remedy in damages; but if the owner's neglect to repair in the first instance precluded the freighter from making any use of the vessel, that would have gone to the whole consideration, and might have been insisted on as a bar to the action. Havelock v. Geddes, 10 East, 555; 10 R. R. 380.

For non constat, but that, after she had been used by the freighter, she wanted repair, without any default of the owner; or that he was guilty of any delay in making the repairs; and the freight would still run on during the time of repair. Ib.

Contract to Indemnify against Loss on Re-charter—Agent to Re-charter—Shipping own Cargo—Ship Lost—Meaning of Contract.]—See Yeames v. Lindsay, 3 L. T. 855; 9 W. R. 313; infra, col. 918.

3. PAYMENT.

a. To whom.

i. Generally.

Master.]—The master has a special property in the vessel, and may declare for the freight of goods as carried in his vessel, though he is not owner. Shields v. Davis, 6 Taunt. 65; 4 Camp. 119.

A captain with whom a contract is made in his own name may sue for freight under it. Seeger v. Duthie, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 72; 30 L. J., C. P. 65; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 3 L. T. 478; 9 W. R. 166—Ex. Ch.

Where the master covenanted to proceed with goods from London to Tangiers, "there to apply to the correspondents, factors or agents of the charterer for orders, whether he was to proceed to St. Lucar or Cadiz; and that, pursuant to the orders, he would make a right and true delivery to the correspondents, factors or agents of the charterer agreeably to bills of lading"; and the charterer covenanted that he would pay to the master immediately on a right and true delivery of the cargo, in full for the freight of the ship, at a certain rate in sterling money; and afterwards bills of lading were signed and delivered, making the cargo deliverable at Tangiers and St. Lucar, to P. (the charterer's agent at Tangiers), or his assigns, he or they paying freight for the goods so much in sterling money, at the current exchange at Cadiz on London; and the master was ordered by P. at Tangiers to deliver the cargo at Cadiz (by which it was averred that the master was prevented from delivering the same to any of the correspondents, factors or agents of the charterer at Tangiers or St. Lucar agreeably to the bills of lading), and did deliver it at Cadiz, to the agent of the defendant in that behalf, according to the charterparty; the master, who had received the freight from the agent, on delivery of the cargo to him, was held entitled to recover it from the charterer. Shepard v. De Bernales, 13 East, 565; 12 R. R. 442.

Obligee of Bottomry Bond.]—The receipt of freight by the obligee of a bottomry bond is, in law, a receipt of it by the shipowner, whose master has given that bond in discharge of expenses incurred in the necessary repairs of the ship. Benson v. Chapman, 2 H. L. Cas. 696; 8 C. B. 950; 13 Jur. 969.

Master or Shipowner.]—Where a master entered into a contract of affreightment, not under seal, and the shipper agreed to pay the freight at the end of the voyage by a bill at two months, without saying to whom:—Held, that the owner was entitled to receive the freight, without the intervention of the master, and that the freighter was not liable to the captain upon the contract, after he had paid the owner. Atkinson v. Cotesworth, 5 D. & R. 552; 3 B. & C. 647; 1 Car. & P. 339; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 104; 31 R. R. 450.

Agent of Ship's Husband.]—Freight to be earned by a ship on a homeward voyage belongs to the shipowner, so that an agent employed by a ship's husband to obtain a charterparty has no authority to cause it to be paid to himself, for the purpose of setting it off against a debt due to him from the ship's husband. Walshe v. Provan, 8 Ex. 843; 1 C. L. R. 823; 22 L. J., Ex. 355.

Third Party.]—Where the bill of lading provides that freight shall be payable to a third party, M., and not to the shipowner, payment for freight to the master or shipowner affords no answer to an action by M. in the name of the shipowner for nonpayment of freight. Kirchner v. Venus, 12 Moore, P. C. 361; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 395; 7 W. R. 455.

Agreement as to Joint Adventure—Assignment.]—The plaintiffs, who were shipowners, having offered their vessel for hire to the defendants, the latter objected to take it, on the ground of its being too large, whereupon the plaintiffs offered to take half the ship, as adventurers, in partnership with the defendants. It was then arranged that a charterparty should be executed by the plaintiffs and the defendants, and that an agreement as to the adventure should be signed by A., the plaintiffs' clerk, as their agent, and a memorandum of guarantee should be signed by the plaintiffs, the same to be one transaction. The agreement stated that the trading cargo should be upon the joint account and risk of the defendants and A., and that, after payment or deduction of the freight, the profit or loss should be borne and received, or paid by the parties in equal moieties. The plaintiffs, by the memorandum of guarantee, guaranteed A. from all losses and expenses happening in the course of such trading. The plaintiffs being indebted to D. & Co., subsequently deposited the charterparty with them as a security, with an indorsement upon it directed to the defendants, and requiring them to pay the amount of what was due to D. & Co. Notice of this was afterwards given to the defendants. The action was brought by D. & Co. to recover the freight due under the charterparty:—Held, that the defendants were bound to pay freight to the shipowners, and that the parties were then to bear and receive equally the loss and profit of the adventure. Boyd v. Mangles, 3 Ex. 387; 18 L. J., Ex. 273. See Mangles v. Dixon, 3 H. L. Cas. 702.

Privity of Contract.]—Messrs. G., merchants in Spain, entered into a charterparty with the master of a vessel, at a port in Spain, and by the charterparty it was agreed that the vessel should load a complete cargo of flour, the captain to sign bills of lading at more or less freight without prejudice to the agreement; and the vessel was to proceed with her cargo to Liverpool, and deliver the same on payment of the freight in a lump sum of 100*l*. Messrs. G. loaded the vessel with 1,350 sacks of flour, and consigned the same to L. de B., in England. P. put on board 500 sacks, for which the master gave a bill of lading, providing for the delivery of the same in the name of P. to the defendants, "paying him freight according to contract with Messrs. G." These 500 sacks were shipped on the joint account of P. and the defendants, and the latter, whilst the flour was in transit, became the sole owners thereof, by purchase from P. of his interest therein. P. sent the bill of lading to the defendants, inclosed in a letter, stating that the bill of lading did not express the freight, but that he had given a letter or order in favour of Messrs. G., that, on good delivery, the defendants would pay Messrs. G. the freight on the 500 sacks. The amount of freight mentioned in this letter exceeded that specified in the charterparty. In this letter or order there was a request to the defendants to deliver the amount of the freight to L. de B. On the delivery of the cargo L. de B. paid the whole amount of the freight to the master, and afterwards applied to the defendants for payment of the freight of the 500 sacks, but they refused to pay the full amount of the freight claimed, on the ground that the flour had been damaged in the carriage. In an action by the master against the defendants for the freight of the 500 sacks of flour:—Held, that there was no evidence of any contract between the defendants and the master with respect to this portion of the cargo; but that the defendants, if liable, were only liable to Messrs. G., upon a sub-contract with them. Zwilchenbart v. Henderson, 9 Ex. 722; 23 L. J., Ex. 234.

Owners or Charterers—Exceptions.]—By a charterparty it was "agreed that (the cabin and state-rooms, and sufficient room, ship's stores, provisions, water, and crew throughout this charterparty being excepted, reserving, however, every such room only for that purpose as the owners would, were the ship to be loaded for their exclusive benefit) the vessel shall immediately be ready, and take on board from the charterers (who were to have the full reach of the vessel's hold from bulkhead to bulkhead, including the deck) a full and complete cargo," and thereupon proceed to Halifax:—Held, that the owners of the vessel, and not the charterers, were entitled to the freight for goods loaded on the deck of the vessel. Neill v. Ridley, 9 Ex. 677; 2 C. L. R. 1018.

—— Authority of Master.]—By a charterparty between the captain, for the owners of a ship, and the charterers, the charterers agreed to pay a lump sum of freight, part to be received by the captain abroad, and the balance to be paid by the charterers' acceptance, payable in London at three months' date from the day of sailing. The charterers were to have the option of naming the lumpers and stevedores, and such goods only as they might direct were to be received on board. It was also agreed that the master should, at the charterers' request, sign bills of lading in the usual manner, and at any rate of freight that might be filled in, and made payable in any manner the charterers might choose, without prejudice to the charter. The vessel was loaded by the charterers as a general ship, and the master signed bills of lading presented by the charterers, at such rates and payable in such manner as they requested. The bills of lading did not specify to whom the freight was to be paid:—Held, that the master signed the bills of lading as agent of the charterers, and therefore the shipowner was not entitled to claim from the shippers the freight which remained due from them when the charterers stopped payment. Marquand v. Banner, 6 El. & Bl. 232; 25 L. J., Q. B. 313; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 708.

Under Bill of Lading.]—A defendant shipped at Liverpool on board the plaintiffs' vessel goods, and the master signed a bill of lading which stated that the goods were shipped by the defendant "as agent," and were to be delivered at the port of Colombo, "unto order or assigns, he or they paying freight for the goods." Before the shipment, the plaintiffs advanced to E., on whose account the goods were shipped, 400*l.*, upon an undertaking by him that he would indorse to them, as a security, a bill of lading of the goods, wherein the freight should be payable by E. in this country. The defendant indorsed the bill of lading to E., who indorsed it to the plaintiffs as a security for the advance, and a further advance made upon an estimate between the plaintiffs and E., of the value of the goods, freight free. E. not having paid the freight:—Held, that the defendant was liable under the bill of lading to pay the freight to the plaintiffs. Fox v. Nott, 6 H. & N. 630; 30 L. J., Ex. 259; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 663.

Bankruptcy of Shipowner—Notice by Assignees to Charterer.]—Where the master of a ship on behalf of the owner lets the ship on charterparty to A., and the owner becomes bankrupt, and his assignees give notice to A. not to pay any further sums of money on account thereof to the master; this notice will affect A. as to all sums paid afterwards by him to the master, beyond what the master had actually paid or stood engaged for on account of the ship, at the time of the notice; but will not defeat payments made to that extent. Wilkins v. Mure, 1 Cox, 150.

Receiver Appointed in Chancery—Arrest of Freight in Admiralty.]—The Bloomer, 11 L. T. 46; infra, XXVI. ADMIRALTY LAW AND PRACTICE, col. 920.

Payment to Ship's Husband—Disbursements.]—A ship's husband is entitled to receive freight, and to deduct his disbursements therefrom. Harris v. Reynolds, 4 W. R. 278.

Part Owner may Sue for.]—An action for freight may be brought by a part owner on behalf of himself and the other part owners. De Hart v. Stephenson, 45 L. J., Q. B. 575; 1 Q. B. D. 313; 24 W. R. 367.

Dissenting Part Owner.]—A part owner is not entitled to any part of the freight earned upon a voyage from the setting out of which he dissents. Boson v. Sandford, Carth. 63; Levinz, pp. 3, 258.

Shipowner or Charterer.]—Shipowners chartered their ship to carry coals from England to Jamaica as ordered, and bring home a cargo of sugar at specified rates of freight—"master to sign bills of lading as required, without prejudice to this charterparty, and if the draft for payment of coal freight is drawn to his order, to indorse the same payable to charterers' order." The charterers afterwards contracted with various shippers for carriage of their goods, and bills of lading were given to them by the master, at the request of the charterers:—Held, that the shipowners had no direct right of action against the shippers for freight, and that it could not be arrested in the hands of the shipper, so as to found jurisdiction against the shipowners. Mitchell v. Burn, 2 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 900.

Sub-Freight paid to Shipowner—Prepaid by Shipper—Repayment.]—A shipmaster, appointed by the owners of a ship under charterparty, has a lien on cargo put on board by a sub-freighter to the extent of the sub-freight. Therefore a person to whom cargo was consigned, who had paid the master full freight in ignorance that the shipper had paid part of the freight to the charterer, cannot get repayment of it from the shipowners. Youle v. Chapman, 6 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 427.

ii. On Assignment.

Of Ship.]—If the owner of a ship, having chartered her for a voyage, assigns her before its completion, and afterwards assigns the charterparty to another, if she earns freight, the assignee of the ship is entitled to the freight as incident to the ship. Morrison v. Parsons, 2 Taunt. 407; 11 R. R. 622.

But he cannot sue on the charterparty otherwise than in the name of the assignor. Ib.

A covenant in a charterparty to pay freight to the owner for the hire of the vessel is not transferred to the vendee by a bill of sale of the ship made during the voyage; and such owner afterwards becoming bankrupt, his assignees, and not the vendee of the ship, have the legal right to receive the freight and demurrage due from the freighter upon the charterparty. Splidt v. Bowles, 10 East, 279 ; 10 R. R. 296.

Re-Transfer of Ship by Way of Security—Possession.]—A re-transfer of a ship to a vendor, absolute in terms, but intended as a security for the payment of the purchase-money, the ship then being on a voyage, and the transfer not mentioning freight, does not pass the freight to the transferee until, at all events, he has claimed it, and done some act tantamount to taking possession. Gardner v. Cazenove, 1 H. & N. 423 ; 26 L. J., Ex. 17 ; 5 W. R. 195.

Where Agreement for Partnership.] — The plaintiffs, who were shipowners, offered their vessel for hire to the defendants, and the latter objected to take it, on the ground that it was too large, whereupon an arrangement was entered into for a partnership adventure in the vessel. The plaintiffs being indebted to D. & Co., subsequently deposited the charterparty with them as a security with an indorsement upon it, directed to the defendants, requiring them to pay the amount of what was due to D. & Co., and notice was given to the defendants. In an action by D. & Co. to recover the freight due under the charterparty :—Held, that the transaction amounted to an absolute assignment to D. & Co. Boyd v. Mangles, 3 Ex. 387 ; 18 L. J., Ex. 273.

Of Freight—After Vessel Sold.]—The right to freight is incidental to the ownership of the vessel which earns it, and therefore a transfer of a share in a ship passes the corresponding share in the freight, under an existing charterparty, without the mention of the word "freight." Lindsay v. Gibbs, 22 Beav. 522 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1039 ; 4 W. R. 788.

A ship was chartered by her owner. Afterwards, in June, 1854, he sold twenty-four shares of the ship to A., and the remaining forty shares to B., and in December he assigned the freight to C. A. registered before, and B. after, C.'s assignment ; but C. gave the first notice to the charterers :—Held, that C.'s right to the freight had priority over B., but not over A. Ib.

Freight to be Earned.]—An assignment by the owners of a ship of freight to be earned, is good. Douglas v. Russell, 4 Sim. 524. Affirmed, 1 Myl. & K. 488.

A., a shipowner, assigned to B. the freight earned and to be earned by one of his ships, and afterwards chartered her to C. for a voyage to S. The outward freight was paid before the ship sailed. The charterparty afterwards was delivered to B. by A.'s direction, and B. gave notice of the assignment to C. Afterwards, but before the ship returned, A. became bankrupt :—Held, that the homeward freight was not in A.'s order and disposition at his bankruptcy, and, therefore, that B. was entitled to it. Ib.

An assignment of the freight and profits of a ship does not extend to profits not in existence, actual or potential, at the time of the assignment ; therefore, where C. assigned by deed to S. the freight, earnings and profits of a ship, which ship afterwards, in a voyage to the South Seas, obtained a quantity of oil, the produce of whales taken in the said voyage :—Held, that this oil did not pass to S. by the assignment, for the assignor had no property, actual or potential, in the oil at the time of assignment, and the voyage was not then contemplated. Robinson v. Macdonnell, 5 M. & S. 228 ; 5 B. & Ald. 134.

An assignment to a third party of freight, or a fixed sum out of freight, passes, as between part owners, only net freight, but a mortgagee, not in possession when the freight was received, has no locus standi afterwards to insist on such a construction. The Edmund, Lush. 58 ; 29 L. J., Adm. 76 ; 2 L. T. 192.

A., in consideration of money advanced and to be advanced by B. & Co., assigned all the freight to arise from a ship, under any existing or future charterparty or other contract, for or in respect of her intended voyage to India and back to England. After the freight had been earned and ascertained, A. became bankrupt :—Held, that such assignment was good, and that his assignees were not entitled to sue for the freight. Leslie v. Guthrie, 1 Scott, 683 ; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 697 ; 4 L. J., C. P. 227.

Notice of Assignment given before Payment.]—Action upon a charterparty for freight. Plea, discharge. Replication, on equitable grounds, that before the discharge the plaintiff assigned his interest in the charterparty to S., of which the defendant had notice, and that the discharge was given in fraud of S., and that the action was brought by S. in the name of the plaintiff for the sole benefit of S. :—Held, a good replication. De Pothonier v. De Mattos, El. Bl. & El. 461 ; 27 L. J., Q. B. 260 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1034 ; 6 W. R. 628.

Set-off—Notice of Assignment.]—In an action for freight the defendant pleaded a set-off, to which the plaintiff replied, on equitable grounds, that while the freight was in the course of being earned, he assigned it for value to A., of which the defendant, before the debt became due and before the action was brought, had notice ; and that the plaintiff was suing only as trustee for A. :—Held, no answer to the plea. Wilson v. Gabriel, 4 B. & S. 243 ; 8 L. T. 502 ; 11 W. R. 803.

—— By Holders of Bill of Lading.]—The holders of a bill of lading cannot, as against the assignees of the freight, set off a debt due to them from the original owner of the goods who was also the assignor of the freight. Wegnelin v. Collier, 42 L. J., Ch. 758 ; L. R. 6 H. L. 286 ; 22 W. R. 26.

Fraud—Release by Shipowner before Sale of Ship.]—Action by a shipowner upon a charterparty for nonpayment of freight by the charterer, and for money payable for freight, and on an account stated. Pleas, a discharge before breach ; payment, and (on equitable grounds) a parol release of the plaintiff by the defendant after the cause of action accrued. A replication, that, before action accrued, and before release or discharge or payment, all the right, title and interest of the plaintiff in the ship, and in the charterparty, were assigned to S., and then became, and are vested in him, of which the defendant had notice before the release or discharge or payment ; that the plaintiff released and discharged the defendant, and made the payment without the authority, knowledge or consent of S. ; that the release and discharge were given by the plaintiff to the defendant and obtained by the defendant from the plaintiff and the payment made fraudulently, and with the intent to defraud S., and prevent him from recovering in respect of the causes of action, and that the action was brought by S., in the name of the plaintiff, on behalf of S.; that the plaintiff had no interest in the action, and that it had been commenced and carried on for the sole use and benefit, and at the sole expense and cost of S.—is a good replication, on equitable grounds. De Pothonier v. De Mattos, El. Bl. & El. 461; 27 L. J., Q. B. 260; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1034.

iii. On Mortgage.

Extent of Right of Mortgagees.]—A mortgagee of a ship does not, ordinarily speaking, obtain by the mortgage alone a transfer, by way of contract or assignment, of the right to freight. The mortgagor remains dominus of the ship, with regard to everything relating to its employment or non-employment, or to any rate of freight to be earned by its employment, until the mortgagee takes possession. The mortgagee on taking possession becomes the owner, and it is by virtue of that ownership, and not by virtue of any antecedent contract or right, that he is entitled to receive the freight which, by contract or otherwise, is lawfully payable. Keith v. Burrows, 46 L. J., C. P. 801; 2 App. Cas. 636; 37 L. T. 291; 25 W. R. 831; 3 Asp. M. C. 481—H. L. (E.)

A mortgage of a vessel carries with it the freight, and the mortgagee intervening by taking possession, or by an act equivalent to taking possession, before the freight becomes payable, is entitled as against the mortgagor, or his assignees in bankruptcy, to receive it. Rusden v. Pope, 37 L. J., Ex. 137; L. R. 3 Ex. 269; 18 L. T. 651; 16 W. R. 1122.

By the mortgage of a ship, accruing freight passes to the mortgagee as incident to the ship, notwithstanding 6 Geo. 4, c. 110, s. 45, which enacted that the mortgagee should not be deemed owner, except for the purpose of making a transfer. Dean v. M'Ghee, 4 Bing. 45; 2 Car. & P. 387; 12 Moore, 185; 5 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 44. S. P., Kerswell v. Bishop, 2 C. & J. 529; 2 Tyr. 602; 1 L. J., Ex. 227.

Freight Already Paid to Mortgagor.]—The mortgage of a ship carries with it the right to receive the freight earned by the ship; and although the mortgagee cannot recover back from the mortgagor freight which he has allowed the mortgagor to receive, yet he may at any time intercept the freight by giving notice to the mortgagor, consignee or charterer, that he intends to exercise his right of property, and to require the freight to be paid to him. Wilson v. Wilson, 41 L. J., Ch. 423; L. R. 14 Eq. 32; 26 L. T. 346; 20 W. R. 436; 1 Asp. M. C. 265.

A mere mortgage of a ship does not give a mortgagee a right to the earnings of a ship received by the mortgagor after the execution of the mortgage, but before the mortgagee takes possession. Willis v. Palmer, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 340; 29 L. J., C. P. 194; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 732; 2 L. T. 626; 8 W. R. 295.

At what Time Right Accrues.]—When an entire ship is in mortgage, in order to defeat the right of the mortgagor to receive the freight, the mortgagee must take possession of her before the completion of the voyage; but where the mortgagor of certain shares is ship's husband, if the mortgagees join with the owners of the other shares in the appointment of a new ship's husband before the completion of the voyage, the mortgagor loses all right as ship's husband to receive the freight. Beynon v. Godden, 3 Ex. D. 263; 39 L. T. 82; 26 W. R. 672; 4 Asp. M. C. 10—C. A.

Deductions—Advances by Charterers.]—By the terms of a charterparty it was provided that the charterers should advance necessary funds for the ship's disbursements, not exceeding a specified amount, at the port of lading. Previously to entering into the charterparty the owner had mortgaged the ship and freight. The charterers made advances for the ship's disbursements, considerably in excess of the amount specified in the charterparty. Before the freight became due the mortgagee took possession of the ship, and stopped the cargo for freight:—Held, that the charterers were not entitled to deduct from the amount due for freight the advances made by them in excess of the sum provided by the charterparty. Tanner v. Phillips, 42 L. J., Ch. 125; 27 L. T. 717; 21 W. R. 68; 1 Asp. M. C. 448.

Payment of Wages.]—If the brokers of the mortgagee of a ship, who has taken possession, receive the freight, it is not recoverable from them by the assignees of the mortgagor (he having become bankrupt), if a sum equal in amount has been applied by the mortgagee to the payment of the seamen's wages. Dean v. M'Ghee, supra.

Priorities—Claim for Necessaries.]—A claimant for necessaries has no maritime lien and no equity to precede the mortgagee. The Two Ellens, Johnson v. Black, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 398; 41 L. J., Adm. 33; L. R. 4 P. C. 161; 26 L. T. 1; 20 W. R. 592.

—— Between Mortgagees.]—The first registered mortgagee of a ship, by taking possession of her before the freight is completely earned, obtains a legal right to receive the freight, and to retain thereout not only what is due on his first mortgage, but also the amount of any subsequent charge which he may have acquired on the freight, in priority to every equitable charge of which he had no notice; and it makes no difference that a subsequent incumbrancer was the first to give notice to the charterers of his charge on the freight. Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Wilson, 41 L. J., Ch. 798; L. R. 7 Ch. 507; 26 L. T. 717; 20 W. R. 665.

—— Mortgagee and Assignee of Freight.]—A vessel was chartered to proceed to A., there take in a cargo to be shipped by the charterers, and return direct to London. After the ship's arrival in the port of London, and whilst the cargo was in course of delivery, a mortgagee, under an ordinary statutory mortgage made prior to the date of the charterparty, took possession:—Held, that he thereby acquired a right to the freight in priority to an assignee of the freight by a deed executed subsequently to the charterparty, notice of which had been given to the charterers. Brown v. Tanner, 37 L. J., Ch. 923; L. R. 3 Ch. 567; 18 L. T. 624; 16 W. R. 882; 1 Asp. M. C. 208.

Mortgagee Suing in his own Name.]—It was formerly held that the mortgagee of a ship could not sue in his own name for the freight accruing after the mortgage, and before he took possession. Chinnery v. Blackburne, 1 H. Bl. 117, n.; 3 Dougl. 391; 2 R. R. 731. And see Briggs v. Wilkinson, 9 D. & R. 871; 7 B. & C. 30; 5 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 349.

Title to Goods.]—S. & F., owners of a ship, mortgaged her to the plaintiff, and also assigned to him all the freight to be earned by the ship. S. & F. retained possession of the ship, and sent her to Cuba, expecting to find there a return cargo; but none was ready. The captain, therefore, determined to buy for his owners a return cargo for an English port, and he obtained a cargo of wood from T. & Co., who supplied it to him, and took a bill of lading for the wood from the captain, who by the bill of lading bound himself "to deliver it in the like good order in the said port, or in such other my manifest may appoint, to order ——, who, on faithful delivery being shewn, shall pay me —— for freight and conveyance." A black line was drawn through the space in the bill of lading usually filled up with the amount of the freight. T. & Co. sent to M. & Co., of Havannah, the bill of lading and the invoice of the goods, stating them to be "shipped by order of M. & Co., of Havannah, and for account of risk of whom it may concern." M. & Co. paid T. & Co. for the goods, and drew bills for the price on an English merchant, who refused to accept them. The defendant thereupon accepted the bills for the honour of the drawer, and paid them when due. He also received the bills of lading indorsed in blank to T. & Co. S. & F. became bankrupt. The plaintiff took possession of the ship on its arrival in England, and claimed freight for the cargo:—Held, that he was so entitled, as the goods remained the property of T. & Co. under the bill of lading. Gumm v. Tyrie, 6 B. & S. 299; 34 L. J., Q. B. 124; 13 W. R. 436—Ex. Ch.

Right of Mortgagees to Freight.]—See Keith v. Burrows, and Cases supra, cols. 178–182.

b. By Whom.

i. Consignor or Consignee.

Goods deliverable to Order under Bill of Lading—Assignment of Freight.]—Though freight may not be payable in respect of a man's own goods conveyed in his own ship, it becomes so if he makes third persons, who have advanced him money, the consignees of those goods, and the goods are by the bill of lading deliverable to their order. Weguelin v. Cellier, 42 L. J., Ch. 758; L. R. 6 H. L. 286; 22 W. R. 26.

T. & Co., who acted as the London bankers for Holm of Stockholm, consented to open a credit in his favour with merchants at Akyab for the purchase of "rice for the English market shipped by vessels of my own, the 'Java,' &c., at, &c., f. o. b." The rice was purchased and shipped on board the "Java," and made deliverable to the order of T. & Co., who accepted bills to cover the purchase. The bill of lading was indorsed to them; it described the goods "to be delivered in like good order, &c., unto T. & Co. or their assigns; freight for the goods 4*l.* 5*s.* per ton of 20 cwt. net, delivered with primage and average accustomed." While the "Java" was on its voyage, Holm obtained advances from C. & Co., to whom he assigned the freight as security:—Held, that, under these circumstances, C. & Co. were entitled to the freight, and T. & Co. were, like all other consignees of a cargo, liable to pay it under the terms of the bill of lading, although the cargo was in fact brought to England in Holm's own vessel, the "Java." Ib.

Implied Contract.]—On a bill of lading of goods "shipped by A. to be delivered to B. or his assigns, he or they paying freight," if the goods are delivered without receiving the freight, the shipper is not liable for the freight, there being no charterparty. Drew v. Bird, M. & M. 156.

Unless he has made a subsequent promise to pay such freight. Ib.

A charterparty was entered into in London on the 17th of June, 1872, between the master of a ship lying at London, and L., a shipbroker, to carry 407 tons of iron from H. to G., at freight of 7*s.* 3*d.* per ton. Freight to be paid in London on signing bills of lading, the owner or master to have an absolute lien for freight. On the following day L. chartered the ship to the defendant at 8*s.* per ton for the same amount of iron. The charter contained similar clauses as to freight and lien, and the following clause at the end: "The brokerage of 5 per cent. is due on the execution of this charter to L., by whom the vessel is to be entered and cleared at the port of loading." Though the defendant thought he was treating with L. as broker for the ship, L. had no authority in fact to act as broker for the plaintiff, or to receive the freight; and neither the plaintiff nor the defendant knew of the charter entered into by the other. The cargo having been put on board by the defendant, the master signed bills of lading making it deliverable to consignees or assigns, "they paying freight for the goods as per charterparty." The plaintiff did not demand the freight on signing the bills of lading. The cargo was duly delivered at the port of discharge, and in the meantime L. obtained payment of the freight of 8*s.* per ton from the defendant and afterwards stopped payment, leaving the 7*s.* 3*d.* per ton unpaid to the plaintiff. The plaintiff having sued the defendant for the 7*s.* 3*d.* per ton for the carriage of the iron:—Held, that he could not recover, for that he and the defendant never were ad idem, and consequently there was no express contract between them; and that, under the circumstances, no contract to pay reasonable freight for the carriage could be implied on the shipment of the goods. Schmidt v. Tiden, 43 L. J., Q. B. 199; L. R. 9 Q. B. 446; 30 L. T. 891; 22 W. R. 913; 2 Asp. M. C. 307.

Goods were laden in Jamaica on board a ship, according to a bill of lading, which stated them to have been shipped by J., on a vessel bound for London, on account of the defendant, and that they were to be delivered in London to the consignees, paying freight for the same at the rate therein mentioned: the goods so shipped were the property of the defendant. The captain having delivered the goods to the consignees without receiving the freight:—Held, that the defendant was liable by law to pay the freight to the shipowners, independently of any express contract by charterparty. Domett v. Beckford, 5 B. & Ad. 521; 2 N. & M. 374; 3 L. J., K. B. 10.

Where the master, as agent for his owners, entered into a charterparty with a partner in the house of M. & Co., for the delivery of goods upon a stipulated freight, and the goods were delivered to M. & Co., who were the consignees named in the bill of lading:—Held, that the owners could not maintain an action against that partner for the freight. Schack v. Anthony, 1 M. & S. 573.

Rights against Both.]—If the master signs a bill of lading, expressing that upon the delivery of the cargo freight is to be paid by the consignees, he does not thereby renounce his claim for freight against the consignor. Christy v. Row, 1 Taunt. 300; 9 R. R. 776.

Entry of Name at Custom House—Custom to Charge.]—Where goods are shipped to the orders of the shipper, the custom of charging the person in whose name the goods are entered at the custom house with freight, can only exist where the same person is consignee, or where the consignee is unknown. Artaza v. Smallpiece, 1 Esp. 23. See Cock v. Taylor, infra, col. 403.

Evidence to Charge Consignee.]—The consignee of goods, where there is no bill of lading, is not in general liable for the freight; but prior dealings with him, and payments by him of the freight on former occasions of the same kind, are evidence to shew that in the particular case he contracted on the receipt of the goods to pay the freight. Coleman v. Lambert, 5 M. & W. 502; 9 L. J., Ex. 43.

Effect of Clause "He or they Paying Freight."]—The usual clause in a bill of lading, engaging the master of the ship to deliver the goods to the consignee or his assigns, "he or they paying freight for the said goods," is introduced for the benefit of the master only, and not for the benefit of the consignor; and therefore the master is not bound to the consignor to withhold the delivery of the goods, unless the consignee or his assigns pay the freight. Nor does it vary the case that the consignor was also the charterer of the ship. Shepard v. De Bernales, 13 East, 565; 12 R. R. 442.

What Deductions.]—A. consigns goods to B., with directions to pay over the net proceeds to C.; B. employs D. to dispose of them. In an action by C. to recover the proceeds from D., D. is entitled to make the same deductions for freight as B. (who was the owner of the ship in which the goods were brought) might have made. Blackburn v. Kymer, 1 Marsh. 223, 278; 5 Taunt. 584, 672.

Expenses to which charterers have been subjected by the master's refusal for a time to receive parts of the cargo on board could not be set off against a claim for freight by the shipowner, nor deducted from damages. Seeger v. Duthie, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 72; 30 L. J., C. P. 65; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 3 L. T. 478; 9 W. R. 166—Ex. Ch.

Mortgagees of Cargo—Consignees.]—The consignees in the bills of lading were the bankers of the owner of the ship, at whose request the consignment was made. The consignors drew bills upon them for the price of the cargo, which they paid at maturity:—Held, that they did not thereby become owners for the purpose of freight, and were entitled to the first charge on the proceeds of the cargo. Collier v. Hinde, 17 L. T. 341; 16 W. R. 1184. And see, supra, IX. MORTGAGE.

Chancery Jurisdiction.]—The court will not entertain a bill by a shipowner against a freighter for an account of what is due in respect of freight, though the charterparty expressed that the freight was to be paid according to the quantity of the cargo, and it was charged that, in the bill of lading that quantity was stated untruly. Long v. Young, 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 139.

The court will entertain a suit for an account of the freight of a ship grounded on a contract which also contains stipulations affecting to give an ultimate right of property in the ship, and which may not be capable of being recognised or enforced as a whole, for want of being registered; provided the title to the freight is distinct from, and does not necessarily depend upon, a title to the ship claimed under such contract. Davenport v. Whitmore, 2 Myl. & C. 177; 6 L. J., Ch. 58.

T., by instrument under seal, chartered N.'s vessel to convey merchandise to the port of London, and consigned the merchandise to L. and H., who were to pay the freight within ten days after delivery to them. The merchandise was delivered to L. and H., pursuant to the bill of lading. N. held to have no right against L. and H., and N.'s bill dismissed against the present representatives of H., L. having become bankrupt. Nockells v. Lingham, 2 Jur. 438.

Liability for—Bill of Lading.]—See Sewell v. Burdick, ante, col. 357.

Consignee for Sale—Liability for Freight.—Deposit of Freight with Wharfinger]—25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, ss. 66-72.]—Where a shipowner has, under s. 67 of the Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment Act, 1862, deposited goods with a warehouseman, and the consignee for sale in this country has deposited the amount of freight under s. 70 of the same act, the shipowner's lien is discharged, and the consignee may obtain delivery of the goods ex warehouse without a contract being implied on his part to undertake any personal liability for the amount of the freight. White v. Furness, Withy & Co., The Inchulva, 64 L. J., Q. B. 161; [1895] A. C. 40; 11 R. 53; 72 L. T. 157; 7 Asp. M. C. 574—H. L. (E.)

Master's Gratuity—Liability of Consignee.]—By charterparty cargo was to be delivered upon payment of freight at a stated rate, and 1*s.* per ton gratuity for the captain on good delivery of the cargo. One of the bills of lading for part of the cargo stated that the goods shipped were to be delivered, "assigns paying freight for the said goods as per charterparty":—Held, that the consignees were liable for the master's gratuity:—Held, also, that though part of the goods were damaged by sea perils, the gratuity was payable. Howitt v. Paul, 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 321.

ii. Agent, Factor, Broker, or Charterer.

Liability of—Payment Unauthorised.]—The brokers employed by the assignees of a bill of lading sold the goods, but when called upon for delivery, found them to be stopped for freight, which, to obtain possession of the property, they paid, although their principals had formerly directed them not to do so, as the freight had been paid in Bengal:—Held, that this advance by the brokers was made in their own wrong, though the freight had not in fact been paid in Bengal, as the principals supposed. Howard v. Tucker, 1 B. & Ad. 712.

—— Receipt of Cargo—Practice.]—Where the consignees of a West India cargo, deliverable by bill of lading to them or their assigns, he or they paying the freight for the same, indorsed it on their brokers, for advances made by them, and the cargo on its arrival was landed at the West India Docks in the names of the consignees, but was entered at the custom-house by the brokers in their own names, and afterwards they obtained delivery from the West India Docks under an order from the consignees for that purpose, and not under the bill of lading:—Held, that the receipt of the cargo by the brokers under the order of the consignees was not a sufficient ground to raise an implied assumpsit on their part to pay the freight, and the entry at the custom-house made no difference; but as it appeared from previous dealings that they had been in the habit of receiving goods in the same manner, and paying the freight for them, that was considered sufficient to raise such an implied promise. Wilson v. Kymer, 1 M. & S. 157. See Cock v. Taylor, infra, col. 403.

—— Acceptance.]—A. and B., merchants abroad, shipped tobacco for Liverpool, consigned to A. himself there, to whose order the bills of lading were made; one of these bills was sent inclosed in a letter from the shippers to C. at Liverpool, advising him of such consignment to A., and that A. intended to proceed to Liverpool, but in case he should not arrive in time, desiring C. to do the best for them. The tobacco having arrived in a damaged state before A., was required to be landed, and was deposited in the king's warehouse pursuant to the statute, and afterwards C., acting as agent for A. within the knowledge of the captain, made an entry of it in his own name in the custom-house to avoid seizure:—Held, that this was not such an acceptance of the cargo by C. as would make him liable to the captain for the freight. Ward v. Felton, 1 East, 507.

Signing as Agent.]—A party received on board his ship coals from the Burntisland Company, to be carried to London; and the captain signed a bill of lading, by which the coals were made deliverable unto "N. T. for the London Gas Company, or to his assigns, he or they paying freight for the goods 10*s.* per ton in cash of true delivery." On the arrival of the ship in London N. T. produced the bill of lading and received the goods under it, and afterwards offered to pay the freight by a bill at two months:—Held, that he was not personally liable, inasmuch as on the face of the bill of lading he was a mere agent to receive the goods for the company, the property vesting in the company. Amos v. Temperley, 8 M. & W. 798; 11 L. J., Ex. 183. And see Fox v. Nott, supra, col. 391.

Where the consignee and agent of a vessel chartered for a specific voyage entered into an agreement with the captain, describing himself as "consignee and agent of the brig and cargo on behalf of H., merchant of L.," the agreement stating that "it was witnessed that the parties agreed that the vessel should go to another port, there discharge the remainder of her cargo, and receive a full and complete homeward cargo at the same freight as she would have got had she proceeded on the voyage stipulated in the charter-party," and the consignee signed the agreement in his own name, without describing himself as agent:—Held, that he thereby made himself personally liable to pay the amount of the freight of the homeward voyage. Kennedy v. Gouveia, 3 D. & R. 503; 26 R. R. 616.

Evidence of Usage.]—The manager of a stone quarry signed a shipping note, expressing that stone was shipped on board the plaintiff's vessel to be carried for the owner of the quarry, who, however, never appeared. In reality it was shipped for the purchaser of the stone, the real consignee. In an action for freight and demurrage, evidence of usage that the quarry owner never paid freight or demurrage, was admitted, and the question whether the stone was shipped for the manager of the quarry was left to the jury upon all the circumstances. Dickenson v. Lano, 2 F. & F. 188.

Indorsing Bills of Lading.]—See infra.

Liability of Charterer—Cesser Clause.]—Notwithstanding that a charterparty provides that the liabilities of the charterer are to cease on the vessel being loaded, "the master and owner having a lien on the cargo for all freight and demurrage under this charterparty," the liability of the charterer to pay the charterparty freight will continue after the vessel is loaded, if the charterparty enables bills of lading to be presented in such a form as to make the owner's lien not commensurate with the liability which is to cease. Clink v. Radford ([1891] 1 Q. B. 625), followed. Hansen v. Harrold, 63 L. J., Q. B. 744; [1894] 1 Q. B. 612; 9 R. 315; 70 L. T. 475; 7 Asp. M. C. 464—C. A.

Charterers' Agent collecting Freight—Liability to Shipowner.]—On the ship's arrival the charterers' agent, to whom the ship was addressed, collected the freight from consignees on delivery of the goods, and without authority from master or owner compromised a claim for damage to a butt of wine by a money payment:—Held, that he must account for the full freight to the shipowner. Broadhead v. Yule, 9 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 921.

iii. Assignee, Appointee, or Indorsee.

Effect of Indorsing Bills of Lading.]—Goods shipped at Bombay, on board a ship, were, by the bill of lading, to be delivered unto order or to his and their assigns, on paying freight for the same. The shipper indorsed the bill of lading and forwarded it to East India agents in London, who indorsed it in blank to their factors in Liverpool. On the arrival of the goods at Liverpool the factors presented the bill of lading to the shipowner and received the goods, and he debited them with the freight. The factors, without having paid the freight, became bankrupt, and thereupon the shipowner claimed from them and took possession of the goods:—Held, that the East India agents were not liable for the freight. Tobin v. Crawford, 5 M. & W. 235. Affirmed, 9 M. & W. 716; 12 L. J., Ex. 490—Ex. Ch.

Goods were consigned to I. C. & Co. or their assigns, "he or they paying freight for the same"; I. C. & Co. indorsed the bill of lading to K., their broker, and then became bankrupt; the shipowners, in ignorance of the circumstances, applied to I. C. & Co. for the freight, and then sued K. for it:—Held, that he was liable. Dougal v. Kemble, 11 Moore, 251; 3 Bing. 383; 4 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 103; 28 R. R. 648.

The indorsee of a bill of lading, which directs the goods to be delivered to order or to assigns, paying freight, is liable for the freight, though he is only acting as broker for the consignee; and though twelve months have elapsed since the landing of the goods without any demand of freight, he is bound not to deliver the goods till he knows that freight has been paid. Bell v. Kymer, 1 Marsh. 146; 5 Taunt. 477; 3 Camp. 545. See 15 R. R. 261.

But an indorsee of a bill of lading, who has indorsed the same over before the arrival of the vessel and delivery of the cargo, does not, under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111. s. 1, remain liable for the freight. Smurthwaite v. Wilkins, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 842; 31 L. J., C. P. 214; 5 L. T. 842; 7 L. T. 65; 10 W. R. 386.

Receiving Goods—Evidence of Promise to Pay.]—The master having contracted by the bill of lading with the shippers to deliver goods to certain persons or their assigns, he or they paying freight for the same, the demanding and taking of such goods from the master by a purchaser and assignee of the bill of lading, without the freight having been paid, is evidence of a new contract and promise on the part of such purchaser, as the ultimate appointee of the shippers for the purpose of delivery, to pay the freight. Cock v. Taylor, 13 East, 399; 2 Camp. 587; 12 R. R. 378.

Where a ship was chartered on a voyage out and home for a specified time, at a certain rate of payment on the homeward cargo, in full for the hire of the ship for the time, to be paid in part by an advance on the ship's clearing for the outward voyage, and the rest on her return, by bills payable at a future day; and, on the loading the homeward cargo, a bill of lading was signed to deliver the goods to the charterers or their assigns, he or they paying freight for the goods, as per charterparty:—Held, that the indorsees of the bill of lading for valuable consideration were not liable to the shipowner upon an implied assumpsit to pay the freight arising out of the receipt of the goods under the bill of lading. Moorsom v. Kymer, 2 M. & S. 303; 3 Camp. 549, n.; 15 R. R. 261.

Goods being shipped in India for London on account of a person there, the bill of lading was forwarded to him, and he indorsed it over for value. The bill of lading, signed by the captain, stated the freight to have been paid in Bengal, but it was found after the above transfer that the freight never had been paid, through default of the shipper:—Held, that the shipowners, who detained the goods, could not claim payment of the freight from the assignees of the bill of lading. Howard v. Tucker, 1 B. & Ad. 712.

An implied assumpsit for freight, upon the delivery of goods without first receiving the freight, will not lie against three persons for whose use the cargo was purchased, but who are not the consignees, or holders of the bills of lading, and who have assigned all their effects to a trustee for the benefit of their creditors and themselves, two of them only, without the third, receiving the goods as agents for that trustee. Pinder v. Wilks, 5 Taunt. 612; 1 Marsh. 248.

—— Under Spanish Bill of Lading—"Assigns."] —An indorsee of a Spanish bill of lading, to whom the goods have been delivered under it, is liable for the freight, although the bill of lading is for delivery to the consignees, without saying "or their assigns," such bills of lading appearing by evidence to be usually passed by indorsement. Renteria v. Ruding, M. & M. 511.

—— Evidence of New Contract.]—A special verdict was found, in an action for the recovery of freight, that, by a memorandum of charterparty, the ship was chartered for a voyage from a foreign port to London, to load at the foreign port a cargo, and to deliver the same at London, on payment of a specified freight; that the ship received on board a cargo under a bill of lading, by which the goods were deliverable to the shipper or his assigns, he or they paying freight for the same as per charterparty:—Held, first, that, from an acceptance of the goods by an assignee of the bill of lading, the law could not imply a contract by him to pay freight; and that no such contract could have been implied, even if the bill of lading had made no reference to the charterparty, but had merely specified a sum to be paid for freight, though, in the latter case, at all events, the facts might be evidence from which a jury might find such a contract. Sanders v. Vanzeller, 3 G. & D. 580; 4 Q. B. 260; 2 G. & D. 244; 12 L. J., Ex. 497—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, that the court could not infer a contract by the defendant to pay freight. Ib.

Where an indorsee of a bill of lading, or a consignee, other than the original charterer, becomes liable for freight, such liability results not from the original contract of affreightment, but from a new contract, the consideration for which is the delivery of the goods. Kemp v. Clark, 12 Q. B. 647; 17 L. J., Q. B. 305; 12 Jur. 676.

No contract to accept the cargo, or any part of it, within a reasonable time, and to pay the freight, can be inferred from the mere fact of the assignee of the bill of lading presenting it to the captain and demanding the delivery of the cargo. Moller v. Young, 5 El. & Bl. 755; 25 L. J., Q. B. 94; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 393; 4 W. R. 149—Ex. Ch.

Where, after such a demand by the assignee of a bill of lading, the captain delivered a portion of the cargo, and then refused to deliver the remainder until paid freight for the portion already delivered, and the assignee then refused to pay any freight until the whole cargo should be delivered:—Held, that there was not evidence from which a jury might infer a promise on the part of the assignee to pay at once for the portion of the cargo delivered. Ib.

An assignee of a bill of lading, who claims and receives goods under it, is bound by the terms of the bill of lading, not only as to the amount of freight, but also for demurrage, if he does not unload the ship within the time limited by the bill of lading, according to its terms, and there is a sufficient consideration arising on the claim of the goods by the consignee, from which the law will infer a promise by the consignee to pay such demurrage as well as the freight. Stindt v. Roberts, 5 D. & L. 460; 2 B. C. Rep. 212; 17 L. J., Q. B. 166; 12 Jur. 518.

As against Mortgagee.]—S., a partner in a firm at Liverpool, and sole owner of the ship "Ellen," entered into an arrangement, by which she was, in 1850 and 1851, consigned, during several voyages, to H., a partner in the firm of H. & C. H., at New Orleans, with general instructions to do the best he could, either in loading the vessel on freight, or shipping cotton, on the joint account of S. and H. On these occasions, as is usual when cotton is shipped on account of the shipowner, a nominal freight, or "no freight, being owners' property," was inserted in the bills of lading; but in stating the partnership accounts in respect of the sale of the cotton, the current rate of freight was charged in favour of S., and to the debit of the joint adventure. On the 4th of April, 1851, S. wrote to H.:—"We hope you have brought cotton, and that the 'Ellen' has arrived. What you do we will confirm." Again, on the 26th of April, "Whatever you do for the 'Ellen' will be confirmed by us." On the 8th of May, 1851, H. & C. H. shipped on board the "Ellen" 447 bales of cotton, and the master signed a bill of lading, by which the cotton was "to be delivered unto order or to assigns, he or they paying freight for the said cotton 1*s.* per bale, being owners' property, when draft against same is paid, say 3,590*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.*, with primage and average accustomed." On the 15th of May, H. & C. H. again shipped 381 bales of cotton, and a similar bill of lading was signed by the master. The draft for 3,590*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.*, dated 8th of May, 1851, was for the invoice price of the cotton, and was on the firm of which S. was a partner, and was purchased, on the day of its date, by the plaintiffs, merchants at New Orleans, who took, at the same time, from the shippers, an indorsement in blank of the first bill of lading, as a security for the due payment of the draft. A bill of exchange, dated 15th of May, 1851, for 3,169*l.* 19*s.* 3*d.*, was in like manner drawn for the price of the cotton in the second bill of lading; and that bill of exchange was also purchased by the plaintiffs, the second bill of lading being also indorsed to them. In both cases the cotton was purchased of third parties, and not of the plaintiffs. These bills, when due, were dishonoured by S., and taken up by the plaintiffs. On the 10th of May, 1851, S., being indebted to the defendants, assigned to them the "Ellen" by way of mortgage, with all her freight and earnings, with power of sale and authority to receive freight. The "Ellen" arrived at Liverpool on the 28th of July, 1851, when the defendants took possession of her and her cargo, and claimed from the plaintiffs, as indorsees of the bills of lading, payment of the current rate of freight. The plaintiffs tendered the amount of freight reserved by the bills of lading, which being refused they paid the amount claimed under protest, and brought an action for money received to their use:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, since the circumstances shewed a clear authority from S. to H. to ship the cotton upon the terms of the bills of lading; and although the second of these bills was signed after the mortgage, yet it did not invalidate the transaction as against the plaintiffs, who took the bills bonâ fide, and without notice. Brown v. North, 8 Ex. 1; 22 L. J., Ex. 49.

Custom as to Discount.] — A bill of lading expressed that goods shipped at Newcastle were deliverable at Liverpool to order or assigns, "he or they paying freight for the goods five-eighths of a penny sterling per pound, with 5 per cent. primage and average accustomed." By the usual custom of the trade at Liverpool, three months' interest or discount is deducted from freights payable under bills of lading on goods coming from certain ports, including Newcastle. An assignee of a bill of lading having received the goods, the shipowner claimed the freight without any deduction, contending that the custom was not binding in law, as contradicting the written contract. The assignee paid the freight, less the discount:—Held, that the custom was binding, and explained the bill of lading. Brown v. Byrne, 3 El. & Bl. 703; 2 C. L. R. 1599; 23 L. J., Q. B. 313; 18 Jur. 700; 2 W. R. 471.

Assignee of Freight or Consignee of Goods.] —Where, by a bill of lading, goods were to be delivered "to A., net proceeds paid to T. or to his assigns, he or they paying freight for the goods as per charterparty": — Held, that the freight was to be paid by A., and that the nett proceeds to be paid to T. were what remained after such freight and other charges had been satisfied. Thomson v. Adam, 5 Moore, 280; 2 Br. & B. 450.

c. Time.

Freight Payable in London.] — The words "freight payable in London" in a bill of lading define the place only, not the time, of payment. Krall v. Burnett, 25 W. R. 305.

Goods were put on board a ship consigned for Calcutta, at 39*s.* per ton, "payable in London": —Held, that it was for the jury to say from the surrounding circumstances whether the contract was a contract for freight, contingently on the ship's arrival at her destination, or for a sum payable on the receipt of the goods on board of her. Lidgett v. Perrin, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 362; 2 F. & F. 763.

Delivery of Cargo and Payment—Concurrent Acts.]—By the terms of a bill of lading, freight was to be paid "one-third in cash on arrival at B., and two-thirds on right delivery of the cargo, by good and approved bills payable in London at four months, or cash, deducting usual interest, at the option of the shippers." The vessel arrived at B. The one-third freight was paid, and the consignee of the cargo declared his election to pay the remaining two-thirds in cash, less interest: —Held, that the delivery of the cargo and payment of the balance of the freight were to be concurrent acts, and that the master was not bound to deliver the cargo unless the consignee paid or was ready and willing at the same time to pay the balance of the freight. Paynter v. James, 18 L. T. 449; 16 W. R. 768—Ex. Ch. Affirming L. R. 2 C. P. 348.

Delivery of Bill of Lading.]—A declaration stated that, in consideration that the plaintiff had taken the defendant's goods on board his ship to be carried to A., he promised to pay the money due for freight and carriage of the same on the delivery of the bill of lading, and that the bill of lading was delivered, by reason whereof he became liable to pay a large sum for freight and carriage of the goods:—Held, bad, because it did not appear that anything became due for freight on the delivery of the bill of lading. Blakey v. Dixon, 2 Bos. & P. 321.

Unloading or Right Delivery of Cargo.]— A charterparty provided that freights should become payable on the unloading or right delivery of a cargo, one-third in cash and the remainder by approved acceptances at three months, or cash equal thereto, but under certain circumstances the vessel was to be taken on hire at a certain rate, payment to be made in cash on account of three months' hire and the balance on the ship's return. The ship having loaded a cargo of guano at Saldanha Bay, proceeded therewith to England, and, under the charterer's instructions, went to Southampton to discharge her cargo. The charterers wrote to the captain there, stating that without prejudice to the charterparty, or any dispute connected with the ship, their wishes were that it should be landed and warehoused in the Southampton docks in bulk, which was accordingly done:—Held, that, upon such landing of the cargo, the balance of the freight became payable. Fenwick v. Boyd, 15 M. & W. 632.

Final Loading.]—The term "final loading of a vessel from the port of loading," stated in a charterparty as the period for payment of freight or a part of it, means the final departure from the port, and being at sea ready to proceed on her voyage, and not merely having the clearances on board and being ready to sail. Roelandts v. Harrison, 9 Ex. 441; 2 C. L. R. 995; 23 L. J., Ex. 169.

Months.]—Where a ship is freighted by the month, the months are calendar, not lunar ones. Jolly v. Young, 1 Esp. 186.

Monthly Freight Payable in Advance—Liability—Termination of Hiring.]—By a charterparty it was provided that the charterer should pay freight "at the rate of 709*l.* per calendar month . . . and at and after the same rate for any part of a month, hire to continue until her re-delivery to the owner, payment for the said hire to be made in cash monthly in advance." It was also provided that the owner should have a lien upon cargoes and sub-freight for any amount due to him under the charter, and that the charterer should have a lien on the ship for all moneys paid in advance and not earned:—Held (reversing the judgment of Mathew, J., dissentiente Smith, L.J.), that the charterer was bound to pay the full freight in advance at the beginning of each month, although it might be probable that the hire would not continue for the whole month. Tonnelier v. Smith, 77 L. T. 277—C. A.

"Port"—Final Sailing of Ship from last Port.]—By the terms of a charterparty the owners were entitled to an advance of one-third of the freight within eight days "from final sailing of the vessel from her last port in United Kingdom." The vessel was loaded at Penarth dock, and was towed by a steam-tug seven or eight miles, bringing her out about three miles into the Bristol Channel. She there cast anchor, as the weather was threatening. While she was lying at anchor a storm broke her cables, and she ultimately ran ashore on Penarth beach, and the cargo was spoiled. The vessel had never been beyond the limits of the port of Cardiff as defined for fiscal purposes, but she had left what, for commercial purposes, is considered the port, and had been out at sea. She went ashore within the limits of the port in its commercial sense. The owners sued for one-third of the freight, and the charterers resisted the claim on the ground that the vessel had never sailed from her last port in the United Kingdom:—Held, that the word "port" must be taken in its ordinary commercial sense, and that as the vessel had got out to sea without any intention of returning, she must be taken to have finally sailed from her last port, that her being driven back into it by the weather made no difference, and that the one-third of the freight was payable. Price v. Livingstone, 53 L. J., Q. B. 118; 9 Q. B. D. 679; 47 L. T. 629; 5 Asp. M. C. 13—C. A.

The word "port" in a charterparty is to be understood in its popular, or business, or commercial sense; it does not in such a document necessarily mean the port as defined for revenue or pilotage purposes. Tests for determining the business meaning of the word "port" considered. Garston Sailing-ship Co. v. Hickie, 15 Q. B. D. 580; 53 L. T. 795; 5 Asp. M. C. 499—C. A.

A charterparty provided that a ship should load a cargo of coals at Cardiff, and then proceed to Bombay, the freight to be paid two-thirds in cash "ten days after the final sailing of the vessel from her last port in Great Britain," and the remainder in cash on delivery of the cargo. The ship loaded the coals in the Bute docks, at Cardiff, and, having cleared at the custom-house, started on her voyage to Bombay. She proceeded down the artificial channel leading from the docks to the river Taff, and, when about 300 yards beyond the junction of the channel with the river, she came into collision with a steamer, and was so much injured that she was compelled to return the next day to the docks for repairs:—Held, that at the time of the collision the ship was not outside the limits of the port, in the popular, business, or commercial sense of the word; that, consequently, she had not finally sailed from her last port; and that no freight was payable. Ib.

d. Manner.

i. Advance of Freight.

Condition Precedent—Failure of Voyage—Repayment.]—A ship was chartered for a homeward voyage from Calcutta, with an option to the charterers to send her on an intermediate voyage, "freight to be paid as follows: 1,200*l.* to be advanced to the master, and to be deducted, together with 1½ per cent. commission on the amount advanced and cost of insurance, from freight and settlement thereof, and the remainder on right delivery at port of discharge," The master was also "to sign bills of lading at any current rate of freight required, without prejudice to the charterparty, but not under the chartered rates, unless the difference be paid in cash." The charterers elected to send the vessel on an intermediate voyage, and paid the 1,200*l.*, and required the master to sign bills of lading below the chartered rates. The difference, amounting to 737*l.*, was demanded from them by the master, but they refused to pay it, claiming to set off against it the advances made on account of the vessel. The vessel was lost on her way to the intermediate port:—Held, that a payment in advance on account of freight cannot be recovered, even though the voyage fails; and that according to the terms of the charterparty the payment of the difference was to be a payment in the nature of freight, so that if the charterers had paid the difference in advance, they would not have been entitled to recover it; and that therefore the shipowner was entitled to recover the amount from them, notwithstanding the failure of the voyage. Byrne v. Schiller, 40 L. J., Ex. 177; L. R. 6 Ex. 319; 25 L. T. 211; 19 W. R. 1114; 1 Asp. M. C. 111—Ex. Ch. See Watson v. Shankland, infra.

—— Freight or Loan.]—A charterparty for a voyage to B., to load there a cargo of rice, and proceed therewith to London, contained the following stipulations:—"Cash for ship's disbursements to be advanced to the extent of 300*l.*, free of interest, but subject to insurance and commission; the freight to be paid on unloading and right delivery of the cargo." Whilst the ship was at B., the charterer's agent advanced to the captain cash for the ship's disbursements, and the captain drew a bill of exchange for the amount upon the owners. On her voyage homeward the ship was lost, and the owners refused to accept the bill. In an action by the charterer against the shipowners to recover the amount:—Held, that the advance was in part payment of freight, and not a loan, and therefore not recoverable. Hicks v. Shield, 7 El. & Bl. 633; 26 L. J., Q. B. 205; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 715; 5 W. R. 536.

—— Loading and Sailing.]—A debtor gave to his creditors the following order, addressed to B.:—"Please to pay H. & P. (on the 'Royal Oak' being loaded and sailed), out of the advance, 73*l.*"; and B. signed it, "We agree to the above, B. & Co." The ship having loaded, crossed the bar of Sunderland harbour, when the captain left her and went ashore to get the ship's papers and sign the bills of lading; the ship in the meantime stood off and on under easy sail, waiting for the captain's return:—Held, first, that the loading and sailing of the ship were conditions precedent to the payment of the money. Hudson v. Bilton, 6 El. & Bl. 565; 26 L. J., Q. B. 27; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 784.

Held, secondly, that the ship had not sailed. Ib.

—— Seaworthiness.] — A declaration for freight on a charterparty, whereby the ship, being tight and every way fitted for the voyage, should, at Sunderland, load a cargo of coals, and proceed to Constantinople, being paid freight on the quantity delivered, "one-fourth of the freight to be advanced to the owners' agent in London, on the ship having sailed, less five per cent. thereon for assurance, interest and commission," averred that the defendant caused the ship to be loaded with a cargo of coals, and that she, being so loaded, sailed for C., pursuant to the charterparty. Plea, that the ship was not, at the commencement of the voyage, tight and every way fitted for the voyage, and that by reason thereof the ship and cargo were lost:—Held, that the plea was not a good plea in avoidance of circuity of action, as the damage sustained by the defendant was not necessarily identical in amount with the sum claimed by the plaintiff; but that it was a bar to the action, on the ground that the advance of the freight had never become payable. Thompson v. Gillespy, 5 El. & Bl. 209; 24 L. J., Q. B. 340; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 779; 3 W. R. 505.

—— Readiness of Ship — Captain's Attendance.]—A charterparty contained stipulations, that the captain should attend daily at the brokers' office to sign bills of lading; that the ship should take on board all such lawful goods as the charterers might require; and then proceeded:—"In consideration whereof the charterers agree to pay freight for the use and hire of the ship 1,400*l.*, with a gratuity of 25 guineas to the master payable before leaving London." Then followed this clause:—"The owner agrees, that the ship shall be ready to sail at the expiration of the laying days, or sooner if required by the charterers. If the ship is not ready, either on the owner's or the charterer's part, at the above-named dates, then demurrage to be paid by the party in default at the rate of 7*l.* per diem. The ship to be ready on or before the 10th November, or the charterers to have the option of cancelling this agreement." The freight was stipulated to be paid, partly by bills of lading, at the port of destination, to the extent of 800*l.*, and balance of 600*l.* in cash, less seventy days' discount from the day of clearing from London:—Held, that the stipulations, on the part of the owner, were not conditions precedent to his right to sue for the 600*l.* as soon as the ship should have cleared from London. Seeger v. Duthie, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 72; 30 L. J., C. P. 65; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 3 L. T. 478; 9 W. R. 166—Ex. Ch.

Ship Lost—Advance Freight to be Paid "if required."] — A charterparty provided that freight should be paid on unloading and right delivery of cargo, "one-third freight, if required, to be advanced, less three per cent. for interest and insurance." The ship was lost on the day of sailing, and shortly after the loss the shipowners demanded the advance freight:—Held, in an action by the shipowners to recover the advance freight, that the charterers were not liable. Smith v. Pyman, 60 L. J., Q. B. 621; [1891] 1 Q. B. 742; 64 L. T. 436; 39 W. R. 466; 7 Asp. M. C. 7—C. A.

—— "Vessel lost or not lost"—Damages for Loss of Ship.]—A stipulation in a charterparty that four-fifths of the freight should be paid in advance—"vessel lost or not lost"—does not prevent the charterer from recovering that amount as damages from the shipowner upon a loss of the vessel owing to negligence. Great Indian Peninsular Ry. v. Turnbull, 1 Cab. & E. 595; 53 L. T. 325; 33 W. R. 874; 5 Asp. M. C. 465.

—— Date of Loss—Return of Freight.]—By a charterparty for a voyage from the port of London to Calcutta and back on the usual terms, it was further agreed that the freighter, if he thought proper, might hire the vessel for an intermediate voyage within certain limits, for not less than six months; that, in that event, the master should refit the vessel for such voyage, and the complement of men should be kept up, and all necessaries provided; in consideration of which the freighter agreed to pay the owner of such voyage at the rate of 1*l.* a ton per month on the ship's tonnage, and to pay four months of such hire in advance; and at the end of six months two further months' pay, and so in every succeeding two months; and the balance due at the termination of such hiring in cash or approved bills. It was further stipulated, that, if the vessel should be lost or captured, the freight by time should be payable up to the period when she should be so lost or captured, or last heard of:—Held, that, under the former clauses of this agreement, the freighter could not claim a return of any part of the four months' advance, on the vessel being lost within that period; but that the advance, being in respect of freight, was absolute; and that the stipulation on this head was not qualified by the subsequent clause. Saunders v. Drew, 3 B. & Ad. 445.

—— Presentation of Bills of Lading.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that the ship should load a cargo and deliver the same at the port of destination on being paid freight on bill of lading quantity, one-third of the freight to be paid on signing bills of lading, and the remainder on unloading, in cash; the captain or agent to sign bills of lading for weight put on board, according to the railway or dock company's weight, within twenty-four hours. Shortly after the ship had sailed she sank with her cargo: —Held, that the charterers were bound, notwithstanding the loss of ship, to present bills of lading for signature by the captain or agent so as to entitle the shipowners to be paid the advance freight; and that therefore the shipowners could recover the amount of the advance freight as damages for breach of the contract to present bills of lading. Smith v. Pyman (supra, col. 410) distinguished. Oriental Steamship Co. v. Tylor, 63 L. J., Q. B. 128; [1893] 2 Q. B. 518; 4 R. 554; 69 L. T. 577; 42 W. R. 89; 7 Asp. M. C. 377—C. A.

Advances at Port of Loading—Deductions from Freight.] — See The Red Sea, infra, MARINE INSURANCE, IX. LOSSES (5).

Freight paid in full—Repayment of Advances—Money had and received.]—Where the mortgagee of a ship had received payment of freight from the charterer, under protest from the charterer that there was a sum to be deducted on account of advances to the captain pursuant to a stipulation in the charterparty, and the mortgagee gave an undertaking to refund such sum as might appear in the charterer's account, to be due by reason of such advances and afterwards to be at liberty to dispute any items of the account:—Held, that the charterer was entitled to recover the sum in an action for money had and received, it appearing that the sum had been bonâ fide advanced to the captain; the mortgagee to be at liberty to raise the question of the shipowners' liability for the advances in a separate action. Gibbs v. Charleton, 26 L. J., Ex. 321.

Advances to Captain by Charterers' Agent.]—A ship was chartered on a voyage from London to San Francisco, and Victoria, Vancouver's Island. By the terms of the charter, the cargo was "to be brought to and taken from alongside at merchant's risk and expense. The freight was to be a lump sum of 1,650*l.*, which was to be paid, 1,000*l.* on sailing, and the remainder on right delivery of the cargo; say, if the captain should so require, a moiety at each of the ports of discharge." The ship was to be consigned to charterers' agents at the port of discharge, paying a commission of not exceeding 2*l.* per cent. on amount of freight of 1,650*l.*; and the stevedore recommended by the charterers was "to be employed at ship's expense on usual charge." Owing to the fault of the stevedore in the stowage of the cargo, an expense to the amount of 70*l.* was incurred in getting at the cargo intended for San Francisco; this sum was advanced by the charterers' agents to the captain, with other money, as ship's disbursements, and included in an account which they laid before him, and which he signed under protest: —Held, in an action by the owner of the ship against the charterers for freight, that the 70*l.* could not be pleaded either as a set-off or as a payment. Roberts v. Shaw, 4 B. & S. 44; 32 L. J., Q. B. 308; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 147; 8 L. T. 634; 11 W. R. 829.

Insurance of Balance of Freight by Shipowner.]—Shipowner and charterer may agree, by the terms of a charterparty, that a portion of the stipulated freight shall be prepaid; and such prepayment will not affect its legal character of freight; the remainder may be the subject of insurance by the shipowner. Allison v. Bristol Marine Insurance Co., 1 App. Cas. 209; 34 L. T. 809; 24 W. R. 1039—H. L. (E.)

A ship was chartered to sail from Greenock to Bombay, to carry a cargo of coals. Freight was to be paid on unloading and right delivery of the cargo at and after the rate of 42*s.* per ton of 20 cwts. on the quantity delivered. It was provided that "such freight is to be paid, say one-half in cash, on signing bills of lading less four months' interest at bank rate, but not less than 5 per cent. per annum, 5 per cent. for insurance, and 2½ per cent. on gross amount of freight in lieu of consignment at Bombay, and the remainder on right delivery of the cargo, less cost of coals short delivered, in cash, at current rates of exchange for bills on London at six months' sight." Half of the estimated amount of the freight was paid in London. The shipowner effected two insurances, one for 500*l.* on freight valued at 2,000*l.*, the other for 700*l.* on freight payable abroad valued at 2,000*l.* The ship was lost before entering Bombay harbour, but one-half of the cargo was saved and delivered. The master, in the belief that the prepayment had satisfied the freight on this half so delivered, made no demand on the charterer. The shipowner claimed on his policies as for a total loss of the other half of the freight:—Held, that on the proper construction of the policy the whole sum agreed upon constituted freight; that half of the whole sum of that freight had been paid in England; that it was not a prepayment of half the rate of freight calculated as distributed over the whole cargo, but of half the whole gross freight; that half of the whole remained to be paid abroad on right delivery of the cargo; that that half had been lost through perils of the sea; and that the shipowner was entitled on his policies on freight to recover as for the total loss of that half. Ib.

A ship was chartered to load a full cargo "on being paid freight, payable by charterer's acceptance on ship clearing the custom-house, subject to insurance." The ship having sailed, was lost, being at that time uninsured. In an action by the shipowner for nonpayment of the agreed freight: —Held, that it was no defence that the shipowner had not insured the freight. Jackson v. Isaacson, 3 H. & N. 405; 27 L. J., Ex. 392.

—— Repayment of Freight.]—When the charterers of a ship stipulate that they shall be entitled to insure their advances "against freight," at the owner's expense, and they fail to insure, they have, in the event of the ship perishing, no claim against the owners for repayment. Watson v. Shankland, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 304; 29 L. T. 349; 10 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 142; 2 Asp. M. C. 115.

By a charterparty made at Bombay, a ship belonging to merchants at Greenock, was to proceed from Bombay to Calcutta, and there load a cargo to be conveyed to the United Kingdom. A clause in the charterparty was as follows: "Sufficient cash for ship's ordinary disbursements to be advanced the master against freight; subject to interest, insurance, and two-and-a-half per cent. commission; and the master to indorse the amount so advanced upon his bills of lading." While the ship was at Calcutta preparing for the voyage, various advances for the ship's ordinary disbursements were made by the indorsees of the charterparty, and the master gave them on account of such advances a bill drawn on the shipowners. They refused to accept the bill, on the ground that the master had no power to give it, and that under the charterparty the indorsees should have effected an insurance on freight to the amount of their advances. No such insurance was, however, effected, though they had time to insure after notice of the refusal to accept the bill. The ship having been lost on the voyage to the United Kingdom, the indorsees brought an action to recover the amount of their advances:—Held, that under the charterparty the shipowners had a right to rely on an insurance upon the advances being made by the indorsees, who had stipulated for and received the right to charge the premium; and that they having chosen not to insure must bear the loss. Ib.

Advance on Account of Freight—Bill—Liability of Owners.]—A charterparty made in Scotland, stipulated that money up to 1000*l.* should be advanced at Calcutta on account of freight. The charterers' agents there advanced 800*l.* for the ship's disbursements, and took a bill drawn by the master on the charterers for that sum. The charterers accepted the bill, but suspended payments, and the bill was never paid. In an action by an indorsee against the shipowners, as liable in recourse, and as having received the benefit of the advance, which he alleged was necessary:—Held, that the charterers' agents being consignees of the cargo, and taking delivery of it, were bound to make the advance on account of freight, and that there was no liability on the shipowners. North Western Bank v. Bjornstrom, 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 24.

Monthly Freight payable in advance—Termination of Hiring during the Month.] — See Tounelier v. Smith, supra, col. 407.

ii. Bill of Exchange.

Not Honoured—No Discharge.]—Where there is a charterparty covenanting for payment of freight on a right and true delivery of the goods at a foreign port, the freighter is not discharged by the master there taking from the freighter's agent, who was furnished with funds to pay him the freight, a bill of exchange upon a third person, by whom it is accepted, if the bill is not duly honoured, although the agent fails with the amount of the freight in his hands, unless the master had the offer of a cash payment, and preferred the bill for his own convenience. Marsh v. Pedder, 4 Camp. 257.

A., wishing to send goods to B. at X., employed C. to carry and deliver them to B., and engaged to pay C. for the freight: C., on delivering them according to the order, took a bill of exchange from B., drawn on A., which bill was never paid:—Held, that A. was liable to pay the amount of the freight to C., notwithstanding the bill of exchange. Tapley v. Martens, 8 Term Rep. 451.

—— Taken instead of Money—Otherwise.]—If, in a case where there is no charterparty, the captain of a ship delivers a cargo, and, as the best thing he can do for all parties under existing circumstances, takes a bill of the agent of the persons to whom the cargo on board belongs for the amount of the freight, this does not discharge the owners of the cargo, but they are liable for freight if the bill is dishonoured; but if it appears from the other side that he might have had his money of the agent, and chose to take the bill, it is otherwise. Strong v. Hart, 6 B. & C. 160; 9 D. & R. 189; 2 Car. & P. 55; 5 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 82; 30 R. R. 272. See also Marsh v. Pedder, supra.

To Master.]—A., a broker in London, offered the master of a ship (who was half owner) a cheque for the balance due to the owners for freight received for them by A. This the master refused, but at his request A. opened a credit for part of the amount in favour of H. with a bank in New Brunswick. H. received the money, and drew a bill for the amount in favour of the bank upon A., who paid it at its maturity:—Held, that this was such a payment of freight, pro tanto, by A. to the master as bound the other owners. Anderson v. Hillies, 12 C. B. 499; 21 L. J., C. P. 150; 16 Jur. 819.

Approved Bills—Negotiation of.]—See Horncastle v. Farren, infra, col. 439.

iii. Other Cases.

According to Bill of Lading or Charterparty.]—A charterparty stipulated that the ship should load a cargo of coal at Cardiff and proceed to Pernambuco, and there deliver the same and afterwards receive a full cargo of sugar and other merchandise, and therewith proceed to a safe port in the United Kingdom, and deliver the same on being paid freight at the rate of 60*s.* per ton of twenty cwt. net for sugar, and for other produce at a rate proportionate thereto, being in full for the round. "The freight to be paid in the following manner: 150*l.* on signing bills of lading at Cardiff, cash for the disbursements abroad at the current rate of exchange, and the remainder on the delivery of the cargo. The master to sign bills for each cargo at any rate of freight that might be tendered. The owners to have a lien on the homeward cargo for all freight and demurrage that might accrue thereon, to the extent of the bill of lading freight, but the difference, if any, to be paid at the port of loading by captain's draft on charterer's, at usance, which they agreed to accept and pay on consignee at loading port agreeing to the amount":—Held, that the two clauses were not inconsistent, their meaning being, that if the bill of lading freight was less than the charter freight, the difference was to be paid at the port of loading by the captain's draft on the charterers, at usance, if the consignee settled the amount, otherwise at the port of delivery. Santos v. Brice, 6 H. & N. 290; 30 L. J., Ex. 108.

By a charterparty between the defendant and H., a ship was chartered to proceed to Madras, and load a cargo there from the agents of H., and being so loaded, proceed to London, and deliver the same, on being paid freight, at 3*l.* 15*s.* a ton, the captain to sign bills of lading for his cargo for any rate of freight required; without prejudice to this charterparty. S., who acted as agent to H. at Madras, in respect of the charterparty, by his directions purchased sugars and loaded them on board, and the captain, at the request of S., signed a bill of lading deliverable to the order of S., at 1*l.* per ton freight. H. stopped payment, and never paid for the sugar. The sugar having arrived in London:—Held, that S. or the parties in London who represented him were entitled to the sugar on payment of the bill of lading freight. Shand v. Sanderson, 4 H. & N. 381; 28 L. J., Ex. 278; 7 W. R. 416.

Paid into Court—Jurisdiction of Admiralty Court.]—In an action by a shipowner against the charterers for freight, they pleaded, that after the freight had been earned, and after the commencement of the action, the obligee of a bottomry bond, by which the ship and freight were hypothecated, instituted in the court of admiralty a suit against the ship and freight, wherein a munition issued, commanding the plaintiff to bring into court the proceeds of the wreck and stores of the ship, and the defendants to bring into court the money due for freight, to abide the judgment of the court, and that they had done so:—Held, that, as the court of admiralty has jurisdiction to decide all questions as to freight in such a case, the plea was a good plea in bar of the action. Place v. Potts, 5 H. L. Cas. 383; 24 L. J., Ex. 225; 3 W. R. 574—H. L. (E.)

Hypothecation by Ship's Husband—Bankruptcy—Disbursements—Owners' Liability.]—The ship's husband employed a broker to collect freight, without the owner's authority, and obtained advances on security thereof. The broker collected the freight and retained it in discharge of his advances. The ship's husband was afterwards sequestrated, and the trustees of the estate sued the owners for disbursements made by him. The owners pleaded compensation in respect of the freight collected by the broker. The trustee replied that the advances were ultra vires:—Held, that the plea of compensation was sustained, the trustee having no higher right than the bankrupt. Macgregor's Trustee v. Cox, 10 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1028.

e. Rate and Amount.

See f. DAMAGE TO CARGO—SHORT DELIVERY, supra, col. 380.

According to what Rates.]—A charterer was to load at Archangel a full and complete cargo of oats or other lawful merchandise, which the shipowners were to deliver "on being paid freight at the rate of 4*s.* 6*d.* per 320 lb. for oats, and if any other cargo be shipped in full and fair proportion thereto, according to the London Baltic printed rates." The cargo shipped, consisted of flax and other light articles (all mentioned in the London Baltic rates), as much as the ship could safely carry, which rendered the shipment of 120 tons of ballast necessary:—Held, that the cargo shipped was a full and complete cargo of articles constituting lawful merchandise within the meaning of the charterparty, and that the charterer was not liable to pay freight as on a full cargo of oats or of other merchandise ejusdem generis. Southampton Steam Collier Co. v. Clarke, 40 L. J., Ex. 8; L. R. 6 Ex. 53; 19 W. R. 214—Ex. Ch.

By the terms of a charterparty a ship was to proceed to Port Philip, and there load a full and complete cargo of wool, tallow, bark, or other legal merchandise, the bark not to exceed 180 tons, the tallow and hides not to exceed 80 tons, and being so loaded, to proceed therewith to London, and deliver the same on being paid freight as follows: for wool pressed, twelve-eighths of a penny per pound; unpressed, thirteen-eighths of a penny per pound; tallow, 3*l.* per ton; bark, 4*l.* per ton; hides, 2*l.* per ton; one-third to be paid in cash on unloading, the remainder by bills at two months. The ship took on board a few goods at Port Philip, and obtained leave, without prejudice to the charter, to go to Sydney, where she was loaded full, and returned to London with 61 tons of wool only, and a large quantity of dead weight. In an action for not loading at Port Philip, according to the tenor of the charter:—Held, that the terms of the charterparty meant that the shipowners should be paid freight for a full homeward cargo, consisting of 180 tons of bark, tallow, and hides, and the residue of wool, and that damages were to be calculated on that basis. Cockburn v. Alexander, 6 C. B. 791; 18 L. J., C. P. 74.

Held, also, that under the words "other legal merchandise," the charterer was at liberty to ship any lawful article he pleased, due regard being paid to the safety of the vessel, but was bound to pay the same amount of freight as the vessel would have earned if loaded within the terms of the charterparty. Ib.

Where a ship is chartered to bring home a cargo of enumerated articles, at rates of freight specified, and such articles are not provided by the charter, the freight must be paid upon average quantities of such articles; and this, whether the ship returns empty or laden with a cargo of articles of a different nature and quality from those enumerated in the charter. Capper v. Forster, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 938; 3 Scott, 129; 3 Hodges, 177; 6 L. J., C. P. 332.

Charterparty or Bill of Lading Freight.]—A factor hired a ship of the plaintiff at 48*l.* per month, and by the charterparty goods put on board were made liable to the plaintiff for the ship's hire. Merchants in the West Indies, his principals, put goods on board, paying the factor 9*l.* per ton freight. The factor became bankrupt:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to be paid freight by the merchants at 9*l.* per ton in preference to the assignees. Held, also, that the factor had no power to bind the goods by charterparty to answer charterparty freight. Paul v. Birch, 2 Atk. 621.

Alternative Rate.]—A. undertook to smuggle goods belonging to B. into Russia; a regular bill of lading was made out of the goods, in which the freight charged was the usual freight according to the bulk of the goods; but a second contract was made between the parties, by which B. undertook to pay A. a larger sum of money if the goods should be safely landed in the foreign port. The goods were landed, B. paid the freight under the bill of lading, and likewise part of the money under the agreement, but refused to pay the remainder:—Held, that, notwithstanding the bill of lading, he was liable to pay the residue, as extra freight. Hedley v. Lapage, Holt, 392; 17 R. R. 649.

The plaintiffs agreed with the defendants to convey a cargo to O., and if the river was in possession of an enemy, to unload at F., outside the harbour. The freight was to be 475*l.*, or if the vessel could enter O., discharge and reload there, 300*l.* only; twenty-five days were allowed for unloading. The plaintiff arrived at F. June the 2nd, and, an enemy being in possession of the river, commenced unloading there. The vessel was detained at F., partly for the convenience of the defendants, and partly by bad weather, till August 25th, and by that time had discharged seven-eighths of her cargo. The enemy then having quitted the river, she entered O., where she discharged the remaining eighth of her cargo. In July the defendants' agent at O. gave the plaintiff a bill for the larger freight. In September, the vessel obtained, at O., a full cargo for England:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the larger freight, and to demurrage from the 28th of June. Gibbens v. Buisson, 1 Bing. (N.C.) 283; 1 Scott, 133; 4 L. J., C. P. 11.

A charterparty provided that a ship should sail to any safe island or islands on the south-west coast of Africa, agreeably to instructions which were to be given to the captain in due time by the charterers or their agents, and there load from the factors of the charterers a full cargo of guano or other lawful produce, which the charterers bound themselves to provide, and being so loaded, to proceed therewith to a safe port in the United Kingdom, and deliver the same, on being paid freight at 3*l.* 18*s.* per ton, the freight to be paid on unloading and right delivery of the cargo, one-third in cash on arrival at port of destination, and the remainder by approved acceptances of three months, or cash equal thereto. And it was also agreed, that in case the charterers' agents should be unable to furnish a cargo of guano at the ports or places therein provided, they should have power to send the ship to any other safe port or ports, place or places, for obtaining a cargo of guano in the manner aforesaid, or of other goods, in which case they were to pay for such service as hire for the ship after the rate of 15*s.* 6*d.* per ton per month, such pay or hire to commence from the day of the ship's clearing outwards at the Custom-house, London, and to terminate upon the ship's return to her port of delivery as thereinbefore provided for, and the discharge of the cargo. If the freighters' agents intended so to employ the ship they were to give the master written notice of such their intention, on production whereof the freighters engaged to pay the owner in cash on account three months' pay for the hire of the ship, and the balance to be paid on the ship's return. The charterers instructed their agent on the south-west coast of Africa that the ship should proceed according to his instructions, and that in case she could not find a cargo, she should proceed where he deemed it likely to procure one. The ship sailed pursuant to the charterers' directions to an island on the south-west coast of Africa, where the agent met her, and informed the captain that there was no guano to be had there, and that she must procure a cargo in Saldanha Bay (another place on the same coast), and must proceed to the Cape for a licence to load a cargo there. The ship accordingly sailed for the Cape, but being there required to enter into an engagement to sign and hand over bills of lading for the cargo as a security for the charges of the licence, the captain refused to do so unless the agent would make the freight payable according to the time employed, instead of according to the weight of the cargo, and the latter accordingly gave the captain notice that he engaged him upon time, according to the latter clause of the charterparty:—Held, that this clause had come into operation, and that the time freight was recoverable. Fenwick v. Boyd, 15 M. & W. 632.

Sub-charter at higher Rate.]—The plaintiff by charterparty agreed with G. to convey corn at 4*s.* 6*d.* a quarter; G. made a sub-charter with S., who consigned corn to the defendants under bills of lading, by which they were to pay 6*s.* a quarter freight, and gave them notice to retain 1*s.* 6*d.* a quarter for him. The plaintiff having sued for freight at 6*s.* per quarter:—Held, that he was entitled to recover only 4*s.* 6*d.* Michenson v. Begbie, 6 Bing. 190; 3 M. & P. 442.

Alteration.] — A ship was chartered from London to Bombay, addressed to G. & Co., the charterer's agents at the latter place; and it was stipulated by another charterparty of the same date, that the ship should discharge her cargo at Bombay, and then take in a homeward cargo, the charterer agreeing to pay freight, as to one-half of the cargo at 3*l.* per ton, and as to the rest, at the current rate of freight when the ship should be loading. It was also agreed, that the master of the ship and the agents at Bombay should be at liberty to make such alterations in the charterparty as they might mutually think proper, without prejudice to the agreement. Shortly after the arrival of the ship at Bombay, G. & Co. agreed, by a memorandum indorsed on the charterparty, that, before loading her homeward cargo, the ship might proceed to Aden with government coals and stores, and return to Bombay with all possible despatch. The plaintiff accordingly entered into a charterparty with the East India Company, and the ship proceeded to Aden, and returned thence, having earned freight, which was paid to the plaintiff:—Held, that G. & Co. had authority to permit the voyage to Aden, and that the charterer was bound by the alteration in the charterparty; and, therefore, that he was bound to pay the charter rate of 3*l.* per ton for half the cargo, although that exceeded the current rate of freight at the time of loading, and although the alteration might be prejudicial to him; and that he was not entitled to bring into the account the freight earned by the owners of the Aden voyage. Wiggins v. Johnston, 14 M. & W. 609; 15 L. J., Ex. 202.

"In full for the Voyage" — Subordinate Cargoes.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that a ship should proceed to Pernambuco, and there load from the factors of the freighters—having first discharged her cargo, if any—any legal merchandise, to the extent of a full cargo, that the freighters might have for shipment, and should proceed therewith to Valparaiso, a legal port between Valparaiso and Guayaquil, and Guayaquil, all or any, and there discharge the cargo laden on board at Pernambuco, and at the port between Valparaiso and Guayaquil (and Guayaquil) inclusive; also discharge any goods taken on board at Valparaiso for that purpose, and at any and all the aforesaid ports should receive and take on board a full and complete cargo of legal merchandise, and therewith proceed to Cork or Falmouth for orders to discharge, and deliver the same agreeably to bills of lading, on being paid freight at and after the rate of 5*l.* 5*s.* per ton, such freight to be paid in full for the voyage, the cargo from Pernambuco being freight free, as well as those goods shipped at Valparaiso, if any, for the ports at which the vessel should load her homeward cargo. The ship took in cargo at Pernambuco, which was discharged at Valparaiso. At Valparaiso she took on board goods belonging to the freighters, and also to other merchants, for Paita (a port between Valparaiso and Guayaquil) and Guayaquil, part of which was to be discharged there and the rest to be carried to England. No part of the homeward cargo was put on board at Paita:—Held, that the stipulated freight of 5*l.* 5*s.* covered the whole voyage, the general words of the charterparty "in full for the voyage" not being controlled by the clause following, and that the owner was not entitled to freight for the goods carried from Valparaiso to Paita, although no part of the homeward cargo was loaded at the last-mentioned place. Sweeting v. Darthez, 14 C. B. 538; 23 L. J., C. P. 131; 18 Jur. 958; 2 W. R. 414.

Passengers taken instead of Goods.]—A., a shipbroker, engaged with B., a shipowner, to have a full cargo for the ship, the rates of freight for which would average 40*s.* per ton, and at least nine cabin passengers, passage-money to average 75*l.* The contract was fulfilled as to the passengers, but the average rate of freight for goods put on board by A. amounted to 32*s.* only per ton. He shipped on board, however, steerage passengers for the voyage, the passage-money paid by whom, after deducting the expenses of their diet, &c., when added to the freight of the cargo properly so called, made the average earnings of the whole ship per ton amount to more than 40*s.*:—Held, that this was not a performance of the stipulations of the contract, "cargo" and "freight" being terms applicable to goods only. Lewis v. Marshall, 7 Man. & G. 729; 8 Scott (N.R.) 729; 13 L. J., C. P. 193; 8 Jur. 848.

"The Highest Freight Paid" on same Voyage.]—By a charterparty for a voyage from Sandswall to Southampton, it was stipulated that the owner should receive the highest freight which he could prove by evidence to have been paid for ships on the same voyage or passage by water, when the vessel passed Elsinore, but not less than 90*s.* per St. Petersburg standard hundred:—Held, that the charterparty did not contemplate strict legal proof of the actual agreement of the higher rate of freight, but reasonable evidence that such higher freight had been paid or contracted to be paid; and that the owner could not entitle himself to a higher rate of freight than 90*s.* by proving that other vessels had been chartered at such higher rate for a voyage to London, that not being within the fair intendment of the charterparty for the same voyage. Gether v. Capper, 18 C. B. 866; 25 L. J., C. P. 260; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 789; 4 W. R. 644—Ex. Ch.

On Goods Shipped or Delivered—Authority of Captain.]—The "Oriente," a vessel from the Chincha islands, having on board a cargo of guano, chartered to the plaintiffs in London, put into Valparaiso in a disabled state, and discharged the cargo into a hulk, and it became necessary to tranship and forward the cargo to its destination by another vessel; and the captain, on behalf of the owners of the cargo, accordingly entered into a charterparty with the master of the defendant's ship "to take on board from the hulk the cargo put on board of her, forming the cargo brought to Valparaiso by the 'Oriente,' being 470 tons of guano, more or less," and proceed with the same to its destination, agreeing to pay 5*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* freight for every ton delivered. A dispute arose as to the quantity of guano put on board, the defendant's master alleging it was much less than 470 tons, and the captain of the disabled ship saying it was that quantity. Ultimately the latter signed a bill of lading, describing the guano shipped as part of the original cargo, the consignees "paying freight for the guano on 470 tons, as per charterparty." It turned out that only 344 tons of guano had been shipped:—Held, that the captain had no authority to bind the owners of the cargo to pay freight for more than the quantity of guano actually shipped, and consequently that the indorsees of the bill of lading were entitled to have the cargo delivered on payment of the freight of 344 tons. Gibbs v. Grey, 2 H. & N. 22; 26 L. J., Ex. 286; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 543; 5 W. R. 608.

—— Measurement.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that a ship should sail to Bombay and there load a full cargo of cotton, and proceed with it to Liverpool and deliver the same on being paid freight at the rate of "75*s.* per ton of fifty cubic feet delivered." The ship received at Bombay, and carried to Liverpool, a full cargo of cotton; the cargo was packed at Bombay, as is customary, in compressed bales, and expanded greatly on being unloaded at Liverpool:—Held, that the freight was payable on the measurement of the goods when shipped, and not when delivered. Buckle v. Knoop, 36 L. J., Ex. 223; L. R. 2 Ex. 333; 16 L. T. 571; 15 W. R. 999—Ex. Ch.

By a charterparty it was agreed that "a ship should load a cargo and proceed to a port in Great Britain, and deliver the same on being paid freight at and after the rate of 35*s.* per 180 cubic feet (English) taken on board, as per Gothenburg custom":—Held, that the freight was to be ascertained by measuring the cargo, according to the method used at Gothenburg, and not according to the method used at the port of discharge. The Skandinav, 51 L. J., Adm. 93—C. A.

By a charterparty made at Liverpool for a voyage from Liverpool to Sydney, the charterer agreed to pay for the hire and use of the ship in respect of the voyage, 1,550*l.* in full, on condition of her taking a cargo of not less than 1,000 tons weight and measurement:—Held, that 1,000 tons of weight and measurement meant 1,000 tons of a cargo of goods in the ordinary proportion of the port of lading, viz. one-third weight and two-thirds measurement, and not as for the Sydney market, in which the proportion is two-thirds weight and one-third measurement. Pust v. Dowie, 5 B. & S. 20; 34 L. J., Q. B. 127; 13 W. R. 459—Ex. Ch.

The bill of lading of a cargo, shipped at Dantzic on board a Prussian vessel, expressed it to be 100 lasts in 2,092 bags. The consignee had purchased it for that quantity, English measure, but it did not amount to that quantity by the Dantzic measure, which is larger:—Held, that the master was entitled to freight according to the measure in the bill of lading, although exceeding the freight computed by Dantzic measure. Moller v. Living, 4 Taunt. 102.

Goods shipped from abroad, and consigned to a merchant in this country, are to be paid for (upon a demand for freight) according to their net weight, as ascertained at the king's landing scales, and not according to the weights expressed in the bill of lading, unless there is a special contract so to pay for them. Geraldes v. Donison, Holt, 346; 17 R. R. 645.

Upon a charterparty engaging to pay 4*l.* 15*s.* per ton for goods shipped at Bombay for London, cotton to be calculated at 50 cubic feet per ton:—Held, that evidence was admissible of a usage to pay according to the measurement taken at Bombay before the goods were loaded: also, that the plaintiff was entitled to shew in reply, that his captain objected to receive the goods at the Bombay measurement, measured them when on board, and delivered an account of that measurement to the shippers. Bottomley v. Forbes, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 121; 6 Scott, 866; 8 L. J., C. P. 85.

Timber was consigned to the Surrey Commercial Docks under a charterparty, by which freight was made payable "for deals and battens, per St. Petersburg standard hundred":—Held, that freight was payable only upon the number of such hundreds as ascertained by the customary mode of measurement adopted by the dock company for timber cargoes. Neilsen v. Neame, 1 Cab. & E. 288.

—— "Quantity and Quality Unknown."]—A vessel was chartered to carry a cargo of corn from Odessa to Gloucester, for freight payable at a certain rate per quarter. 2,664 quarters were shipped at Odessa, and the master signed bills of lading in the usual form, and which contained a memorandum, "quantity and quality unknown." The vessel arrived at Gloucester with the cargo of corn, when it was measured at the Queen's beam, and found to contain 2,785½ quarters, being an increase of 121 quarters. In the course of the voyage a portion of the corn, from some unknown cause, had become heated and damaged, whereby its bulk was increased:—Held, that freight was payable on the quantity of corn shipped, and not on its measurement at the port of discharge. Gibson v. Sturge, 10 Ex. 622; 3 C. L. R. 421; 24 L. J., Ex. 121; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 259; 3 W. R. 165.

A charterparty, under which a ship was chartered for a grain cargo from the Danube to the United Kingdom for freight "per imperial quarter delivered," contained a provision that in the event of the cargo, or any part, being delivered in a damaged or heated condition, the freight should be payable on the invoice quantity taken on board, as per bill of lading, or half-freight upon the damaged or heated portion, at the captain's option. The bill of lading stated that 1,021 kilos were shipped on board; but the master added at the end of the bill of lading, before signing it, the words, "quantity and quality unknown." The cargo having become heated on the voyage, the master claimed to exercise his option, and to be paid freight upon the invoice quantity, as per bill of lading:—Held, that the addition of the words "quantity and quality unknown" to the bill of lading by the master did not take away his right to be paid freight upon the invoice quantity in the bill of lading, and that the object and effect of that memorandum were merely to protect the captain against any mistake that might occur in the invoice quantity in the bill of lading, in case of alleged short delivery or deterioration not caused by his default. Tully v. Terry, 42 L. J., C. P. 240; L. R. 8 C. P. 679; 29 L. T. 36.

—— Mistake and Misdescription.]—In an action for freight, the master is at liberty, notwithstanding the terms of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, s. 3 (the Bills of Lading Act), to shew that the cargo actually received by him differs in weight from that signed in the bill of lading; at all events where the weight mentioned in the bill of lading is a mere matter of measurement. Blanchet v. Powell's Llantivit Collieries Co., 43 L. J., Ex. 50; L. R. 9 Ex. 74; 30 L. T. 28; 22 W. R. 490; 2 Asp. M. C. 224.

A shipowner is not estopped by the signature of the bill of lading by the master from shewing that the goods or some of them were never actually put on board. Brown v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., 44 L. J., C. P. 289; L. R. 10 C. P. 562; 32 L. T. 621; 23 W. R. 549; 2 Asp. M. C. 578.

Bills of lading signed by the master are primâ facie evidence that the quantities named therein were received by him; the onus of rebutting this presumption, and of shewing that a less quantity than that specified was received, lies on the shipowner. M'Lean v. Fleming, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 128; 25 L. T. 317; 1 Asp. M. C. 160.

Freight Payable "on Intake Measure of Quantity Delivered."]—A cargo of deals and battens consigned to the defendants was shipped on board the plaintiff's vessel under a charterparty by which freight was to be paid on deals, battens, &c., at the rate of 3*l.* 5*s.* per St. Petersburg standard hundred of 1,980 superficial feet and on deal ends at the rate of 2*l.* 1*s.* 1*d.* per the like hundred, eight feet and under. "Freight payable on deals and sawn lumber on the intake measure of quantity delivered." A bill of lading was signed for a specified number of pieces, deals, battens, and scantling, making freight payable "as per charterparty." The various pieces were, in the ordinary course of business, measured by the shipper at the port of shipment and their dimensions entered in a specification; the figures representing such dimensions being, before shipment, chalked on each piece respectively. During the voyage a number of the pieces were lost. The remainder was delivered at the port of destination, but the measurement figures put on some of the pieces delivered had become obliterated. The dimensions of the pieces lost were unknown; but there was some evidence that they were of average size compared with the rest of the cargo:—Held, that under the charterparty, freight was payable on the measurement figures as ascertained at the port of shipment, and not on the quantity delivered measured at the port of discharge, according to the intake mode of measurement; and that, having regard to the particular circumstances, the amount might be calculated by assuming that the pieces lost were of average size as compared with the remainder, and making a proportionate reduction from the sum total of the measurements in the specification. Speight v. Farnworth, 49 L. J., Q. B. 346; 5 Q. B. D. 115; 42 L. T. 296; 28 W. R. 508; 4 Asp. M. C. 251.

Goods were shipped from Wilmington in the United States for Liverpool under a charterparty, which provided that freight was to be paid on the "Wilmington gross intake weight":—Held, method of weighing adopted at Wilmington. Fallagsen v. Walford, 1 Cab. & E. 198.

Dead Freight.]—Dead freight means not freight, but an unliquidated compensation for the loss of freight recoverable in the absence and place of freight. M'Lean v. Fleming, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 128; 25 L. T. 317.

The shipowner therefore is entitled to be paid for a deficiency of cargo, not at the rate assigned per ton in the charterparty for actual cargo, but a reasonable sum, deductions being made for charges saved to the shipowner in consequence of the deficiency. Ib.

No Covenant to Supply full Cargo.]—If the whole ship is hired and the burden stated in the charterparty, and the merchant covenants to pay so much for every ton of goods loaded, but does not covenant to supply a full cargo, freight upon the goods shipped and no more is payable. James (Lady) v. East India Co., cited Abbott on Shipping, 13th ed. 553.

"Full and Complete Cargo"—Failure to load—Cargo improperly stowed.]—By a charterparty made between the plaintiff, the owner of a steamship, and the defendants, her affreighters, it was provided that the ship should proceed to a specified port, and there load from the factor of the affreighters a "full and complete cargo of sugar in hogsheads and (or) bags, or other lawful merchandise," and being loaded should therewith proceed to another port and deliver the same at such place as the consignees might direct on being paid freight at the rates therein mentioned. The cargo of sugar with which the ship was loaded was not, the plaintiff said, a "full and complete" one, inasmuch as the parts of the ship known as the "lazerette" and the "alley-ways," were not filled with bags of sugar as they ought to have been. The defence was, that the master of the ship did not stow the cargo properly; that the defendants tendered more hogsheads of sugar (which were too large to go into the alley-ways); and that, if the bags had been put there, there would have been space for more hogsheads in the hold:—Held, that the defendants were not bound to send the cargo in any particular form; and that, as they sent part of it in bags and hogsheads, and the master chose to assume that the remainder would be in bags, and to leave stowage which was only suitable for bags, and not for hogsheads, which the defendants had an equal right to send, they could not be made liable for dead freight. Furness v. Tennant, 66 L. T. 635; 7 Asp. M. C. 179—C. A.

—— Refusal of Master to sign Bills of Lading at lower Freight.]—Where the charterer of a ship to Jamaica and back covenanted to load her there with a complete cargo of sugar and to pay freight at the rate of 10*s.* 6*d.* per cwt., and his agent in Jamaica tendered a complete cargo to the captain, but insisted on his signing bills of lading for it at 10*s.* per cwt., which the captain refused to do:—Held, that the charterer was liable for dead freight. Hyde v. Willis, 3 Camp. 202. And see Gray v. Carr, infra, col. 429.

—— Vacant Space—Cargo putting Ship down to her Marks without filling her.]—Ships chartered by the plaintiffs in their trade loaded nickel ore in New Caledonia and proceeded to New Zealand ports to fill up, under sub-charters, unoccupied space with cargo of a dry and perishable kind. It was contemplated that in the ordinary course of business this cargo would be wool. Under a sub-charter with the defendants the s.s. "Strathord" proceeded from New Caledonia to New Zealand to take in cargo for London. The plaintiffs guaranteed some 5,000 tons space at a freight of 30*s.* per ton of forty cubic feet. The defendants failed to secure an entire cargo of wool in New Zealand, and loaded grain instead, which brought the ship down to her mark, leaving an unoccupied space in her of 901 tons. The defendants denied their liability to pay freight for this space:—Held, that a wool cargo had been contemplated which would have filled the ship without putting her down to her marks; that it had not been contemplated that she should come home partly empty; and that the defendants were liable to pay freight for the 901 tons unoccupied space. Potter v. New Zealand Shipping Co., 64 L. J., Q. B. 689.

—— Goods not Specified—Vacant Space.]—A ship was chartered to bring home a full cargo of produce, and to deliver the same on being paid freight "at and after the rate of 5*s.* 6*d.* per barrel of flour, meal and naval stores, and 11*s.* per quarter of 480 lbs. for Indian corn or other grain." The cargo was not to consist of less than 3,000 barrels of flour, meal or naval stores. The ship returned with a short cargo, consisting of only three barrels of flour, and the rest oats, tobacco, bran and staves. Indian corn or wheat weighs 480 lbs. and oats only 272 lbs. per quarter, and the latter were not a usual import from the port of lading:—Held, first, that the charterparty was intended to regulate the amount of freight to be paid on all produce that might be shipped; and that for produce not specified, and for vacant space, freight was to be calculated at a rate to be deduced from the two rates mentioned. Warren v. Peabody, 8 C. B. 800; 19 L. J., C. P. 43; 14 Jur. 150.

—— "Other Grain."]—Held, secondly, that the words "other grain" meant such grain as would weigh about 480 lbs. per quarter, and therefore did not include oats, which were to be treated as produce not specified, and freight to be paid for them accordingly. Ib.

Hire of Ship so long as Efficient—Breakdown—General Average.]—By charterparty the charterer agreed to pay hire for a steamship at a certain rate per month, the owners providing master, crew and stores;—"in the event of loss of time from deficiency of men or stores, breakdown of machinery, want of repairs, or damage, whereby the working of the vessel is stopped for more than forty-eight consecutive working hours, the payment of hire shall cease until she be again in an efficient state to resume her service." On September 30th, on a voyage from Africa to Harburg, one of the engines broke down, and the ship put into Las Palmas, where she was pronounced unfit to continue her voyage. The owners and charterers agreed to send a tug to bring her to Harburg, the cost to be general average. The ship arrived at Harburg with the assistance of the tug and using her own low-pressure engine. The charterer paid 867*l.* as his share of general average. In an action by the shipowner against the charterer for hire of the ship from her leaving Las Palmas till she was discharged:—Held, that no hire was payable from the date of the accident to the date of the commencement of her discharge; but that hire was payable during the discharge of her cargo. Hogarth v. Miller, 60 L. J., P. C. 1; [1891] App. Cas. 48; 64 L. T. 205: 7 Asp. M. C. 1—H. L. (Sc.) In court below, 16 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 599.

Whether Payable for Whole Day.]—A charterparty provided that the hire of a vessel should commence at noon of a certain day, and freight was payable at so much per calendar month; and "at and after the same rates for any part of the month" until her delivery to owners. On the day the hiring terminated she was delivered to her owners at 5.30 p.m.:—Held, that the charterers were liable for freight for the whole day, commencing at noon of the day of her delivery. Angier v. Stewart, 1 Cab. & E. 357.

East India Company's Ship—Passage Money—Implied Promise to pay Extra.]—There is no implied promise by an officer in the East India Company's service to pay the captain more than the regulation passage money, though it is usual to do so. Adderley v. Cookson, 2 Camp. 15.

No Freight specified—Chancery Jurisdiction.]—Bill in chancery for relief where no freight was mentioned in the charterparty, but freight on silks at 5*l.* per ton was intended, whereas boxwood at 40*s.* per ton was carried. Application refused; plaintiff must sue at law. Foot v. Salway, Ca. in Ch., pt. 2, 142.

Deductions from Freight—Receipt of Freight payable under Contract of Doubtful Validity.]—Semble, if the owner receives freight payable under a charterparty entered into by the master, containing a provision as to payment to the master of advances of doubtful validity, he cannot object to such provisions as being invalid. Gibbs v. Charleton, 26 L. J., Ex. 321.

Freight Payable "Subject to Insurance."]—The stipulation in a charterparty that freight shall be paid "subject to insurance," means freight is to be paid subject to deductions for premiums, and not that insurance by the owner is a condition precedent to his recovery of the freight. Jackson v. Isaacson, 3 H. & N. 405; 27 L. J., Ex. 392.

Disbursements charged against the freight of a vessel, but not expressed in the charterparty, are mere loans and cannot properly be deducted. Tanner v. Phillips, 42 L. J., Ch. 125; 27 L. T. 480; 21 W. R. 68; 1 Asp. M. C. 448.

Foreign Bill of Lading—Cargo Sold—Short Delivery.]—The owners of a Danish ship sued the indorsees of a bill of lading for freight on cargo delivered to them in Scotland. The defendants had bought the cargo at a price to depend on the amount delivered. The cargo delivered was short of that specified in the bill of lading, and the defendants claimed to retain the value of the short cargo from freight, alleging that by Danish law the bill of lading is conclusive as to the amount of cargo put on board:—Held, that the defendants were liable for the full freight on cargo delivered. Immanuel (Owners) v. Denholm, 15 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 152.

Rate Increased by Subsequent Agreement.]—Subsequent agreement with A. by a factor of a merchant for freight at 6*l.* 10*s.* per ton good though A. took no notice he had made a former agreement with the merchant at 3*l.* 10*s.* per ton, that agreement having been obstructed by an embargo. Draddy v. Deacon, 2 Vern. 242.

In what Cases.]—If the consignee to get his goods delivered to him pays more than the net weight amounts to he may recover back the surplus. Geraldes v. Donison, Holt, 346; 17 R. R. 645.

When the charterers of a ship stipulate that they shall be entitled to insure their advances "against freight" at the owner's expense, and they fail to insure, they have, in the event of the ship perishing, no claim against the owners for repayment. Watson v. Shankland, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 304; 29 L. T. 349.

Advance Freight.]—See Gibbs v. Charleton, ante, col. 411.

Freight paid in Advance—Voyage in Stages—Part performed.]—The plaintiffs shipped goods at Liverpool on the defendants' ship to be carried viâ Colon to San Francisco by arrangement between the West India and Pacific Steamship Co. and the Panama Railway Co., and the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., freight and primage to be considered as earned, ship lost or not lost; the freight payable in Liverpool. The whole freight was paid to the defendants' agent at Liverpool, and the bill of lading was signed by him "for the service from London to Colon," and by the agent of the other two companies "for the service from Colon to San Francisco." The ship sailed and was lost before arriving at Colon. The defendants paid over to the other two companies their proportion of the freight. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for the money so paid over to the other two companies:—Held, that the bill of lading formed one contract for the carriage of the goods from Liverpool to San Francisco, and that since the consideration for which the freight was paid had not wholly failed, the plaintiffs could not recover. Greeves v. West India and Pacific Steamship Co., 22 L. T. 615.

g. Tender.

What is.]—The custom of the Caen stone trade being to pay freight half in cash and half by a bill at two months, the agent of the owners of Caen stone, which was brought by a vessel to an English port, verbally offered the captain of a vessel which brought it half the amount of the freight in cash; and also offered to give the captain per procuration, the acceptance of the principal for the other half, if the captain would draw a bill. This the captain refused:—Held, a sufficient tender of the freight, as it was the duty of the captain to draw the bill. Luard v. Butcher, 2 Car. & K. 29.

Waiver of.]—In an action for non-delivery of a cargo, it was proved that a larger sum was demanded for freight by the master than was due, and that the demand was so made as to amount to an announcement by the master that it was useless to tender a smaller sum, as it would be refused:—Held, that these facts amounted to a dispensation of a tender. The Norway, Br. & Lush. 404; 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 245, nom. Norway (Owners) v. Ashburner, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 892; 13 L. T. 50; 13 W. R. 1085—P. C.

h. Payment Guaranteed.

The defendants guaranteed to the plaintiff's vessel a sum of 900*l.* gross freight, on the understanding that the vessel should be placed at once on the most profitable charter or trade procurable, and that the vessel would carry 300 tons of whatever cargo it might take on board, or should it not take 300 tons that a proportionate reduction of the guarantee should be made for any proper quantity of cargo it might take. The plaintiff was not able to procure a gross freight of 900*l.*:—Held, that the breach accrued at the place of loading, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover on the guarantee, though the vessel was lost on the voyage. Carr v. Wallachian Petroleum Co., 36 L. J., C. P. 236; L. R. 2 C. P. 468; 16 L. T. 460; 15 W. R. 874—Ex. Ch.

i. Pleadings.

A declaration stated that "the defendants are indebted to the plaintiff for freight, for the conveyance by the plaintiff for the defendants, at their request of goods in a ship":—Held, that the declaration was bad for omitting the words "for money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff," and for not shewing any debt due in præsenti. Place v. Potts, 8 Ex. 705; 22 L. J., Ex. 269; 1 W. R. 337.

So where a declaration since 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, stated that "the plaintiff sues the defendant for freight, for the conveyance by the plaintiff for the defendant at his request of goods in ships":—Held, bad on demurrer, for not shewing a debt in præsenti, but that the defect was cured by pleading over. Wilkinson v. Sharland, 10 Ex. 724; 3 C. L. R. 619; 24 L. J., Ex. 116; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 144; 3 W. R. 207.

Where a ship was let to freight by a charterparty, a clause in the deed that "it was covenanted and agreed by and between the parties, that forty days should be allowed for unloading and loading again":—Held, to raise an implied covenant on the part of the freighter not to detain the ship for loading and unloading beyond the forty days; and if he detains her for any longer time the owner's remedy is covenant and not assumpsit, as upon an implied new contract. Randall v. Lynch, 12 East, 179; 11 R. R. 340.

Defence to action for freight that the ship did not, according to charterparty, sail with the next wind:—Held, the traverse bad, because the voyage and not sailing with next wind is the substance of the contract. Constable v. Clowbury, Noy, 75; nom. Constable v. Clovery, Latch. 12.

Admissions on Pleadings — Counter-claim—Motion for Judgment—Ord. XI. r. 11.]—Where the plaintiff's claim for freight is admitted, but the defendants set up a counter-claim for a larger amount, the plaintiff is not entitled to a judgment on the claim under Ord. XI. r. 11, as upon an admission in the pleadings. Mersey Steamship Co. v. Shuttleworth, 52 L. J., Q. B. 522; 11 Q. B. D. 531; 48 L. T. 625; 32 W. R. 245; 5 Asp. M. C. 48.

Payment—Assignment in Equity.]—In an action for freight the defendant pleaded set-off; replication upon equitable grounds that while the freight was being earned the plaintiff assigned it for value to A., of which the defendant had notice before the debt became due and before action brought, and that the plaintiff was suing as trustee for A.:—Held, no answer to the plea. Wilson v. Gabriel, 4 B. & S. 243; 8 L. T. 502; 11 W. R. 803.

4. Lien on Cargo.

a. Creation of.

By Contract.]—Where parties, instead of trusting to the general rule of law with respect to freight, make a special contract for a payment which is not freight, it must depend upon the terms of that contract whether a lien does or does not exist. When the contract made gives no lien, a court of law will not supply one by implication. Kirchner v. Venus, 12 Moore, P. C. 361; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 395; 7 W. R. 455.

D. & Co., of Liverpool, shipped goods for Sydney. The bill of lading stated the goods to be to the shipper's order or assigns, "he or they paying freight for the goods here as per margin." In the margin it was stipulated as follows: "Freight payable in Liverpool to M., one month after sailing, vessel lost or not lost." The bill of lading passed into the hands of K. & Co., as indorsees for value. On the ship's arrival at Sydney, the port of delivery, the master was advised by the shipowner that the sum agreed to be paid as freight at Liverpool had not been paid; and he refused to deliver the goods to K. & Co., the assignees of the bill of lading, unless freight was paid, claiming a lien on the goods for the unpaid freight:—Held, first, that the amount agreed to be paid by the shippers at the port of shipment, one month after sailing of the ship, did not acquire the legal incidents of freight, though described under that name in the bill of lading, it being merely money to be paid for taking goods on board and undertaking to carry, and not for carrying the goods; and that there was no right of lien on the goods by the shipowner in respect of such sum of money being unpaid. Ib.

No consideration of inconvenience can prevent a right of lien where a charterparty has expressly created that right. M'Lean v. Fleming, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 128; 25 L. T. 317; 1 Asp. M. C. 160.

Dead Freight.]—By a charterparty it was agreed between a shipowner and a merchant that his ship should proceed to Sulina, . . . and there load as customary from the factors of the . . . freighter a full and complete cargo of staves, &c., "which the . . . merchant bound himself to ship, . . . and . . . therewith proceed to London, and deliver the same on being paid freight at specified rates. . . . The freight to be paid in cash on . . . right delivery of cargo. . . . Fifty running days . . . to be allowed for loading . . . and ten days on demurrage, over and above the laying days . . . at 8*l.* per day. . . . The owners to have an absolute lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight, demurrage, and average; and the charterer's responsibilities to cease on shipment of the cargo, provided it be of sufficient value to cover the freight and charges on arrival at port of discharge. . . ." The ship proceeded to Sulina and, after a delay of eighteen days beyond the ten demurrage days, loaded a short cargo. A printed bill of lading was then signed by the captain for 283,682 staves, to be delivered "at the port of discharge, as per charterparty, unto order or . . . assigns, he or they paying freight and all other conditions (these words being inserted in writing) or demurrage (if any should be incurred) for the said goods as per charterparty." Upon the arrival of the ship in London the shipowner claimed from the consignees of the bill of lading a lien on the goods mentioned in the bill of lading for cargo short shipped (claimed as dead freight), for demurrage proper, in respect of the ship being detained ten days at the port of loading, and for damages in the nature of demurrage for a detention beyond the demurrage days. The consignees had no notice, until the arrival of the ship in London, of this claim, but they had received a copy of the charterparty with the bill of lading:—Held, that the shipowner had no lien for "dead freight," as the claim was not "dead freight," within the meaning of the charterparty and bill of lading. Gray v. Carr, 40 L. J., Q. B. 257; L. R. 6 Q. B. 522; 25 L. T. 215; 19 W. R. 1173—Ex. Ch.

Where the freighter of a ship covenanted, that, if she should not be fully laden, he would not only pay for the goods on board, but also for so much in addition as the ship would have carried, for which he had before stipulated to pay freight according to different rates for three descriptions of goods:—Held, that the shipowner had no lien upon the goods actually on board for the amount of dead freight; in other words, for the compensation in damages which he was entitled to for the freighter's breach of contract in not putting a full loading on board, which damages were unliquidated; there being no lien in such a case, either by usage of trade or the express contract of the parties. Phillips v. Rodie, 15 East, 547; 13 R. R. 528.

Waiver of Lien—Retaking Possession.]—If the shipowner waives his right to lien as to part of the cargo which is landed, he cannot afterwards reclaim possession of it to enforce his lien. Hammond v. M'Crie, 3 C. L. R. 1198.

Unpaid Vendor—Amount.]—The plaintiff, being the owner of a ship called the "K.," loaded her with wheat at P.; as the cargo was taken on the ship's account, freight at the nominal rate of 1*s.* per ton was inserted in the bill of lading, which contained the usual exceptions of perils of the seas. He sold the cargo whilst afloat to H. upon the terms that "freight" should be paid at the rate of 60*s.* per ton. H. sold his interest in the cargo, and it ultimately vested in the defendant, who bought the cargo on the same terms on which it had been sold to H. The "K." on her arrival was ordered to Y., where she commenced to discharge her cargo; the defendant received it and paid large sums on account. The quantity delivered was less than that mentioned in the bill of lading by about seventy quarters. The plaintiff claimed "freight" at the rate of 60*s.* per ton upon all the cargo delivered; the defendant claimed to deduct 193*l.* on account of short delivery. At the trial the jury were of opinion that the short delivery arose from the excepted perils, and found for the plaintiff for the total sum claimed by him:—Held, that although the plaintiff might not have a lien as shipowner, the cargo being taken on ship's account, nevertheless he had a lien as unpaid vendor; that from the defendant's conduct a contract by him might be implied to pay freight at the rate of 60*s.* per ton upon all cargo delivered, and that the finding of the jury for the plaintiff was right. Swann v. Barber, 49 L. J., Ex. 253; 5 Ex. D. 130; 42 L. T. 490; 28 W. R. 563; 4 Asp. M. C. 264—C. A.

Non-performance of Voyage.]—It was provided by a charterparty that 250*l.*, part of the freight, should be advanced in cash on signing bills of lading and clearing at the custom-house, and that for the security and payment of all freight, dead freight, demurrage and other charges, the master or owners should have an absolute lien and charge on the cargo. The ship was loaded and cleared at the custom-house, but the 250*l.* was not paid, and consequently the captain did not sign bills of lading, and the ship never started on her voyage. The charterer having become insolvent, his trustee in liquidation gave notice to the owner that he disclaimed all interest under the charterparty. The owner claimed a lien on the cargo for the 250*l.* as freight:—Held, the ship never having earned or commenced to earn freight, no lien arose. Nyholm, Ex parte, Child, In re, 43 L. J., Bk. 21; 29 L. T. 634; 22 W. R. 174; 2 Asp. M. C. 165.

Incorporation of Conditions of Charterparty.]—A charterparty contained a stipulation in the usual form for payment of freight at the rate of 1*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.* per ton; it also contained a clause that the shipowner should have an "absolute lien on the cargo for freight, dead freight, demurrage, lighterage at port of discharge and average;" and a further clause that the captain was to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight; "but should the total freight as per bills of lading be under the amount estimated to be earned by this charter, the captain to demand payment of any difference in advance." Certain goods were put on board the chartered ship, and were made deliverable to the plaintiffs (who were not the charterers) by a bill of lading, whereby freight was made payable at 22*s.* 6*d.* per ton; the bill of lading contained also a clause, whereby it was provided that extra expenses should be borne by the receivers and "other conditions as per charterparty." Upon the arrival of the ship at the port of discharge, the defendant, who was the shipowner, claimed and compelled payment of freight at the rate mentioned in the charterparty. The plaintiffs having sued to recover back the difference between the freight as specified in the charter-party and the freight as specified in the bill of lading:—Held, that the bill of lading did not incorporate the stipulation in the charterparty as to the payment of freight, that no right of lien existed for the freight mentioned in the charterparty, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to delivery of the goods upon payment of the freight specified in the bill of lading. Gardner v. Trechmann, 54 L. J., Q. B. 515; 15 Q. B. D. 154; 53 L. T. 518; 5 Asp. M. C. 558—C. A.

Collision—Re-shipment.]—The "K.," which was on a voyage under charter from Cardiff to Bombay with coals, was run into by the "B.," shortly after leaving Penarth Docks. The "K.," which was considerably damaged, returned to Cardiff, where her cargo was taken out of her in order that she might be repaired. The owners of the cargo proposed that the coals, which were also damaged, should be sold and a fresh cargo shipped. The shipowner, however, refused to ship a fresh cargo except "on fresh terms as to freight, &c.," and the charterer, without inquiring what the fresh terms would be, reshipped the damaged cargo, which was carried to Bombay:—Held, that the shipowner, having a lien on the cargo for freight, was entitled to insist on the original cargo being reshipped if it was capable of being carried to its destination, and that the cargo-owner was not entitled to insist on its delivery without payment of freight. The Blenheim, 54 L. J., Adm. 81; 10 P. D. 167; 53 L. T. 916; 34 W. R. 154; 5 Asp. M. C. 522.

Against Shipper without Notice of Charterparty.]—A firm of brokers, having chartered a ship, advertised her as about to sail, and invited shippers to send their goods by her. Under the charterparty, the captain was to have an absolute lien on the cargo for freight, dead freight, and demurrage. The plaintiff, who had no notice of the charterparty, dealing with the charterers only, sent some tea on board, to be carried at a rate of freight agreed upon between himself and the charterers. Afterwards, the charterers were unable to fill the ship, and so to carry out their contract with the owner, and the ship accordingly did not sail. No bills of lading for the tea had been signed, and the captain refused to sign them unless they were expressly made subject to the charterparty. The shipowner claimed a lien on the tea for the expenses incurred by him through his dealings with the charterers:—Held, that he had no such lien, the plaintiff having had no notice of the charterparty, and there being nothing to put him on inquiry; and the tea was ordered to be given up to the plaintiff, the intended carriage thereof having failed. Peek v. Larsen, 40 L. J., Ch. 763; L. R. 12 Eq. 378; 25 L. T. 580; 19 W. R. 1045; 1 Asp. M. C. 163.

Freight expressed by Bill of Lading to be Paid.]—Plaintiff, a shipowner, by charterparty, agreed with G. to take a cargo to Calcutta, and deliver a return cargo in London, for a freight of 14*l.* per ton of the ship's tonnage; the last payment to be made by bills at four months on arrival of the ship in the Thames. G., by his agent, put goods on board in Calcutta, and consigned them to the defendant, who knew of the charterparty. The captain signed a bill of lading according to which freight on these goods was expressed to have been paid by bills on London:—Held, that notwithstanding the bill of lading, the plaintiff had, as against the defendant, a lien on the goods for the money due under the charterparty. Campion v. Colvin, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 17; 3 Scott, 338; 2 Hodges, 116; 5 L. J., C. P. 317.

Lien on part of Cargo for whole Freight.]—The loss of part cargo having been occasioned by perils of the seas:—Held, that under the bills of lading and charterparty the master's lien on the residue for freight extended to the entire lump freight without deduction. The Norway, 1 Br. & Lush. 404; 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 246; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 892; 13 L. T. 50; 13 W. R. 1085.

A master may detain any part of the merchandise for the freight of all that is consigned to the same person. Lodergreen v. Flight, 6 East, 622, n.; 8 R. R. 578. And see Ward v. Felton, 1 East, 512.

Though some part has been removed into a lighter alongside of the ship which was sent by the consignee. Ib.

The shipowner's lien for freight extends to all the cargo belonging to the same person under the same consignment, and is for the whole freight on every part of the cargo. Lodergreen v. Flight, cited, 6 East, 622. See also Lamb v. Kaselack, post, col. 491.

Priority of Lien for Freight—Respondentia—Right of Underwriters.]—W., a London merchant, shipped on board a French ship (the "Galam") at Hayti, a cargo of wood, to Europe. The "Galam" became unseaworthy at Terceira, was there condemned, and the cargo discharged and stored, and the captain then raised 1,000*l.* from M., on a respondentia bond on the cargo, payable on arrival at Falmouth, but did nothing to forward the cargo. W., hearing of the accident, chartered the "Mary Jane" to go to Terceira and bring home the cargo, and to call at Scilly for orders, which was done; but on reaching Scilly she ran ashore, and expenses were incurred in saving ship and cargo. W., in order to defeat the respondentia bond, ordered the cargo to proceed to Hamburg, instead of Falmouth, and discharge the cargo; but before the "Mary Jane" started, M., the respondentia bondholder, instituted a suit and arrested the cargo at Scilly, by warrant out of the Admiralty Court. The cargo was afterwards removed to London for sale, and fetched 808*l.*:—Held, that the master of the "Mary Jane," not having known of the respondentia bond, and being prevented by the orders of the court of admiralty, occasioned by the default of the owner of the cargo, from carrying the cargo on to Hamburg, had a lien for freight on such cargo. Galam (Cargo ex), Cleary v. Macandrew, Br. & Lush. 167; 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 216; 3 N. R. 254; 33 L. J., Adm. 97; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 477; 9 L. T. 550; 12 W. R. 495.

Held, secondly, that the master having complained and obtained a settlement from his underwriters for a total loss, they were entitled in his right to such lien. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the master's lien for freight was preferable to the claim on the respondentia bond, for the carrying on of the cargo was essential for making the bond available, and the bondholder had done nothing towards forwarding the cargo. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that the master's claim for general average was also preferable to the respondentia bond, for he had a possessory lien for such average at common law, and the sale at London did not displace this lien. Ib.

Payment by Approved Bill—Negotiation of Bill—Lien Discharged.]—Where the shipowner, having a lien on the cargo for freight until the delivery of good and approved bills in payment, took a bill which he objected to, but afterwards negotiated:—Held, that by negotiating the bill he approved of it, and his lien was thereupon gone. Horncastle v. Farran, 3 B. & Ald. 497; 2 Stark. 590; 22 R. R. 461.

Transfer of Lien on Transhipment.]—See Matthews v. Gibbs, supra, col. 373.

Capture does not determine Lien.]—Master being turned out of possession upon the vessel's being captured does not deprive him of his lien for the freight in case of her re-capture. Checsman, Ex parte, 2 Eden, 181.

Wharfinger—Interpleader—25 & 26 Vict. c. 63.]—A cargo of timber consigned to A. was discharged at the wharf of B., and the landing of the goods was completed on the 12th October. On the 15th October following, C., who claimed to be owner of the ship, served a notice on B. of his claim for freight, and required him to hold the goods until his claim was discharged. B. having retained the goods in pursuance of that notice, an action of detinue was brought against him by A. On an application by B. for an interpleader order, on the ground that he could not proceed under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 68, as the notice of the 15th October was not served in time:—Held, per Christian, J., that as the act imposed on the wharfinger the duty of resorting to prescribed course of procedure in all cases coming within it, the question whether any particular case comes within the act must be decided by the wharfinger on his own responsibility, and is not the proper subject for an interpleader between the consignee of the goods and the shipowners. Per Monahan, C.J., that unless the case was one so clearly within the act that the court would on motion stay the action by A. against B., the latter was entitled to an interpleader order; and that, as the court was not prepared to do so in the present instance, the order should be granted. Lawther v. Belfast Harbour Co., 16 Ir. Ch. R. 34; 17 Ir. Ch. R. 54.

—— Does not apply where Owner of Goods lands them.]—When an owner of a ship lands goods on a wharf in his own name, the lien which he has on the goods until the freight is paid is outside any statutory enactment, the lien given to the ship by the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, on such goods, merely applying where the owner of the goods takes them himself out of the ship and lands them on the wharf in his own name, and this because the lien for freight would be gone when the owner of the goods landed them if the statute did not make provision to preserve it. The Edward Cardwell, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 34; 12 L. T. 677.

Charterparty construed—Penalty for Non-performance.]—Construction of a clause in a charterparty, whereby the parties "mutually bound themselves, especially the owners, the ship and tackle, and the freighter, the goods to be taken on board," in a penal sum "to the true and punctual performance of every article therein contained":—Held, not to give to the shipowners any lien in equity on the goods brought home either for dead freight or demurrage. Only one construction of the clause at law and in equity. Gladstone v. Birley, 2 Mer. 401; 3 M. & S. 205.

Contract inconsistent with Lien.]—A bill of lading contained this form, "Freight for the same goods to be paid by the shippers"; and in the margin of the bill, "Freight payable one month after sailing, ship lost or not lost." The owner of the ship, on the arrival at her destination, claimed a lien on the goods for the freight, and refused to deliver the goods to the consignees until the freight had been paid:—Held, that the shipowner had no lien on the goods consigned, as the sum claimed was not freight, properly so called, and was concluded by the contract which stipulated for a payment to be made in lieu of freight, and to be made at a fixed period, having no reference to the delivery of the goods. Walker or How v. Kirchner, 11 Moore, P. C. 21; 6 W. R. 198.

When Ship Lost.]—When money for the carriage of goods by sea is payable at the port of destination, "ship lost or not lost," and the ship is wrecked upon the voyage, the shipowner has no lien upon the goods, although the money to be paid for the carriage is described as freight in the bills of lading. Nelson v. Association for Protection of Wrecked Property, 43 L. J., C. P. 218.

On Transhipment.]—Where a vessel had been sea damaged, and the agents of the charterers refused to undertake the transhipment, the master entered into a fraudulent contract with a shipowner for the transhipment and conveyance of the cargo. By the contract while the same freight was reserved as had been payable on the original voyage, it was agreed between the master and the owner that a very large portion should be paid over to the master:—Held, that the contract must be taken to have been made on behalf of the owners, and that they had not a lien which they could transfer to the owner of the second vessel so as to entitle him to withhold the goods until the whole freight was paid. Matthews v. Gibbs, 30 L. J., Q. B. 55; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 186; 3 L. T. 551; 9 W. R. 200.

Unnecessary Detention — Ascertainment of General Average.]—When, by a charterparty and bill of lading, freight is "to be paid on unloading and right delivery of the cargo," the master having a lien by common law for freight and general average, and a lien by contract for demurrage, the payment of the freight and the delivery of the goods are concurrent acts in which all that is required from the owner of the cargo is readiness and willingness to pay at the time of delivery; and before paying any sum for general average, the owner of cargo is entitled to be satisfied that the amount claimed is the result of a proper adjustment; and if the owner of cargo on arrival of the ship in port, and before discharge, refuses to pay the amount claimed for freight and general average before the amount due is finally ascertained, but offers to pay a large proportion of the freight, and, there being no doubt as to his solvency, to sign an average bond for the payment of the general average when ascertained, but the master, nevertheless, insists upon retaining the cargo on board ship until his lien for freight and general average is satisfied, detention by the master is not wrongful. The Energie, Miedbrodt v. Fitzsimon, 44 L. J., Adm. 25; L. R. 6 P. C. 306; 32 L. T. 579; 23 W. R. 932; 2 Asp. M. C. 555.

Discharge against Payments.]—By a charterparty it was provided that freight should be paid at the rate therein specified, the cargo to be taken alongside and to be taken from the ship's tackle at the port of discharge, free of risk and expense to the ship. Disputes having arisen during the delivery of the cargo, the master required payment of the freight for the amount of cargo delivered each day over the ship's side into the consignee's boats, and refused to deliver any more cargo, on the consignees refusing to pay on delivery as required :—Held, that by the terms of the charterparty, it was clear that the intention of these parties was, that the master should, on the arrival at the port of destination, deliver, and the consignees receive, at the ship's side ; and that as on such delivery and receipt the master ceased to be responsible and to have any lien on the goods, he was justified in refusing to discharge the cargo without payment at the ship's side of the freight each day, on the quantity delivered, for his lien would be given up by delivery of the goods. Black v. Rose, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 277 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1009 ; 11 L. T. 31 ; 12 W. R. 1123.

Wharfage.]—But the master has no right to detain goods for wharfage, if the consignee tenders the freight, and requires them to be delivered over the ship's side. Bishop v. Ware, 3 Camp. 360 ; 14 R. R. 755.

Damages for Detention of Ship at Port of Loading.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that the ship should go to a certain port and there load from the charterer a cargo "in the customary manner," and proceed with the same to another port and deliver. . . . "The cargo to be discharged in ten working days, commencing from the day after the ship has got into her proper discharging berth. Demurrage at 2*l.* per 100 tons register per day. . . . The ship to have an absolute lien on cargo for freight and demurrage, the charterer's liability to any clauses in the charter ceasing when he has delivered the cargo alongside ship" :—Held, that the demurrage and the lien and exemption clauses did not apply to damages for undue detention of the vessel at the port of loading. Lockhart v. Falk, 44 L. J., Ex. 105 ; L. R. 10 Ex. 132 ; 33 L. T. 96 ; 23 W. R. 753 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 8. S. P., Gray v. Carr, 40 L. J., Q. B. 257 ; L. R. 6 Q. B. 522 ; 25 L. T. 215 ; 19 W. R. 1173 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 115—Ex. Ch.

Port Charges.]—In a charterparty the freighters promised to pay and defray two-thirds of the port charges ; the owner having paid the whole :—Held, that he had no lien on the goods shipped for those charges. Faith v. East India Co., 4 B. & Ald. 430 ; 23 R. R. 423.

Evidence of Custom of English Port against Foreign Indorsees.]—Evidence was admitted of a custom in Liverpool, that a lien on goods for a sum agreed to be paid there as freight continued : —Held, that as the assignees of the bill of lading were resident in Sydney, in New South Wales, and there was no evidence that they were acquainted with the local usage in Liverpool, such evidence of custom was not admissible for the purpose of explaining the effect of the memorandum in the bill of lading, or shewing the terms on which the goods were shipped, in the construction of such bill of lading. Kirchner v. Venus, 12 Moore, P. C. 361 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 395 ; 7 W. R. 455.

Payment at Two Months after Inward Report.]—A charterparty stipulated that a ship should proceed from London to Bombay, and being there loaded, should proceed to London, and discharge in any dock the freighters might appoint, and deliver her cargo, on being paid freight, at and after the rate of 4*l.* per ton. By a subsequent clause it was stipulated that the freight was to be paid on unloading and right delivery of the cargo in cash two months after the ship's inward report at the custom-house :—Held, that upon construction of these stipulations taken together, the freight was not payable until two months after the inward report, and the shipowner had not, after the cargo was discharged, pursuant to the charterparty, any lien thereon for the freight. Alsager v. St. Katharine's Dock Co., 14 M. & W. 794 : 15 L. J., Ex. 34.

Where a charterparty provided for payment of part of the freight, and for "the remainder in cash, two months after the vessel's report inwards" :—Held, that no lien was created in respect of the remainder. Foster v. Colby, 3 H. & N. 705 ; 28 L. J., Ex. 81.

Passage Money—Lien on Luggage.]—The master of a ship has a lien on the luggage of a passenger for his passage-money. Wolf v. Summers, 2 Camp. 631 ; 12 R. R. 764.

b. Against Charterer or Agent with Notice.

Express Stipulations.]—A shipowner may expressly stipulate to retain his lien by the charterparty, and this will be effective between him and the charterer or his agent with notice. Kern v. Deslandes, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 205 ; 30 L. J., C. P. 297 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 194 ; 5 L. T. 349.

A lien on the lading of a ship having been expressly reserved to the owner by a charterparty : —Held that goods which the charterer purchased and put on board, and then transferred with a stipulation to convey them to their destination for a certain amount of freight, were, even against an indorsee of the bill of lading, subject not only to that freight, but to the shipowner's lien for a balance due to him under the charterparty, whether possession of the ship was by the charterparty, completely out of the shipowner and vested in the charterer or not. Small v. Moates, 9 Bing. 579 ; 2 M. & Scott, 674.

Notice to Agents—Bill of Lading Differing from Charterparty.]—A shipowner having agreed with G. by charterparty to convey a cargo to Calcutta, and to deliver a return cargo at the East India Docks in London, for a freight of 14*l.* a ton on the ship's tonnage, the last payment to be made by bills at four months, on the arrival of the ship in the Thames. G. by his agents put goods on board at Calcutta, and consigned them to the defendants, who were aware of the existence of the charterparty : the captain signed a bill of lading, according to which freight for these goods was expressed to have been paid by bills in London :—Held, that, notwithstanding this bill of lading, the shipowner had, even as against the defendants, a lien on these goods for the hire of the ship due under the charterparty. Campion v. Colvin, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 17 ; 3 Scott, 338 ; 2 Hodges, 116 ; 5 L. J., C. P. 317.

Failure of Charterers—New Contract.]—The agents of M. & Co., of Porto Rico, chartered a ship for a voyage for the round from Glasgow to Porto Rico, and back to the United Kingdom ; freight 4*l.* 10*s.* per ton upon homeward cargo. The charterer on the vessel's arrival at San Juan, directed the captain to proceed to P., where L. & Co., their agents there, would provide him with homeward cargo, and they accordingly supplied 498 hogsheads of sugar towards the cargo, and for which a bill of lading was given by the captain; but having heard of M. & Co.'s failure, they refused to provide the remainder, and demanded either a return of the goods already on board, or that the captain should enter into a new charter. The captain, under protest, entered into a new contract at 30*s.* a ton, for a voyage from P. to Falmouth, and 180 hogsheads were put on board in addition, and a bill of lading was signed for the whole quantity at that rate:—Held, that the 498 hogsheads were virtually shipped by the charterers themselves, and that the captain had no authority to vary the contract as to the goods actually on board when the failure of the charterers was heard of, and that the shipowner was therefore entitled to a lien on those goods for freight at the rate of 4*l.* 10*s.* per ton; but that with respect to the 180 hogsheads afterwards shipped, the captain was entitled to enter into the new contract, the agents of the charterers having refused to complete the loading on the original charterparty, and for these goods the owners were entitled to a lien at the rate of 30*s.* Pearson v. Göschen, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 352; 33 L. J., C. P. 265; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 903; 10 L. T. 758; 12 W. R. 1116.

Where Goods Re-landed.]—Where by a charterparty the shipowners covenanted to receive a full cargo, and the freighter to load the same, and to pay so much for every ton of flax which should be delivered at the king's beams at L., and so much per diem for demurrage, and the parties mutually bound themselves, especially the shipowners, the ship, her tackle, and appurtenances, and the freighter, the goods to be laden and put on board, in a penal sum, for the performance of every article contained in the charterparty:—Held, that the shipowners had not a lien upon the goods actually brought home to L., for a sum of money claimed to be due in respect of goods which were put on board at the loading port, but afterwards re-landed, and restored to the agent of the freighter, under process of the law at the loading port; nor for a sum claimed for dead freight; nor for a sum claimed for demurrage. Birley v. Gladstone, 3 M. & S. 205; 15 R. R. 465.

When Holders of Bills of Lading are Charterers' Correspondents.]—By a charterparty it was stipulated that the ship should proceed to Penang, and there load a full and complete cargo of legal merchandise from the charterers' factors, and proceed therewith to London, and there deliver the same on being paid freight, "lump sum of 2,800*l.*, in full of all charges." At the end of the charterparty was the following clause: "The captain to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight, without prejudice to this charter. In the event of a less freight, the bills of lading of part of the cargo to be filled up for loss, if any." Under this charterparty, the charterers shipped at Penang goods of their own, for which the captain signed bills of lading at a certain specified rate of freight. The goods so shipped were consigned for sale to the correspondent of the charterers in London, who was under a general engagement to honour bills drawn upon him by the charterers, upon the faith of consignments to be made to meet them, and who were largely in advance at the time of the shipment:—Held, that the owners had a lien upon the goods for the entire lump freight. Gledstanes v. Allen, 12 C. B. 202.

Bills of Exchange—Dishonour of.]—By a memorandum of charter, made at Liverpool, it was agreed that a ship should load a cargo there, and proceed to China, and there deliver the same agreeably to bills of lading, and afterwards load a full cargo of tea or other lawful merchandise for Liverpool or London, and deliver the same to the charterers or their assigns, they paying freight for the same at the rate of 7*l.* 10*s.* per ton of fifty cubic feet for tea delivered, for the round out and home; other goods, if shipped, to pay in customary proportion; in consideration whereof the outward cargo to be carried freight free; payment to become due, and to be made as follows: 800*l.* on sailing, by charterers' acceptance at three months' date, and the balance on the unloading and delivering of the cargo, by approved bills on London at two months' date, or cash; "the master to sign bills of lading at such rates of freight as may be required by the agents of the charterers, without prejudice to this charterparty; and the owners to have an absolute lien upon the cargo for the recovery of all freight, dead freight, demurrage, &c., due to the ship under this charterparty." By another memorandum, indorsed on the above, Singapore was substituted for China; and it was agreed that, on delivery of the cargo in Singapore, the freighters' agent there should have the option of loading the ship for London or Liverpool, or for China; that, in the event of the vessel returning from Singapore, the freight for the round should be 3,375*l.* in full; that should the vessel proceed to China, the freighters should pay an additional freight of 31*s.* per ton on the homeward cargo from thence, for the privilege of carrying intermediate freight from Singapore to China, and an acceptance at three months for 900*l.*, on the ship's sailing from Liverpool, was substituted for 800*l.* The ship was laden by the charterers chiefly as a general ship, but they shipped on their own account goods for which the master signed bills of lading, making the goods deliverable at Singapore to M. & Co., or assigns, paying freight as per margin. In the margin, the freight (in the aggregate 196*l.* 12*s.*) was declared to be "payable in Liverpool one month after sailing of vessel lost or not lost." The vessel sailed from Liverpool on the 21st of February, 1856, and the charterers gave their acceptance at three months for 900*l.*, which became due on the 23rd of May, and was dishonoured:—Held, that the owners had a lien upon the goods so shipped by the charterers, for the amount of the bill of lading freight, as against the consignees (M. & Co.), who had advanced money to the consignors upon the shipment, but not for the 900*l.* Gilkison v. Middleton, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 134; 26 L. J., C. P. 209.

By a charterparty between De M. and the shipowner, coals were shipped from a home port to Alexandria, and made deliverable to order or assigns; and it was stipulated that the freight should be paid "on loading and right delivery of the cargo, less advances in cash at current rates of exchange; one-half of the freight to be advanced by freighter's acceptance at three months, on signing bills of lading; owner to insure the amount, and deposit with the charterer the club policy, and to guarantee the same." The acceptance having been given, the shipowner's agent indorsed the bill of lading thus: "Received on account of the within freight, 301*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, as per charterparty." On the ship's arrival at Alexandria, the purchaser of the coal, and to whom De M. had indorsed the bills of lading, intimated that he was prepared to pay the balance of the freight remaining unpaid after deducting 301*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, and applied for delivery of the cargo; but the master having heard that De M. had suspended payment, refused. The demand was made on the 6th of January, 1864, but the bill was not due till the 3rd of February:—Held, that the shipowner had no lien on the cargo in respect of the amount represented by the bill of exchange: and that the damages were the amount of the bills, and such further sum as represented the loss sustained by the detention of the goods. Tamvaco v. Simpson, 1 H. & R. 374; 35 L. J., C. P. 196; L. R. 1 C. P. 363; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 926; 14 L. T. 893; 14 W. R. 376—Ex. Ch.

And see cases supra, col. 414, as to dishonoured bills.

—— Approved Bills.]—A shipowner having a lien on goods until the delivery of approved bills for freight, took a bill of exchange in payment, and objected to it at the time, but afterwards negotiated it:— Held, that such negotiation amounted to an approval of the bill, and that he thereby lost his lien on the goods. Horncastle v. Farran, 3 B. & Ald. 497; 2 Stark. 590; 22 R. R. 461.

—— Until Delivery of.]—Where the owner of a ship covenanted to let her to freight, and deliver the cargo in good order and condition, and the freighters covenanted to pay freight on safe delivery of the cargo, one-third in cash, and the remaining two-thirds by approved bills of exchange at four months' date:—Held, that the delivery of the cargo and payment of freight were concomitant acts, and that the owner had a lien on the cargo till he was satisfied for the amount of freight remaining due. Yates v. Railston, 2 Moore, 294; 19 R. R. 524.

And where the owner covenanted to deliver the cargo agreeably to bills of lading, and the freighters covenanted to pay one-third in cash on arrival, and the remainder on delivery of the cargo, by good bills of exchange at four months' date; and the captain landed the goods in his own name, and offered them to the freighter at one delivery, on receiving the stipulated freight:—Held, that the owner had a lien on them until such bills of exchange were produced by the freighter. Yates v. Mennell, 2 Moore, 297; 19 R. R. 527.

A., as owner of a ship, covenanted with B., the freighter, for a voyage from London to Bahia, there to receive a full cargo, and to proceed to the first port in the English channel, where, on her arrival, notice should be given to the freighters, from whom orders should be received, at what port the cargo should be delivered according to bills of lading. B. covenanted to put a full cargo on board, and to pay freight at certain rates per ton, viz. 300*l.* in cash on the day the vessel should be reported inward at the custom-house, and the remainder by good bills, payable in London, at two months after date, from the day on which the delivery should be completed. A. bound the vessel and freight, and B. the merchandise to be taken on board her, for due performance. The vessel shipped a cargo for the freighter at Bahia, together with other merchandise consigned to other persons in London. By the bill of lading, the freighter's goods were to be delivered, on his paying freight for the same, as per charterparty. The vessel having arrived in London, the owner delivered the goods to the different consignees, on their paying freight reserved by bills of lading, at a less rate than that stipulated by the charterparty. The owner refused to deliver the freighter's cargo, without payment of the freight due under the charterparty:—Held, that he was entitled to detain it for the hire of the vessel, as the delivery of the goods and the payment of freight were concomitant acts, and that if the master unshipped the whole of the cargo, the delivery would be complete, and that the freighter should then pay for and deliver bills for the amount of the freight, as stipulated by the charterparty. Tate v. Meek, 2 Moore, 278; 19 R. R. 518.

c. Against Indorsee or Assignee of Bill of Lading.

Time of Payment.]—Where freight is made payable by a bill of lading, according to the terms of a charterparty, which stipulates for payment of freight ten days after delivery of the cargo, the owner has no lien on the cargo for the freight. Lucas v. Nockells, 4 Bing. 729; 2 Y. & J. 304; 1 M. & P. 783—Ex. Ch.

Reference to Charterparty—Effect of.]—In a bill of lading, where freight is made payable "as per charterparty," this reference incorporates into the bill of lading all the clauses in the charterparty which relate to the amount of freight, but only for the purpose of computing the amount of freight, not for the purpose of transferring to the holder of the bill of lading the benefit of covenants found in the same clauses of the charterparty, but not affecting the amount of freight. The Norway, Br. & Lush. 226. See S. C. in P. C., ante, cols. 427, 432.

Where a charterparty stipulated for lump freight, "the master guaranteeing the ship to carry 3,000 tons on a draught of twenty-six feet water, or to forfeit freight in proportion to the deficiency," and the ship could not, and, in fact, did not, carry a cargo of 3,000 tons:—Held, that an assignee of a bill of lading for such cargo making freight payable as "per charterparty," had no cause of action against the ship in respect of the master fraudulently guaranteeing, &c. Ib.

By the terms of a charterparty the cargo was made deliverable on freight being paid as follows: "The ship to have a lien on cargo for freight; 3*l.* 10*s.* per ton of fifty cubic feet to be paid to captain or his agents on right and true delivery at port of discharge." The charterer shipped a portion of the cargo under a bill of lading, which stated freight to be payable as per charterparty:—Held, that the rate of freight only was, and not the terms as to the lien mentioned in the charterparty were, incorporated in the bill of lading, and that, therefore, the shipowner had no lien as against a bonâ fide indorsee for value of such bill of lading for the whole chartered freight, but only for the freight due on the goods mentioned in the bill of lading. Fry v. Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, London, and China, 35 L. J., C. P. 306; L. R. 1 C. P. 689; 14 L. T. 709; 14 W. R. 920.

Notice of Terms of Charterparty.]—Where freight was agreed to be paid for the use or hire of the ship at a certain rate per ton for a voyage out and home, in manner following, viz. a certain sum in advance on the ship's clearing outwards, and the residue, half in cash, and half in approved bills, upon the delivery of the homeward cargo; and the owner appointed a master at the request of the charterer, who executed a bond, conditioned for the faithful performance of the master's duty; and also instructed the master to be careful to sign all bills of lading with the clause "freight payable as per charterparty"; and the ship was consigned to C. & Co. in Calcutta, by whom she was put up for her homeward voyage as a general ship, and different merchants shipped goods by her; C. & Co. taking for homeward freight bills payable sixty days after the delivery of the cargo, and, a new master having been appointed by them, in conjunction with the former master, signed bills of lading with the clause "paying freight agreeably to freight bill"; and the freight bills were made payable in London to B. & Co., to whom the charterer was indebted for advances on the outward cargo, and who, as well as C. & Co., were cognizant of the terms of the charterparty:—Held, that the owner of the ship had a lien on these goods to the extent of the homeward freight. Faith v. East India Co., 4 B. & Ald. 630; 23 R. R. 423.

C. & Co. also put on board the ship goods purchased by them on account of the charterer; but he being indebted to them and B. & Co., their agents, those goods were, by the bill of lading, consigned to B. & Co.:—Held, that as between the owner of the ship and B. & Co., the goods were to be considered as the goods of the charterer, and liable to the owner's lien on them for the freight due by the charterparty. Ib.

Where indorsees of a bill of lading are also the charterers of a ship, they are bound by a stipulation as to lien in the charterparty. M'Lean v. Fleming, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 128; 25 L. T. 317; 1 Asp. M. C. 160.

The goods of a shipper in a general ship are not affected by a clause in a charterparty of which he has no notice or knowledge, giving the shipowner lien on all cargo and freight for arrears of hire due under the charterparty. The Stornoway, 51 L. J., Adm. 27; 40 L. T. 773; 4 Asp. M. C. 529.

By a charterparty which was negotiated by A., as agent of B., the charterer (B.) engaged to pay a lump freight of 735*l.* for a voyage to the coast of Africa and back to London, in cash, on the correct delivery of the return cargo, and the charterparty contained the following clause: "The master to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight, without prejudice to the charter." B. shipped oil on his own account for London, for which the master signed a bill of lading making the oil deliverable to A., or assigns, "he or they paying freight for the goods as usual." This bill of lading B. indorsed to A. in part payment of advances made by him on the purchase of the outward cargo:—Held, that A., having notice of the terms of the charterparty, the owner was entitled to a lien on the oil for the entire charter freight. Kern v. Deslandes, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 205; 30 L. J., C. P. 297; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 194; 5 L. T. 349.

Complete Delivery.]—Where several goods belonging to one owner are carried the same voyage, a delivery of part does not defeat the lien upon the remainder for the whole freight. But if there are two contracts to carry with different termini to the voyage in each contract, no lien attaches for freight under the one contract upon goods shipped under the other and improperly detained on board by the carrier. Goods are divested of a lien by a complete delivery. Bernal v. Pim, 1 Gale, 17.

Taking Bills of Exchange.]—See cases ante, cols. 414, 439.

No Notice of Terms of Charterparty—Bill of Lading Freight.]—As against assignees or consignees, who have purchased or made advances on the faith of the bill of lading without notice, the shipowner can only retain for the freight mentioned in the bill of lading. Gilkison v. Middleton, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 134; 26 L. J., C. P. 209.

A ship was chartered for a particular voyage for a gross sum, by way of freight. The captain signed bills of lading for the cargo (which was the property of and consigned to a third person), specifying a rate of freight amounting to a less sum than that mentioned in the charterparty:—Held, that the shipowner had no lien on the cargo beyond the freight specified in the bills of lading. Mitchell v. Scaife, 4 Camp. 298; 16 R. R. 795.

S. and W. chartered a ship from Liverpool to Calcutta and home for 7,000*l.* "The freight to be paid 1,250*l.* on vessel clearing from Liverpool, and 1,000*l.* on delivery of the outward cargo at Calcutta, the remainder in cash two months from the vessel's report inwards, and after right delivery of the cargo, or under discount at 5 per cent. per annum at freighter's option. The master to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight required without prejudice to this charterparty. The owners of the ship to have an absolute lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight and demurrage." There were provisions for payment of the freight in cash on delivery of the cargo, if the cargo was delivered abroad. S. and C., who were the charterers' agents at Calcutta, having made advances to disburse the vessel, shipped a quantity of linseed, for which the captain signed bills of lading deliverable to their order or assigns on payment of freight at 5*s.* per ton, the current rate being 5*l.* 10*s.* Against this shipment S. and C. drew a bill of exchange, and indorsed and delivered it together with the bill of lading for value:—Held, that assuming the charterparty to have created a lien for the charterparty freight as against the charterers, a bonâ fide indorsee of the bill of lading, without notice of the charterparty, was entitled to the linseed on payment of the bill of lading freight. Foster v. Colby, 3 H. & N. 705; 28 L. J., Ex. 81.

Freight Payable One Month after Sailing.]—Goods were shipped by S. & Co. from Glasgow to Lima, under a bill of lading, by which freight was to be paid by the shippers "one month after sailing, ship lost or not lost." The goods were consigned by S. & Co. to the defendant for sale, and the bill of lading was handed by S. & Co. to him for value. S. & Co. made default in paying the freight, and the master, under instructions from the shipowners, refused to deliver up the goods to the agents of the defendant at Lima without payment of the freight, claiming a lien upon them:—Held, that the shipowners had a lien upon the goods for the freight payable by the bill of lading as against the defendant. Neish v. Graham, 8 El. & Bl. 505; 27 L. J., Q. B. 15; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 49.

Custom—Payment at Port of Shipment.]—Goods were shipped at Liverpool for Sydney. By a bill of lading the goods were made deliverable to the shipper's order or assigns, "he or they paying freight for the goods here, as per margin"; and in the margin the stated amount for freight was made payable in Liverpool to M. (who was not the shipowner) one month after the sailing of the vessel:—Held, that, as against an indorsee for value of the bill of lading the master could not detain the goods at the port of delivery on the ground of nonpayment of the freight, although the jury found that, by the usage of Liverpool, the shipowner does not lose his lien for the freight by making it payable at the port of shipment. Kirchner v. Venus, 12 Moore, P. C. 361; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 395; 7 W. R. 455.

Such a local usage cannot bind a bonâ fide holder for value without notice. Ib.

d. Waived, Suspended or Lost.

Delivery—Landing.]—Where consignees do not appear to claim goods at the port of discharge and there is no suitable warehouse:—Semble, that the master may still land the cargo without losing his possession and control over it (placing the goods in a warehouse belonging to, or hired for, his owners), and so preserve his lien. Morsle-Blanch v. Wilson, 42 L. J., C. P. 70: L. R. 8 C. P. 227; 28 L. T. 415; 1 Asp. M. C. 605.

Contract at Variance with.]—A shipowner has a lien upon a cargo for freight (i.e. for the carriage, conveyance and delivery of goods), but such lien is destroyed by his entering into a contract at variance with that lien; as where he, by contract, agrees to be paid after delivery of the cargo, and not at the time of delivery. Walker v. Kirchner, 11 Moore, P. C. 21.

A bill of lading contained this form, "Freight for the same goods to be paid by the shippers;" and in the margin of the bill, "Freight payable one month after sailing, ship lost or not lost." The owner of the ship, on her arrival at her destination, claimed a lien on the goods for the freight, and refused to deliver the goods to the consignees until the freight had been paid:—Held, that the shipowner had no lien on the goods consigned, as the sum claimed was not freight, properly so called, and was concluded by the contract which stipulated for a payment to be made in lieu of freight, and to be made at a fixed period, having no reference to the delivery of the goods. Ib. See also cases, ante, col. 237.

Part Taken on Part Payment.]—The lien of a shipholder for freight being entire, is not lost or waived by allowing part of the goods to be taken away on payment of a portion only of the freight, without some express contract with the express or implied authority of the shipowner. Perez v. Alsop, 3 F. & F. 188.

5. Assignment.

Freight to be Earned.]—An assignment by the owners of a ship of freight to be earned is good. Douglas v. Russell, 1 Myl. & K. 488.

A shipowner assigned to B. the freight earned and to be earned by one of his ships, and afterwards chartered her to C., for a voyage to S. The outward freight was paid to A., before the ship sailed. The charterparty afterwards was delivered to B., by A.'s direction, and B. gave notice of the assignment to C. Afterwards, but before the ship returned, A. became bankrupt:—Held, that the homeward freight was not in A.'s order and disposition at his bankruptcy; and, therefore, that B. was entitled to it. Ib.

Order and Disposition.]—Under a charterparty, entered into by a broker, on behalf of the owner of a vessel, whose name did not appear on the charterparty, the freight was to be paid to the broker, on behalf of the owner. The owner assigned the freight to A., who gave notice of the assignment to the broker, but not to the lords of the treasury, by whom the freight was to be paid:—Held, that after such assignment and notice, the freight was no longer in the order and disposition of the owner, and consequently did not, on his subsequently becoming bankrupt, pass to his assignees:—Held, that the money due to the charterparty was not in his order and disposition at his bankruptcy. Gardner v. Lachlan, 4 Myl. & C. 129; 8 L. J., Ch. 82; 2 Jur. 412, 1056. And see S. C., 6 Sim. 407, on motion for an injunction.

Sub-charter—Notice.]—A shipowner on the 20th March, 1857, chartered his ship to A. for a voyage to Hong Kong. The freight was payable "by approved bills on London, at three months' date, or cash under discount, following the delivery of a certificate to the charterers, signed by the consignees," of the delivery of the cargo. On the 24th March the shipowners assigned the freight to C., who gave no notice to A. until November following. It turned out that on the 23rd March A. had sub-chartered the ship to B., whose agent at Hong Kong had paid the freight to the agent there of the shipowner:—Held, that A. was liable to C. for the freight, and that C.'s laches in giving notice had not deprived him of his rights. Young v. Lindsay, 27 Beav. 405.

Priorities—General and Particular Assignee.]—The assignee of a particular freight who gives to the charterers notice of his security, is entitled in priority to the general assignee of all freight to be earned by the same ship, who is prior in date, but gives no notice, and takes no steps to enforce his mortgage until after the particular assignee has given notice to the charterers, and the cargo has been in part discharged. Brown v. Tanner, L. R. 2 Eq. 806; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 791; 14 L. T. 825; 14 W. R. 911.

Sale of Ship.]—The right to freight is incidental to the ownership of the vessel which earns it, and therefore a transfer of a share in a ship passes the corresponding share in the freight, under an existing charterparty, without the mention of the word "freight." Lindsay v. Gibbs, 22 Beav. 522; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1039; 4 W. R. 788.

In equity an assignment of freight to be earned is valid. Ib.

A ship was chartered by her owner. Afterwards, in June, 1854, he sold twenty-four shares of the ship to A., and the remaining forty shares to B., and in December he assigned the freight to C. A. registered before, and B. after C.'s assignment; but C. gave the first notice to the charterers:—Held, that C.'s right to the freight had priority over B., but not over A. Ib.

One who is interested in the freight alone saved from the ship held liable to contribute his proportion of the expenses incurred by the ship in earning the freight. Ib.

Right to Freight earned after Sale.]—See Hill, Ex parte, ante, col. 153.

Fraud — Partnership — Taking Accounts.]—Equitable assignment by A., shipowner, to C. of charterparty freight payable by B., the charterer; not disclosing an agreement by which A. was a partner with B. for the voyage and liable in account for losses. The adventure turned out a loss. B. claimed, as against C., to balance the accounts of profit and loss, as he would have been entitled to do with A. had the charterparty not been assigned:—Held, that in equity he was entitled to do so. Mangles v. Dixon, 3 H. L. Cas. 702.

By Managing Owner.]—Managing owner has no power to assign freight to secure private debt. Guion v. Trask, supra, col. 57.

By Master.]—The master has no power to assign freight. The Sir Henry Webb, 13 Jur. 639.

Co-owners—Assignment of Share of Freight by some—Deduction of Expense of Earning.]—The wages of the captain and seamen of a ship, being the expenses which produce the income thereof, are proper deductions to be made from the gross freight, as between the part owners of the ship and the assignees of the freight belonging to the other co-owners. Lindsay v. Gibbs, 28 L. J., Ch. 692; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 376; 7 W. R. 320—L.JJ.

Direction to Agent to pay out of Freight a Specific Bill—Subsequent Direction to pay other Bills—Priorities.]—Where the purchaser of a ship gave three bills in payment, and instructed his agent to pay the amount of the first out of the freight of the ship, and afterwards sent a written order to satisfy out of the freight the amount of any current bill given in payment for the vessel:—Held, that the latter should not supersede the former direction, which created a priority over the holders of the other bills. Miln v. Walton, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 354; 7 Jur. 892.

Payment of Freight on Assignment.]—See 3. PAYMENT; ii. ON ASSIGNMENT, supra, col. 392.

1. LIABILITY UNDER CONTRACT.

a. Charterer—Cesser Clause.

Delay in Loading.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that a ship should, with all convenient speed, proceed to Sunderland, and that the charterer should there load the ship in regular turn with a full cargo of coals, and the ship should proceed with it to Kiel, and deliver to freighter or assigns, on payment of freight; "and, that the charter being concluded by the charterer on behalf of another party resident abroad, all his liability should cease as soon as he had shipped the cargo":—Held, that this clause only exempted the charterer from liability accruing after the loading of the cargo; and that he, therefore, remained liable for delay in loading, although he had ultimately loaded a full cargo. Christofferson v. Hansen, 41 L. J., Q. B. 217; L. R. 7 Q. B. 509; 26 L. T. 547; 20 W. R. 626; 1 Asp. M. C. 305.

By a charterparty it was agreed that the ship should go to a certain port and there load from the charterer a cargo "in the customary manner," and proceed therewith to another port and deliver the same. . . . "The cargo to be discharged in ten working days, commencing from the day after the ship had got into her proper discharging berth. Demurrage at 2*l.* per 100 tons register per day. . . . The ship to have an absolute lien on cargo for freight and demurrage, the charterer's liability to any clauses in the charter ceasing when he has delivered the cargo alongside ship":—Held, that the demurrage and the lien and exemption clauses did not apply to damages by undue detention of the vessel at the port of loading. Lockhart v. Falk, 44 L. J., Ex. 105; L. R. 10 Ex. 132; 33 L. T. 96; 23 W. R. 753; 3 Asp. M. C. 8.

"Loading Excepted."]—A charterparty contained the following clause: "This charter being concluded by the charterers on behalf of another party, it is agreed that all liability of the former shall cease as soon as the cargo is shipped, loading excepted, the owners and master of the vessel agreeing to rest solely on their lien on the cargo for freight, demurrage and all other claims, and which lien it is hereby agreed that they shall have":—Held, that "loading excepted" extended to delay in loading, and was not confined to the loading a full and complete cargo; and the charterers, therefore, remained liable for the delay, though they had shipped a complete cargo. Lister v. Van Haansbergen, 45 L. J., Q. B. 495; 1 Q. B. D. 269; 34 L. T. 446; 24 W. R. 395; 3 Asp. M. C. 145.

No Orders given as to Port of Discharge—Not safe Port.]—By a charterparty the ship was, after loading a full cargo, to proceed to a port of call for orders, to be forwarded within forty-eight hours after notice of arrival given to the charterers, to discharge at a good and safe port. Twelve working lay days to be allowed the freighters for loading the ship at the port of loading, and waiting for orders at the port of call, and fifteen days over and above the laying days at 4*d.* per ton per day. Charterers' liability to cease when the ship was loaded, the owners of the ship to have an absolute lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight and demurrage. In an action by the shipowners against the charterers for not giving orders as to the port of discharge, and for giving orders that the ship should proceed and discharge at a port which was not a safe port within the meaning of the charterparty:—Held, that inasmuch as delay at the port of call was provided for by the stipulation in respect of demurrage, the charterers were discharged, whether the actual damages claimed were covered by the owners' lien or not. French v. Gerber, 46 L. J., C. P. 320; 2 C. P. D. 247; 36 L. T. 350; 25 W. R. 355; 3 Asp. M. C. 574—C. A.

Reading Bill of Lading and Charterparty Together.]—A vessel was chartered to carry a cargo of coals from Cardiff to Rouen. The charterparty provided that the liability of the charterers should cease "when the ship is loaded and advance of freight with demurrage at Cardiff paid." "Ship to have a lien on cargo for freight, dead freight and demurrage." The bill of lading contained no restriction on the liability of the charterers. In an action for balance of freight:—Held, that the charterparty and bill of lading must be read together, and construed according to the plain meaning on the face of them, and that the charterers' liability ceased on performance of the conditions in the charterparty. Barwick v. Burnyeat, 36 L. T. 250; 25 W. R. 395; 3 Asp. M. C. 376.

Securing Berth.]—Where the charterer refused to name a substituted dock where the ship could lie in safety afloat according to the terms of the charterparty, and delay ensued in discharging the cargo:—Held, that he became liable to demurrage and charges for unloading. Dahl v. Donkin or Nelson, 50 L. J., Ch. 411; 6 App. Cas. 38; 44 L. T. 381; 29 W. R. 543; 4 Asp. M. C. 392—H. L. (E.)

Cesser Clause—Detention at Port of Loading—Lien.]—By a charterparty it was stipulated that the ship should proceed to a loading-berth at the port of loading, and there receive on board a full and complete cargo, and, being so loaded, should proceed to the port of discharge, "All liability of charterers to cease on completion of loading, provided the value of the cargo is sufficient to satisfy the lien which is hereby given for all freight, dead freight, demurrage and average (if any) under this charterparty"—"To be loaded as customary . . . and to be discharged as customary at the average rate of not less than 100 tons per working day from the time the ship is in berth and ready to be discharged, and notice thereof has been given by the master in writing. Demurrage to be at the rate of 20*l.* per day":—Held, in an action by the shipowners to recover damages for undue detention of the ship at the port of loading, that the stipulation as to the cesser of the charterers' liability did not apply to liability for damages for detention at the port of loading, for the cesser of the charterers' liability must be taken to be co-extensive with the lien created by the charterparty; and, upon the true construction of the charterparty, the shipowners had no lien in respect of such damages, "demurrage" under the charterparty not being applicable to the port of loading. Lockhart v. Falk (L. R. 10 Ex. 132) followed and approved. Dunlop v. Balfour, 61 L. J., Q. B. 354; [1892] 1 Q. B. 507; 66 L. T. 455; 40 W. R. 371; 7 Asp. M. C. 181—C. A.

Charterer Protected.]—A charterparty, by which it was agreed that the cargo should be loaded and discharged with all despatch, contained the following clause: "The charterers' liability on this charter to cease when the cargo is shipped (provided the same is worth the freight on arrival at the port of discharge), the captain having an absolute lien on it for freight, dead freight and demurrage, which he or owners shall be bound to exercise." The charterers having shipped a cargo worth the freight on arrival at the port of discharge:—Held, that they were protected by the clause from liability to the shipowner for not loading the ship in due time according to the charter. Bannister v. Breslauer, 36 L. J., C. P. 195; L. R. 2 C. P. 497; 16 L. T. 418; 15 W. R. 840. But see Clink v. Radford, infra.

By a charterparty it was stipulated that the ship should proceed to a loading-place at the port of loading, and load "in the usual and customary manner" a full and complete cargo, and therewith proceed to a port of discharge, "the cargo to be unloaded at the average rate of not less than 100 tons per working day—or charterers to pay demurrage at the rate of 4*d.* per ton register per diem—the charterers' liability under this charterparty to cease on the cargo being loaded, the owners having a lien on the cargo for the freight and demurrage":—Held, that the stipulation as to the cesser of the charterers' liability did not apply to liability for damages for undue detention at the port of loading; for, in the absence of anything in the charterparty to the contrary, the cesser of the charterers' liability must be taken to be co-extensive with the lien created by the charterparty, and upon the true construction of the charterparty, the shipowner had no lien in respect of such damages. Bannister v. Breslauer (supra) questioned. Clink v. Radford, 60 L. J., Q. B. 388; [1891] 1 Q. B. 625; 64 L. T. 491; 39 W. R. 355; 7 Asp. M. C. 10—C. A.

—— Delay in Loading—Lien.]—A charterparty contained the following clause: "Charterers' liability to cease when the ship is loaded, the captain having a lien upon the cargo for freight and demurrage." In an action for demurrage at the port of loading:—Held, first, that the lien extended to demurrage at the port of loading, as well as at the port of discharge. Francesco v. Massey, 42 L. J., Ex. 75; L. R. 8 Ex. 101; 21 W. R. 440.

Held, secondly, that the ship having been loaded, the charterer could not be sued for demurrage incurred during the loading. Ib.

A vessel was chartered to carry a cargo of coals to Callao, to be delivered to the order of the charterer's agent. The charterparty provided that the ship should be loaded at the rate of seventy-five tons per clear working day, "stiffening coal to be, if required, supplied at the expense of the ship, and at the rate of forty tons per clear working day . . ." but all days on which stiffening coal is to be taken on board, or the ship is detained for the same, are to be excluded from the computation of the working days allowed for loading; the vessel to be discharged at the rate of forty tons per clear working day. . . . Demurrage to be paid for each day beyond the days allowed for loading and discharging respectively at the rate of 3*d.* per registered ton per day. The master to have a lien upon the cargo for all freight, dead freight and demurrage. All liability of the charterer under this agreement should cease as soon as the cargo is on board. . . . All questions, whether of short delivery, demurrage or otherwise, are to be settled by the charterer's agent at the port of destination." The vessel arrived at Callao, where the captain, at the request of the charterer's agent, delivered the cargo to him without insisting on his lien for freight and demurrage. In an action on the charterparty for undue detention of the vessel in putting stiffening coal on board:—Held, that the shipowner had no cause of action on the charterparty; the clause providing for the cesser of the charterer's liability operating as an absolute discharge, notwithstanding that the charterer and consignee were the same person. Sanguinetti v. Pacific Steam Navigation Co., 46 L. J., Q. B. 105; 2 Q. B. D. 238; 35 L. T. 658; 25 W. R. 150; 3 Asp. M. C. 300—C. A.

Held, also, that the demurrage clause extended to detention of the vessel in putting stiffening coal on board, and that damages for such detention were covered by the owner's lien. Ib.

By a charterparty cargo was to be loaded in thirteen working days, and to be discharged at not less than thirty tons per working day. Ten days' demurrage to be allowed above the said days. The charterer's liability to cease when ship is loaded, the captain or owner having a lien on cargo for freight and demurrage:—Held, that the charterer upon loading the cargo was discharged from liability for demurrage incurred at the port of loading. Kish v. Cory, 44 L. J., Q. B. 205; L. R. 10 Q. B. 553; 32 L. T. 670; 23 W. R. 880; 2 Asp. M. C. 593—Ex. Ch. See Petrococchino v. Bott, post, col. 534.

A charterparty contained stipulations in the usual form for payment of freight and demurrage, and also a stipulation that "as this charterparty is entered into by the charterers for account of another party, their liability ceases as soon as the cargo is on board, the vessel holding a lien upon the cargo for freight and demurrage." The charterers having placed the cargo on board at the port of lading, a bill of lading was signed whereby the goods were made deliverable to themselves at the port of discharge, "they paying freight and all other conditions as per charterparty." In an action by the shipowner against them as consignees of the cargo, for demurrage in respect of delay at the port of discharge:—Held, that the cesser clause in the charterparty must be rejected as inapplicable in reading the bill of lading, which incorporated all the conditions of the charterparty applicable to the reception of the goods at the port of discharge, and therefore that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the action. Gullichsen v. Stewart, 53 L. J., Q. B. 173; 13 Q. B. D. 317; 50 L. T. 47; 32 W. R. 763; 5 Asp. M. C. 200—C. A. See also The San Roman, ante, col. 277.

A memorandum for a charterparty made between shipowners and Y., "as agent for the freighter" (no principal being named), after providing for "demurrage over and above the laying days at 7*l.* per day," stated that "it is further agreed, that, this charterparty being concluded by" Y. "for another party, the liability of the former in every respect, and as to all matters and things, as well before as after the shipping of the cargo, shall cease as soon as they have shipped the cargo":— Held, that Y. was not liable upon this memorandum for demurrage at the port of discharge. Oglesby v. Yglesias, El. Bl. & El. 930; 27 L. J., Q. B. 356; 6 W. R. 690.

Colliery Guarantee—Incorporation.]—A cesser clause in a charterparty applies not merely to liability for demurrage, but to liability incurred through detention in the nature of demurrage. It was agreed by charterparty between the plaintiffs, the owners of a steamship, and the defendants, as charterers, that the ship should proceed to C., and there "load in the usual and customary manner a cargo of coals," and proceed to T. "The vessel to be loaded as customary, but subject in all respects to the colliery guarantee, in 108 colliery working hours." The cargo was to be loaded at a specified rate per day, "or charterers to pay demurrage at the rate of 30*s.* per hour." The master was to sign "clean bills of lading without alteration as presented by the charterers." "The charterers' liability to cease on the cargo being landed and the advance freight paid, the owners having a lien on the cargo for the balance of freight and demurrage." By a colliery guarantee, colliery proprietors undertook to load the ship for the defendants in 108 hours. "Demurrage (if any) to be at the rate of 20*s.* per hour." The ship was not loaded in 108 colliery working hours. In an action for demurrage or for detaining the vessel an unreasonable time:—Held, that the defendants were not liable, as the cesser clause covered the plaintiff's claim. Semble, that the plaintiffs had no right of action against the defendants under the colliery guarantee unless the guarantee was incorporated with the charterparty; but that, by the custom of the trade, the shipowners have such a right of action against the colliery proprietors. Restitution Steamship Co. v. Pirie, 64 L. T. 491, n.; 7 Asp. M. C. 11, n.—C. A. Affirming 61 L. T. 330; 6 Asp. M. C. 428.

Demurrage at Port of Shipment or of Discharge.]—A charterparty entered into by a broker for a foreign charterer contained the words "fourteen days for loading in the Tyne or the captain to receive 5*l.* per day, day by day," and at the port of discharge "demurrage over and above the said lying days at 5*l.* per day." "This charter being concluded by N. (the broker) on behalf of another party, it is agreed that all liability of the former shall cease as soon as he has shipped the cargo, the owners and master agreeing to rest solely on their lien on the cargo for freight and demurrage":—Held, that demurrage in the last clause meant demurrage at the port of discharge, and that the brokers' liability for demurrage at the port of loading did not cease on shipment of the cargo. Pedersen v. Lotinga, 5 W. R. 290.

A charterparty provided: "Charterers' liability to cease as soon as the cargo is shipped in terms of this charter, captain having an absolute lien for all freight, dead freight and demurrage":— Held, that the charterers were not liable for demurrage incurred before loading completed, the cargo having been all shipped. Salvesen v. Guy, 13 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 85.

A charterparty provided: "Charterers' responsibility to cease on cargo being loaded, provided the cargo is worth the freight at port of discharge. To be loaded as customary at Sydney; to be discharged as customary at . . . at the rate of not less than 100 tons of coals per working day . . . and ten days on demurrage over and above the said laying days at 4*d.* per registered ton per day." In an action brought by the owners against the charterers for detention at the port of loading:—Held, that "demurrage" in the lien clause did not cover detention at the loading port, and that the charterers were liable. Gardiner v. Macfarlane, 16 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 658.

Exception of Hindrance beyond Charterers' Control.]—Gardiner v. Macfarlane, 20 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 414.

Salt Cargo—Lighters Beneaped.]—See Allerton Sailing Ship Co. v. Falk, supra, col. 278.

Effect of Clause empowering Master to Land Cargo if not Applied for in Given Time.]—The common stipulation in a bill of lading, that if the goods are not applied for within twenty-four hours of the ship's arrival, the master or agent is to be at liberty to land the same at the risk and expense of the owner of the goods, and retain a lien for his charges on that account, gives the shipowner an alternative remedy. It does not supersede his right to have the cargo unloaded by the consignee and hold him liable for delay; nor does it apply to the case where the goods are applied for in due time, but the unloading by the consignee is afterwards interrupted. Hick v. Rodocanachi, 61 L. J., Q. B. 42; [1891] 2 Q. B. 626; 40 W. R. 161; 7 Asp. M. C. 97; 56 J. P. 54—C. A. Affirmed, nom. Hick v. Raymond, 62 L. J., Q. B. 98; [1893] A. C. 22; 1 R. 125; 68 L. T. 175; 41 W. b. Consignee and Indorsee of Bill of Lading.

See also XII. BILL OF LADING.

Consignees—Memorandum on Bill of Lading.]—If a consignee accepts goods under a bill of lading, at the bottom of which is a memorandum that the ship is to be cleared in sixteeen days, and 8*l.* demurrage to be paid after that time, the master upon delivery of the goods may recover demurrage against the consignee. Jesson v. Solly, 4 Taunt. 52; 13 R. R. 557.

Implied Contract.]—The master who by a bill of lading has undertaken to deliver goods to the consignee on payment of freight, cannot maintain an action against the consignee on an implied contract to pay demurrage. Evans v. Forster, 1 B. & Ad. 118; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 348.

"Paying for Goods as per Charterparty"—Effect of.]—The consignee of a bill of lading which makes the goods deliverable to him or assigns, "paying for the goods as per charterparty," does not, by taking the goods at the destination, make himself liable to pay for demurrage in the port of loading according to the rate stipulated in the charterparty, though there is an express stipulation for a lien on the goods for such demurrage. Smith v. Sieveking, 5 El. & Bl. 589; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1135; 4 W. R. 25—Ex. Ch.

Consideration.]—Where in an action on an agreement for payment of demurrage on delivery of a cargo of coals the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had previously contracted with another party for the delivery of the coals to the defendant by the plaintiff, and that there was no consideration for the promise of the defendant to the plaintiff:—Held, that the plea was bad, and that the performance of an existing contract by one of the parties thereto may be a good consideration for a promise to him by a third party. Scotson v. Pegg, 6 H. & N. 295; 30 L. J., Ex. 225; 3 L. T. 753; 9 W. R. 280.

Indorsees—Express Stipulation.]—Where a bill of lading stipulates on the face of it for payment of demurrage, an indorsee taking goods under it is liable for demurrage. Stindt v. Roberts, 5 D. & L. 460; 2 B. C. Rep. 212; 17 L. J., Q. B. 166; 12 Jur. 518.

The acceptance of a cargo by the indorsee of a bill of lading, whereby the goods were deliverable to order against payment of the agreed freight and other conditions, as per charterparty, is a circumstance from which a jury may imply a contract on his part to pay demurrage stipulated for by the charterparty, notwithstanding his refusal at the time of receiving the goods to pay the demurrage. Wegener v. Smith, 15 C. B. 285; 24 L. J., C. P. 25; 3 C. L. R. 47.

An assignee of a bill of lading, by the terms of which he is to receive a cargo from a ship, paying freight according to the charterparty, is not liable for demurrage, although that is stipulated for in the charterparty, and although in the margin of the bill there is written, "There are eight working days for unloading in London," there being no stipulation in the bill for the payment of demurrage. Chappell v. Comfort, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 802; 31 L. J., C. P. 58; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 177; 4 L. T. 448; 9 W. R. 694.

Holder by Way of Security.]—Liability for demurrage under a bill of lading imposed, by way of security only, on the holder who presented the bill and demanded the delivery. Allen v. Coltart, 52 L. J., Q. B. 686; 11 Q. B. D. 782; 48 L. T. 944; 31 W. R. 841; 5 Asp. M. C. 104.

Undertaking to Pay for Unreasonable Delay by Receivers of Cargo.]—A charterparty stipulated that the agreed freight should be paid on right and true delivery of cargo, and that the discharge at the port of delivery should be made in accordance with the usage of the discharging port. The defendants were indorsees of the bills of lading, which were expressed to be subject to the conditions of the charterparty, and contained the following clause: "The goods to be taken from the ship by the consignee immediately they come to hand in discharging the ship, otherwise they will be landed or put into craft by the master or ship's agent (at the merchant's risk and expense), and either or both to have a lien on such goods until the payment of all costs and charges so incurred." In an action by the plaintiff for damages for detention of the ship by default of the defendants, the jury found that the ship was detained for two days beyond a reasonable time for unloading, and that 30*l.* a day was a fair charge for the detention, and that the defendants held themselves out to the plaintiff as receivers of the cargo under the bill of lading, so as to lead the plaintiff to look to them as such. There was evidence that the defendants told the plaintiff's agent, before the ship arrived, that they had the cargo, and would pay the freight; and that during the unloading the plaintiff's agent complained daily to the defendants of their delay, telling them that there would be a claim for demurrage, without a repudiation by them of liability:—Held, that there was evidence that the defendants undertook to pay for any unreasonable delay, and that they took delivery under the provisions of the bill of lading. Palmer v. Zarifi, 37 L. T. 790; 3 Asp. M. C. 540.

No Reference to Demurrage in Bill of Lading.]—The charterparty provided for the payment of freight, and allowed thirty days for loading and unloading; the bill of lading provided for the payment of freight as per charter, and made no reference to demurrage:—Held, that an indorsee of the bill of lading was not liable for demurrage. Oliver v. Muggeridge, 7 W. R. 164. And see post, col. 461.

Liability of Consignee acting as Agent—Bill of Lading incorporating Charterparty.]—Consignees under a bill of lading which made the goods deliverable to them, "paying freight and all other conditions as per charterparty," refused to pay demurrage incurred at the port of loading and due under the terms of the charterparty, but accepted delivery of the goods. The consignees were, and were known to the shipowners to be, acting only as agents. In an action by the shipowners for demurrage:—Held, that the consignees were not liable. County of Lancaster Steamship v. Sharpe, 59 L. J., Q. B. 22; 24 Q. B. D. 158; 61 L. T. 692; 6 Asp. M. C. 448.

Power of Master to Fill in—Demurrage.]—See Allan v. Johnstone, ante, col. 317.

c. Other Cases.

Receivers of Goods.]—If a person receives goods from on board ship, which are shipped to the shipper's order or his assignees, paying freight, with a certain allowance for demurrage, he makes himself, by acceptance of the goods, liable to all the terms of the bill of lading, and of course to demurrage. Dobbin v. Thornton, 6 Esp. 16. And see Palmer v. Zarifi, supra.

Liability of Consignor.]—A bill of lading contained these words: "The vessel to take her regular turn in unloading":—Held, that the consignor was liable for her detention beyond her regular turn, although there was no express contract for demurrage in the bill of lading. Cawthron v. Trickett, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 754; 33 L. J., C. P. 182; 9 L. T. 609; 12 W. R. 311.

A party hired sacks from a railway company for the conveyance of grain on their railway subject to certain regulations, amongst which were the following: "2. The charges for the use of sacks will be a halfpenny per sack per journey when discharged at any of the company's stations on the company's line, or at their warehouses, or at warehouses or mills connected by rail with the company's line, and 1*d.* per sack when sent to foreign stations. 3. Demurrage of a halfpenny per sack per week will be charged after the expiration of fourteen days, the time to commence from the time the sacks leave the station to be filled; the time allowed for filling and returning to the station to be seven days. 10. None of the company's sacks containing grain will be allowed to leave any station, local or foreign, unless a guarantee is first obtained by the clerk in charge from the consignee, that the grain will be immediately discharged, and the sacks returned the same day, and to the station":—Held, that the company's claim for demurrage arose at the expiration of fourteen days from the hire of the sacks, and that the only person with whom there was any contract for demurrage was the consignor, by virtue of the third regulation; but that by the operation of the tenth regulation his liability ceased upon the company's permitting the sacks to get into the hands of the consignee, whether with or without a guarantee. G. N. Ry. v. Wyles, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 344.

Agent—Consideration.]—The agent of the consignees of a cargo wrote to the owner, agreeing to pay freight, demurrage, &c., and to place himself in every respect in the place of the charterer. The ship was detained beyond the time allowed by the charterparty in loading and unloading, and the demurrage days and several days besides elapsed after the date of the agent's agreement:—Held, that he was liable for the detention beyond the demurrage days, as well as for the demurrage on his agreement, as there was a sufficient consideration moving from the owner to the agent, since he could not sell the cargo without the owner's consent. Benson v. Hippins, 4 Bing. 455; 1 M. & P. 246; 3 Car. & P. 186; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 64.

Partnership in Part of Agreement between Charterer and Freighter.—A. having chartered a steamer, agreed with B. to take out some engines in her to Barcelona, it being known to both parties that the engines could not be shipped unless some alterations were made in her hatchways. The agreement contained the following conditions:—First, that A. should lay the steamer on her berth at Liverpool for Barcelona. Secondly, that she should not be required to lie on her berth longer than ten days. Thirdly, that she should make the voyage from there to Barcelona for the lump sum of 650*l.*, A. to pay all charges. Fourthly, that B. should load in the steamer two engines and tenders complete, for 240*l.*; freight to be paid at Liverpool on delivery of bills of lading, without any deduction for interest or insurance. Fifthly, that such of these goods as weighed above twenty cwt. should be put in the steamer, stowed, taken out, and landed at shipper's risk and expense. Sixthly, that the goods should be taken out of the steamer as soon as the captain was ready to deliver them, in five days, Sunday excepted; and 20*l.* demurrage to be paid by the shipper or receiver of the goods, for every day that she was detained over and above five days. Seventhly, that the steamer should be entered in the joint names of A. and B., so that the latter might assist to get cargo. Eighthly, that any surplus of freight above 650*l.* should be divided between them, and also any loss which might result. Ninthly, that the steamer should guarantee to carry 480 tons dead weight, besides forty tons of coal in the bunkers. Tenthly, that bills of lading for the whole cargo of the steamer should be signed at the office of A. And eleventhly, that the steamer should be consigned at Barcelona to the friends of B., paying 2*l.* commission on the above freight. The steamer was put on her berth at Liverpool, and, by consent of her owner, the beams in her hatchways were removed for the stowage of the engines, at the joint expense of A. and B. The engines, which exceeded twenty cwt. in weight, were then brought alongside, and it was found, before ten days had expired, that they would not go down the hatchways, notwithstanding the removal of the beams. The consent of the shipowner to the further widening of the hatchways was thereupon obtained, on condition that the ship should, before sailing, be made right, to the satisfaction of Lloyd's surveyor. In consequence of the necessary delay for widening the hatchways and making the ship thus right, she lay on her berth thirteen days beyond the stipulated ten. A. having brought an action on the second clause of the agreement, for the demurrage in respect of the detention of the ship on her berth beyond ten days:—Held, that B. was liable on that clause, it being collateral to, and independent of, any partnership in the freight; assuming that the agreement constituted a partnership to some extent between the parties in that respect. Blech v. Balleras, 3 El. & El. 203; 29 L. J., Q. B. 261; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1243; 2 L. T. 599.

Contract to Pay—Undertaking to Captain Personally to Load in Limited Time.]—B., W. & Co., who had contracted with a colliery company for 10,000 tons of coal to be delivered over a period of three months at a spout on the Tyne, "the turn to be mutually agreed upon," proposed to charter a foreign ship for the conveyance of twenty-nine keels to Elsinore, and tendered to the captain a charterparty which stipulated for demurrage in unloading the ship, but made no provision for detention in loading her. The captain declined to sign such a charter, without an assurance that there should be no undue detention of his ship; and thereupon B., W. & Co. obtained from the defendant (who was a clerk employed by several colliery companies to arrange the turns for loading) the following undertaking: "I undertake to load the ship 'Der Versuch,' twenty-nine keels, with Bebside coals in ten colliery working days. On account of Bebside Colliery, W. S. Hoggett." This memorandum (which made no mention of the person contracted with) was communicated by the charterers to the captain of the "Der Versuch," who thereupon accepted the charter. The vessel being detained in loading beyond the stipulated ten days, the captain called upon the defendant to pay him 45*l.* for demurrage. The defendant repudiated all liability, but ultimately offered to pay the captain 20*l.* The defendant had no notice of the charter. In an action by the captain to recover 45*l.* for demurrage from the defendant:—Held, that, upon these facts, a jury was warranted in finding that the undertaking to load within ten days was a contract between the captain and the defendant; that there was a sufficient consideration for it; and that the contract was with the defendant personally, and not as agent. Weidner v. Hoggett, 1 C. P. D. 533; 35 L. T. 368.

Mutual Obligation of Charterer and Shipowner.]—Where a charterparty contained the following clause: "The owner agrees, that the ship shall be ready to sail at the expiration of the laying days, or sooner if required by the charterers. If the ship is not ready either on the owner's or the charterer's part at the above-named dates, then demurrage to be paid by the party in default at the rate of 7*l.* per diem":—Held, that the effect of this stipulation was to make the owner liable for demurrage, at 7*l.* a day, for delay caused by any unreadiness of the ship to sail, due to him; and the charterers were liable in like manner, for delay caused by unreadiness of the ship, due to their backwardness as to the cargo, though that might have been occasioned by the previous default of the owner. Seeger v. Duthie, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 72; 30 L. J., C. P. 65; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 3 L. T. 478; 9 W. R. 166—Ex. Ch.

Outward and Homeward Voyages—Time of Payment.]—By a charterparty the vessel was to sail from London with a cargo for Kingston, or any other port in Jamaica, and having discharged the same, receive on board a cargo from thence, or from a port on the Spanish Main, if required, and deliver the same at a port in the United Kingdom; freight to be paid, 250*l.* in ten days after sailing from Gravesend, 750*l.* more in two months after a right delivery of the homeward cargo at her port of discharge in the United Kingdom, provided she should be required to proceed to one port only in Jamaica, and 25*l.* more should she be required to go to two or more ports in that island; and in case the vessel should be ordered to the Spanish Main, 4*l.* per day was to be paid for every day after the 25th day after her arrival at Jamaica, until despatched from her loading port; demurrage 100*l.* per month, or in proportion for a less period, payable on settlement of the hire of the vessel. The vessel sailed from London, and discharged a portion of her outward cargo at Kingston, and the residue at another port in Jamaica, and sailed thence to a port in the Spanish Main to receive a homeward cargo, and there remained 139 days beyond the stipulated twenty-five days:—Held, that the 4*l.* per day was not payable until two months after the delivery of the homeward cargo at the ship's port of discharge in the United Kingdom. Crozier v. Smith, 1 Scott (N.R.) 338; 1 Man. & G. 407.

2. Notice of Arrival.

Not Necessary.]—Although by a bill of lading the goods are deliverable to merchants in London, whose residence is well known, no notice to them of the ship's arrival is necessary to render them liable for demurrage. Harman v. Munt, 4 Camp. 161; 16 R. R. 770.

When a bill of lading of goods by a general ship deliverable to order contains a stipulation that the goods are to be taken out in a certain number of days after arrival, or to pay demurrage, the indorsee of the bill of lading who takes out the goods is liable for demurrage, from the expiration of the days calculated from the arrival of the ship, without receiving any notice of that event. Harman v. Clarke, 4 Camp. 159; 16 R. R. 768.

Inaccuracy in Entry of Name at Custom House.]—Where there is such a bill of lading, if there is any inaccuracy in the entry of the ship's name at the custom house, whereby the owner of the goods, notwithstanding proper inquiries for that purpose, was deprived of the usual means of being informed of the ship's arrival, demurrage cannot be recovered. Ib.

Unless Special Contract or Custom.]—Apart from custom or special contract, a shipowner is not bound to give notice to the consignee of the arrival of the ship, but the consignee is bound, within a reasonable time after the arrival, to be ready to remove and receive his goods, and in default of his so doing the shipowner may land them, and demand wharfage or other proper charges for landing. Houlder v. General Steam Navigation Co., 3 F. & F. 170.

When a ship is by the charter to be addressed, at the port of discharge, to the charterer's agents, the charterer is entitled to recover from the shipowner excess of freight received by other agents, to whom he has addressed the ship; and if it appears that the charterer's broker, if allowed to have the ship, would have sent to the consignees to come and take their goods, and thus have prevented delay, the shipowner cannot claim demurrage for delay caused by the absence of such notice to the consignees. Bradley v. Goddard, 3 F. & F. 638.

3. Time and Calculation of Days.

Four persons agreed to purchase a cargo of coals in certain proportions, to be severally taken and received out of the ship by them at the rate of forty chaldrons per day, and to settle their turns among themselves; and in case of any loss or demurrage, by not fixing on their respective turns, or by subsequent detention in working out the cargo, to hold themselves severally and respectively liable for their several and respective defaults. Had there been no default, the whole cargo would have been cleared in nine days; but, in consequence of one of the days being wet, only five chaldrons were taken out on that day, and on the tenth day some coals remained on board belonging to one of the parties:—Held, that working days only were meant by the contract, and that as one day was wet, he was bound to pay demurrage for the tenth day. Harper v. M'Carthy, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 258.

By a charterparty fifteen days were to be allowed to the freighter of a ship for discharging at her destined port. The freighter ordered the ship to Hull. She was got into the Hull docks on the 1st of February, and was on that day put in the charge of the docks' officers, but from the crowded state of the docks she was not put in her berth, and did not begin discharging till the 4th:—Held, that the fifteen days were to be computed from the first. Brown v. Johnson, Car. & M. 440; 10 M. & W. 331; 11 L. J., Ex. 373. See Nielsen v. Wait, infra.

In such a case the days count from the time of the vessel's arriving in the dock, and being put under the management of the dock company's officers. Ib.

Despatch Money—Day of Twenty-four Hours.]—A charterparty contained the following clause: "Demurrage, if any, at the rate of 20*s.* per hour, except in case of any hands striking work, frosts or floods, revolution or wars, which may hinder the loading or discharge of the vessel. Despatch money 10*s.* per hour on any time saved in loading or discharging." Four days were saved in loading and five days in discharging cargo, making together nine days, which if calculated at twenty-four hours a day would make 216 hours, or at twelve hours a day 108 hours:—Held, that "despatch money" was payable under the charterparty at the rate of 10*s.* per hour per day of twenty-four hours. Laing v. Hollway, 47 L. J., Q. B. 512; 3 Q. B. D. 437; 26 W. R. 769—C. A.

Meaning of "Days"—Sundays—Holidays.]—In reckoning the "fifteen days," the days are to be reckoned consecutively, and the Sundays not deducted, unless there is a custom to that effect; and in the absence of any custom, the word "days," and the words "running days," mean consecutive days. Ib.

A charterparty contained the following clause: "The vessel to be loaded in Liverpool in fourteen days, and to be discharged, weather permitting, at not less than twenty-five tons per working day (holidays excepted), the days to commence on the ship being in turn, and ready to deliver; all days above the said days to be paid demurrage at the rate of 5*l.* sterling per day." The cargo was to be delivered at Constantinople:—Held, that Sundays were to be included in the calculation of the lay days allowed for loading. Niemann v. Moss, 29 L. J., Q. B. 206; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 775.

Under a charterparty from Riga to London the charterers were to "load and discharge as fast as the ship can work, but a minimum of seven days to be allowed merchants, and ten days on demurrage over and above the said laying days at 25*l.* per day":—Held, that the laying days from the context meant "working" and not "running" days, and consequently that Sunday was not to be counted. Commercial Steam Ship Co. v. Boulton, 44 L. J., Q. B. 219; L. R. 10 Q. B. 346; 33 L. T. 707; 23 W. R. 854; 3 Asp. M. C. 111.

Fractions of Day count as a Day.]—When by a charterparty a specified sum is to be paid for each day over and above the laying days, that sum is payable in respect of a fraction of a day during which the ship is detained. Ib.

A ship got into dock in London on a Tuesday evening at 5 p.m. She could not get to her berth till 8 a.m. on the Wednesday, when she began unloading, and continued till 8 p.m. She began again at 4 a.m. on Thursday, and finished at 8 a.m. All the lay days had been consumed at the port of loading:—Held, that in the case of demurrage a fraction of a day counted as a day, and consequently that the charterers were liable for two days' demurrage. Ib.

Half-days and less.]—Where a charterparty provides for the loading of a ship at the rate of a specified number of tons "per weather working day," the rule to be observed in reckoning portions of days, when used for the purpose of loading, is to charge against the charterer half a day when substantially half a day's work is done, and a whole day when substantially a full day's work is done. Any smaller fraction than half a day should be disregarded in calculating the number of lay days consumed in loading. Branckelow Steamship Co. v. Lamport, 66 L. J., Q. B. 382; [1897] 1 Q. B. 570.

Working or Running Days—Usage.]—Where under a bill of lading the cargo was to be discharged in London in a certain number of days, it was held, upon proof of the usage, that working days, exclusive of Sundays and holidays, not running days, were intended. Cochran v. Retberg, 3 Esp. 121.

Lay Days — Computed by Days and not by Hours.]—In a charterparty lay days are to be computed as days or parts of days, and not by hours. Hough v. Athya, 6 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 961.

Despatch Money — "Sundays and Fête-days excepted."] — A charterparty contained the following provision: "The steamer to be discharged at the rate of 200 tons per day, weather permitting (Sundays and fête-days excepted), according to the custom of the port of discharge, and, if sooner discharged, to pay at the rate of 8*s.* 4*d.* for every hour saved" :—Held, that in calculating the amount of despatch money, the charterers were not entitled to include the hours of Sundays and fête-days. The Glendevon, 62 L. J., Adm. 123 ; [1893] P. 269 ; 1 R. 662 ; 70 L. T. 416 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 439.

Calendar Days.]—Where by a charterparty a specified number of running days are provided as lay days, the days mentioned, unless controlled by the context, are calendar days, extending, that is, from midnight to midnight, and not periods of twenty-four hours ; the consignee is entitled to have as lay days whole days to the number specified in the charterparty, but where the ship is ready to discharge in the middle of a day, it is competent for him to regard the remaining portion as a lay day, and to commence the discharge at once, the portion of the day occupied being counted as one of the lay days to which he is entitled. A ship being ready to discharge her cargo, consisting of grain in bulk, the captain asked the consignee at 10.30 a.m. to begin the discharge. The latter refused, but at 1 p.m. reconsidered his decision and began the discharge :—Held, that the court ought to draw the inference of fact that the consignee agreed to regard the day on which the discharge was begun as one of the lay days, although there were only a few hours of it available for work. The Katy, Gordon v. Walmsley, 64 L. J., Adm. 49 ; [1895] P. 56 ; 11 R. 683 ; 71 L. T. 709 ; 43 W. R. 290 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 527—C. A.

Demurrage Ceases when Ship Sails.]—Demurrage ceases on the day the ship sails ; loss by delay (ice or bad weather) afterwards falls on the shipowner. Jamieson v. Laurie, 6 Bro. P. C. 474 ; 3 R. R. 725.

Convoy.]—Covenant in charterparty to take in cargo and sail from O. with the first convoy for England fourteen days after the vessel was ready to load ; the freighter covenanting to load within fourteen days after notice that she was ready to load ; the freighter to be at liberty to detain the ship fifteen days on demurrage at four guineas per day. The freighter kept the ship fifteen days on demurrage, during which a convoy sailed for England, and completed the loading two days before the next convoy sailed after the expiration of the fifteen days, and thirty-eight days after that date:—Held, that on paying for the fifteen days' demurrage the freighter was in the same position with regard to the ship sailing as he would otherwise have been in at the end of the fourteen days, and that he was liable for fifteen days' demurrage, and not thirty-eight additional days as claimed. Connor v. Smythe, 5 Taunt. 654.

—— "Wait for Convoy"—Meaning.]—Where demurrage was to be paid for every day beyond a stated number that the ship should "wait for convoy" :—Held, that the sailing, and not the arrival, of convoy was intended. Lannoy v. Werry, 4 Bro. P. C. 630.

Days saved in Loading used for Unloading.]—The time occupied in loading is not, in the absence of agreement, to be lumped with the time for discharging, so that by extra despatch in one operation demurrage incurred for delay in the other may be worked off. Avon Steamship Co. v. Leask, 18 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 280.

Construction—"At Expiration of," equivalent to "Within a Reasonable Time after."]—A declaration was for money due in respect of the demurrage of a ship. The defendant pleaded that the charterparty contained the following stipulation : "That the said merchants (meaning the defendant) are to be allowed (a certain number) of clear working days for loading and discharging the vessel each voyage, and in the event of that number being exceeded, a statement shall be furnished to the merchants at the expiration of this charter, in which they shall be credited with the above number of clear working days for each voyage performed by the vessel, and debited with those actually occupied in loading and discharging as aforesaid, and all the days so occupied in excess (if any) shall be paid for by the merchants at the rate of 2*l.* per clear working day as demurrage," and that no statement was furnished to the defendant at the expiration of the charter as required by its terms. The plaintiff replied that a statement was furnished to the defendant in accordance with the charter within a reasonable time in that behalf and before the commencement of this suit. To this replication the defendant demurred on the ground that the replication alleged a performance in terms other than those of the contract set out in the plea :—Held, that the replication was good, for that the words "at the expiration of " were synonymous with the words "a reasonable time after." Beard v. Rhodes, 28 L. T. 168 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 537.

What Days—Right to include whole Time occupied in Loading and Unloading.]—By charterparty between the plaintiff and the defendants it was agreed that the plaintiff's ship should proceed to Bilbao and there load a full and complete, or part, cargo of iron ore, and deliver the same at Middlesborough. "400/500 tons per working day (Sundays and holidays excepted) to be allowed the charterers for loading, and 300 discharging, all demurrage over and above the said days at the rate of 2*s.* per hour for every 100 tons cargo. The lay days to commence day after arrival, and being ready to load or discharge respectively. The captain to have a lien on the cargo for freight or demurrage." "If the ship is loaded at other than Portugalette or Lucana shipping staithes, the loading and discharging to be at the rate of 300 tons per working day." The vessel having loaded at a place other than those last mentioned at a rate less than 300 tons per working day, proceeded to Middlesborough, where she discharged her cargo at a higher rate per day :—Held, that in calculating the demurrage the days for loading and unloading must be kept separate, and that the charterers had no right to add together the whole number of days occupied in loading and unloading for the purpose of ascertaining the average amount of work done on each day. Marshall v. Bolckow, 6 Q. B. D. 231 ; 29 W. R. 792.

Where no Time Expressed.]—When a charter-party is silent as to the time within which the cargo is to be unloaded at the port of destination, the law implies that reasonable despatch shall be used by both merchant and shipowner. Ford v. Cotesworth, 10 B. & S. 991 ; 39 L. J., Q. B. 188 ; L. R. 5 Q. B. 544 ; 23 L. T. 165 ; 18 W. R. 1169—Ex. Ch. And see Sweeting v. Darthez, post, col. 469 ; Oliver v. Muggeridge, supra, col. 453.

If, by a bill of lading of a cargo of brandy brought into the London docks, no time is stipulated within which it shall be unloaded, the implied contract on the part of the consignee is to discharge the ship in the usual and customary time for unloading such cargo, which is the time within which the brandies can be unloaded in the docks into the bonded warehouses. Burmester v. Hodgson, 2 Camp. 488 ; 11 R. R. 776.

If there is no fixed time, the law implies an agreement, on the part of the charterer, to discharge the cargo within a reasonable time. Postlethwaite v. Freeland, 49 L. J., Ex. 630 ; 5 App. Cas. 599 ; 42 L. T. 845 ; 28 W. R. 833 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 302—H. L. (E.)

Fixed Time.]—If, by the terms of the charter-party, the charterer has agreed to discharge the ship within a fixed period of time, that is an absolute and unconditional engagement, for the non-performance of which he is answerable, whatever may be the nature of the impediments which prevent him from performing it. Ib.

Cargo not Ready.]—See Little v. Stevenson, infra, col. 465.

Arrival of Ship.]—See 4. PLACE, infra.

4. PLACE.

Entering Docks.]—A charterparty for a ship to sail to "London, Surrey Commercial Docks," is not satisfied by the ship arriving at the gate of the docks, but not entering the docks. Dahl v. Donkin or Nelson, 50 L. J., Ch. 411 ; 6 App. Cas. 38 ; 44 L. T. 381 ; 29 W. R. 543 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 392—H. L. (E.)

Commencement of Entry into Dock—Turn to Load.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that the vessel should "proceed direct to any Liverpool or Birkenhead dock as ordered by charterers, and there load in the usual and customary manner a full and complete cargo of coals" ; that the vessel should be "loaded at the rate of 100 tons per working day," and that loading should not commence before the 1st of July. On the 3rd of July the vessel was ready to go to the Wellington Dock, which was the Liverpool dock ordered by the charterers, but she was not admitted into such dock until the 11th of July, because the coal agent employed by the charterers to supply the cargo had then three vessels in that dock and two others booked to come in, and the dock regulations did not allow a coal supplier to have more than three vessels in dock at the same time. Coal agents were usually employed to supply cargoes, and it did not appear that the charterers had made an unreasonable selection of the coal agent they so employed. The vessel entered the dock on the 11th of July, but her turn to go to the spout to receive the coals did not arrive sooner than the 23rd of July, and her loading was not begun until after that day. It was the usual practice to load coal at the spout, but it was also not unusual to load from lighters :—Held, that the lay days did not begin until the vessel had entered the dock to which she had been so ordered by the charterers, but that they began at that time and were not postponed until the vessel's turn had arrived to go to the spout. Tapscott v. Balfour, 42 L. J., C. P. 16 ; L. R. 8 C. P. 46 ; 27 L. T. 710 ; 21 W. R. 245 ; 1 Asp. M. C. 501.

Arrival at Port of Discharge—Port used in Legal, not Geographical Sense.]—A charterparty provided for payment of demurrage by the charterer for every day's detention of the vessel by his default, and that she should be ordered to a port where she could discharge always afloat ; by the bill of lading she was ordered to the port of Newry ; from the weight of the cargo, the depth of water, and the draught of the vessel, it was necessary to discharge part of her cargo at the Pool in Carlingford Roads, about ten miles from Newry :—Held, that the Pool being within the port of Newry for custom-house purposes, and taking the port of Newry in its legal sense, and not as a a geographical expression, the lay days began to run from the date of the commencement of the discharge at the Pool. Caffarini v. Walker, Ir. R. 10 C. L. 250—Ex. Ch.

Arrival at Place of Discharge.]—The computation of the time during which lay days are to run begins, in the absence of anything to the contrary in the contract, with the arrival of the ship at the usual or designated place of discharge in the port of destination. M'Intosh v. Sinclair, Ir. R. 11 C. L. 456.

Usage as to Place of Discharge.]—When the place of the removal of the cargo is within the ambit of the port, and that removal is so common as to be the foundation of a binding usage to put out at that place and there deliver into the custody of the merchant so considerable a quantity of the cargo of a particular ship as upwards of two-thirds of the whole, a jury may, notwithstanding an attempt by merchants to establish an inconsistent usage as to lay days, hold that the operation is in substance a part discharge, and that the place where that operation is usual is a usual place for the commencement of the discharge. Ib.

Mooring of Vessel—Custom of the Port.]—Timber was consigned, under a charterparty made at Riga, to the Canada Dock in the port of Liverpool, a given number of days being allowed for unloading there :—Held, that, by the general law, the lay days commenced from the time the ship arrived in the dock ; but that it was competent to the consigeee to shew, notwithstanding the shipowner was a foreigner, that there was a custom in the port of Liverpool, that, in the case of timber ships, the lay days commenced only from the mooring of the vessel at the quay where by the regulations of the dock she was alone allowed to discharge. "Norden" Steamship Co. v. Dempsey, 45 L. J., C. P. 764 ; 1 C. P. D. 654 ; 24 W. R. 984.

The lay days allowed by a charterparty for discharging a cargo are to be reckoned from the time of the ship's arrival at the usual place of discharge, and not at the entrance of the port to which she is chartered, and this although part of the cargo was taken out for the purpose of lightening the vessel after she had entered the port, and before her arrival at the quay, which, by the custom of the port, was the usual place of delivery. Brereton v. Chapman, 5 M. & P. 526; 7 Bing. 559.

At or Alongside Wharf.]—On a charterparty, by which a ship was to unload "at a certain wharf, or as near thereto as she can safely get," the ship not being able for some days to get there, owing to the state of the tides:—Held, that "at" meant "alongside," and that the charterer was not liable to demurrage for the delay, though it was not usual in the particular port for ships to be unloaded into lighters. Bastifell v. Lloyd, 1 H. & C. 388; 31 L. J., Ex. 413; 10 W. R. 721.

Agreement to Alter Place.]—Under a charterparty to load coals and iron at C., and proceed with them to A., the running days to commence on the 16th December, 1834, the plaintiff having, with the defendant's consent, laden coals at P., in ten days ensuing the 16th December, and not having sailed from C. till the 27th:—Held, that the running days were still to be reckoned from the 16th December, and that no proof of the defendant's consent satisfied an allegation in the declaration that the coals had been laden at P. at his request. Jackson v. Galloway, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 71; 6 Scott, 786; 8 L. J., C. P. 29.

Naming Port.]—By a charterparty a ship was to proceed "to Plymouth, not higher than S. or N., or as near thereunto as she can safely get and deliver" her cargo, with certain lay days and demurrage days. The port of Plymouth is a tidal estuary. On the ship's arrival in Plymouth, the consignee ordered her to discharge at B., an ordinary landing-place in the port of Plymouth, lower down than S. or N. At this time the tides were neap; the vessel went as near B. as she could in that state of the tide, and lay on the sand for some days, till, the tides being higher, she got to B.:—Held, that the consignee had the option of naming any ordinary loading place in the port of Plymouth, within the limits assigned, and that the lay days did not commence till the vessel reached the place so named, the delay in getting to it being occasioned only in the ordinary course of navigation in a tidal harbour. Parker v. Winlow, 7 El. & Bl. 942; 27 L. J., Q. B. 49; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 84.

Refusal of Freighter to Name.]—A ship was chartered to deliver coals "at a good and safe wharf" at London at a certain freight. She came into collision in the Thames and was sunk with the cargo on board, but was afterwards got up, and arrived at a pier at Wapping. Notice of her arrival was given on the same day to the agents of the freighter, and they were required to name a wharf; but they declined to do so. Next day the ship and freight were arrested by process out of the admiralty court in a suit instituted by the owners of the vessel with whom she had been in collision:—Held, that the shipowner was entitled to recover, as damages for the refusal to name a wharf, the amount which he would have received as freight if the cargo had been duly delivered, there having been a complete breach before the arrest; but that he was not entitled to demurrage. Stewart v. Rogerson, L. R. 6 C. P. 424.

Neglect by Charterer to Name Ready Quay Berth.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that the plaintiff's vessel after loading a certain cargo should proceed "to London or Tyne Dock to such ready quay berth as ordered by the charterers," "demurrage to be at the rate of 30*l.* per running day," in no case unless in berth before noon were the lay days to count before the day following that on which the vessel was in berth, and the captain or owners were to have an absolute lien on the cargo for all freight and demurrage in respect thereof. The vessel was ordered by the charterers to a certain London dock, but when the vessel arrived at such dock, there was no quay berth ready for her, and she was consequently detained one day beyond the time required for discharging her, had she been able to have got alongside a quay berth on her arrival in the dock:—Held, on the construction of this charterparty, that the charterers were bound to name such quay berth as was ready, and that for the detention caused by the charterers neglecting to do so the plaintiffs were entitled to a lien on the cargo for demurrage, the damage for the detention being sufficiently in the nature of demurrage to come within the demurrage clause. Harris v. Jacobs, 54 L. J., Q. B. 492; 15 Q. B. D. 247; 54 L. T. 61; 5 Asp. M. C. 530—C. A.

Crane Berth or Loading Berth—Lay Days.]—A charterparty stipulated that the ship should proceed to "a loading berth in Leith docks, as ordered, and there load, in ten working days, as customary, a full and complete cargo of coals." On April 16th the master gave notice to the charterers that the ship was ready to load at a loading berth. The charterers had entered her for a crane berth, for which she had to wait until 3rd May:—Held, that the charterers had the choice of a loading berth, but that the lay days began to run from April 17. Dall' Orso v. Mason, 3 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 419.

Lay Days—Usual Place of Discharge—Custom to Lighten Vessel.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that the plaintiff's steamship should proceed to Cronstadt and load a cargo of wheat, and therewith proceed to a port in the English or Bristol Channel as ordered, "or so near thereto as she may safely get at all times of tide and always afloat, and deliver the same. Eight running days, Sunday excepted, to be allowed the merchants, if the ship be not sooner despatched, for loading and discharging the steamer, and ten days on demurrage if required over and above the laying days at 25*l.* per day." The steamer arrived at Cronstadt, occupied six running days in loading a cargo of 4,325 quarters of wheat, and was ordered to Gloucester, Bristol Channel, for discharge. She arrived at Sharpness Dock in the Bristol Channel on the 13th of November. Sharpness Dock is within the port of Gloucester, and about seventeen miles from the basin within the city of Gloucester where grain cargoes are usually discharged if the burthen of the ship will admit. The steamer was ready to commence the discharge of her cargo on the 13th, but could not get nearer to Gloucester than Sharpness, until part of her cargo was first discharged at Sharpness. On the 14th and 15th of November the consignees discharged into lighters 1,585 quarters of the cargo, and then required the master to take the steamer through the canal to a place of discharge within the basin at Gloucester. The master proceeded, and arrived in the basin on the 17th. On the 18th the residue of the cargo was discharged and the vessel returned to Sharpness, where she arrived on the 19th. In an action for demurrage, evidence was given of a custom of the port of Gloucester, according to which the usual place of discharging grain-cargoes was at the basin within the city, and when vessels with grain-cargoes destined for Gloucester were of too heavy a burthen to come up the canal they were lightened at Sharpness, and during the discharge at Sharpness of so much of the cargo as it was necessary to discharge in order to enable the vessel to proceed by the canal to Gloucester basin, the lay days counted, but the time occupied by coming up the canal to discharge at Gloucester basin and by returning to Sharpness was not counted:—Held, first, that the custom was reasonable; secondly, that it was not inconsistent with the express provision in the charterparty as to "running days," and that the time occupied by the vessel in going from Sharpness to the basin and in returning to Sharpness ought to be excluded from the lay days, and the plaintiffs were entitled to one day's demurrage only. Brown v. Johnson, (supra, col. 281) discussed. Nielsen v. Wait, 55 L. J., Q. B. 87; 16 Q. B. D. 67; 54 L. T. 344; 34 W. R. 33; 5 Asp. M. C. 553—C. A.

Loading Berth not Ready.] — Although a shipper or charterer is bound to do whatever is reasonable on his part with a view of getting the ship berthed as soon as possible, it is not his duty in all circumstances to have the cargo ready for loading on the bare chance that a berth may be vacant. Little v. Stevenson, 65 L. J., P. C. 69; [1896] A. C. 108; 74 L. T. 529; 8 Asp. M.C. 162—H. L. (Sc.)

By a charterparty a ship was to go to a certain port to receive a cargo supplied by the charterers and brought alongside within sixty running hours. Demurrage to be paid at a specified rate and "lay days to count from the time the master has got ship reported, berthed, and ready to receive cargo, and given notice of the same in writing to the charterers." When the ship arrived, of which due notice was given to the charterers, the docks were too crowded to admit of her entering. Two days afterwards a berth became vacant in consequence of the non-arrival of the cargo of an earlier vessel, and the appellant's ship might have entered if her cargo had been ready. She was not in fact docked until five days later:—Held, that the appellant was not entitled to any damages by way of demurrage. Ib.

—— Incorporation of Colliery Guarantee.]—By a charterparty made between the plaintiff, the owner of the ship "F.," and the defendants, it was provided that the ship should proceed to "a customary loading place in the Royal Dock, Grimsby," and there receive on board from the defendants' agents a full cargo of coal, "to be loaded as customary at Grimsby as per colliery guarantee in fifteen colliery working days." The colliery guarantee referred to, made between a colliery company and the defendants, provided that the company should load the ship in fifteen colliery working days after she was ready in dock at Grimsby to receive her cargo, "time to count from the day following that on which notice of readiness is received." On September 3 the captain of the "F." gave notice that he was ready to load, and the ship was entered in the turn-book as ready. There was only one staith at which she could load, and her turn arrived on September 17, but the colliery company did not give notice that they were ready to deliver coal until October 9. The ship then proceeded to the staith, and the loading was completed on October 13. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants to recover demurrage:—Held (Kay, L.J., dissenting), that the colliery guarantee was incorporated in the charterparty; that the lay days commenced to run from September 4, the day after that on which the notice of readiness was given; and that the defendants were therefore liable for demurrage from September 20. Monsen v. Macfarlane, 65 L. J., Q. B. 57; [1895] 2 Q. B. 562; 73 L. T. 548; 8 Asp. M. C. 93—C. A.

—— Commencement of—Receipt of Orders.]—A charterparty provided that the vessel should proceed to Malta for orders; which were to be given from London within twenty-four hours after receipt of notice, or lay-days to count:—Held, that orders not having been given within the prescribed time, the lay-days did not begin to count till the expiration of the twenty-four hours. Bryden v. Niebuhr, 1 Cab. & E. 241.

—— Completion of Voyages—Option to order Ship to one of several Places in Dock.]—By the terms of a charterparty the ship was to load from the charterer's agents at Cardiff a cargo of coals, "and therewith proceed to Dieppe and deliver the same alongside consignee's or railway wharf, or into lighters, or any vessel or wharf where she may safely deliver, as ordered, cargo to be loaded and discharged in forty-eight running hours, &c. Demurrage over and above the said lying time at 10*s.* per hour. The ship arrived in the dock at Dieppe, and was ordered to discharge at the railway wharf, but in consequence of all the discharging berths being occupied, she was not berthed at the railway wharf until twenty-four hours after her arrival in the dock. In an action by shipowner against charterers for demurrage:—Held, that the voyage was not completed, and the lay-days did not commence under the charterparty until the ship was berthed at the railway wharf, and therefore that the defendants were not liable to pay demurrage for delay in respect of the period which elapsed between the ship's arrival in the dock at Dieppe and her being berthed at the railway wharf. Murphy v. Coffin, 12 Q. B. D. 87; 32 W. R. 616.

A charterparty provided that the ship should proceed to Odessa, or as near thereto as she could safely get, and there load. Twelve running days (Sundays excepted) were allowed for loading and unloading, and ten days on demurrage. The ship arrived in Odessa outer harbour on the 22nd of December, but was not allowed to go alongside a loading quay berth, as the docks were crowded. It was possible to load vessels at Odessa at a loading quay berth either in the inner or outer harbour. On the 8th of January she was ordered to a berth in the inner harbour, and proceeded to take in cargo. In arbitration proceedings between the shipowners and charterers, the arbitrator found that the lay days expired on the 5th of January, and that the charterers were liable for demurrage and detention. On motion to set aside the award:—Held, that the arbitrator was right, as the voyage was completed as soon as the ship had arrived in the outer harbour at Odessa, and as near as she could get to a loading quay berth. Pyman and Dreyfus, In re, 59 L. J., Q. B. 13; 24 Q. B. D. 152; 61 L. T. 724; 38 W. R. 447; 6 Asp. M. C. 444—D. And see Little v. Stevenson, supra, col. 465.

Option of Ordering Ship to Discharge in one of several Ways.]—By the terms of a charterparty it was provided that the "C." should load at Glasgow a cargo of coals, and "therewith proceed to Odessa, or as near thereto as she may safely get, and deliver the same to the freighters, or assigns alongside any safe wharf, store, craft, steamer, depot, ship, or arsenal, as ordered by receiver. . . . Cargo to be discharged at the average rate of not less than 300 tons per working day, Sundays and holidays excepted, and ten days on demurrage over and above the said lay days at 16*s.* 8*d.* per hour, except in the case of strikes, lock-outs, &c., or any other causes beyond the control of the charterers or receivers or their respective agents, delaying the due loading and unloading. Time for loading and unloading to commence from the time the steamer is ready and intimation has been given in writing." The "C." arrived inside the mole at Odessa on the 16th of November, and, on the same day, due notice in writing of the ship's readiness to discharge was given, and she was ordered to proceed alongside the quay to discharge. In consequence of all the berths at the quay being occupied, the "C." could not get alongside the quay till the morning of the 20th, and the discharge of her cargo was not completed until the 25th. In an action brought by owners of the ship against the agents of the charterers for demurrage:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Murphy v. Coffin (supra), considered. The Carisbrook, 59 L. J., Adm. 37: 15 P. D. 98; 62 L. T. 843; 38 W. R. 543; 6 Asp. M. C. 507.

Lightening Ship.]—A ship was chartered to "proceed to a safe port in the United Kingdom or as near thereunto as she may safely get always afloat at any time of the tide." She was ordered to Glasgow, but owing to her draught had to discharge part of her cargo at Greenock. In an action for demurrage:—Held, that the voyage was completed at Greenock, as regards the cargo there discharged, and that the time spent in lightening at Greenock was to be included in the lay-days. Dickinson v. Martini, 1 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1185.

Ship Arrived — Customary Place of Discharge.]—Under a charterparty requiring a ship to proceed to a port named, "and, as usual and customary, to deliver the cargo to the order of the merchants or their agents, alongside any store, wharf, &c.," the ship is not an arrived ship until she reaches the customary place of discharge in that port, and the lay days will only begin to run from the time when she is ready to discharge at the customary place of discharge. Sanders v. Jenkins, 66 L. J., Q. B. 40; [1897] 1 Q. B. 93.

Delivery at Safe Berth as ordered.]—By a charterparty the vessel was to proceed to the Mersey and deliver her cargo at any safe berth as ordered on arrival in the dock at Garston. On arrival a berth was ordered, but, owing to the crowded state of the dock, delay occurred which prevented the vessel being berthed for some time after arrival. On a claim by the shipowners for demurrage arising from the delay:—Held, that the obligation of the charterers to unload did not commence till the vessel was berthed. Tharsis Sulphur Co. v. Morel, 61 L. J., Q. B. 11; [1891] 2 Q. B. 647; 65 L. T. 659; 40 W. R. 58; 7 Asp. M. C. 106—C. A.

Ship admitted into Dock as Special Favour.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that the plaintiff should at L. load on the defendant's vessel, the "P.," a cargo of coal, and that she should proceed therewith to D., "the vessel to be loaded and discharged in nineteen running days, or if longer detained, to pay 4*l.* per day demurrage." At the foot of the charterparty was a memorandum, "Vessel to load in B. M. dock or W. dock, high level." On the day following the execution of the charterparty, the "P." was, as a matter of favour, admitted into the W. dock, and was then ready to receive her cargo, but owing to the regulations of the dock authorities she did not begin to load until about a fortnight later. Upon her arrival at D. disputes arose between her captain and the plaintiff as to the form of the bill of lading, and in consequence thereof her cargo was not unloaded until twenty days had elapsed after the expiration of the nineteen running days, if calculated from the time of her admission into the W. dock. In order to obtain delivery of the cargo, the plaintiff was obliged to pay 80*l.* claimed as demurrage in respect of the twenty days, which he now sued to recover back:—Held, that the nineteen running days were to be calculated from the time when the "P." was admitted into the W. dock, that the plaintiff was liable for demurrage, and that the action would not lie. Davies v. McVeagh, 48 L. J., Ex. 686; 4 Ex. D. 265; 41 L. T. 308; 28 W. R. 143; 4 Asp. M. C. 149—C. A.

At what Ports—Loading and Discharge.]—By charterparty between the plaintiff and the defendants it was agreed that the plaintiff's ship should proceed to Bilbao, and there load a full and complete, or part, cargo of iron ore, and deliver the same at Middlesborough. "400/500 tons per working day (Sundays and holidays excepted) to be allowed the charterers for loading, and 300 discharging, all demurrage over and above the said days at the rate of 2*s.* per hour for every 100 tons of cargo. The lay days to commence day after arrival, and being ready to load or discharge respectively. The captain to have a lien for freight or demurrage." "If the ship is loaded at other than Portugalette or Lucana shipping staithes, the loading and discharging to be at the rate of 300 tons per working day." The vessel having loaded at a place other than those last mentioned at a rate less than 300 tons per working day, proceeded to Middlesborough, where she discharged her cargo at a higher rate per day:—Held, that, in calculating the demurrage, the days for loading and unloading must be kept separate, and that the charterers had no right to add together the whole number of days occupied in loading and unloading for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of work done on each day. Marshall v. Bolckow, 6 Q. B. D. 231; 29 W. R. 792.

Upon the following clause in a charterparty, "the vessel to lie her regular time for loading her cargo, and one day per keel running days, demurrage 3*l.* per day for every working day's detention, over and above the days allowed as aforesaid," demurrage can be claimed only in respect of loading, and not of the time spent in the delivery of the cargo. Alcock v. Taylor, 2 H. & W. 58; 6 N. & M. 296.

—— Intermediate Port.]—In an action for demurrage on a charterparty, given "while waiting at Portsmouth for convoy, and discharging her cargo at Barcelona," the plaintiff can only claim demurrage at those two places, not for any delays at any other intervening places. Marshal v. De la Torre, 1 Esp. 367.

By a charterparty under seal, the freighter was at liberty "to keep the ship on demurrage, at her loading and delivery ports, ten days each, besides a certain number of days limited for her stay at the same, or as many of them as need should require." The ship having been compelled to put into an intermediate port between her ports of loading and discharge, and the freighter having detained the vessel ten days there, and also fourteen days more than ten days at the port of delivery:—Held, that the master could not recover on this covenant for more than the ten days' demurrage at 5*l.* per day, at the port of discharge, the covenant not extending to the payment of demurrage beyond ten days at each of the ports of loading and discharge. Stevenson v. York, 2 Chit. 570.

—— Not at Port of Discharge—Reasonable Time.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that a ship should proceed to Pernambuco and there load from the factors of the freighter, having first discharged her cargo, if any, a full cargo, and proceed therewith to Valparaiso, a legal port between Valparaiso and Guayaquil, and Guayaquil, all or any, and there discharge the cargo and goods taken on board at Valparaiso, and at any and all the aforesaid ports should take on board a full cargo, and therewith proceed to England for orders to discharge. Seventy running days were to be allowed the merchant, if the ship was not sooner despatched, for loading, discharging and reloading the ship at the several ports, to be computed from the several periods of the vessel being clear and ready. She took in cargo at Pernambuco, and discharged at Valparaiso. At Valparaiso, she took in goods belonging to the freighter and also to other merchants for Paita (a port between Valparaiso and Guayaquil) and Guayaquil, part of which was to be discharged there and the rest to be carried to England. The seventy running days were all consumed at Pernambuco, Valparaiso, Paita, and Guayaquil: plus three days, for which demurrage was paid to the master:—Held, that the seventy running days "for loading, discharging, and reloading," only applied to the ports of loading, intermediate discharge and reloading, such lay days not applying to the ultimate discharge at the end of the voyage, and, consequently, that the charterers were entitled to a reasonable time for unloading the homeward cargo in London, without paying demurrage. Sweeting v. Darthez, 14 C. B. 538; 2 C. L. R. 1375; 23 L. J., C. P. 131; 18 Jur. 958; 2 W. R. 414.

During Voyage.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that a ship then lying at Genoa should sail on or before the 30th July, 1859, to Monte Video and Lima (with goods for third parties), and thence proceed with all convenient despatch to Callao, where the master was to report his arrival to the agents of the charterers, by whom he was to be sent to the Chincha Islands for a cargo of guano, for a port in the United Kingdom. Thirty days were to be allowed to the charterers for loading the ship and to the owners for taking in certain specified light freight, and thirty days over and above the lay-days, at 7*l.* per day; and then came the following provision: "Should the vessel be unnecessarily detained at any other period of the voyage, such detention to be paid for by the party delinquent to the party observant, at the above-named rate of demurrage or compensation." The vessel did not leave Genoa until the 8th of September:—Held, that this was not a detention during the voyage within the meaning of the penalty clause. Valente v. Gibbs, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 270; 28 L. J., C. P. 229; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1213; 7 W. R. 500.

Discharge in Separate Parcels.]—As soon as the period arrives at which the owner of the cargo is bound to accept part delivery, the voyage is at an end, and so, where, by the usage of a port, a cargo is to be discharged within the port in two separate parcels at two different places, both places taken together constitute the usual place of discharge, and the lay-days commence to run from arrival at the first. McIntosh v. Sinclair, Ir. R. 11 C. L. 456.

Different Loading Places—Ship Ordered to Crowded Berth.]—A charterparty stipulated that the ship should "proceed to Portugalette or any other usual ore-loading place in the river Nervion not above Lucana, as ordered by the merchants' agents on arrival" and there load a cargo of iron ore, "after being berthed in turn." There were different loading places for different classes of ore; and the ship, on arrival, was ordered to a place at which, owing to the number of ships arrived before her, she could not be berthed until June 27. At another loading place she would have been berthed on June 21:—Held, that the charterers were liable for four days' demurrage. Stephens v. Macleod, 19 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 38.

5. Loading and Discharging; Rules of Port.

Contract to Load with usual Despatch—Delay caused by Rule of Port.]—By a charterparty the master of a vessel, the "D.," engaged to receive on board and load a cargo of coal at the port of Liverpool, "to be loaded with the usual despatch of the port, or if longer detained to be paid 40*s.* per day demurrage," and the defendants engaged to load upon the above terms. The loading was to take place at the Bramley Moore docks, and by one of the regulations of the docks no coal agent was to be allowed to have more than three vessels in those docks loading and to load at the cranes at one time. The defendants acted as their own coal agents, and when the charterparty was entered into they had three ships loading in the docks, and ten other charters in their books having priority over the plaintiff. In consequence of these engagements the "D." was not allowed to go into the docks until thirty days after she was ready to do so:—Held, that the contract by the defendants was absolute to load with the usual despatch of the port of Liverpool; that the "D." had not been so loaded; and that the defendants were therefore liable to pay for the delay. Ashcroft v. Crow Orchard Colliery Co., 43 L. J., Q. B. 194; L. R. 9 Q. B. 540; 31 L. T. 266; 22 W. R. 825; 2 Asp. M. C. 397.

Ship to Load in Turn—Charterer's Default.]—A ship was chartered upon the terms that she should go to a foreign port for a cargo, and "there, in the usual and accustomed manner, load in her regular turn." The ship went to the port, but, owing to the charterer's default, was not ready when her turn came, and was consequently detained eleven days. When her turn came round again, she was ready, but the wind coming on to blow, and the harbour being crowded, the harbour-master refused to allow the ship to go up to load, and she was consequently detained three days. The shipowner having sued on the charterparty claiming damages for the detention:—Held, that the detention for the three days was the legal and natural consequence of the charterer's default in not having the ship ready for the first turn, and that the shipowner was entitled to damages in respect of the three days as well as the eleven days. Jones v. Adamson, 45 L. J., Ex. 64; 1 Ex. D. 60; 35 L. T. 287; 3 Asp. M. C. 253.

—— Shipowner Ignorant of Custom.]—The plaintiff's sailing vessel was chartered by the defendant to proceed to Whitehaven for a cargo of coals. The charterparty provided that "regular turn should be allowed for loading. By the custom of the port of Whitehaven, steam vessels, though they arrive in port after sailing vessels, are loaded with coals before the sailing vessels; but as between sailing vessels themselves, sailing vessels are loaded in the order of their arrival in port. The plaintiffs were ignorant that this was the usage of the port. The plaintiffs' vessel, though she arrived before several steam vessels, was delayed until they were first loaded, but she was loaded in the order of her arrival as regarded the other sailing vessels in harbour. The plaintiffs claimed demurrage:—Held, that the expression, "regular turn," in the charterparty, should, in the absence of exclusive words, be constructed as "regular turn" according to the usage of the port of Whitehaven; that it was not material that the plaintiffs were ignorant of such usage, and that, accordingly, the plaintiffs could not recover. King v. Hinde, 12 L. R., Ir. 113.

Port Crowded — Lighters Engaged.] — The defendants chartered the plaintiff's vessel, the "C.," for a voyage to the port of L. The charterparty provided that the cargo was to be brought to and taken alongside free of expense and risk to the ship; but it contained no other clause as to discharging the cargo. The number of lighters at L. was small, and when the "C." arrived the port was crowded with vessels, about half of which belonged to the defendants or had been consigned to them. Seventy-two days elapsed after the arrival of the "C." before her discharge was completed by the defendants' agents; but the number of days upon which the cargo was unloaded was only thirty-four. The delay arose from the lighters being engaged in discharging other vessels lying at the port:—Held, that in determining whether the terms of the charterparty had been broken by the defendants, the delay occasioned by the lighters being engaged in discharging other vessels was not to be taken into account. Wright v. New Zealand Shipping Co., 4 Ex. D. 165; 40 L. T. 413; 4 Asp. M. C. 118—C. A.

"Cargo to be Discharged with all Despatch, according to Custom of the Port."]—The defendants chartered the plaintiff's vessel, the "C.," to carry a cargo of rails to the port of L. The charterparty provided that the cargo should be "discharged with all despatch, according to the custom of the port." By the custom of L. vessels were discharged by lighters worked along a warp, and upon the arrival of a vessel she was reported at the port office, and in her turn, with respect to the vessels that had arrived previously, one lighter was sent to her every working day until she was discharged. Upon the arrival of the "C." at L., in consequence of the scarcity of lighters, and the number of vessels lying there, the defendants were unable to begin to discharge until twenty-four working days had elapsed. In an action to recover damages for detention, the judge directed the jury that there was no obligation upon the defendants to provide one lighter for unloading the cargo of the "C." for every working day after she was ready to unload, and that if the defendants used the existing appliances at L. with due dispatch, according to the custom of the port, the jury ought to find for them:—Held, that the direction was correct. Postlethwaite v. Freeland, 49 L. J., Ex. 630; 5 App. Cas. 599; 42 L. T. 845; 28 W. R. 833; 4 Asp. M. C. 302—H. L. (E.)

Obligation where no Custom.]—By a charterparty entered into between the plaintiff and G., it was agreed that the plaintiff's vessel should at the port of discharge be unloaded as fast as the custom of the port would allow. By the bill of lading, signed by the master, the cargo was stated to have been shipped by G., and was to be delivered to the defendant or his assigns, he or they paying freight for the goods as per charterparty. No time for the discharge of the cargo was mentioned in the bill of lading. At the port of discharge there was no custom as to unloading vessels, but a delay occurred in unloading the ship:—Held, in an action for not discharging within a reasonable time, that, as there was no custom of the port of discharge as to unloading vessels, the charterparty did not, by its terms, vary the implied contract contained in the bill of lading to deliver the cargo within a reasonable time. Fowler v. Knoop, 48 L. J., Q. B. 333; 4 Q. B. D. 229; 40 L. T. 180; 27 W. R. 299; 4 Asp. M. C. 68—C. A.

Wrongful Interference with Turn.]—Goods were consigned under a bill of lading by which it was stipulated that the vessel should take her regular turn in unloading. The vessel having been prevented from unloading within a reasonable time, in consequence of not being allowed to take her regular turn in unloading:—Held, that the master could sue the consignor for damages for such detention, the above stipulation in the bill of lading amounting to a contract by the consignor with the master that the vessel should take her regular turn in unloading. Cawthron v. Trichett, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 754; 33 L. J., C. P. 182; 9 L. T. 609; 12 W. R. 311.

"To be Discharged at usual Fruit Berth as fast as Steamer can deliver, as customary."]—By the terms of a charterparty, a steamer was to take a cargo to Hamburg "to be discharged at usual fruit berth as fast as steamer can deliver, as customary." On the 6th of March she arrived, and was moored at the usual fruit berth, but without the sanction of the authorities, who had her removed till the 8th, when she returned to the berth. Owing to various causes, unloading did not commence till the 11th of March. The shipowners brought an action for demurrage:—Held, that the steamer did not arrive at her place of discharge, so as to impose any obligation on the charterers to unload, until the 8th of March; that the words "as customary" referred to the speed of delivery as well as to the mode of delivery, so that the cargo had to be unloaded as fast as the custom of the port would allow; that the delays were caused by the custom of the port; and that the claim for demurrage ought not to be allowed. Good v. Isaacs, 61 L. J., Q. B. 649; [1892] 2 Q. B. 555; 67 L. T. 450; 40 W. R. 629; 7 Asp. M. C. 212—C. A.

Customary Mode—Discharge by Dock Company.]—A charterparty provided that the vessel should proceed to a named dock and should there be discharged as fast as she could deliver. On the ship's arrival, the master authorised the dock company to discharge the cargo. The custom at the dock was for the company to discharge the cargo, acting for the shipowner and the charterer or consignee:—Held, that the customary mode of discharge was implied, and that the charterers were not liable for demurrage by reason of the dock company's delay in discharging the cargo. The Jaederen, 61 L. J., Adm. 89; [1892] P. 351; 1 R. 545; 68 L. T. 266; 7 Asp. M. C. 260.

Timber Cargo — Delivery in Rafts.] — By a charterparty, it was agreed that a steamship, after loading with sleepers, should proceed to a named port, or as near thereunto as she may safely get, and that the cargo should be brought to and taken from alongside, at the merchant's risk and expense. The steamer to be loaded and discharged as fast as she can load and deliver. Demurrage at a rate named. The port was a tidal river, with a quay on the bank. The ship could not get a berth at the quay, because they were all occupied; and also because she drew too much water. The custom of the port was to discharge sleepers on the quay or on rafts. The charterers refused to take delivery on rafts, except of deck cargo, to lighten the ship. The ship was moored as near the quay as she could get. La Cour v. Donaldson, 1 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 912.

Meaning of "Regular Turn."]—By charterparty it was agreed between the plaintiff, owner of a ship, and the defendant, that the ship should proceed to a certain dock and there load in the customary manner a cargo of Marley Hill coke, "to be loaded in regular turn." The Marley Hill Company kept a book in which they entered ships to be loaded, and it was their practice to enter ships, not only before they were ready to load, but before their arrival at the dock, or even at the port; and if a ship was not ready to load when her turn came, the ship next in turn was loaded, and the other took its turn, when ready, before others which had been ready before it. On the 29th November the plaintiff's ship arrived at the dock, and on the 8th December his agent told the manager that he was ready to load, but several ships which had not arrived, and were not ready until after the plaintiff's ship, were loaded before it, in consequence of the order in which they were entered in the book; and the loading of the ship did not commence until the 23rd of January. The judge left it to the jury to say what was the meaning of "regular turn," and they found that the ship was loaded according to the practice of the Marley Hill Colliery, but that it was not an established or a known custom, and that "regular turn" was the order of readiness, not the order of entry in the book:—Held, that the defendant was liable for demurrage. Lawson v. Burness, 1 H. & C. 396; 10 W. R. 733. S. C., at Nisi Prius, 2 F. & F. 793.

—— Evidence — Regulations of Foreign Government.]—By the terms of a charterparty the charterers agreed to unload the vessel at a certain rate per diem; and payment for any detention beyond that time was "to reckon from the time of the vessel being ready to unload, and in turn to deliver." At the port to which the vessel was bound regulations of the French Government were in force, by which vessels arriving to discharge their cargo might have to wait a certain number of days before their turn to deliver arrived. In an action brought upon the charterparty for demurrage:—Held, that evidence was receivable to shew what was the general understood meaning of the words "in turn to deliver" amongst shipowners and merchants entering into charterparties, with respect to the commerce and business under investigation. Robertson v. Jackson, 2 C. B. 412; 15 L. J., C. P. 28; 10 Jur. 98.

Held, also, that the regulation as to the unloading for the French marine department was to be considered one of the regulations of the port, binding upon all vessels entering the port. Ib.

"Turn-paper"—Evidence as to Place.]—The defendants having purchased a cargo of coals on board a ship in the Thames belonging to the plaintiff, signed and sent to a coalmeter a document called a "turn-paper," which, after reciting that they had bought the cargo of coals, to be worked at the rate of forty-nine tons per working day, required him to work the same. The paper mentioned that the coals were to be unloaded at Dudman's Dock, in the Thames. The plaintiff took his ship to the moorings off Dudman's Dock, but a delay of six days occurred before the vessel could begin to unload at the dock, owing to the turns of other vessels for unloading coming first:—Held, that if the turn-paper was evidence of any contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, it was evidence only of a contract to unload after the vessel had got into the dock at the place for unloading; consequently that the plaintiff was not entitled to damages in the nature of demurrage for the six days' delay from the time the ship was off the dock ready to unload. Shadforth v. Cory, 32 L. J., Q. B. 379; 8 L. T. 736; 11 W. R. 918—Ex. Ch.

Different Order—Metage.]—A ship was to take in a cargo of coals for Newcastle, and proceed therewith to London, or as near thereto as she could safely get, and deliver the same to the freighters, or their assigns, to be delivered in five working days; demurrage over and above the laying days 2*l.* per day. The ship arrived in the port of London off Gravesend, on the 9th March, and on the 10th the cargo was sold, and the vessel entered by the freighters for a meter. On the 20th she received an order from the harbour-master to proceed to the Pool. On Monday, the 22nd, she commenced working out her cargo, and was cleared on the 27th. It appeared that, in consequence of the factor's certificate that she was a metered vessel, the harbour-master had detained her at Gravesend till the 20th, when her turn arrived for her to proceed to the Pool and discharge her cargo; that, if she had not been on the meter's list, this regulation would not have applied, and she might have proceeded to the Pool at once: and that it was occasionally the practice for factors not to enter such vessel in the meter's list, but that it was desirable that the cargo should be sold, subject to metage, by a sworn meter:—Held, that the ship was not to be considered as having arrived at her place of discharge until the 20th, and therefore that the laying days did not begin to count till then, and the owner was not entitled to demurrage. Kell v. Anderson, 10 M. & W. 498; 12 L. J., Ex. 101.

Customary Time.]—If a freighter of a ship employed to bring a cargo of wine into the port of London covenants to unload her in the usual and customary time at her port of discharge, he is not liable for the detention of the ship in the London Docks, if she is there unloaded in her turn. Rodgers v. Forresters, 2 Camp. 483; 11 R. R. 773.

Express Time.]—But if, by reason of the crowded state of the London Docks, a ship is detained there before she can be unloaded a longer time than is allowed for that purpose by the terms of the charterparty, the freighter is liable for this detention of the ship. Randall v. Lynch, 2 Camp. 352; 11 East, 179; 11 R. R. 727.

Delivery of Cargo—Joint Operation—Consignee and Shipowner—Cargo of Poles.]—See Peterson v. Freebody, infra, col. 535.

Ship Arrived—Discharge into Lighters.]—A ship was chartered to load scrap iron and "therewith to proceed to Grangemouth or as near thereunto as she may safely get." The cargo was to be brought to and taken from the ship's side at the merchant's expense. The ship arrived in the roads off the Carron River on September 10th, but she could not get a berth in the docks. On September 12th the ship was moored off one of the docks in the river. Next day the master told the charterers that she was ready to discharge. Ships often discharged into lighters in the river, but there was no custom as to scrap iron cargoes:—Held, that demurrage ran on from September 14th, on which day the discharging should have begun. Bremner v. Burrell, 4 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 934; and see The Alne Holme, infra, col. 480.

Custom to Employ Dock Company to Discharge—Strike.]—See Castlegate Steamship Company v. Dempsey, infra, col. 481.

Discharge of Mixed Cargo—Custom of Port.]—A ship chartered to carry to the United Kingdom ash and bones, to be discharged according to the custom of the port of discharge, received from the charterers and loaded 33 tons of ash, 397 tons of bones, and 20 tons of horns, hoofs, and piths, partly mixed in the bones and partly on the top of them. The master gave bills of lading for 33 tons of ash and 417 tons of bones. The ship was ordered to Aberdeen. The master, at the direction of the consignees, under protest, separated the horns, &c., from the bones before giving delivery; and sued for demurrage. The bone trade at Aberdeen was only 30 years old, and almost entirely in the defendants' hands:—Held, that no custom to separate the cargo was proved, and that the defendants were liable. Clacevich v. Hutchinson, 15 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 11.

Lightening Ship.]—A ship was chartered to take a cargo to a safe port in the United Kingdom "or so near thereto as she can safely get and lay afloat at all times of tide, and deliver the same and so end the voyage." She was ordered to Glasgow, and on her arrival at the Tail of the Bank, 22 miles from Glasgow, she had to be lightened to enable her to lie afloat at Glasgow at low water. According to custom the shippers took delivery of part of the cargo discharged to lighten her, and ordered the master to discharge the rest at Glasgow. The shipowners claimed demurrage:—Held, none due, the discharge of cargo being made to enable her to complete the voyage. Hillstrom v. Gibson, 8 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 463.

Ice—River Bar — Dantzic.] — A ship was chartered to sail from Liverpool to Dantzic or as near thereto as she could get, and back to England. Thirty days were allowed for loading and unloading. The ship was compelled by ice to bring up about four miles from Dantzic. On March 16th, the merchant received notice that she was ready to load, and her cargo having been sent over the ice was all on board by April 5th. It was then found that the ship could not pass the bar, and 60 tons were taken out of her and put on board again by April 14th. Six days were taken in unloading the cargo in England. In an action for demurrage the judge directed the jury that the question whether the days from April 5th to April 14th were to be computed or not in reckoning the running days depended upon the custom at Dantzic as to loading part of the cargo inside and part outside the bar:—Held, that the direction was right. Herring v. Ward, 8 L. J., Q. B. 218.

Ice—Customary Manner of loading.]—See Kay v. Field, infra, col. 479.

6. Causes of Delay.

a. Weather.

Preventing Departure of Ship.]—After a ship has finished her loading, the freighter is not liable for any delay that may arise in despatching her, occasioned by the accidental impossibility of her obtaining clearance. Barret v. Dutton, infra.

A charterer, for the conveyance of a cargo from a foreign port, is not liable to the owner for the unavoidable detention of the ship by the frost after the completion of the loading. Pringle v. Mollett, 6 M. & W. 80; 9 L. J., Ex. 148.

Preventing Conveyance of Cargo to Ship.]—The exception in a charterparty, whereby a certain number of laying days is allowed to the charterer, but detention by ice is not to be reckoned as such, applies where the ice not only renders access to the ship impracticable in the port itself, but blocks up a river by means of which alone the intended cargo can be conveyed to the port. Hudson v. Ede, 8 B. & S. 640; 37 L. J. Q. B. 166; L. R. 3 Q. B. 412; 18 L. T. 764; 16 W. R. 940—Ex. Ch. Followed in Smith v. Rosario Nitrate Co., infra, col. 485.

Where there is a stipulation in a charterparty, that a certain number of running days shall be allowed for loading the ship, the freighter is liable for her subsequent detention for that purpose, although the loading of her within the specified time was rendered impossible by ice in the river where she lay. Barret v. Dutton, 4 Camp. 333; 16 R. R. 798.

A. by charterparty engaged to load on board B.'s ships a cargo of coals "with due despatch"; the goods had to be brought by A. along a canal to the dock, and frost prevented the completion of the loading:—Held, that A. was responsible for the delay consequent thereon. Kearon v. Pearson, 7 H. & N. 386; 31 L. J., Ex. 1; 10 W. R. 12.

By a charterparty the ship was to proceed to Bilbao, and there load in the customary manner in regular steamer turn, where and as ordered by the agent of the freighter, a cargo of iron ore; 400 tons per working day, weather permitting, to be allowed for loading, and all demurrage over and above the said days at the rate of 12*s.* 6*d.* per hour, no demurrage to be paid in case of any hands striking work, frosts, or floods, which might hinder the loading of the vessel. The port of Bilbao was on a river where there were a number of wharves, and the iron ore was brought down to the wharves by railways from storing places five miles off, and loaded direct from the railway trucks into the ship by means of shoots, there being no storing-places at the wharves. Ships, however, were sometimes loaded while lying out in the river from barges which brought the ore from storing places higher up the river. The ship was ordered to San Nicholas wharf to load, and she was there loaded under a shoot with ore brought down by rail as above-mentioned. In consequence of heavy rains at the storing places, and in consequence of the men who were loading the ore into the railway trucks there refusing to work from fear of the cholera, delay occurred, and the ship was detained waiting for her cargo:—Held, without deciding whether the refusal of the men to work came within the exception in the demurrage clause of "hands striking work," that neither the state of the weather nor the refusal of the men to work hindered the "loading" inasmuch as both those causes of delay operated before the ore arrived at the place of loading, and the nature of the port was not such that the only possible mode of loading the ship was by bringing the ore by railway from the storing-places five miles off, so as to bring the case within the decision in Hudson v. Ede (supra). Stephens v. Harris, 57 L. J., Q. B. 203—C. A.

"Frost preventing Loading."]—By a charterparty a ship was to proceed to Cardiff, East Bute dock, and there load in the customary manner from the agents of the freighters a cargo of iron. "Cargo to be supplied as fast as steamer can receive. . . . Time to commence from the vessel being ready to load and unload and ten days, on demurrage, over and above the said lay days, at 40*l.* per day. (Except in case of hands striking work, or frosts or floods, or any other unavoidable accidents preventing the loading . . .; in which case owners to have the option of employing the steamer in some short voyage trade until receipt of written notice from charterers that they are ready to resume employment without delay to the ship.)" The ship arrived at the East Bute Dock, and loaded part of her cargo. A frost then set in, and made a canal which communicated with the dock impassable, so that the remainder of the cargo which was ready at a wharf on the canal could not for several days be brought in lighters to the dock. The cargo could not have been brought into the dock by carting or otherwise at any reasonable expense. The dock itself was not frozen over, and if the cargo had been in the dock the loading might have proceeded:—Held, that the frost did not prevent the "loading" within the meaning of the exception. Allerton Sailing Ship Co. v. Falk, ante, col. 278, distinguished. Grant v. Coverdale, 53 L. J., Q. B. 462; 9 App. Cas. 470; 51 L. T. 472; 32 W. R. 831; 5 Asp. M. C. 353—H. L. (E.)

No Implied Exemption for Bad Weather.]—By a charterparty for a voyage with a cargo of timber from Pensacola to a safe port in the United Kingdom, "sixteen working days were to be allowed the merchants for loading the ship at Pensacola, and to be discharged at such wharf or dock as the charterers may direct, always afloat, in fourteen like days, and ten days on demurrage over and above the laying days at 10*l.* per day." The ship was ordered to Middlesborough, and arrived at the usual place of discharge in the river and began unloading. It was the duty of the master to put the timber over the ship's side, and form it into rafts, and the charterer was to send tugs and take the rafts away. During the unloading bad weather came on, and though the ship did not leave her anchorage, the rafts could not be formed, and the charterer therefore could not do his part in taking the timber away. The bad weather caused a delay of four days in discharging the ship. An action having been brought by the shipowner against the charterer for the four days' demurrage:—Held, that, where a given number of days is allowed to the charterer for unloading, a contract is implied on his part that, from the time when the ship is at the usual place of discharge, he will take the risk of any ordinary vicissitudes which may occur to prevent his releasing the ship at the expiration of the lay days; and the charterer, therefore, was liable for the four days' demurrage. Tiis, or Thiis, v. Byers, 45 L. J., Q. B. 511; 1 Q. B. D. 244; 34 L. T. 526; 24 W. R. 611; 3 Asp. M. C. 147. And see Budgett v. Binnington, infra, col. 482.

—— Customary Manner of Loading—Ice.]—By the terms of the charterparty the ship was to proceed to Cardiff, East Bute Dock, and there load in the customary manner from the agents of the freighters a cargo of rail iron; the cargo to be loaded as fast as steamer could take on board and stow within the customary working hours of the port, commencing when the steamer was in berth and ready to load; and if longer detained merchants to pay 30*l.* per day demurrage. "Detention by frost, floods, &c., not to be reckoned as lay days." The shipowner, when the charterparty was made, did not know who were the freighter's agents at Cardiff. There were about six shippers of rail iron there, all of them (with the exception of the freighters' agents) having wharves in the West or East Bute Dock. The agents' wharf was at a distance from the docks upon a canal communicating with the West Bute Dock, and their rail iron was loaded on ships berthed in the East Bute Dock by means of lighters passing down this canal through the West Bute Dock, and from thence down a smaller canal connecting the two docks. The other shippers loaded in the East Bute Dock, either from the quay or by lighters coming alongside the ship from the wharves in the East Bute Dock, or by lighters from West Bute Dock, passing down the connecting canal. The ship, on arrival, was berthed in the East Bute Dock, and the loading was commenced, but shortly afterwards was stopped for sixteen days by frost, which covered the canal from the agents' wharf to the West Bute Dock with ice and prevented the passage of the lighters, though the water in the docks was not frozen:—Held that the exception in the charterparty with respect to detention by frost did not apply to relieve the freighters from liability to demurrage. Kay v. Field, 52 L. J., Q. B. 17; 10 Q. B. D. 241; 47 L. T. 423; 31 W. R. 332; 4 Asp. M. C. 558—C. A.

Snowstorm "Accident."]—A charterer agreed to load a ship with coal, in regular and customary turn, "except in cases of riots, strikes, or any other accidents beyond his control" which might prevent or delay her loading. To an action for breach of the above covenant in the charterparty, he pleaded that he was prevented loading the vessel by a snowstorm, which rendered it impossible to bring the cargo to the agreed place of shipment:—Held, that a snowstorm was not an "accident" within the meaning of the exception, and that the plea was bad. Fenwick v. Schmalz, 37 L. J., C. P. 78; L. R. 3 C. P. 313; 18 L. T. 27; 16 W. R. 481.

Ice—Delay after Sailing.]—See Herring v. Ward, supra, col. 476.

Surf Preventing Loading—Custom—Working Days—Power of Master.]—In an outward and homeward charterparty, a certain number of days were allowed for discharging the outward and loading the homeward cargo. In an action for demurrage:—Held, that days on which the loading and discharging could not be carried on at the foreign port because of the surf were working days. Holman v. Peruvian Nitrate Co., 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 657.

Held, also, that it was within the master's power to grant the charterers additional lay days in consideration of their giving up an option to load at certain by-ports; but that he had no power to give a discharge of any demurrage money payable to the shipowners except on payment. Ib.

b. Not Producing Bill of Lading.

Although as a general rule the master has no right to detain the cargo until the bill of lading is produced, yet if the holder of the bill of lading does not claim the cargo in a reasonable time after notice of the arrival of the vessel, and the charterer offers to unload on behalf of whom it may concern, and to pay the freight, and the captain refuses, the shipowner cannot claim demurrage from the charterers if the cargo might have been unshipped within the laying days. Erichsen v. Barkworth, 3 H. & N. 601; 27 L. J., Ex. 472.

Merchants at Hull chartered a ship to sail to Bactouche, and there load a cargo of timber, and proceed to Gloucester and deliver the same on being paid freight; thirty-five running days to be allowed for loading and discharging the cargo, and ten days on demurrage above the laying days at 5*l.* per day. The ship arrived at Bactouche, and the loading was completed at the expiration of twenty-seven of the running days. The master signed bills of lading by which the cargo was deliverable "unto order or to assigns, he or they paying freight for the goods as per charterparty." The charterers, to whom the cargo was sold, refused to accept the bill or receive the cargo, on the ground that the shipment was not according to the contract. They offered to land the cargo and take care of it for whom it might concern. The shipper's agent gave notice to the master not to part with the cargo without production of the bill of lading. The vessel was ready to discharge her cargo, according to the charterparty, on the 5th September. The lay days expired on the 13th September. The vessel might have been discharged in five days. The bill of lading was not produced to the master until the 22nd September, and the delivery was completed on the 30th:—Held, that the charterers were liable for demurrage and detention of the vessel. S. C., on appeal, 3 H. & N. 894: 28 L. J., Ex. 95; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 517; 7 W. R. 97—Ex. Ch.

c. Strikes.

Strike Clause—Customary Mode of Discharge—Lighters.]—The plaintiffs' ship was chartered to carry a cargo of timber to Sharpness and there deliver the same under a charterparty which provided that the cargo should be discharged "with the customary steamer despatch of the port, any time lost by reason of strikes, lock-outs, or combinations of workmen, whether partial or general, not to count as part of the discharging time," and that if, through any default of the merchants or charterers, who were to observe the usual custom of the wood trade, the vessel be longer detained, demurrage to be paid at the agreed rate. The vessel arrived at Sharpness when there was a strike amongst the labourers in the shipping trade, and owing to the continuance of such strike all the timber lighters which would otherwise have been available to take on board the cargo were still laden with previous consignments on board them, so that nothing could have been done to discharge the plaintiffs' ship until the strike had come to an end. The customary mode was by lighters. After the strike had come to an end the discharge of the plaintiffs' ship duly commenced, and was completed with all reasonable despatch:—Held, that the strike clause exempted the charterers from liability. The Alne Holme, 62 L. J., Adm. 51; [1893] P. 173; 1 R. 607; 68 L. T. 862; 41 W. R. 572; 7 Asp. M. C. 344.

Cargo "to be discharged with all despatch as customary"—Custom to employ Dock Company to discharge.]—By a charterparty the plaintiffs' ship was to proceed to a port named with a cargo, and there "be discharged with all despatch as customary, and ten days on demurrage over and above said lying days at 6*d.* per net register ton per day." The discharge of the cargo was delayed for four days owing to a strike of dock labourers employed by a dock company, who, by the custom of the port, did the work of discharge both for the shipowners and the charterers:—Held, that the charterers were not liable for the delay, the words "to be discharged with all despatch as customary" meaning that the cargo was to be discharged with all reasonable despatch, having regard to the actual circumstances and manner of discharging cargo customary at the port of discharge, and that no definite time was fixed by the charterparty within which the cargo was to be discharged. Castlegate Steamship Co. v. Dempsey, 61 L. J., Q. B. 620; [1892] 1 Q. B. 854; 66 L. T. 742; 40 W. R. 533; 7 Asp. M. C. 186—C. A.

"Strike" — "Hands striking work."]—The term "strike" in a charterparty must be used in the ordinary sense of strike against employers. The abandonment of their work by miners through dread of cholera does not bring the charter of a ship within the exception in a charterparty against "hands striking work" so as to relieve him from payment of demurrage. Stephens v. Harris, 56 L. J., Q. B. 516; 57 L. T. 618; 6 Asp. M. C. 192. Affirmed on other grounds, 57 L. J., Q. B. 203—C. A., supra, col. 477.

Strike at Colliery.]—See Granite City Steamship Co. v. Ireland, infra, col. 490.

Delay in Unloading by Reason of Strike—"Reasonable Time."]—Where the terms of a bill of lading contain no stipulation as to the time within which the consignee is to discharge the ship's cargo, the obligation on him is to discharge within a reasonable time under the circumstances existing at the time of unloading. Should the existing circumstances be extraordinary, owing to a strike preventing the obtaining of necessary labour, the consignee (provided the delay was not due to any act or default on his part) under such a bill of lading is not liable to the shipowner for damages for detention of the ship. Hick v. Raymond, 62 L. J., Q. B. 98; [1893] A. C. 22; 1 R. 125; 68 L. T. 175; 41 W. R. 384; 7 Asp. M. C. 233—H. L. (E.)

Delay occasioned by a Strike — Shipowner unable to perform Ship's part of Unloading.]—A cargo was shipped under a bill of lading incorporating a clause in a charterparty which fixed the number of lay days for unloading and allowed other days for demurrage. Neither the bill of lading nor the charterparty contained any exception of strikes. By the custom of the port of discharge cargoes were unloaded by the joint act of the shipowner and the consignees. During the lay days a strike took place, both among the labourers employed on behalf of the ship and those employed by the consignees, with the result that the unloading ceased, and could not be resumed till some days after the expiration of the lay days:—Held, that as the number of lay days allowed for the discharge was fixed, the consignees were liable to pay demurrage, notwithstanding the inability of the shipowners owing to the strike to do their part in the unloading. Tiis or Thiis v. Byers (supra, col. 478) considered. Budgett v. Binnington, 60 L. J., Q. B. 1; [1891] 1 Q. B. 35; 39 W. R. 131; 6 Asp. M. C. 592—C. A.

Port of Discharge at Option of Charterers—Strike at Place named.]—Where a charterparty provides that the ship shall proceed to one of certain named places as ordered, and there deliver the cargo to the order of the charterers, the charterers being exempted from liability for delay caused by strikes; the charterers having named the place of discharge are not bound to alter their orders on obtaining knowledge of a strike at the place named that will interfere with the unloading, in cases where they could have stopped the ship proceeding to the named place. The charterers in such a case are, therefore, not liable for demurrage. Bulman v. Fenwick, 63 L. J., Q. B. 123; [1894] 1 Q. B. 179; 9 R. 227; 69 L. T. 651; 42 W. R. 326; 7 Asp. M. C. 388—C. A.

Demurrage not running during Strike.]—Lilly v. Stevenson, infra, col. 489.

Loaded as Customary — Exception of Hindrances beyond Charterers' Control.]—A charterparty provided that the ship (a sailing ship), should at Sydney load coals to be brought alongside at merchants' risk; the coals to be loaded as customary at Sydney with an exception of charterers' liability in case of strikes "or any other hindrances of what nature soever beyond the charterers' or their agents' control." There was a strike at another colliery which threw a pressure of work on the loading colliery and the ship was delayed:—Held, that the delay was not due to a "hindrance," and that the charterers were liable for demurrage. The Lismore, Gardiner v. Macfarlane, 20 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 414.

"Strikes, Lock-outs, Accidents to Railway"—Discharge of Workmen because of Accident to Roadway.]—See Richardsons and Samuel & Co., In re, infra, col. 490.

"Strikes and Lock-outs of Pitmen."]—The defendants chartered the plaintiff's ship to proceed to Ardrossan, the charterparty providing that the ship should there load "in the customary manner, say in twelve colliery working days," a cargo of coals, "to be loaded according to the custom of the port," "strikes and lock-outs of pitmen and others" being excepted perils. The following written clause was added: "It is understood that the vessel is to be loaded at once, and lay days to count when vessel ready and notice given." The ship arrived at Ardrossan, and gave notice that she was ready to load; but before twelve working days had elapsed a strike broke out at the pit, in consequence of which the ship did not load the cargo of coal till twenty-three ordinary working days had elapsed. By the charterparty demurrage was to be paid at the rate of 4*d.* per registered ton per day. The plaintiff claimed for fifteen days' demurrage:—Held, that the written clause only fixed the time when the lay days began, and that the delay was caused by an excepted peril. Peterson v. Dunn, 43 W. R. 349.

d. Other Causes.

No Time Mentioned—Unavoidable Delay.]—When a charterparty is silent as to the time within which the cargo is to be unloaded at the port of destination, the law implies that the merchant and the shipowner shall each use reasonable despatch in performing his part of the contract; and where the landing of the cargo by the merchant is rendered impossible by a cause over which he has no control, he is not liable to pay damages for the delay. Ford v. Cotesworth, 10 B. & S. 291; 39 L. J., Q. B. 188; L. R. 5 Q. B. 544; 23 L. T. 165; 18 W. R. 1169—Ex. Ch.

—— Refusal of Authorities to allow Unloading.]—A ship sailing under a charterparty, which was silent as to the number of days to be allowed for unloading, arrived at a foreign port, and was detained beyond the usual time, owing to the refusal of the authorities to allow the cargo to be landed:—Held, that the merchant was not liable to pay damages for the delay, as he had not contracted that there should be none, and it had happened without fault on his part. Ib.

Contract not made with Intention to Violate Law.]—By a charterparty made by the charterer's agent in France, a ship was chartered, and it was stipulated that the ship should load a cargo of pressed hay at Trouville, in France, and proceed direct to London; and all cargo was to be brought and taken from ship alongside. The agent verbally told the master that the consignees would require the hay to be delivered at a particular wharf in the port of London, to which the master assented. On arriving in that port the master was unable to land the hay at the wharf by reason of an order in council under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1869, forbidding hay from a French port to be landed in the United Kingdom. The order had been made before the charterparty was entered into, but neither party knew of it. After some delay the charterer received the hay from alongside the ship into another vessel, and exported it. There was no legal obstacle to doing this, but eighteen days were allowed by the charterer to elapse beyond the lay days. The shipowner having brought an action for this detention of his ship, the charterer contended that the contract was for an illegal purpose, and therefore void:—Held, that although it was the intention of the parties when the charterparty was entered into, to land the hay at London, yet as the contract was not made knowingly with the intention to violate the law, and as it could be carried out (as it ultimately was) without violating the law, it was not void and the charterer was, therefore, liable for the demurrage. Waugh v. Morris, 42 L. J., Q. B. 57; L. R. 8 Q. B. 202; 28 L. T. 265; 21 W. R. 438; 1 Asp. M. C. 573.

Petroleum — Port Regulations — Cargo not allowed to be Landed.]—A ship with a general cargo sailed from London for Havre with some petroleum on board. Under the bill of lading the shipowner was to deliver the petroleum at Havre, and it was to be taken out by the defendant within twenty-four hours after arriving at Havre, or ten guineas a day was to be paid for demurrage. On the ship's arriving at Havre, the authorities of the port made the captain take her away in consequence of the petroleum being on board. Thereupon he went to neighbouring ports, but was not allowed to stay. Returning to Havre, he discharging his general cargo, and no bill of lading having been presented to him and no application having been made to him for the delivery of the petroleum, he brought it back to London:—Held, that the shipowner was entitled to freight, back freight and expenses. The demurrage and the expenses incurred in the ineffectual attempt to land at the neighbouring ports were not allowed, but were looked on as part of the expenses of the voyage. Argos (Cargo ex), Gaudet v. Brown, L. R. 5 P. C. 134; 28 L. T. 745; 21 W. R. 707; 2 Asp. M. C. 6—P. C.

Exportation not Permitted.]—Where there was a contract to fetch corn, and demurrage allowed, and upon the ship's arrival it was found that the government had prohibited the exportation of corn, which fact the captain knew before he entered the port, but still did so, and having stayed his demurrage days, returned in ballast:—Held, that no demurrage was payable. Blight v. Page, 3 Bos. & P. 295, n.; 6 R. R. 795.

Unlawful Seizure.]—It is no defence to an action for demurrage, that the delay in unloading the ship arose from the act of custom house officers in unlawfully seizing a part of the cargo. Bessey v. Evans, 4 Camp. 131.

Wrongful Detention by Owner.]—The plaintiffs, owners of a ship, agreed by charterparty, that the ship should have eighty-five running days for loading and unloading her cargo; and that the freighter might keep her on demurrage, for fourteen additional running days, at a stipulated rate per diem. The ship arrived in port, with five running days due to her. On her arrival, and subsequently on another occasion, the plaintiffs refused to permit her to be unloaded. Afterwards, but not till after the expiration of the running days, she was permitted to unload, but the cargo was not discharged until after the expiration of fourteen days beyond the running days. In an action against the freighter on the charterparty, the declaration charged a detention on demurrage for fourteen days, and a general detention beyond. Plea, that he did not keep or detain the ship, and that at the time she was unloading, the plaintiffs wrongfully stopped the unloading, and prevented the defendant from unloading. The jury found, that the plaintiffs' refusal was wrongful:—Held, that the plea, denying the detention of the ship, was sufficiently made out by the finding of the jury, and that the plaintiffs could not, under this declaration of the charterparty, recover for the use of the ship during so much of the actual unloading as exceeded five days. Benson v. Blunt, 1 G. & D. 449; 1 Q. B. 870; 10 L. J., Q. B. 333.

But held, that the last plea was bad, as such an interference by the plaintiffs, to prevent an unloading, as was stated in the general terms of the allegations of that plea, would not put an end to the obligation of the charterparty. Ib.

Insufficient Supply of Cargo.]—A charterparty provided that the ship should proceed to a port, and there load from the factors of the charterers a cargo of "coal, taking her turn with other steamers," and receive "prompt despatch in loading." The charterers employed the persons at the port of loading, who were employed to load other ships, and the ship was loaded in her turn, but, by reason of an insufficient supply of coal, the ship was delayed:—Held, that the charterers were responsible for the delay. Elliott v. Lord, 52 L. J., P. C. 23; 48 L. T. 542; 5 Asp. M. C. 63—P. C.

Procuring Necessary Papers.]—The consignee of a particular parcel of goods by a general ship is liable to the owner for not taking them from the ship in a reasonable time, although the delay arose from the necessity for an order from the treasury to land these goods, which the consignee used the utmost diligence to obtain. Hill v. Idle, 4 Camp. 327; 16 R. R. 797.

It is no defence to an action by the owner of a ship for demurrage, that the owner has omitted to procure the necessary papers for the discharge of the cargo, if he omitted to do so at the request of the defendant. Furnell v. Thomas, 5 Bing. 188; 30 R. R. 568. S. C., nom. Palmer v. Thomas, 7 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 73; 2 M. & P. 296. And see Barret v. Dutton, 4 Camp. 333; 16 R. R. 798, supra, col. 476.

Exception of "Political Disturbances"—Delay caused during Transit to Quay—Customary Mode of Loading.]—When a ship is chartered to load at a particular port, the charterparty is to be taken to have reference to the customary mode of loading at that port; and where, by the custom of the port, the mode of loading minerals is by bringing them from the mines by rail direct to the ship's side, as the bringing of the cargo from the mines is part of the loading, any exception in the charterparty to the charterer's liability for demurrage will commence to be applicable as soon as the cargo has left the mines. Hudson v. Ede (supra, col. 477) followed. Smith v. Rosario Nitrate Co., [1894] 1 Q. B. 174; 9 R. 776; 70 L. T. 68; 7 Asp. M. C. 417—C. A.

Default of Stevedore—"Stevedore to be appointed by Charterers, but employed and paid by Shipowners"—Damaged Cargo.]—A charterparty provided that the plaintiff's ship should load at Leith and London, and proceed to certain ports and there deliver, the "stevedore to be appointed by the charterers in London only, but employed and paid by the shipowners," the cargo to be taken to and from alongside the ship at merchants' risk and expense, but to be taken on board by the shipowners, ten clear working days to be allowed the charterers for loading, and all working days on demurrage over the lay days in port of loading to be paid for at the rate of 20*l.* per working day. Certain cargo was loaded at Leith. In consequence of bad weather on the voyage to London part of the cargo was damaged, and at London part had to be landed and requisitioned, and part had to be shifted in order to stow the London cargo properly. In consequence the loading was not completed within the stipulated time. In an action by the shipowners to recover demurrage:—Held, that the charterers were not liable for the delay, as it arose from the operation of stowing the cargo, which it was the duty of the shipowners to do, and from the default of the stevedore who, under the provisions of the charterparty, was the servant of the shipowners. Harris v. Best-Ryley, 4 R. 222; 68 L. T. 76; 7 Asp. M. C. 272—C. A.

Position of Goods in Ship.]—A charterparty entered into between the plaintiffs and B. & Co., for the conveyance of grain from C. to L., stipulated that fourteen working days were to be allowed for loading and unloading at the port of discharge, and ten days on demurrage at 35*l.* a day. The vessel having been loaded, one of the bills of lading was indorsed to the defendants. The defendants' grain was stowed at the bottom of the mainhold, and that of the other shippers on the top of it. The bill of lading, indorsed to the defendants, contained the words "paying freight for the same goods and all other conditions as per charterparty." Owing to the consignees, whose grain was placed on the top of the defendants', having failed to take away their goods within the lay days, the defendants were unable to obtain delivery of their grain, and three days' demurrage was incurred:—Held, that the defendants were liable for the demurrage, although they were prevented from getting their goods by the delay of other consignees. Porteus v. Watney, 47 L. J., Q. B. 643; 3 Q. B. D. 534; 39 L. T. 195; 27 W. R. 30; 4 Asp. M. C. 34—C. A.

The defendant was indorsee of one of eight bills of lading covering a cargo of wheat, in each of which the following clause occurred: "Three working days to discharge the whole cargo or 30*l.* sterling per day demurrage." The portion of the cargo consigned to the defendant was loaded in the bottom of the ship, and owing to delay in unloading on the part of the other consignees, and from no default of the defendant, who was ready and willing to receive his portion, as was the master to discharge it, as soon as it could be reached, two days' demurrage was incurred:—Held, that the defendant was liable for demurrage, for that by the stipulation in the bill of lading he contracted to run the risk of incurring demurrage through the default of his fellow-consignees. Straker v. Kidd, 47 L. J., Q. B. 365; 3 Q. B. D. 223; 26 W. R. 511; 4 Asp. M. C. 34, n.

If A. has goods consigned to him, and there is on board the same ship goods consigned to other consignees, and those goods are so placed on board that A. after the ship arrives, cannot obtain his goods within the time limited by the bill of lading, he is not liable for demurrage. Dobson v. Droop, 4 Car. & P. 112; M. & M. 441.

If a freighter is to discharge within twelve running days after the vessel's arrival, and he is prevented from discharging at first by reason of other goods being placed above his, he must, when that obstruction is removed, discharge with all reasonable diligence; and he is not, as matter of right, entitled to the whole original number of days from the time when he is able to commence discharging. Rogers v. Hunter, 2 Car. & P. 601.

A general ship took brandies on board under bills of lading, which allowed twenty lay days for delivery of the goods in London, and stipulated for 4*l.* per day demurrage; afterwards, certain of the consignees choosing to have their goods bonded, the vessel could not make her delivery at the London docks until forty-six days after the twenty days; and some of the goods which were undermost could not, though demanded, be taken out till the upper tiers were cleared:—Held, that each of these consignees was liable to pay the 4*l.* per day for the forty-six days. Leer v. Yates, 3 Taunt. 387; 12 R. R. 671.

A general ship took some silk on board to carry from Rotterdam to London on the defendant's account. On the margin of the bill of lading was written, "The consignee to clear the goods in fourteen running days after her arrival in port or to pay 4*l.* per diem for demurrage." The vessel was ready to deliver on the 3rd of October. The defendant applied for and was ready to receive his goods within the running days ; but being undermost in the vessel delivery could not be made until the 22nd :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the demurrage, though he did not deliver the goods within the time allowed, being prevented by other goods, belonging to other consignees, which overlaid them. Harman v. Gandolph, Holt, 35 ; 17 R. R. 598.

Refusal of Master to take Goods on Board.]—Demurrage clause held not applicable in case of delay caused by the master refusing to take on board goods which he erroneously thought he was not bound to take. Seeger v. Duthie, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 45.

State of Tides.]—By charterparty B. and L. agreed that B.'s ship "Bebec" should proceed to Llanelly and take on board a cargo of culm, and, being so loaded, should "therewith proceed with all convenient speed to Cole's Wharf, Rochester, or as near thereto as she might safely get, and deliver the same on being paid freight. The regular turn to be allowed for loading, and fifty tons per working day, if required, for delivery at Rochester, and demurrage over and above the said days at the rate of 4*l.* per day." The ship arrived with her cargo at Rochester on the 24th October and was moored at the Buoys, about 500 yards from and opposite to Cole's Wharf. On the 25th October the master gave L.'s agent notice that the vessel was ready to discharge her cargo, and he desired the master to come alongside Cole's Wharf. At that time there was not sufficient water for the vessel to come alongside the wharf, and the agent refused to send lighters to receive part of the cargo so as to lighten the vessel and enable her to come alongside the wharf. The state of the tide did not allow the vessel to be removed to Cole's Wharf until the 4th November, and on the following day she commenced discharging her cargo :—Held, that the master was bound to take the vessel alongside Cole's Wharf, unless prevented by some impediment which endangered her safety ; and as the inability to bring the vessel alongside the wharf was occasioned by the ordinary course of navigation, the lay days did not commence until the vessel had arrived there. Bastifell v. Lloyd, 1 H. & C. 388 ; 31 L. J., Ex. 413 ; 10 W. R. 721.

—— Discharge of Cargo.]—By the terms of a charterparty a steam vessel was to proceed to H., to be there ready to load by a given day, or so near thereunto as she might safely get, and there load from the factors of the merchant such quantity of oxen, sheep and (or) other lawful produce which the merchant might find it convenient to ship, not exceeding what she could reasonably stow and carry over and above her tackle, &c., and being so loaded was to proceed therewith to London and deliver the same on being paid freight a lump sum of 450*l.* Two working days were allowed for loading and discharging and three days on demurrage. The cargo to be taken to and from alongside at the merchant's risk and expense. Arrived at H., the vessel went alongside the jetty and received on board a number of barrels of hams and 300 head of live stock, for which the captain signed bills of lading. Being thus laden, the vessel was found to draw too much water to get over the bar, and the captain was consequently obliged to take out all the stock. He then proposed to the charterer's agent to stow on board so many of the cattle as would enable him to pass over the bar, and to remain outside and there take in the remainder at the charterer's expense and risk. The agent declined to accede to this, and refused to put any of the cattle again on board unless the captain would take all. Being unable to come to terms the captain proceeded on his voyage with only the hams on board :—Held, that the owners were not entitled either to the stipulated freight or to damages for the refusal to ship the cargo ; for that although the captain was not obliged to go within the bar at all, yet, having chosen to do so, and having received the cargo on board and signed bills of lading, he was bound to find his way to his destination. General Steam Navigation Co. v. Slipper, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 493 ; 31 L. J., C. P. 185 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 821 ; 5 L. T. 641 ; 10 W. R. 316.

Whether a partial putting out of the cargo is a part discharge or a mere lightening is to be determined in each case by the jury, having regard to the terms of the contract and the usage of the port. McIntosh v. Sinclair, Ir. R. 11 C. L. 456.

Neglect of Consignee to pay Harbour Dues.]—Demurrage cannot be claimed for detention of a ship for harbour dues payable by the consignee, the master having delayed to pay them ; his duty being to pay them without delay and recover from the consignee. Moller v. Jecks, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 332.

Quarantine.]—See The Austen Friars, col. 265 ; Whites v. Steamship Winchester Co., col. 265.

Dispute between Brokers as to Right to collect Freight.]—A dispute arose between the shipowner's broker abroad and the charterer's broker as to who was entitled to collect freight. The former, contrary to the provisions of the charterparty, insisted upon his claim and put a stop upon the cargo ; whereby the charterer became liable to the cargo owner for demurrage :—Held, that the charterer was entitled to recover damages in respect of the demurrage against the shipowner. Bradley v. Goddard, cited Maclachlan on Shipping, 4th ed., p. 197.

Nonpayment of Freight—Refusal to deliver Goods.]—By charterparty, the plaintiff, a shipowner, agreed with the freighter to deliver cargo on payment of freight as by bills of lading ; certain lay days were allowed and demurrage afterwards at a given rate. The bills of lading provided for delivery to the freighter or his assigns on payment of freight as by charterparty. Defendant, an assignee of the bill of lading, sent his lighters for the goods and received part. Plaintiff demanded payment of freight for the part delivered, and defendant refused it. Plaintiff refused to deliver more cargo and the running days expired. Soon after the plaintiff delivered the rest of the cargo and was paid freight :—Held, that the defendant was not liable for demurrage, or for not receiving the goods within a reasonable time by reason of his nonpayment of freight demanded. Moeller v. Young, 5 El. & Bl. 755 ; 25 L. J., Q. B. 94 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 393—Ex. Ch.

Convoy Recalled—Ship brought back to Port of Sailing—Demurrage.]—See Liddard v. Lopes, 10 East, 526; 10 R. R. 368; ante, col. 378.

Ship unable to find Berth—Obligation to Discharge within Time stipulated.]—The discharge of cargo occupied more than the lay days. The crew worked properly, but could not without assistance discharge within the stipulated time. In an action for demurrage:—Held, that the consignees were liable for two days' delay in finding a quay berth, and that they were not liable for subsequent delay, the master being bound to give delivery in the time stipulated. Hansen v. Donaldson, 1 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1066.

Cargo not Ready—Strike.]—By charterparty a ship was to go to a port as ordered and load coals at a berth to be pointed out by charterers' agents, with a stipulation as to demurrage, "unless detention arises from a strike . . . at any works, mine or mines . . . or any cause beyond merchants' control . . ." On November 14th notice was given by the master that the ship was ready to load; but owing to a dispute between the charterers and the colliery owners no cargo was ready for her, and in consequence she was refused a berth. On November 22nd she got a berth; on November 23rd a strike began, and no coals were loaded until it ended on December 11th. On December 23rd the loading was completed. In an action for demurrage:—Held, that it began to run on November 16th at six p.m., when the lay days expired; but that it ceased to run during the strike. Lilly v. Stevenson, 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 278.

Stopping Discharge to get Security for Freight.]—Freight was by charterparty payable partly on arrival and partly on "unloading and right delivery of the cargo," and the shipowners were to have a lien for all freight, dead freight and demurrage. Whilst delivering the cargo at Glasgow, the master suspended delivery for two days until the consignee should find security for the freight. In an action for demurrage:—Held, that the shipowners could not recover, because they might have delivered the cargo and retained their lien. Thorsen v. McDowall, 19 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 743.

Delay through want of Trucks.]—By charterparty the cargo was to be discharged "as fast as the steamer can deliver after being berthed as customary." Delay was caused in discharging through the railway company not providing sufficient trucks to carry off the cargo of pig iron, none being allowed to be landed on the quay:—Held, that the consignees were not liable for demurrage. Wyllie v. Harrison, 13 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 92.

Want of Trucks—Exception of "Detention by Railways."]—A charterparty provided for delivery of the coal cargo into trucks, and excepted liability for "detention by railways." There was delay in unloading caused by the railway not supplying trucks in consequence of the charterers detaining too many trucks unloaded:—Held, that demurrage was not payable. Letricheux v. Dunlop, 19 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 209.

—— Strike—Failure to Discharge on Quay.]—By charterparty the ship was to deliver her coal cargo "alongside any safe wharves, crafts or depots," to be taken from alongside at merchants' risk and expense "according to the usual custom at loading and discharging ports." A certain time was allowed for discharge, after which demurrage was to be paid, "except in case of strikes . . . detention by railway, or cranes . . . or any other cause beyond the control of the charterers which may impede the ordinary lading and discharging of the vessel." On arrival, railway trucks could not be supplied because of a strike of the railway men. There was no rule of the port requiring the coal to be discharged into trucks, or forbidding discharge on the quay:—Held, that the charterers were liable for demurrage. Granite City Steamship Co. v. Ireland, 19 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 124.

—— Delivery on Quay.]—Delay in taking delivery, caused by the railway company not providing trucks, causes the consignee to be liable for demurrage; and not the less so because the ship is berthed in a place where by the rules of the port her cargo may not be discharged on the quay. Krunse v. Drynan, 18 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1110. Distinguishing Wyllie v. Harrison, 13 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 92.

Towage Contract.]—Tug owners agreed to tow a ship from one port to another, demurrage payable to them at 10*l.* per day unless detained by stress of weather—"no extra charge to be made in case of accident, unless for detention arising therefrom, to be paid for as per rate mentioned above." The tow-rope parted in a gale, and the tug and tow put into a port of refuge, where they were detained seven days by weather. No fault was proved on either side:—Held, that demurrage for seven days was payable. New Steam Tug Co. v. McClew, 7 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 733.

"Strikes, Lock-outs, Accidents to Railway"—"Other Causes beyond Charterers' Control"—Discharge of Workmen in consequence of Accident to Railway.]—By charterparty it was agreed that the ship should load from charterers' agents a cargo of petroleum in cases, lay days for loading to commence twenty-four hours after the receipt by the charterers' agents of written notice of steamer's readiness in berth to receive, strikes, lock-outs, accidents to railway . . . or other causes beyond charterers' control, excepted. The railway which brought the oil in tanks to the port of loading being partially destroyed by floods, the charterers' agents dismissed the men employed at their factory in packing the oil in cases. On the re-opening of the railway, sufficient supplies of oil were received at the factory, but owing to the absence of men the production of filled cases was delayed. The charterers' agents also, in accordance with the practice of shippers at the port, deferred the loading of the ship until they had loaded other ships which had arrived previously, and been delayed in loading by the same causes. The lay days having been exceeded:—Held, that the lay days commenced to run as soon as sufficient oil had arrived to enable the work of filling cases to be resumed; that the failure to load the ship within the lay days was not owing to "strikes, lock-outs, accidents to railway . . . or other causes beyond the charterers' control," within the meaning of the charterparty; and that the shipowners were entitled to damages for detention. Richardsons and Samuel & Co., In re, 66 L. J., Q. B. 868; 77 L. T. 479—C. A.

Delay caused partly by Consignees of other Cargo — Lien for Demurrage and Freight.]—A charterparty provided that the shipowners should have an absolute lien for the cargo for all freight, dead freight and demurrage; there being no stipulation for demurrage at the port of discharge. After a partial cargo of guano had been loaded for the charterer, the bills of lading for which, in favour of consignees, referred to the charterparty, the master with the charterers' concurrence shipped other goods for a third party. At the port of discharge no one claimed these goods, which were not worth their freight, and on this account and also partly by the fault of the consignees of the guano, delay was incurred at the port of discharge:—Held, that the guano was subject to a lien for the whole freight, but not for unliquidated damages in respect of the detention of the ship; and that the consignees were liable for the detention only so far as it was by their fault. Lamb v. Kaselack, 9 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 482.

7. Rate of Payment.

Stipulated Sum—Deductions.]—If a ship is detained beyond the days of demurrage allowed by the charterparty, the stipulated demurrage is primâ facie the measure of compensation for the further time, but it is competent to the owner or the freighter to shew that this would be more or less than a fair compensation for the detention. Moorsom v. Bell, 2 Camp. 616; 12 R. R. 755.

In fixing the amount of demurrage to be paid for detention of a vessel during repairs, a deduction must be made from the gross freight of so much as would in ordinary cases be disbursed on account of the ship's expenses in the earning of the freight. The Gazelle, 2 W. Rob. 279.

8. Lien for.

What Delays.]—By a charterparty cargo was to be loaded in thirteen working days, and to be discharged at not less than thirty tons per working day. Ten days' demurrage to be allowed above the said days. The charterer's liability to cease when ship is loaded, the captain or owner having a lien on cargo for freight and demurrage:—Held, that the charterer upon loading the cargo was discharged from liability for demurrage incurred at the port of loading. Kish v. Cory, 44 L. J., Q. B. 205; L. R. 10 Q. B. 553; 32 L. T. 670; 23 W. R. 880; 2 Asp. M. C. 593—Ex. Ch.

By a charterparty it was agreed that the ship should go to a certain port and there load from the charterer a cargo "in the customary manner," and proceed therewith to another port and deliver the same. . . . "The cargo to be discharged in ten working days, commencing from the day after the ship has got into her proper discharging berth. Demurrage at 2*l.* per 100 tons register per day. . . . The ship to have an absolute lien on cargo for freight and demurrage, the charterer's liability to any clauses in the charter ceasing when he has delivered the cargo alongside ship":—Held, that the demurrage and the lien and exemption clauses did not apply to damages by undue detention of the vessel at the port of loading. Lockhart v. Falk, 44 L. J., Ex. 105; L. R. 10 Ex. 132; 33 L. T. 96; 23 W. R. 753; 3 Asp. M. C. 8.

The shipowner has a lien for demurrage proper where the lien is given by the charterparty and incorporated in the bill of lading, but not for damages in the nature of demurrage. Gray v. Carr, 40 L. J., Q. B., 257; L. R. 6 Q. B. 522; 25 L. T. 215; 19 W. R. 1173; 1 Asp. M. C. 115—Ex. Ch.

Where the charterparty gave the master a lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight and demurrage:—Held, that the clause extended to detention of the vessel in putting stiffening coal on board and that damages for such detention were covered by the owner's lien. Sanguinetti v. Pacific Steam Navigation Co., 46 L. J., Q. B. 105; 2 Q. B. D. 238; 35 L. T. 658; 25 W. R. 150; 3 Asp. M. C. 300—C. A.

Under a charterparty containing this clause: "Charterer's liability to cease when the ship is loaded," the captain having a lien on the cargo for freight and demurrage:—Held, that the lien extended to demurrage at the port of lading. Francesco v. Massey, 42 L. J., Ex. 75; L. R. 8 Ex. 101; 21 W. R. 440.

No Lien in Equity.]—The parties to a charterparty "mutually bound themselves, especially the owners the ship and tackle, and the freighter the goods to be taken on board"—in a penal sum—"to the true and punctual performance of every article therein contained":—Held, the shipowners had no lien in equity (as they had none at law) on the cargo for dead freight or demurrage. Gladstone v. Birley, 2 Mer. 401; 15 R. R. 465. And see S. C., 3 M. & S. 205.

Lien on Goods of A. for Demurrage in respect of Goods of B. — Charterparty and Bill of Lading.]—See Lamb v. Kaselack, ante, col. 491.

9. Practice.

a. Jurisdiction.

Of Admiralty Court.]—The court of admiralty may, by transfer from a county court, acquire jurisdiction in a cause upon a question of demurrage, as to which the court has no original jurisdiction. The Swan, 40 L. J., Adm. 8; L. R. 3 A. & E. 314; 23 L. T. 633; 19 W. R. 424.

Superior Court.]—If in an action in a superior court, on a charterparty, for freight or demurrage, the plaintiff claims and recovers a sum greater than 20*l.* and less than 300*l.* he is entitled to costs; for over such causes 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 51, s. 2, confer no jurisdiction on a county court appointed to have admiralty jurisdiction. Gunnestad v. Price, 44 L. J., Ex. 44; L. R. 10 Ex. 65; 32 L. T. 499; 23 W. R. 470; 2 Asp. M. C. 543. Disapproving of Argos, Cargo ex, infra.

County Court.]—Held, by the privy council, that by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 51, s. 2, the county courts have jurisdiction in cases of claims arising out of charterparties or other agreements for the use or hire of ships, although the court of admiralty may have no jurisdiction in such cases. Argos, Cargo ex, Gaudet v. Brown, 42 L. J., Adm. 1; L. R. 5 P. C. 134; 28 L. T. 77; 21 W. R. 420.

This case followed and Gunnested v. Price (supra) disapproved in The Alina, 49 L. J., Adm. 40; 5 Ex. D. 227; 42 L. T. 517; 29 W. R. 94; 4 Asp. M. C. 256—C. A.

b. Pleading.

A count on a charterparty for demurrage and detention of a ship, and a count for demurrage, ought not to be allowed. Mathewson v. Ray, 16 M. & W. 329; 16 L. J., Ex. 288. S. P., Temperley v. Brown, 1 D. (N.S.) 310; 6 Jur. 150.

Where a charterparty stipulates for seventy-five running days and twenty days on demurrage, if the ship is detained for extra days, the remedy is not by a count for demurrage, but by action on the charterparty. Cropton v. Pickernell, 16 M. & W. 829.

On a count for demurrage generally, the plaintiff cannot recover when the demurrage or detention has arisen ex delicto. Harrison v. Wilson, 2 Esp. 709.

If there is no contract as to demurrage, a shipowner cannot, on a common count for demurrage, recover for the detaining of the ship for an unreasonable time in loading and unloading, but must declare specially. Horn v. Bensusan, 9 Car. & P. 709; 2 M. & Rob. 326.

If a contract of freight and demurrage is entered into by deed, the plaintiff ought to declare upon the deed. Atty v. Parish, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 104.

Right of Master to Sue.]—The master cannot maintain an action in his own name upon an implied promise to pay demurrage. Brouncker v. Scott, 4 Taunt. 1.

Implied Covenant to Pay.]—Where a ship was let to freight by charterparty from the plaintiff to the defendant, a clause—"and it is hereby covenanted and agreed by and between the said parties that forty days shall be allowed for unloading and loading again, &c."—was held to raise an implied covenant by the freighter not to detain the ship beyond the forty days; and if he detain her for longer the owner's remedy is on the covenant and not in assumpsit upon an implied new contract. Randall v. Lynch, 12 East, 179; 2 Camp. 352; 11 R. R. 340, 727.

1. SUFFICIENCY OF CARGO.

a. Meaning of "Cargo."

Equivalent to Shipload.]—In a contract to deliver at a port to be named by the purchaser "a small cargo of about sixty fathoms of lathwood," the word "cargo" means an entire shipload; and therefore the purchaser is not bound to accept sixty fathoms, measured and set apart for him by the seller's agent at the port named, out of a shipload containing eighty-three fathoms of lathwood. Kreuger v. Blanck, 39 L. J., Ex. 160; L. R. 5 Ex. 179; 23 L. T. 128; 18 W. R. 813.

Where a defendant contracted to buy of the plaintiff "a cargo of from 2,500 to 3,000 barrels (seller's option)" petroleum at one shilling and three farthings per gallon weighed 8 lbs. delivered, to be shipped from New York, within a certain time, and the terms of the contract shewed that the defendant was to have complete control over the destination of the vessel:—Held, that "cargo" meant an entire shipload and not a shipment, and that it was a condition precedent that the 2,500 to 3,000 barrels tendered should be the whole cargo of the vessel, although the additional quantity shipped was kept distinct, and the defendant was not, in fact, deprived of the control of the vessel's destination. Borrowman v. Drayton, 46 L. J., Ex. 273; 2 Ex. D. 15; 35 L. T. 727; 25 W. R. 194; 3 Asp. M. C. 303—C. A.

b. Full and Complete Cargo.

What is.]—By a charterparty a ship was described to be of the burden of 261 tons, and the freighter covenanted to load a full and complete cargo:—Held, that the loading of goods equal in number of tons to the tonnage described in the charterparty was not a performance of this covenant; but that the freighter was bound to put on board as much cargo as the ship was capable of carrying with safety. Hunter v. Fry, 2 B. & Ald. 421 ; 21 R. R. 340.

A charterparty provided that the ship should proceed to the port of loading and there load "a full and complete cargo of iron ore, say about 1,100 tons." The charterer provided a cargo of 1,080 tons, the actual capacity of the ship being 1,210 tons :—Held, that the words, "say about 1,100 tons," were not mere words of expectation, but words of contract, and that the charterer's undertaking was not to load the ship up to her actual capacity ; but that 3 per cent. was a fair amount of excess over 1,100 tons, to allow in estimating what was a full and complete cargo of about 1,100 tons, and consequently that the cargo actually provided fell short of the charterer's obligation by fifty-three tons. Morris v. Levison, 45 L. J., C. P. 409 ; 1 C. P. D. 155 ; 34 L. T. 576 ; 24 W. R. 517 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 171.

And see Caffin v. Aldridge, supra, col. 290.

Covenant as to Survey.]—A covenant in a charterparty, "that no claim shall be admitted or allowance made for short tonnage, unless such short tonnage be found and made to appear on her arrival, on a survey by four shipwrights to be indifferently chosen by both parties," is not a condition precedent to the right of recovering for short tonnage ; but is a matter of defence to be taken advantage of. Hotham v. East India Co., 1 Term Rep. 638 ; 1 R. R. 333.

Accident in Course of Loading.]—By a charterparty between the owner and the charterer of a ship, it was agreed that the ship should proceed to P., and there load a full and complete cargo of cotton with a certain amount of sugar as ballast. The ship proceeded to P., and after a portion of the cargo had been loaded, and while another portion was in a lighter lying alongside ready for loading, the ship caught fire accidentally, and the portion of cargo on board was so injured that the master necessarily sold it. He forwarded the portion alongside to its destination by a different ship. After the ship had been repaired, the shipowner tendered it to the charterer's agents and required them to load the residue of the cargo, which they refused to do :—Held, that the charterer was not exonerated by the circumstances from his obligation to complete the loading of a full and complete cargo. Jones v. Holme, 36 L. J., Ex. 192 ; L. R. 2 Ex. 335 ; 16 L. T. 794 ; 16 W. R. 62.

—— Goods Despatched by other Vessels.]—A ship was chartered on the 12th of September, 1861, for the conveyance of a cargo of wheat from Harwich to St. Malo ; ten days to be allowed for loading. The usual course was to load a portion of the cargo at a quay in the river Orwell, and to proceed lower down the river to take in the residue. The vessel having arrived on the 14th of September, and taken in 900 quarters (which were about three-fourths of the whole cargo), was proceeding down the river in charge of a pilot, when she got aground. The master, finding it necessary to take out the cargo in order to examine and repair the ship, gave notice to the charterers' agent, who accordingly, at the request of the master, and at the expense of the charterers, unloaded the 900 quarters, and despatched the whole quantity to its destination by other vessels. On the 4th of October the master gave notice that he was ready to receive the cargo and demanded it. The agent had none to ship :—Held, that the owners could not maintain an action against the charterers for not supplying a cargo. Strugnell v. Friedrichsen, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 452 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 77.

Unforeseen Cause—Impossibility of supplying Goods.]—An owner of a ship agreed that she should proceed direct to Ichaboe, and there load a full and complete cargo of guano by the ship's boats' tackle, and by the labour of the crew, and being so loaded, should proceed therewith to Cork or Falmouth, and deliver the same, on being paid freight at 4*l.* 15*s.* per ton ; restraint of princes and rulers, the acts of God and the Queen's enemies, fire and perils of navigation, always excepted ; twenty-one working days to be allowed to the charterer if the ship was not sooner discharged at the port of unloading. The charterer to ship bags and other materials requisite for loading the ship, and to supply the stores for the ship, at cash prices, for the voyage, and to deduct the amount from the balance of freight ; but in the event of the vessel being lost, or any other unforeseen causes preventing the completion of the charterparty, the owner agreed to pay the charterer the amount of his disbursements for such stores. To a declaration of this charterparty, alleging as a breach that the shipowner did not land a full and complete cargo of guano on board the ship at Ichaboe, he pleaded that he was prevented from doing so from an unforeseen cause, namely, that on the arrival of the ship at Ichaboe, and within a reasonable time afterwards, no guano was to be found there, and that he had paid to the charterer the amount of his disbursements for stores for the ship :—Held, that the plea was bad in substance, for that the fact of no guano being to be found was not such an unforeseen cause, preventing the completion of the charterparty, as entitled the shipowner to pay the amount of the disbursements, and treat the charterparty as at an end, but that he was nevertheless bound by his positive contract to load a full cargo. Hills v. Sughrue, 15 M. & W. 253.

Ballast.]—Where the freighter covenanted to provide for the ship a full and complete cargo, consisting of copper, tallow and hides, or other goods, on which separate rates of freight were to be paid :—Held, that having supplied her with as large a quantity of tallow and hides as the master chose to take on board, he was not bound to provide any copper, although for the want of it the ship was obliged to keep in her ballast, and did not make so advantageous a freight as she might have done. Moorsom v. Page, 4 Camp. 103 ; 15 R. R. 731.

Merchandise for Ballast.]—A shipowner is entitled to take merchandise on board as ballast, provided it occupies no more space than the ballast would have done, and leaves to the charterer the full space of the vessel for his cargo. Towse v. Henderson, 4 Ex. 890 ; 19 L. J., Ex. 163.

—— Light Cargo—Duty of Shipowner to provide Ballast.]—A charterer agreed to load at Archangel a full and complete cargo of oats or other lawful merchandise, which the shipowners were to deliver "on being paid freight at the rate of 4*s.* 6*d.* per 320 lbs. for oats, and if any other cargo be shipped, in full and fair proportion thereto, according to London Baltic printed rates." The cargo shipped consisted of flax and other light articles (all mentioned in the London Baltic rates), i.e. of as much as the ship could safely carry of such light articles, which rendered the shipment of 120 tons of ballast necessary:—Held, that the charterer had a right, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary expressed or implied, to ship a full and complete cargo of any one or more of the articles constituting lawful merchandise within the meaning of the charterparty, and that when he had supplied a full and complete cargo, it was the shipowner's duty to procure the ballast necessary for that cargo; that in this case no stipulation to the contrary was expressed by the words "in full and fair proportion" in the charterparty, nor was any such stipulation implied by law; so that the shipowner not being protected from the extreme use by the charterer of his privilege, could not recover from him more than the freight payable according to the London Baltic rates on the quantities of the several articles actually shipped. Southampton Steam Collier Co. v. Clarke, 40 L. J., Ex. 8; L. R. 6 Ex. 53; 19 W. R. 214—Ex. Ch.

Under an agreement to proceed to the East Indies, and there load a full and complete cargo; the fore-cabin to be filled with light goods; freight 4*l.* 15*s.* per ton of twenty cwt. for sugar, coffee, and rice, and for pepper for eighteen cwt. to the ton; 100 tons of rice or sugar to be shipped, previously to any other part of the loading, to ballast the vessel:—Held, that the owner was obliged to furnish what further ballast was necessary, and that the freighter, after shipping the 100 tons of rice or sugar, was at liberty to complete the cargo with light goods. Irving v. Clegg, 1 Bing. (N.C.) 53; 4 M. & Scott, 572; 3 L. J., C. P. 265.

Broken Stowage.]—By a charterparty the charterer bound himself to load at Havana "a full and complete cargo of sugar and other lawful produce." Certain goods were enumerated, including timber, and certain rates of freight were mentioned; and the charterparty proceeded; "other goods, if any should be shipped, to pay in proportion to the foregoing rates, except what might be shipped for broken stowage, which should pay as customary" (half freight). A full cargo of mahogany logs was shipped, but no broken stowage was supplied to fill up the interstices, and the vessel was in consequence obliged to retain thirty tons of ballast:—Held, that it being impossible to ship a "full and complete cargo" without broken stowage, the charterer was bound by his contract to furnish it. Cole v. Meek, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 795; 33 L. J., C. P. 183; 9 L. T. 653; 12 W. R. 349.

By a charterparty the charterers were to load "a full and complete cargo of sugar in cases or other lawful merchandise, with sufficient bags for stowage," and the freight was to be at a certain rate if the cargo "should be sugar in cases, with sufficient bags for broken stowage," "and for other produce at a rate proportionate to sugar in cases, with sufficient bags for broken stowage":—Held, that the obligation on the charterers to load bags of sugar for broken stowage did not attach to any other cargo than sugar in cases. Duckett v. Satterfield, 37 L. J., C. P. 144; L. R. 3 C. P. 227.

What Goods.]—A ship was chartered to proceed to Port Phillip and there load from the freighter's factors "a full and complete cargo of wool, tallow, bark, and other legal merchandise," the quantity of bark not to exceed 100 tons, and the quantity of tallow and hides not to exceed 80 tons, and was to proceed therewith to London, and deliver the same "on being paid freight as follows:—For wool, 1½*d.* per lb., pressed, and 1½*d.* and one-eighth of a penny per lb. unpressed gross weight; tallow 3*l.* per ton; bark 4*l.* per ton; and hides 2*l.* per ton; the latter not to exceed 20 tons, without the consent of the captain; one-third of the freight to be paid in cash, on unloading and right delivery of the cargo, and the remainder in cash or by approved bills at two months following":—Held, that the freighter was entitled to load the ship with an assorted cargo of any legal merchandise, but that the owners were entitled to be paid freight, upon the supposition that the loading consisted of the stipulated quantities of the enumerated goods, viz. 100 tons of bark, 60 tons of tallow, and 20 tons of hides, and the residue of wool, pressed or unpressed. Cockburn v. Alexander, 6 C. B. 791; 18 L. J., C. P. 74.

By a charterparty it was agreed that the ship should sail to Baltimore, and there load a full cargo of produce, and proceed therewith to the United Kingdom, and deliver the same, on being paid freight, "at and after the rate of 5*s.* 6*d.* per barrel of flour, meal and naval stores, and 11*s.* per quarter of 480 lbs. for Indian corn or other grain; that the cargo was not to consist of less than 3,000 barrels of flour, meal, or naval stores, and that not less flour or meal than naval stores, was to be shipped. The vessel arrived with a cargo consisting of 769 cwts. of tobacco, 6,047 bushels of bran, 2,000 bushels of oats, 5,000 oak-staves, and three barrels of flour. The evidence shewed that a quarter of Indian corn or wheat would occupy a space of 10½ cubic feet, and that a quarter of American oats, which weighed upon an average 272 lbs., would occupy a space of sixteen cubic feet. It also appeared that oats were not a usual shipment from America:—Held, that "other grain" in this charterparty must be taken to mean such description of grain as would average 480 lbs. to the quarter, and therefore to exclude oats; and that the shipowner was entitled to receive freight, upon the supposition that 3,000 barrels of flour, meal and naval stores had been shipped; and for the rest of the space, at the rate of 11*s.* per quarter of Indian corn, or other grain, of the average weight of 480 lbs. to the quarter. Warren v. Peabody, 8 C. B. 800; 19 L. J., C. P. 43; 14 Jur. 150. See also Southampton Steam Collier Co. v. Clarke, ante, col. 415.

Goods in Cabin—Freight.]—The defendant, a merchant in London, chartered a vessel of the plaintiff's, to bring from Bombay a full and complete cargo at 3*l.* 5*s.* per ton. The defendant's agents at Bombay filled the carrying part of the vessel, and also the cabin, with their own goods, and consigned them to the defendant, as their factor, for sale. There was contradictory evidence as to the terms upon which the cabin was filled. The bill of lading was annexed to a bill of exchange, drawn by the agents upon the defendant, which bill of exchange was sold to a third party. On the arrival of the ship in London, the plaintiff claimed freight for the cabin at the then current rate of 7*l.* per ton. The defendant insisted that he was entitled to the use of the cabin as well as the other part of the ship, at the rate of 3*l.* 5*s.* per ton, but he charged his agents for freight at the rate of 7*l.* per ton, and allowed them commission at that rate. The goods were stopped, the bill of exchange not having arrived at maturity, when the action was brought to recover the above rate of freight for the use of the cabin. The defendant, after action brought, paid the bill, and obtained possession of the goods :—Held, first, that the defendant was not, under the terms of the charterparty, entitled to load the cabin. Mitcheson v. Nicol, 7 Ex. 929 ; 21 L. J., Ex. 323.

Held, secondly, that the judge properly directed the jury, that, although the defendant's agents at Bombay had no authority from the defendant to put goods in the cabin, yet, as the defendant adopted their act by accepting the goods, and charging his agent freight in respect of them, he was bound to pay the plaintiff the current rate of freight at the time of loading. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the action was not brought too soon, since the taking to the goods for the purpose of obtaining freight, rendered the defendant liable irrespectively of his actual possession after action brought. Ib.

Passengers instead of Goods.]—A., a shipbroker, engaged with B., a shipowner, to have a full cargo for the ship, the rates of freight for which would average 40*s.* per ton, and at least nine cabin passengers, passage money to average 75*l.* The contract was fulfilled as to the passengers, but the average rate of freight for goods put on board by A. amounted to 32*s.* only per ton. He shipped on board, however, steerage passengers for the voyage, the passage-money paid by whom, after deducting the expense of their diet, &c., when added to the freight of the cargo properly so called, made the average earnings of the whole ship per ton amount to more than 40*s.* :—Held, that this was not a performance of the stipulations of the contract, cargo and freight being terms applicable to goods only. Lewis v. Marshall, 7 Man. & G. 729 ; 8 Scott (N.R.) 729 ; 13 L. J., C. P. 193 ; 8 Jur. 848.

Passengers—Right to Carry—Custom.]—A charterparty, not amounting to a demise of the ship, provided for the carriage of a full and complete cargo of lawful produce and merchandise for payment of a lump freight, but was silent as to the use to which the passengers' cabins might be put :—Held, that the charterers were not entitled to carry passengers in the cabins. Shaw v. Aitken, 1 Cab. & E. 195.

No custom exists entitling the charterer under the above circumstances to carry passengers, or entitling the shipowner to have passengers carried for his benefit. Ib.

Cargo Procured by Master—Right of Charterers.]—A ship was chartered to proceed to such places on the west coast of Africa, as the charterers should direct, and there load from their factor a full cargo of guano, and proceed to a port of the United Kingdom, to be paid at a certain freight per ton. The ship was directed to Ichaboe. The factor there, one of the charterers, endeavoured to provide a full cargo, but failed to procure more than a small quantity. The master of the ship, who was also a part owner, after waiting thirty-one days, seeing no probability of obtaining a full cargo from the factor, applied himself to complete the cargo by his own exertions and at his own expense, and finally succeeded in doing so, after having been ninety-three days at Ichaboe :—Held, on motion for an injunction, that the charterers were not entitled to that part of the cargo which had been procured by the exertions of the master without the assistance of the factor, and which the master claimed to hold as the property of the owners, and not of the charterers. Lidgett v. Williams, 4 Hare, 464 ; 14 L. J., Ch. 459.

Refusal to Load complete Cargo—Ship filled up by Owners—Freight—Damages.]—A charterparty provided that the charterers should load a full cargo at 1*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* per ton, fire being excepted, and that bills of lading were to be signed at any rate of freight without prejudice to the charterparty, but so that the bills of lading freight in the aggregate should amount to the total freight due under the charterparty. A fire occurred when part of the cargo had been shipped and a large amount was burnt. On the charterers refusing to load any more cargo :—Held, that the freight on the bales that had been burnt must be taken at the actual bill of lading rate, and that the remainder of the cargo which the defendants had failed to ship must for the purpose of assessing the damages be taken at a rate higher than the charterparty rate by the amount necessary to make the bill of lading freight in the aggregate equal to the total charterparty freight : — Held, also, that the charterers were not entitled to credit for the freight on any bales which had been shipped by the shipowners in the place of the burnt cargo, but only for freight on the bales which had been shipped to make good the charterers' breach of contract. Aitken v. Ernsthausen, 63 L. J., Q. B. 559 ; [1894] 1 Q. B. 773 ; 9 R. 758 ; 70 L. T. 822 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 462—C. A.

Full Cargo of Specified Goods—Option of Shipper as to Character of Goods to be Loaded.]—Where by the charterparty a full cargo of copper, tallow, hides or other goods was to be provided by the charterer :—Held, that the freighter was entitled to put on board a full cargo of tallow only, although for want of copper to ballast the ship other ballast had to be provided. Moorsom v. Page, 4 Camp. 103 ; 15 R. R. 731.

Short Cargo—Freight.]—Covenant to carry as many men to Jamaica as the defendant should bring, not exceeding 180, at 5*l.* per head. The plaintiff said he carried 160 and that the defendant brought no more ; the defendant said he brought 180 and none were ready to receive them on board. Judgment for plaintiff. Anon. v. Noell, 1 Keb. 100.

Bar Harbour—Waiting for Higher Tide.]—A ship was chartered to load at a foreign port a full cargo of barley in bulk, not exceeding what she could safely carry, and to carry the same to a home port for discharge. The port of loading was known to both parties to have a bar. The charterers had 1,800 quarters of barley for shipment, and the shipowners stated that the ship could carry the whole. After shipment of 1,175 quarters the master refused to take more, on the ground that the ship could not safely cross the bar. By waiting for a higher tide for a few days, more cargo, and perhaps the whole, could have been safely carried :—Held, that the shipowners were liable for damages for not loading the whole. Gifford v. Dishington, 9 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 1045.

Description of Cargo—Weight or Measurement.]—By charterparty it was agreed that the ship should load from defendant's factor at Calcutta a full cargo of produce, one half to be weight, if linseed not to exceed 100 tons, or if paddy, or linseed and paddy together, not to exceed 200 tons ; freight, five guineas per ton delivered ; paddy and linseed 20 cwt. to the ton as usual, and other articles according to the East India Company's scale of tonnage. The jury found that "weight" referred to goods charged per ton weight as distinguished from measurement. The judge ruled that "one half of which is to be weight," meant that one half the cargo was to be goods charged by weight, and the rest by measurement :—Held, that the case should be sent to a new trial, in order that, if necessary, upon the same ruling, the case might go to a court of error. Ridgway v. Ewbank, 10 L. J., Q. B. 109.

2. Fitness for Shipment.

Where Warranty cannot be Implied.]—When the owner of a vessel has an opportunity of examining goods shipped on board of her, no warranty on the part of the owner of the goods can be implied that they are fit to be carried on the voyage. Acatos v. Burns, 47 L. J., Ex. 566 ; 3 Ex. D. 282 ; 26 W. R. 624—C. A.

In a voyage policy on goods there is no implied warranty that the goods are seaworthy for such voyage. Koebel v. Saunders, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 71 ; 33 L. J., C. P. 310 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 920 ; 10 L. T. 695 ; 12 W. R. 1106.

Goods Unfit for Carriage in ordinary Ship.]—A ship was chartered to sail to Manilla for orders to load there, or at Yloilo, a full and complete cargo of sugar in bags, hemp in compressed bales, and/or measurement goods, and therewith to sail to Cork, &c., the freight to be at the rate of 4*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* for dry sugar, 4*l.* 5*s.* for wet sugar, and 4*l.* 15*s.* for hemp or measurement goods ; the master engaging that the vessel before and when receiving cargo should be a good risk for insurance, and that during the voyage he would take all proper means of keeping the vessel tight, staunch and strong, and in every way fitted and provided for the voyage. At Yloilo the charterer provided a full cargo of wet sugar in bags. In the course of lading it was found that the quantity of molasses which had drained, and which might have been expected to drain, from the wet sugar was so great as to render the ship unseaworthy unless removed, and that the ship's pumps were unable to remove it. The ship was in all other respects seaworthy, but could not have been rendered seaworthy for that cargo without a delay which would have frustrated the objects of the voyage :—Held, that the charterer was entitled under the charterparty to supply a full cargo of wet sugar, and to have a ship provided which was fit for such a cargo. Stanton v. Richardson, 45 L. J., C. P. 78 ; 33 L. T. 193 ; 24 W. R. 324 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 23.

Dangerous Goods.]—Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 329, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 38, the shippers of goods in a general ship undertake that they will not deliver, to be carried on the voyage, packages of goods of a dangerous nature, which those employed on behalf of the shipowner may not, on inspection, be reasonably expected to know to be of a dangerous nature, without expressly giving notice that they are of a dangerous nature. By Lord Campbell, C.J., and Wightman, J. Brass v. Maitland, 6 El. & Bl. 471 ; 26 L. J., Q. B. 49 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 710 ; 4 W. R. 647.

But, semble, by Crompton, J., the undertaking by the shippers that the goods are safe, and fit to be carried on the voyage, does not extend beyond the cases where they have knowledge, or the means of knowledge, of the dangerous nature of the goods when shipped. Ib.

If a shipper, knowing an article to have corrosive properties, desires it to be shipped on board a general ship, and stowed in bulk, without communicating the character of the article to the shipowner, and it is shipped accordingly ; and being placed in the ship, in contact with certain casks, it corrodes their hoops, so that liquids contained in them flow out of them, and into the above-mentioned article, and spoil it ; the shipowner, being unaware of the character of the article, is not liable to the shipper, as for negligence in carrying and conveying, although the article is well known in commerce. Hutchinson v. Guion, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 149 ; 28 L. J., C. P. 63 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1149 ; 6 W. R. 757.

But in such case it is not an answer to the action that the shipper directed the articles to be stowed in bulk. Ib. See also 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, s. 23.

A merchant shipped sulphuric acid and cambric goods without giving notice required by the charterparty, that the casks contained acid. The casks leaked, and the cambric was damaged :—Held, that the merchant could recover, because the stowing of the casks near the cambric, and not the absence of notice, was the proximate cause of the damage ; and that there was no defence upon the ground of avoiding circuity of action. Alston v. Herring, 11 Ex. 822.

The plaintiff declared that the defendants, who had chartered his ship, put on board a dangerous commodity, whereby a loss happened, without due notice to the captain or any other person employed in the navigation :—Held, that it lay upon the plaintiff to prove such negative averment. Williams v. East India Co., 3 East, 192 ; 6 R. R. 589.

Representation as to size of Pieces of Machinery to be carried—Machinery and Coal Cargo.]—See Mackill v. Wright, supra, col. 273.

3. Deck Cargo.

"At Merchant's Risk."]—It was stipulated in a charterparty that the "ship should be provided with a deck cargo, if required, at full freight, but at merchant's risk" :—Held, that the words, "at merchant's risk," did not exclude the right of the charterers to general average contribution from the shipowners in respect of deck cargo shipped by the charterers and jettison. Burton v. English, 53 L. J., Q. B. 133 ; 12 Q. B. D. 218 ; 49 L. T. 768 ; 32 W. R. 655 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 187—C. A.

By a charterparty it was agreed, that the ship should proceed to Quebec, and there load, from the factors of the plaintiffs, a full and complete cargo of pine timber and deals, not exceeding what she could reasonably stow and carry over and above her tackle. In an action upon this charterparty, the declaration assigned for breach, that the defendants did not nor would load in and on board the ship a full and complete cargo, not exceeding what she could reasonably stow and carry over and above her tackle, but, on the contrary, loaded on board the ship a cargo much exceeding what the vessel could reasonably stow and carry over and above her tackle. The judge, in the summing up, told the jury, that, primâ facie, the deck was not the proper place for the stowage of the cargo, or any part of it; that, in some cases, custom might sanction the practice, but that, without reference to any custom, if it increased the perils of the navigation, if it increased the danger of the ship, or increased the danger of that part of the cargo, in either case it was an improper stowage:—Held, that this direction was correct, in the absence of any evidence of a general custom to load deck cargo at the risk of the shipper. Gould v. Oliver, 2 Scott (N.R.) 241; 2 Man. & G. 208.

The proprietor of goods laden on the deck of a ship, according to the custom of a particular trade, is entitled to contribution from the shipowner for a loss by jettison. S. C., 4 Bing. (N.C.) 134; 5 Scott, 445; 3 Hodges, 307; 7 L. J., C. P. 68.

Deck Cargo carried Illegally—Validity of Policy.]—See Cunard v. Hyde, infra, col. 1207 (bis).

Deck Cargo—Insurable Interest.]—A deck cargo of cotton intended to be carried at the shipper's risk, but for which, by mistake, clean bills of lading were given, was jettisoned. The shipowners having insured it:—Held, that they had an insurable interest. See Stephens v. Australasian Insurance Co., infra, col. 1130.

Excessive Deck Cargo—"Timber"—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 451.]—Pieces of spruce firwood varying from 15 to 27½ feet in length, and with a mean girth of 2 ft. 9 in., are "timber" falling within s. 451, sub-s. 3 (a), of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. Morris v. Thormodsen, 60 J. P. 644.

Deck Cargo—Jettison of—Proximate Cause of Damage.]—On a ship carrying a general cargo from New Orleans to Liverpool cotton was shipped on deck, under a practice by which owners of vessels trading between those ports were in the habit of stowing goods on deck in violation of their contract with the shipper, the shipowners accepting full responsibility for the consequences. The bills of lading for part of the cotton contained the words "under deck." All the bills of lading contained exceptions (inter alia) in favour of "jettison." On the voyage the ship took ground, and in order to get her off the master properly jettisoned the cotton. The indorsees of the bills of lading having brought an action against the shipowners to recover the value of the cotton:—Held, that (whether the bills of lading did or did not contain the words "under deck") the cotton was carried in breach of the contract and was not within the exceptions specified in the bills of lading, which had exclusive reference to goods safely stowed under hatches; that the shipowners had therefore no legal excuse for their failure to deliver; that the cause of damage was not too remote, and that the shipowners were liable to the indorsees for the value of the cotton. Royal Exchange Shipping Co. v. Dixon, 56 L. J., Q. B. 266; 12 App. Cas. 11; 56 L. T. 206; 35 W. R. 461; 6 Asp. M. C. 92—H. L. (E.)

4. Notice of Arrival of Ship—Ready to Load.

Notice of Arrival.]—In an action by a shipowner against the charterers for not loading a cargo of coals pursuant to a charterparty, by the terms of which the owner engaged that the vessel then in the port of Sunderland, should with all possible despatch proceed direct to the South dock, Sunderland, and there load, in the usual and customary manner, at any one of the collieries the freighters might name, a full cargo of coals, which the freighters bound themselves to ship by a given day for Calcutta, they pleaded that they had not any notice of the ship having proceeded to and having arrived at the South dock, and of her being ready to receive cargo, wherefore they did not nor could load:—Held, that the allegation in the plea must be treated as an allegation of fact, meaning that, by reason of want of notice of the ship's arrival at the dock and being ready to load, the charterers were prevented loading her; and that so read, the plea was an answer to the action. Stanton v. Austin, 41 L. J., C. P. 218; L. R. 7 C. P. 651.

—— On Return Voyage.]—Where a ship is to proceed to a port, and there to load a full cargo for the agents of the freighter, but the freighter has no interest in the outward cargo, his agents are entitled to notice from the captain that the vessel is ready to receive her homeward cargo; and if no such notice is given, the freighter is not liable for not providing such cargo. Fairbridge v. Pace, 1 Car. & K. 317.

Readiness to Receive.]—Action on a charterparty in these terms:—"It is this day agreed between the agent for the owner of the 'Lydia,' new ship, now on the stocks, of 1,100 tons, or thereabouts, now at Quebec, to be launched and ready to receive cargo in all May, guaranteed to sail in all June, and the charterer, that the ship shall proceed to, &c., and there load a full cargo of timber":—Held, that the readiness to receive a cargo in all May was a condition precedent to the shipowner's right to recover against the charterer for not loading a full cargo, and that a plea stating the ship was not ready to receive cargo in all May was good. Oliver v. Fielden, 4 Ex. 135; 18 L. J., Ex. 353. And see ante, col. 364.

5. Loading.

a. Generally.

Light Cargo—Duty of Shipowner to provide Ballast.]—A charterer agreed to load at Archangel a full and complete cargo of oats or other lawful merchandise, which the shipowners were to deliver "on being paid freight at the rate of 4*s.* 6*d.* per 320 lbs. for oats, and if any other cargo be shipped in full and fair proportion thereto, according to the London Baltic printed rates." The cargo shipped consisted of flax and other light articles (all mentioned in the London Baltic rates), i.e. of as much as the ship could safely carry of such light articles, which rendered the shipment of 120 tons of ballast necessary :—Held, that the charterer had a right, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary expressed or implied, to ship a full and complete cargo of any one or more of the articles constituting lawful merchandise within the meaning of the charterparty, and that when he had supplied a full and complete cargo, it was the shipowner's duty to procure the ballast necessary for that cargo; that in this case no stipulation to the contrary was expressed by the words "in full and fair proportion" in the charterparty, nor was any such stipulation implied by law, so that the shipowner, not being protected from the extreme use by the charterer of his privilege, could not recover from him more than the freight payable according to the London Baltic rates on the quantities of the several articles actually shipped. Southampton Steam Collier Co. v. Clarke, 40 L. J., Ex. 8; L. R. 6 Ex. 53; 19 W. R. 214—Ex. Ch.

The shipowner is bound to furnish whatever ballast is necessary, and the freighter, under a contract to ship a full and complete cargo, part heavy goods for ballast, is entitled to complete the cargo with light goods. Irving v. Clegg, 1 Bing. (N.C.) 53; 4 M. & Scott, 572; 3 L. J., C. P. 265.

Duty to Load—Delay in Proceeding to Destination "forthwith"—Perils of Sea.] — By a charterparty dated the 28th of December, a ship was to forthwith proceed from England to Barbadoes in the West Indies, and having there loaded a cargo of sugar for the defendants, to return to England. The vessel was to be allowed to take an outward cargo of coals to specified places, and the charterparty contained a clause excusing performance if it could not be complied with owing to perils of the sea. Delay on her voyage outwards was occasioned by unfavourable winds, and she was injured by a collision with a steamer, which rendered necessary further repairs. She finally sailed for Rio on the 9th of March, and reached Rio on the 26th of May. Having there discharged the cargo of coals, she started on the 1st of July, and reached Barbadoes on the 28th of July, too late for the season for exporting sugar thence. The defendants' agent offered to provide a cargo of sugar, if the vessel would go under protest to St. Vincent, an island ninety miles off. The captain refused this offer, and remained at Barbadoes, insisting upon the performance of the charterparty by the defendants' agent. The plaintiffs having sued for a breach of the charterparty in refusing to load a cargo at Barbadoes, the judge directed the jury that, if the vessel sailed without unreasonable delay, she proceeded "forthwith" within the meaning of the charterparty; that the clause excusing performance, on the ground of perils of the sea, applied to the preliminary voyage to Rio, and that the captain might reasonably think that if he shipped a cargo elsewhere than at Barbadoes, he might put an end to the original charterparty:—Held, a right direction. Hudson v. Hill, 43 L. J., C. P. 273; 30 L. T. 555; 2 Asp. M. C. 278.

Cargo to be loaded from Shore "at Ship's Risk"—Loss after delivery and before loading.] —By a charterparty a vessel was to proceed to a port, and there to load a cargo from the shore by the ship's boats and crew, at ship's risk and expense. A part of the cargo was lost, after delivery from the shore and before it was loaded on board, through one of the perils enumerated in the exceptions in the charterparty. In an action by the charterer for the non-delivery of this part of the cargo:—Held, that the expression "at ship's risk" did not mean at the absolute risk of the shipowner, but at such risk as would attach if the goods were loaded on board, and that consequently the exceptions applied, and the shipowner was not liable for the non-delivery. Nottebohm v. Richter, 56 L. J., Q. B. 33; 18 Q. B. D. 63; 35 W. R. 300—C. A.

Prompt Despatch.]—A charterparty provided that the ship should proceed to a port, and there load from the factors of the charterers a cargo of "coal, taking her turn with other steamers," and receive "prompt despatch in loading." The charterers employed the persons at the port of loading who were employed to load other ships, and the ship was loaded in her turn, but, by reason of an insufficient supply of coal, the ship was delayed:—Held, that the charterers were responsible for the delay. Elliott v. Lord, 52 L. J., P. C. 23; 48 L. T. 542; 5 Asp. M. C. 63.

Usual Despatch.] — A., by charterparty, engaged to load on board B.'s ship a cargo of coals, "to be loaded with usual despatch." A. commenced loading by bringing the coal in boats along a canal to the dock where the ship was; but before the cargo was completed a severe frost rendered the canal unnavigable, and the ship was detained thirty-four days:—Held, that the expression "usual despatch" meant "usual despatch of persons who have a cargo ready for loading," and that A. was responsible for the delay. Kearon v. Pearson, 7 H. & N. 386; 31 L. J., Ex. 1; 10 W. R. 12. See also cases ante, cols. 245, 477.

Ship Detained as Unseaworthy.]—A. agreed to charter a ship for twelve months after the completion of her then present voyage. After the completion of her voyage, and when he was ready to load the ship, she was detained as unseaworthy; and the repairs were not finished until more than two months after the completion of the voyage:—Held, that the charterer was entitled to throw up the charterparty. Tully v. Howling, 46 L. J., Q. B. 388; 2 Q. B. D. 182; 36 L. T. 163; 25 W. R. 290—C. A.

Loading of Cargo prevented by Superior Force.]—By a charterparty it was agreed that the ship, the "R.," should, after loading "dead weight" at Malta, proceed to V., a Spanish port, and there load a cargo of fruit for the plaintiff. At the time of entering into the charterparty the plaintiff knew that the "dead weight" intended to be put on board the "R." at Malta would consist of military stores, and he knew that by the ordinary law of Spain, a vessel with warlike stores on board would not be allowed to load at a Spanish port. Upon application being made to the Spanish government to relax the prohibition, permission to load was refused. The "R." arrived at V. with the warlike stores on board, but otherwise ready and fit to load the agreed cargo: she left immediately on learning that permission to load would not be granted:—Held, that the plaintiff could not sue the owners of the ship for not having the "R." ready to load, for, through the act of a superior power, the parties were unable to perform their respective duties under the contract, the plaintiff being unable to load the cargo and the defendants to receive it. Cunningham v. Dunn, 48 L. J., C. P. 62; 3 C. P. D. 443; 38 L. T. 631; 3 Asp. M. C. 595—C. A.

Where the master covenanted to go to a port of America, and receive a loading from the freighter alongside the ship, and bring home the same, with an exception of the restraints of rulers, &c.; but the freighter covenanted absolutely to provide the loading without any such exception; it seems that an embargo in the American port, which prevented the freighter from loading the ship, did not discharge him from his covenant. Sjoerds v. Luscombe, 16 East, 201.

The master and the freighter of a vessel of 400 tons, having actually agreed in writing that the ship, being fitted for the voyage, should proceed to St. Petersburg, and there load from the freighter's factor a complete cargo of hemp and iron, and proceed therewith to London, and deliver the same on being paid freight:—Held that the master, after taking in at St. Petersburg about half a cargo, having sailed away upon a general rumour of a hostile embargo being laid on British ships by the Russian government, was liable to the freighter for the short delivery of the cargo, though the jury found that he acted bonâ fide, and under a reasonable and well-grounded apprehension at the time, and a hostile embargo and seizure were in fact laid on six weeks afterwards. Atkinson v. Ritchie, 10 East, 530; 10 R. R. 372.

If goods put on board a ship to be carried from one place to another are wrongfully seized by the officers of government, so that they cannot be delivered to the consignee, the owner of the goods has a right of action for the non-delivery against the owner of the ship, who must seek his remedy against the officers of government. Gosling v. Higgins, 1 Camp. 451; 10 R. R. 726. See also cases, cols. 285, 527.

Fear of Infection.]—A charterer, who covenanted to send a cargo alongside at a foreign port, is not excused from sending it alongside, though, in consequence of the prevalence of an infectious disorder at the port, all public intercourse is prohibited by the law at the port, and though he could not have communication without danger of contracting and communicating the disorder. Barker v. Hodgson, 3 M. & S. 267; 15 R. R. 485.

Conversion of Cargo—Refusal to give Clean Receipt.]—N. & Co. agreed with the defendants for the shipment of oil to Montreal, and it was agreed that defendants should give a clean receipt for all goods shipped. A. sold fifty barrels of oil to N. & Co., and delivered them to the defendants, who received them but refused to give a clean receipt. A. demanded redelivery, which the defendants refused. N. &. Co., not getting a mate's receipt for the goods, refused to pay A. for them. A. brought an action against the defendants for conversion, joining N. & Co. as co-plaintiffs by amendment of the writ. The consignees at Montreal, on receiving the oil, paid N. & Co. for it, and they paid A.:—Held, that A. having waived the right of saying that the property in the oil had not passed to N. & Co., could not recover for conversion; and that he could not recover for loss of interest through delay in payment. Armstrong v. Allan, 4 R. 107; 67 L. T. 417; 7 Asp. M. C. 293—C. A.

b. Custom and Manner.

Effect of Custom.]—Where freighters covenanted to provide for the ship a full cargo, consisting of cotton, wool, rice, or other goods, on which separate rates of freight were to be paid:—Held, that it was the duty of such freighters to have shipped goods according to the custom of the country whence they were imported, although the shippers were put to an expense by so doing, and such shipment would exceed the stipulations contained in the charterparty. Benson v. Schneider, 1 Moore, 21, 76; 7 Taunt. 272; Holt, 416.

Where a full cargo was not taken in, in consequence of arrangements in the stowage varying from those contemplated by the charterparty:—Held, that the freighters were not entitled to recover, as it appeared that one of them and the broker who managed the business were present from time to time during the loading and cognisant of the arrangements, but did not make any objection. Hovill v. Stephenson, 4 Car. & P. 469.

By a charterparty the defendant agreed to load on board a vessel at Trinidad "a full and complete cargo of sugar, molasses and other produce":—Held, first, that evidence was admissible of a custom at Trinidad to load sugar in hogsheads and molasses in puncheons; and therefore that a full and complete cargo of sugar and molasses so packed was a compliance with the contract. Cuthbert v. Cumming, 11 Ex. 405; 24 L. J., Ex. 310; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 686; 3 W. R. 553—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, that the custom was reasonable and good in law. Ib.

Evidence of Custom.]—A. agreed by charterparty to load B.'s vessel at Sunderland with coke, with all possible despatch, in the customary manner, in regular turn. In an action for delay in loading according to the terms of the charterparty:—Held, that evidence was not admissible to shew that, according to the custom of the port of Sunderland, under such a contract, the shipowner was bound to wait until a manufacturer of coke not named in the contract, had supplied all ships, whose names were put down in a turn-book, kept by the manufacturer, which he had previously contracted to load with coke in the port, provided he used reasonable despatch, and that the manufacturer's name was mentioned at the time the contract was made. Hudson v. Clementson, 18 C. B. 213; 25 L. J., C. P. 234.

Turn for Loading—Evidence of Negligence.]—By a charterparty the freighters agreed with the owner that the ship, being fit for the voyage, should proceed to Port Talbot, and there load a cargo, the ship to be loaded in turn, certain working days to be allowed, and a further number of days for demurrage. The owner brought an action on this agreement, alleging that the defendants did not, within a reasonable time after her arrival at Port Talbot, load a cargo: and, secondly, that the defendants did not load the ship in turn. Plea—that the plaintiff was master, and had the care, direction, and management of the ship; and that the plaintiff, and the crew, took such bad care of the ship, and governed and navigated her so improperly, that the ship became damaged and unfit to receive a cargo, and so remained for a long time, by reason whereof the defendants could not load. By a local act, regulating the port, the master of every ship coming in was bound, under a penalty, to moor, anchor, and place the same in such situation as the harbour-master should direct. The ship's master was also bound to take on board a pilot, who, by the by-laws of the port, was to obey the orders of the harbour-master. It was proved on the trial that the ship, with a pilot, arrived at the port, and received directions from the harbour-master as to entering, but the master and crew worked the ship in a manner contrary to his directions, and in consequence she received injury, lost her then turn of loading, and was unable to load till the expiration of some days, when she loaded without further delay :—Held, that the judge rightly directed the jury to find for the plaintiffs, if they thought the accident was the fault of the master and crew. Taylor v. Clay, 9 Q. B. 713 ; 16 L. J., Q. B. 44 ; 11 Jur. 277.

—— Ignorance of Contracting Party as to the Port Custom.]—The plaintiffs' sailing vessel was chartered by the defendant to proceed to Whitehaven for a cargo of coals. The charterparty provided that "regular turn" should be allowed for loading. By the custom of the port of Whitehaven, steam vessels, though they arrive in port after sailing vessels, are loaded with coals before the sailing vessels ; but as between sailing vessels themselves sailing vessels are loaded in the order of their arrival in port. The plaintiffs were ignorant that this was the usage of the port. The plaintiffs' vessel, though she arrived before several steam vessels, was delayed until they were first loaded, but she was loaded in the order of her arrival as regarded the other sailing vessels in harbour. The plaintiffs claimed demurrage : —Held, that the expression "regular turn" in the charterparty should, in the absence of exclusive words, be construed as "regular turn" according to the usage of the port of Whitehaven; that it was not material that the plaintiffs were ignorant of such usage, and that, accordingly, the plaintiffs could not recover. King v. Hinde, 12 L. R., Ir. 113.

The defendant chartered the plaintiff's vessel to proceed to Newcastle-on-Tyne, and there be ready forthwith, "in regular turns of loading," to take on board, by spout or keel, as directed, a complete cargo of four keels of coal, and the remainder coke. In an action for not loading the vessel with coke within a reasonable time :—Held, that evidence was admissible to explain the meaning of the expression in the charterparty, "in regular turns of loading," by shewing that there was a usage at the port of Newcastle that vessels should take in their cargoes of coke in a certain regular order or turn, and that the question whether the vessel was loaded within a reasonable time ought not to be decided without reference to such usage, if proved. Leidemann v. Schultz, 14 C. B. 38 ; 2 C. L. R. 87 ; 23 L. J., C. P. 17 ; 18 Jur. 42.

—— Delay caused by Negligence of Third Party.]—By a charterparty, a vessel was to proceed with all convenient speed to Cardiff, and there load from the factors of the freighters a full cargo of coals, in the customary manner, no time being mentioned :—Held, that this meant a loading, according to the usage of the port, and within a reasonable time, without reference to unforeseen casualties ; and consequently, the loading having been delayed for an unreasonable time, the freighters were not excused by reason of the delay having arisen from difficulties connected with the railway and the collieries, which were beyond their control. Adams v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., 5 C. B. (N.S.) 492 ; 28 L. J., C. P. 33 ; 7 W. R. 9.

By a charterparty the master engaged to proceed with his vessel to a particular colliery, and there take on board for the freighters a cargo of coal. Before the charterparty was signed both parties knew that the colliery was not at work, an accident having happened to the steam-engine, and both were told it would be repaired in a short time, and that the vessel would be loaded in her turn within a few days after the colliery got to work again, according to the practice of the port, which was, that the ships were loaded in their regular turns as they were entered on the colliery books. The freighters had no control over the colliery. The ship was loaded in her turn, but not until several days later than the colliery agents had led the parties to expect :—Held, that if the steam-engine was repaired and the colliery got to work in a reasonable time after the execution of the charterparty, and if the vessel was loaded within a reasonable time after the colliery got to work, the freighters were not liable to compensate the master of the vessel for the delay in the loading. Harris v. Dreesman, 23 L. J., Ex. 210. And see cases infra, 9. DELIVERY AND DISCHARGE OF CARGO.

c. Lighters.

The master is not bound by usage in London to take care of a lighter employed in unloading his ship, after it is fully laden, until the time when it could be properly removed from the ship to the wharf. Robinson v. Turpin, Peake, 203, n. ; 3 R. R. 671.

By the custom of the river Thames, the master is bound to guard goods laden into a lighter sent for them by the consignee until the loading is complete, and cannot discharge himself from that obligation by telling the lighterman he has not sufficient hands on board to take care of them. Catley v. Wintringham, Peake, 202 ; 3 R. R. 670.

A party executed a charterparty, under which a cargo was to be sent alongside the ship at the merchant's expense ; the captain rendered the usual and customary assistance with his boats and crew. Some of the cargo lying about thirty yards from the edge of the wharf, the captain applied to the charterer's factor for the labourers to remove it into the boats. The factor having refused, saying he would abide by the charterparty, the captain hired labourers for the purpose :—Held, that the expense so incurred might, notwithstanding the charterparty, be recovered. Fletcher v. Gillespie, 3 Bing. 635 ; 11 Moore, 547 ; 4 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 202.

On a charter to receive a cargo alongside a ship, at a port where the ship cannot safely load inside a bar, if she is loaded outside, the freighter cannot throw extra expense of lighterage on the shipowner. Trindale v. Levy, 2 F. & F. 441.

Goods were delivered to the owners of a ship to be conveyed by their ship. The goods were destroyed by a casual fire on board a lighter employed by the owners to convey them to the ship : — Held, that the 26 Geo. 2, c. 86, s. 2, did not protect the owners. Morewood v. Pollok,

d. Place of.

Option.]—The plaintiff by charterparty, dated the 26th of May, 1871, agreed with the defendant that his ship should sail to Bullo, and there load from the plaintiffs' factors a cargo of coals and proceed therewith to Highbridge or Dunball and deliver same on being paid freight at the rate of 2*s.* 9*d.* per ton in cash on unloading and right delivery. The ship was to be loaded and discharged with all possible despatch, and to load with G. or H. till the end of September, at captain's option, but after September with H.; and was to continue at the above rate until March, 1872. In September the captain exercised his option in favour of loading with G., but the plaintiff refused to load him from G.; whereupon the defendant declined further to perform the charterparty:—Held, that the breach of the charterparty which the plaintiff had committed went to the root of the contract between the parties, and justified the defendant in his refusal. Bradford v. Williams, 41 L. J., Ex. 164; L. R. 7 Ex. 259; 26 L. T. 641; 20 W. R. 782.

Proper loading Berth.]—Direction by judge to jury that, upon the construction of the charterparty, a berth where she could load coals was a proper loading berth. New trial ordered because, under the charterparty, the merchant was entitled to load a general cargo, and the berth was not a proper loading berth for general cargo. Jennett v. Meek, 3 L. T. 817.

e. Return Cargo.

Condition precedent—Discharge of Outward Bound.]—The discharge of an outward-bound cargo at a particular place is not in general a condition precedent to the providing a return cargo; therefore a freighter, who covenants to load a return cargo, must, if he objects to the ship's delay in proceeding to take it on board, make the objection before he loads the cargo, and within a reasonable time, and must not by any act take to the ship. Olhsen v. Drummond, 2 Chit. 705; 4 Dougl. 356.

—— Seizure of Outward Cargo.]—Where a shipowner covenanted to proceed from L. to N., and there make a right and true delivery of the outward cargo, and having so done receive on board a certain cargo, restraint of princes, &c., excepted; and the freighters covenanted, in consideration of the premises, that at N. they would find and provide, as they did warrant and assure to the shipowner, a full and complete return cargo, and that 1,750*l.* should be paid on delivery of the outward cargo, which should be considered as earned for outward freight:—Held, that, in an action against the freighters for not providing a return cargo at N., they could not plead in excuse of performance that the outward cargo was seized by the government at N., and never delivered to them; for the delivery of the outward cargo was not a condition precedent to the providing a return cargo; but the delivery of the outward cargo was a condition precedent to the payment of the 1,750*l.*; and therefore a breach assigned for nonpayment thereof was under these circumstances not sustainable. Storer v. Gordon, 3 M. & S. 308; 15 R. R. 499.

—— Non-arrival of Vessel.]—Where, in a charterparty on the ship "St. P.," for a voyage from G. to bring home a cargo to Europe, it was provided, that in the event of the non-arrival at the same port of another ship, called the "G." (which had been chartered by the same parties, and was then at sea), then the charter on the "G." should be void to all intents and purposes whatsoever:—Held, that the word "non-arrival" could not be construed so as to defeat the purposes of the voyage for which the "G." had been chartered; and her non-arrival for these purposes not being attributable to the fault of the charterers, the charter on the "St. P." became void, and the charterers were not bound to provide her with a homeward cargo. Soames v. Lonergan, 4 D. & R. 74; 2 B. & C. 564; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 106; 26 R. R. 460.

—— Delay.]—A charterparty provided that the ship "E.," being tight, staunch, and strong, and every way fitted for the voyage, should, with all convenient speed (on being ready) having liberty to take an outward cargo for owners' benefit, direct or on the way, proceed to A. The ship was not completed when the charterparty was made. As soon as she was ready for her trial trip she went to sea, and (in order to avoid the danger of crossing the bar at the mouth of the Tyne a second time) went on to L. Whilst her repairs were being completed in L., she took on board a cargo of goods for C., at which place she stopped to unload her cargo on the voyage to A., arriving at the latter place a few days later than she otherwise would have done. The charterer's agent at A. refused to provide cargo in consequence of the delay:—Held, that there was no condition precedent, the non-fulfilment of which by the shipowner would exonerate the charterer from providing a cargo, but that there was merely a stipulation, for the breach of which an action for damages would lie against the shipowner. Mac Andrew v. Chapple, 35 L. J., C. P. 281; L. R. 1 C. P. 643; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 567; 14 L. T. 556; 14 W. R. 891.

Obligation to accept.]—A charterparty made between the charterers through the agency of G. & Co. and the captain of the "Elvezia," provided that the ship should proceed with a cargo to San Francisco, "where the ship shall be consigned to charterers' agents inwards and outwards, paying the usual commissions . . . and deliver the same . . . and so end the voyage"; and that "on her return to her port of discharge in the United Kingdom" she should be reported to the custom-house by G. & Co.:—Held, that these provisions did not impose on the captain an obligation to accept a homeward cargo for the United Kingdom from the agents of the charterers at San Francisco, but merely bound him, if he had determined upon taking a return cargo on board there, to employ them to procure and ship it. Cross v. Pagliano, 40 L. J., Ex. 18; L. R. 6 Ex. 9; 23 L. T. 420; 19 W. R. 159.

Under a charterparty a ship was to proceed from London to Bombay, and there discharge her cargo, and then load a cargo, with which she was to proceed direct to London, the merchant to have the privilege of sending the ship to Calcutta from Bombay, upon paying for the extra time occupied. If the ship returned from Bombay direct to London, the merchant was to have the power of sending her to one port on the Malabar coast, to receive cargo, paying for the extra time:—Held, that the shipowner, after discharging at Bombay, was not bound to take on board a cargo there for Calcutta. Cockburn v. Wright, 6 Bing. (N.C.) 223; 8 Scott, 489; 9 L. J., C. P. 166.

Notice of Arrival.]—See ante, col. 504.

f. Refusal or Neglect to Load.

Measure of Damages.]—In an action against a charterer of a ship for not loading a cargo, the measure of damage is the amount of freight which would have been earned after deducting the expenses, and also any profit which the ship may have earned during the period over which the charter extended. Smith v. M'Guire, 3 H. & N. 54; 27 L. J., Ex. 465; 6 W. R. 726. S. C., nisi prius, 1 F. & F. 199.

In an action on a charterparty for not loading a cargo, the loading ports being Rangoon or Bassein, and the captain having been to Rangoon, and there received orders to go to Bassein (three days' sail), where no cargo could be obtained, and he was requested to go back to Rangoon or elsewhere, in hopes of obtaining a cargo, which he declined to do, and remained inactive at Rangoon until the time for loading had elapsed, the judge having told the jury that they were not bound to give the plaintiff the full amount of freight, 3,000*l.*, but that if they deemed the master's conduct unreasonable they might diminish the damages on that account, and left it to them to say whether the plaintiff should recover the full amount, or any other amount they might deem reasonable; and they having found for the plaintiff damages 500*l.*, the court held that there had been no misdirection, but granted a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence and the amount of damages considerably too low, making it, however, a condition that the plaintiff should relinquish the costs of the first trial. Wilson v. Hicks, 26 L. J., Ex. 242.

—— Duty of Captain.]—By a charterparty it was stipulated that a ship should proceed to Limerick with her then present cargo, and there take a cargo of oats for London, at a freight of 2*s.* 8*d.* a quarter; six days being allowed for loading at Limerick. Before the expiration of the six days, the freighter's agent offered the captain a cargo at 2*s.* 6*d.*, and said that the freighter's brother would pay the difference. The captain refused to take anything not according to the terms of the charterparty:—Held, that as the contract had not then been broken by the freighter, the captain was not bound to accept this offer; but that, if the contract had been broken by the freighter not putting any cargo on board within the six days, it would have been the captain's duty to have taken a cargo at the most he could get, so that the damages to be paid by the freighter should be reduced as much as possible. Harries v. Edmonds, 1 Car. & K. 686.

Cargo to be Loaded in Time for Convoy.]—The charterer of a ship for a voyage to Tobago and back covenanted to load and despatch her in time to join the convoy home sailing from the West Indies on August 1. The ship arrived at Tobago on July 14, and the convoy passed Tobago on July 22:—Held, that the charterer was liable for not supplying a cargo by that day. Thompson v. Inglis, 3 Camp. 428.

Cargo Discharged to Examine Ship—Refusal of Shipper to Reload.]—A ship was chartered on September 12 to carry wheat from Harwich to St. Malo; ten days allowed for loading. The usual course was for the ships to take in part of the cargo at Mistley and the rest lower down the river. The ship took in 900 quarters at Mistley, but got ashore as she was going down the river to take in the rest. The master gave notice to the charterers' agent that the cargo must be unloaded to examine the ship. The agent unloaded it, and sent it on in other ships. On October 4 the master gave notice that he was ready to receive the cargo, and demanded it:—Held, that the owner could not recover against the charterers for not supplying cargo. Strugnell v. Friedrichsen, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 452; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 77.

—— Other Cargo taken in — Damages — Penalty.]—Ship chartered to New Zealand to load there or receive 500*l.* She sailed, and found no cargo or charterers' agent there. She sailed to Batavia, and brought home a cargo, earning more than she would have upon her original voyage:—Held, that the owners could not recover 500*l.* and also retain the profits of the homeward voyage. Staniforth v. Lyall, 7 Bing. 169; 4 M. & P. 329; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 23.

Delay in Loading—Not Sufficient Workmen.]—See Richardsons and Samuel & Co., In re, supra, col. 490.

Action for not Providing Cargo—Plea that the Ship was afterwards Lost.]—In an action on a charterparty whereby the defendants covenanted to unload and receive the cargo at Charlestown, and there put on board 100 tons of goods, the plaintiffs assigned as a breach that no goods were put on board. The defendants pleaded that the vessel never arrived in London on the homeward voyage, and was lost; the charterparty provided for payment of freight on delivery in London:—On demurrer, the plea held to be bad. Stephenson v. Price, 3 Dougl. 353.

—— Fault of Shipowner—Damages.]—A ship's husband covenanted that his ship should at A. take in brandy and convey it to B., and there take in fruit, which the freighters covenanted to supply. He did not take in the brandy, and the freighters did not furnish a full homeward cargo, for which he recovered damages against them. They were prevented from supplying the fruit by reason of the neglect of the ship's husband in not shipping the brandy. They afterwards sued his representatives for breach of his covenant:—Held, that they could not recover the damages they had paid him, or the costs of defending the previous action. Walton v. Fothergill, 7 Car. & P. 392.

—— Damages—Different Rates of Freight for Different Goods.]—In an action for not supplying a cargo, where by the charterparty the freighter is to pay different rates of freight for different articles put on board, and is at liberty to supply which articles he pleases, the measure of damages is the average freight calculated for the usual quantity of goods carried in such voyages. Thomas v. Clarke, 2 Stark. 450; 20 R. R. 714.

6. Stowage.

a. Employment of Stevedore.

Who Liable to Pay for Services of.]—The owner of a ship had chartered her to A. for the purpose of being loaded; the charterparty provided that the stevedore was to be nominated by the charterer, and be under the control of the captain, and was to be paid by the owner. A. sub-chartered the ship to B., entering into a charterparty with a similar clause. B. employed the plaintiff, who was a stevedore, to load the ship, and introduced him to the defendant as a person who was to load the ship. The defendant frequently came on board while the ship was being loaded, and superintended and gave instructions relative to the stowage of the cargo. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for nonpayment of his charges:—Held, that there was evidence of a contract between the plaintiff and defendant. Eastman v. Harry, 33 L. T. 800; 3 Asp. M. C. 117—C. A.

On completion of the loading the plaintiff sent in his account to B., headed "To captain and owners," and pressed B. for payment. B. had sent in his account to A., and A. had sent in his account to the defendant, with the item "Stevedore's account" charged. The defendant had paid A.'s account, and A. had paid B.'s account. B. became bankrupt, and did not pay the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant was liable to pay his account. Ib.

Liability for Acts of.]—K., a master stevedore, having contracted to unload a ship, employed D., one of the ship's crew, at the owner's request, to assist in the work. K. could have refused to so employ D. if he thought him incompetent; and during the time K. employed him D. could not have been employed by the master of the ship on the ship's work, and, though D. was paid by the owner, such pay was deducted from what K. received for the unloading. In the course of such employment D. so negligently worked a winch used in the unloading as to injure one of K.'s men, with whom D. was put to work by K.'s foreman:—Held, that the owner was not responsible for such injury, as at the time of the accident D. was not working for him but for K. Murray v. Currie, 40 L. J., C. P. 26; L. R. 6 C. P. 24; 23 L. T. 557; 19 W. R. 104.

A stevedore employed to ship iron rails had a foreman whose duty it was (assisted by labourers) to carry the rails from the quay to the ship after the carman had brought them to the quay and unloaded them there. The carman not unloading the rails to the foreman's satisfaction, the latter got into the cart and threw out some of them so negligently that one fell upon and injured a person who was passing by:—Held (per Grove and Denman, JJ., Brett, J., dissentiente), that there was evidence for a jury that the foreman was acting within the scope of his employment, so as to render the stevedore responsible for his acts. Burns v. Paulson or Poulson, 42 L. J., C. P. 302; L. R. 8 C. P. 563; 29 L. T. 329; 22 W. R. 20.

When a stevedore is appointed by the shipper, and acts in the stowage, the master is not responsible for damage done to the goods in the course of taking on board or of stowage. Custom or agreement may vary the above rule, but a mere stipulation that a stevedore shall act under the orders of the master, does not throw on the latter the responsibility for acts of the former not shewn to be done under orders from the master. Blaikie v. Stembridge, and cases, infra.

The owner, and not the charterer, is primâ facie liable to the consignees for damage to goods by bad stowage; aliter, if the shipper stows himself. Swainston v. Garrick, 2 L. J., Ex. 255.

b. Duty of Master and Owner.

Duty of Master as to.]—If a cask is accidentally staved in, in letting it down into the hold of a ship, the master must answer for the loss. Goff v. Clinkard, cited 1 Wils. 288.

By the maritime law it is the duty of the master, on behalf of the owner, to receive and properly stow on board goods delivered to him alongside. For any damage to the goods, arising from his negligence, either in taking them on board or in stowing them, he is responsible to the shipper of the goods. If the damage happens from his misconduct, he is responsible to the owner; if from the misconduct of the mate or other of the crew, and not from any fault of his own, he is not responsible to the owner. Blaikie v. Stembridge, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 911; 29 L. J., C. P. 212; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 825; 2 L. T. 570; 8 W. R. 239—Ex. Ch.

Duty of Owners as to.]—The owners of a general ship are liable to a shipper for damage done to his goods from other goods stowed in the hold without proof of any wilful or negligent default on their part. Gillespy v. Thompson, 6 El. & Bl. 477, n., 483; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 712.

It is the duty of the owner of a vessel to stow the cargo with as much skill as a competent stevedore can do. Anglo-African Co. v. Lamzed, 1 H. & R. 216; 35 L. J., C. P. 145; L. R. 1 C. P. 226; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 294; 13 L. T. 796; 14 W. R. 477.

In an action by charterers against shipowners, for not loading as much as the vessel could reasonably carry, the charterparty containing the words "charterers' stevedore to be employed by ship," it is no answer that the charterers had not appointed a stevedore, and that the cargo was stowed to the best of the master's skill and ability. Ib.

The owner, and not the charterer, of a ship is primâ facie liable to the consignees for damage done to goods on the voyage, by reason of improper stowage. Swainston v. Garrick, 2 L. J., Ex. 255.

The master is primâ facie liable for the safe stowage of the cargo, but he is exonerated by the special appointment of his own stower by the freighter; and if the freighter, by a verbal agreement with the owner, undertakes to appoint his own, and he acts as such, the mere silence of a charterparty, subsequently entered into, does not subject the master to his original liability. Ib.

—— Question for Jury.]—In an action by a shipper against a shipowner, for nondelivery of goods, not arising from any of the excepted causes, and also for bad stowage; the evidence was that the goods had been in the course of the voyage, and in bad weather, stowed in the tank upon coals, and that they arrived damaged by sea water and coal dust. The judge told the jury that they must find for the shipowner, if they thought that, under the circumstances, what had been done was the best that could be done. And the court could not agree to set aside this direction. Zipsey v. Hill, 1 F. & F. 570.

Exceptions as to Injuries.]—Under a charterparty the shippers put a cargo, consisting of casks of oil, wool and rags, on board the chartered vessel, and personally superintended the stowage of the cargo in the hold of the vessel. In the margin of the bill of lading of the casks of oil there was this memorandum: "Weight, measurement and contents unknown, and not accountable for leakage." The bill of lading was indorsed in blank by the shippers, and assigned to B. & Co. In the course of the voyage the oil casks became heated by the action and contiguity of the wool and rags, and a very large portion of the oil was lost:—Held, first, that ignorance of the shipowners as to the latent effect of heat, in storing the casks of oil with wool and rags, did not, under the circumstances of the shippers superintending the stowage, amount to such negligence as to make them liable to the holders of the bill of lading for the loss occasioned by the leakage of the oil. Ohrloff v. Briscall, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 70; 35 L. J., P. C. 63; L. R. 1 P. C. 231; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 675; 14 L. T. 873; 15 W. R. 202. S. C., nom. The Helene, Br. & Lush. 429.

Held, secondly, that the limitation by the memorandum in the bill of lading, that the shipowners were not to be accountable for leakage, was not restricted as to the quantity of leakage, and protected the shipowners, in the absence of proof that the leakage was occasioned by their negligence. Ib.

A bill of lading excepted liability in respect of "all accidents, loss and damage of whatsoever nature . . . . occasioned by any act, neglect or default whatsoever of the pilot, master or mariners, in navigating the ship . . . . it being agreed that the captain, officers and crew of the vessel in the transmission of the goods . . . . be considered the servants of the shipper, owner or consignee" of the goods:—Held, that the owners were liable for negligent stowage. Hayn v. Culliford, 48 L. J., C. P. 372; 4 C. P. D. 182; 40 L. T. 536; 27 W. R. 541; 4 Asp. M. C. 128—C. A.

On an allegation that damage to cargo originated from defective stowage, and heat and fermentation arising from the cargo being stowed in too close conjunction with other cargo, the parties must establish affirmatively that the cargo on its arrival at its port of destination was in a damaged condition; and the onus then falls on the ship to prove that the original stowage was good, and that the perils of the sea subsequently occurring created the damage. The Alexandra, 14 L. T. 742; 14 W. R. 466.

Damage to cargo caused by the oozing of wine from casks through straining in bad weather is damage occasioned by perils of the sea, and the shipowners are, under the usual exceptions, exempt from liability therefor, where the cargo is properly stowed, or is stowed in such a manner that the master is not responsible for bad stowage. The Catherine Chalmers, 32 L. T. 847; 2 Asp. M. C. 598.

Where a charterparty stipulates that a vessel is "to be stowed by charterers' stevedore, at risk and expense of vessel," and a cargo is supplied by the charterers and is stowed by their stevedore, the shipowner is not responsible for damage occasioned by bad stowage. Ib.

Damage to cargo occasioned by salt water does not come within the excepted perils when by reason of the place in which it is stowed it is exceptionally liable to such damage in severe weather. The Oquendo, 38 L. T. 151; 3 Asp. M. C. 558.

Where Ship Chartered.]—A ship was chartered for a voyage from Oporto to the United Kingdom to load from the factors of the affreighter a full cargo of wine or other merchandise at 18*s.* per ton; the captain to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight without prejudice to the charter; the ship to be addressed to charterer's agents at Oporto on usual terms. The ship was accordingly consigned to the charterer's agents at Oporto, and was put up by them as a general ship, without any intimation that she was under charter; a party shipped some casks of wine, and received bills of lading in the usual form signed by the master. The wine was stowed by a stevedore appointed by the charterer's agents and paid by them, the money being ultimately repaid them by the master. The wine having leaked from improper stowage:—Held, that as the charter did not amount to a demise of the ship, and the owners remained in possession by their servants, the master and crew, the shipper was entitled to look to the owners as responsible for the safe carriage of the wine: inasmuch as he had delivered it to be carried in the ship in ignorance that she was chartered, and had dealt with the master, who was still the owner's master, as clothed with the ordinary authority of a master to receive goods and give bills of lading by which his owners would be bound. Sandeman v. Scurr, 8 B. & S. 50; 36 L. J., Q. B. 58; L. R. 2 Q. B. 86; 15 L. T. 608; 15 W. R. 277.

Held, also, that the employment of the stevedore made no difference, at all events as regarded the shipper, as he was no party to the employment, and had a right to look to the owners for the safe stowage of the goods, as part of the carriers' duty, in the absence of any special agreement. Ib.

A shipowner who charters his vessel to another, but not so as to give up possession, is liable for a breach of the contract contained in a bill of lading signed by the master, such as injury to the goods by improper stowage, if it is not proved that at the time of shipment the shipper had notice of the charter. The St. Cloud, Br. & Lush. 4; 8 L. T. 54.

So, under similar circumstances, the owner not being domiciled in England or Wales, the ship is liable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, ss. 6, 35. Ib.

If a person ships goods on board a vessel, knowing that she is chartered, the consignee of the goods can maintain no action against the owner of the ship if the goods are injured by bad stowage. Major v. White, 7 Car. & P. 41.

If the shipper of goods was warned as to the way in which the goods were to be stowed, the consignee cannot maintain any action for damage occasioned by such stowage, even if the stowage was bad. Ib.

By a charterparty an owner agreed to let, and a charterer to hire, a ship for a certain period, the ship being in good and working order, and her master, officers and crew being duly shipped, to be placed at the disposal of the charterer in the port of London on a given day, and the hire to commence from and after the time that she should have been placed at the disposal of the charterer, with a clean and clear hold, and ready to load. The owner was to appoint, victual and pay the master, officers and crew, and to provide and pay for the necessary equipment for the working of the ship, and to pay all other charges whatsoever, save and except for coals, pilotages, port charges and labour, which were to be paid by the charterer; the cargoes were to be taken on board, and discharged by the charterer, the crew of the vessel rendering customary assistance, so far as they might be under the orders of the master; and the charterer was to have liberty to employ stevedores and labourers, to assist in the loading, stowage and discharge thereof; but such stevedores and labourers being under the control and direction of the master, the charterer was not in any case to be responsible to the owners for damage or improper stowage; and "the master and owner of the ship should devote the same attention to the cargo, should use the same endeavours to promote despatch, and should in every respect be and remain responsible to all whom it might concern, as if the ship was loading and discharging her cargoes and performing her voyages for account of the owner, and independently of that charterparty": — Held, that there was nothing in this charterparty to exonerate the owner from responsibility for negligent and improper stowage by the stevedores employed by the charterer, under the above stipulation. Sach v. Ford, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 90; 32 L. J., C. P. 12; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 750.

Expenses of Preparing Cargo.]—Where a ship was chartered to proceed to a port and there load from the freighter's factors "a full and complete cargo of wool, tallow, bark and other legal merchandise," at a specified rate of freight for each kind:—Held, that parol evidence was not admissible to shew that by the custom of the place of loading the cost of pressing wool was to be borne by the shipowner. Cockburn v. Alexander, 6 C. B. 791; 18 L. J., C. P. 74.

c. Damages.

Amount Recoverable.]—In the ca of injury to goods by improper stowage, loss upon a contract of resale entered into before delivery, and of which the shipowners had no notice at the time of making the original contract, is not to be allowed. The St. Cloud, Br. & Lush. 4; 8 L. T. 54.

7. Demand by Shipper of Redelivery.

After Accident.]—An owner of goods shipped to proceed to a foreign port has a right to have them redelivered to him when the vessel, having commenced her voyage, meets with a disaster whereby the goods are damaged so much that they cannot be profitably carried to their destination. Blasco v. Fletcher, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 147; 32 L. J., C. P. 284; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1105; 9 L. T. 169; 11 W. R. 997.

Without Payment of Freight.]—But after goods have been taken on board a general ship to be conveyed on freight, and bills of lading have been signed by the captain, the owner of the goods cannot, before the sailing of the ship, insist on the goods being redelivered to him without paying the freight that might be earned, and indemnifying the master against the consequences of the bills of lading signed by him. Tindall v. Taylor, 4 El. & Bl. 219; 3 C. L. R. 199; 24 L. J., Q. B. 12; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 112.

A ship was chartered for a voyage from London to Sydney, the charterer to have the entire use of the ship, and to pay the owner 1,600*l.* in London in two months. The ship cleared at the custom-house. The charterer bought goods, to be paid for before the ship left London; and the vendor delivered the goods on board, and took the mate's receipt for them. Before the ship was ready to sail, the charterer was unable to pay for the goods (though not bankrupt nor taking the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act), and the vendor thereupon gave notice to the captain to redeliver them, and, on his refusal, made an arrangement with the charterer, and again applied to the captain in the charterer's name for the redelivery, offering to pay all reasonable charges. The captain having refused to redeliver: —Held, that the shipowner had no lien upon the goods, but that the charterer had a right, as between himself and the shipowner, to take the goods out of the ship, at all events, until the stipulated sum had become due, and that the captain was therefore liable in trover. Thompson v. Small, 1 C. B. 328; 14 L. J., C. P. 157.

8. Duty of Master to Preserve, Tranship, or Sell Cargo.

a. To Preserve and Reship.

There is a duty on the master, as representing the shipowner, to take reasonable care of the goods intrusted to him, not merely in doing what is necessary to preserve them on board the ship during the ordinary incidents of the voyage, but also in taking active measures, when reasonably practicable under all the circumstances, to check and arrest the loss or deterioration resulting from accidents, for the necessary and immediate consequences of which the shipowner is not liable by reason of exceptions in the bill of lading. And for neglect of this duty by the master the shipowner is responsible to the shipper. Notara v. Henderson, 41 L. J., Q. B. 158; L. R. 7 Q. B. 225; 26 L. T. 442; 20 W. R. 442; 1 Asp. M. C. 278—Ex. Ch.

In an action by a shipper against a shipowner it appeared that beans were shipped under a bill of lading, containing the usual exception of perils of the sea (including collision). The vessel sustained damage by a collision, and put into a port for repairs. The beans having become wetted by salt water, the shippers, through their agent, offered to receive the cargo and pay pro rata freight. The master refused to deliver the cargo except upon receipt of the whole freight, and proceeded with his vessel to the port of discharge.

Upon its arrival it was found that the damage to the beans by the collision had been materially enhanced by their detention on board after they had been saturated with salt water. The increased damage would have been avoided if the beans had been unshipped, dried and reshipped at the port of refuge, the cost of which might have been charged to the cargo as particular average:—Held, that, assuming that the precautions above mentioned would not have unreasonably delayed the voyage, the shipowner was liable for the additional damage. Ib.

Expense of Preserving Perishable Cargo—Liability of Cargo Owner.]—Cargo owner held liable for the expense of unloading cargo for its preservation, he being present and giving no instructions. Garriock v. Walker, 1 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 100.

Damage by Excepted Perils—Duty of Master to Minimise.]—It is the duty of the master to take reasonable precautions that cargo damaged by excepted perils is not greater than necessary. Adam v. Morris, 18 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 153.

And see infra, col. 538, 9. DELIVERY AND DISCHARGE, c. WAREHOUSING.

b. To Tranship.

Duty of Master.]—When a question is raised as to the duty of the master in a port of distress to have transhipped the cargo, it must be considered that his first duty is to carry his cargo to its port of destination in the same bottom. The Hamburg, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 289; Br. & Lush. 253; 33 L. J., Adm. 116; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 600; 10 L. T. 206; 12 W. R. 628.

Where a master has a reasonable opportunity, according to the circumstances of the case, of communicating from the port of distress with the owners of the cargo and receiving directions from them, it is his first duty to endeavour to obtain such directions. Ib.

The master only becomes agent for the owners of the cargo ex necessitate rei. Ib.

Where a ship is by perils of the sea so much damaged as to be incapable of repair so as to prosecute the adventure, except at an expense exceeding her value, together with the freight, when repaired, the master is justified in abandoning the voyage, and is not bound as agent of his owner to send the goods on in another bottom. De Cuadra v. Swann, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 772.

—— Ascertained by what Law.]—The duty of a master to carry on, tranship or deliver the cargo at an intermediate port of refuge, implied in a bill of lading given by the master of a foreign vessel, will be ascertained by reference to the law of the flag which the vessel carries, not by reference to the lex loci contractûs or the lex fori, or the law of the place where the alleged breach of contract by the master is committed. The Bahia, Br. & Lush. 292; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 90; 12 L. T. 145.

If a vessel, during her voyage, is injured, and is compelled to put into a port of refuge, then, by English law, the master is not bound to tranship. He is allowed a reasonable time, either to repair and carry on or to tranship. If he declines to do either, he may be called upon to deliver, without payment of any freight; but before a reasonable time has elapsed he cannot be required to deliver, except on payment of full freight, or waiver thereof. In estimating what is reasonable time, the court will take all circumstances into consideration, including any delay caused by the vis major of competent authorities, administrative or judicial. Ib.

A bill of lading in English was given by the master of a French vessel lying in New York, by which the goods were made deliverable in a French port. The vessel during her voyage suffered injury, and put into a port in England. The assignees of the bill of lading and owners of the cargo being British subjects, instituted an action in the court of admiralty for a breach of duty by the master in respect of his obligation to carry on, tranship or deliver. The court ascertained the duty of the master by reference to the law of France. Ib.

Vessel Liable to Capture.]—By German law, if a vessel is liable to risk of capture, either party may withdraw from the contract of affreightment, but the master is not obliged to part with the cargo or to tranship it, unless distance freight, as well as all other claims of the shipowner and the contributions due from the cargo for general average, have been paid or secured:—Held, that a demand upon the master to tranship at his own risk and expense was not such a compliance with the German law as obliged him to tranship. The Express, 41 L. J., Adm. 79; L. R. 3 A. & E. 597; 26 L. T. 956; 1 Asp. M. C. 355.

Repairing instead of.]—If in the course of a voyage a ship carrying cargo is damaged by perils of the sea, the shipowner intending to carry the cargo to its destination is entitled to a reasonable time for repairing his ship or for transhipping, and for this purpose to retain the cargo. Galam, Cargo ex, Br. & Lush. 167; 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 216; 3 N. R. 254; 33 L. J., Adm. 97; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 477; 9 L. T. 550; 12 W. R. 495.

Negligent Reshipping of Cargo by Third Parties—Consent of Captain.]—Gunpowder was shipped for Valparaiso on board a vessel chartered on a voyage to that port, with liberty to touch and stay at the Falkland Islands. On the arrival of the vessel at Port Stanley, where the captain had goods to unload for the defendants, it was found that by the regulations of the port it would be necessary to land and store the powder before the vessel could enter the harbour. To avoid the inconvenience and expense of this, the captain accepted the offer of the agent of the defendants of the use of a vessel belonging to them, called the "Fairy," in which to place the powder during his stay at Port Stanley. The defendants' agent afterwards requiring the "Fairy" for another purpose, without the consent of the captain transhipped the powder to a half-decked vessel called the "Lily," which was an unsafe and improper vessel for the purpose. Whilst the "Lily" was anchored outside the harbour a storm arose, and she was sunk, and the powder lost:—Held, that the defendants were responsible for the value, for that they were either trespassers in removing the powder without the captain's consent, or bailees who had been guilty of want of reasonable care. Ronneberg v. Falkland Islands Co., 17 C. B. (N.S.) 1; 34 L. J., C. P. 34; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 940; 10 L. T. 530; 12 W. R. 914.

—— Costs of Unsuccessful Defence.]—On the arrival of the ship at Valparaiso, the consignees of the powder demanded it from the captain, and, not obtaining it, took proceedings against the ship, which the captain unsuccessfully resisted, being ultimately compelled to pay the consignees the value of the powder and the costs:—Held, that the owners of the ship could not claim these costs from the defendants, they not being a necessary consequence of their wrongful act. Ib.

c. To Sell—Power of Master.

At Intermediate Port without Owner's Consent.]—A master of a vessel cannot at an intermediate port sell goods which are damaged, and cannot be carried to the port of discharge, without communicating with their owner. Acatos v. Burns, 47 L. J., Ex. 566; 3 Ex. D. 282; 26 W. R. 624—C. A.

Possibility of Communication with Owner.]—The possibility of communicating with the owner depends on the circumstances of each case, involving the consideration of the facts which create the urgency for an early sale, the distance of the port from the owner, the means of communication which may exist, and the general position of the master in the particular emergency. Australasian Steam Navigation Co. v. Morse, infra, col. 524.

Such a communication need only be made when an answer can be obtained, or there is a reasonable expectation that it can be obtained, before the sale. Ib.

When, however, there is ground for such an expectation, every endeavour, so far as the position in which he is placed will allow, should be made by the master to obtain the owner's instructions. Ib.

The master is bound to employ the telegraph as a means of communication, where it can usefully be done; but the state of the particular telegraph, the way in which it is managed, and the possibility of transmitting explanatory messages, are proper subjects to be considered in determining the question of the practicability of communication. Ib.

Necessity for Sale must be Shewn.]—On the 19th of April an Austrian ship, with a valuable cargo on board, ran upon a rock on the eastern side of Algoa Bay, distant fifty miles by sea and about eighty by land from Port Elizabeth. The Austrian consul at Port Elizabeth came to the spot, and, there being no hope of getting the vessel off, he advised the master to sell her with the cargo. The master accordingly advertised the ship and cargo for sale, and they were sold in one lot by auction on the 30th of April for 9,500*l.*, after a brisk competition. The purchaser got some part of the cargo out of the wreck, but on the 19th of June the ship went to pieces with the rest of the cargo on board. The owners of the cargo having abandoned it to the underwriters as a total loss, the underwriters filed their bill to have the goods which had been brought to land delivered to them as not having been effectually sold. The master had not gone to Port Elizabeth, nor endeavoured to procure funds to enable him to save the cargo; nor had he made any effort to induce any persons to undertake the salvage of the cargo. Several witnesses at Port Elizabeth deposed that in their opinion no person could have been induced to undertake the salvage; others gave their opinion that offers to save the cargo could have been obtained if a large percentage of the net proceeds had been offered. There was a good deal of evidence to shew that, in the opinion of persons on the spot, the course which had been adopted of selling the wreck and cargo was the most advisable one in the interest of all parties concerned:—Held, that no such necessity was proved to have existed as would make the master the agent of the owners of the cargo to effect a sale; that the sale was void; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the cargo saved, subject to a proper allowance for salvage and other expenses. Atlantic Mutual Marine Insurance Co. v. Huth, 16 Ch. D. 474; 44 L. T. 67; 29 W. R. 387—C. A.

The authority of the master to sell the goods of an absent owner is derived from the necessity of the situation in which he is placed; and, consequently, to justify his selling, he must establish a necessity for the sale; and an inability to communicate with the owner. Australasian Steam Navigation Co. v. Morse, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 482; L. R. 4 P. C. 222; 27 L. T. 357; 20 W. R. 728.

Under these conditions, and by force of them, the master becomes the agent of the owner, not only with the power, but under the obligation (within certain limits) of acting for him; but he is not, in any case, entitled to substitute his own judgment for the will of the owner, in selling the goods, where it is possible to communicate with the owner. Ib.

In cases of necessity affecting the interest of the shipper, and where the sale of the cargo is directly or indirectly for his benefit, the master of the vessel becomes his agent for the purpose of selling the cargo. Duncan v. Benson, 3 Ex. 644; 18 L. J., Ex. 169; 12 Jur. 218—Ex. Ch.

Sufficiency of Evidence of Authority.]—B. chartered a ship warranted tight and seaworthy, and took on board the goods of several persons. The ship proved unseaworthy, the goods were damaged, and the master sold them at a foreign port. The owners brought an action against the charterer for the loss of the cargo; a correspondence then ensued between him and the owner, and it was ultimately settled that a jury should assess damages, which they did at 5,000*l.*, and costs 1,000*l.* The charterer then sued the owner of the vessel for this decree, on the breach of the conditions of the charterparty, and allowed him the amount received by the master for the sale of the sugar:—Held, that very slight evidence would be sufficient to prove the master's authority to sell the damaged cargo. Blyth v. Smith, 6 Scott (N.R.) 360; 5 Man. & G. 405; 12 L. J., C. P. 203; 7 Jur. 948.

Mere Deterioration of Cargo.]—A cargo of opium, shipped at Calcutta, was, by the bill of lading, to be delivered at Hong Kong. The ship came in collision at sea with another vessel, and received so much injury as to compel her to put in at Singapore, where the cargo was found to be partially damaged by the salt water. The master, who acted bonâ fide, and to the best of his judgment, selected the damaged chests of opium, and sold them by auction, and forwarded the remainder to Hong Kong. The master might have had the damaged opium redried and repacked while the vessel was refitting, and have forwarded it, though deteriorated in value, with the other opium:—Held, that it was the duty of the master to carry the cargo to its place of destination, as the goods could have been delivered in a merchantable, although in a damaged state. Tronson v. Dent, 8 Moore, P. C. 419.

Port of Distress—Law of the Flag.]—The plaintiffs, who were British subjects, shipped pepper at Singapore, on board the German ship "August," to be carried with other cargo to London. The ship met with bad weather, and was obliged to put into Cape Town, the ship and portions of her cargo having sustained damage. The master, acting on the advice of surveyors, sold a portion of the plaintiff's pepper, with other cargo. In an action for breach of contract and for conversion:—Held, that the conduct of the master in selling the pepper in question was to be determined by German law, that being the law of the flag. The August, 60 L. J., Adm. 57; [1891] P. 328; 66 L. T. 32; 7 Asp. M. C. 110.

Perishing Cargo—Duty to Sell.]—If a cargo in a port of distress is in a perishing condition, and the ship in need of repairs, the master must decide whether to tranship or sell the cargo; if he cannot tranship, he is bound to sell the cargo and not to let it perish; if acting according to his reasonable judgment he sells for the benefit of all concerned, the purchaser is safe, even though the master acts unwisely. The Gratitudine, 3 C. Rob. 240, 259.

Ship Damaged, Cargo Uninjured—Duty of Master.]—Where the ship is damaged and unable to proceed, the master is not justified in selling the cargo, it being uninjured, notwithstanding an exception in the bill of lading of "dangers and accidents of the seas and navigation." Cannan v. Meaburn, 1 Bing. 243, 465; 1 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 84; 2 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 60; 8 Moore, 127.

Sale of Cargo by Order of Vice-Admiralty Court.]—Sale of cargo by master under order of vice-admiralty court at Mauritius without necessity, treated as void in action by cargo owner against purchaser. Morris v. Robinson, 5 D. & R. 35; 3 B. & C. 196; 27 R. R. 322. S. P., Freeman v. East India Co., 5 B. & Ald. 621; 1 D. & R. 234; 24 R. R. 497.

Master no Authority to Sell.]—A master has no authority to sell cargo in a foreign port to which he is driven, although it is impossible for him to carry it to its destination. If he does so, though acting bonâ fide and for the benefit of all parties, he is guilty of conversion, for which the shipowner is liable. Van Omeron v. Dowick, 2 Camp. 42; 11 R. R. 656.

Sale Abroad—Effect of Foreign Law.]—The agent in Russia of an English merchant, resident in England, shipped in Russia a cargo of deals on board a Prussian vessel, owned by a Prussian captain, to be carried to Hull, consigned to the English merchant under an ordinary bill of lading. The vessel was wrecked on the coast of Norway, but the cargo was brought safely on shore there, and could have been reshipped and sent on to England. By the law of Norway, a captain of a vessel placed in this position, though responsible to the owners if he sells improperly, has power to sell the cargo so as to convey a good title to a bonâ fide purchaser. The captain, in the exercise of his discretion, and without any absolute necessity, sold the cargo to a bonâ fide purchaser, who resold the cargo to the defendant, who sent it to England, when the plaintiff, representing the English merchant, the original owner, claimed the cargo and brought an action for it:—Held, that the action could not be maintained, on the ground that the property in the cargo passed to the purchaser by the sale in Norway, according to the law of that country; that the courts of this country will recognise the Norwegian law in this respect, and that the property could not be divested by the cargo being afterwards brought to England. Cammell v. Sewell, 5 H. & N. 728; 29 L. J., Ex. 350; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 918; 2 L. T. 799; 8 W. R. 639—Ex. Ch.

Liability of Shipowner.]—The plaintiffs wishing to send cement and stone from London to Callao, the defendants on the 24th of June wrote offering them "room" for it in the ship "F. K. Dumas," and on the 25th of June the defendants chartered the ship of the owners for a voyage from London to Callao by a charterparty, providing, inter alia, that the whole ship should be at the disposal of the charterers, except the space necessary for the crew and stores; that the master and owners should give the same attention to the cargo, and in every respect be responsible to all whom it might concern, as if the ship were loaded in her berth by and for the owners independently of the charter; that the master was to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight the charterers might require without prejudice to the charterparty; that the ship should be addressed to the charterers' nominees at the port of discharge: and the charterers' responsibility, except for freight, was to cease on the vessel being loaded. On the 26th of June an agreement was made between the defendants "acting for the owners" of the ship, and the plaintiffs, that the former should receive on board cement and stone at a certain freight from London to Callao and sail on a certain date; freight to be paid one-half on signing bills of lading and the remainder on final discharge at Callao. The cement and stone were shipped, half freight was paid, and the master signed bills of lading making the other half payable at Callao, and the ship sailed, but being damaged by bad weather put into an intermediate port, where she was condemned, and the captain sold the plaintiffs' goods, believing that he was unable to forward them. The plaintiffs having sued the defendants for the value, the jury found that the sale was not justified:—Held, that the captain, in selling the goods, was not acting as the servant or agent of the defendants, and they were therefore not liable for the conversion. Wagstaff v. Anderson, 49 L. J., C. P. 485; 5 C. P. D. 171; 44 L. T. 720; 28 W. R. 856—C. A.

Trover lies against a shipowner for a sale by the master, of goods at a place short of the port of destination, under circumstances not inconsistent with the general scope of the authority conferred upon the master by the owner. Ewbank v. Nutting, 7 C. B. 797.

A cargo of salt was shipped at Liverpool for Calcutta, under a bill of lading making the same deliverable to A. & Co. on payment of freight there as per charterparty. The ship sustained damage in quitting the harbour at Liverpool, and ultimately became so leaky, that the master was compelled to run for Bahia, where, finding the state of the ship such as to render her incapable of continuing the voyage, and being unable to forward the salt to its destination, he sold it by public auction, remitting the proceeds to his owner, who tendered the amount, after making deductions for general average and expenses, to the shipper of the salt:—Held, that the master and owner were jointly liable for the conversion, that it was not necessary to give the charterparty in evidence, and that the jury was warranted in estimating the damages at the cost price of the salt, and the sum the shipper had paid on account of the freight. Ib.

Sale of Part—Measure of Damages.]—Where a master sells part of a shipper's goods at an intermediate port, in order to raise money to provide for the repairs or other expenses of the vessel which are necessary to enable him to prosecute and complete the voyage, and the ship does not arrive at her port of destination, the shipper is not entitled to receive the clear value for which the goods would have sold at that port. Atkinson v. Stephens, 7 Ex. 567; 21 L. J., Ex. 329.

Sale for Repairs.]—Terms on which master restrained from selling for repairs. See Rayne v. Benedict, supra, col. 88.

9. Delivery and Discharge.

a. Time.

Delay caused by Vis Major.]—When a charterparty is silent as to the time within which the cargo is to be unloaded at the port of destination, the contract implied by law is that the shipowner and the charterer shall each perform his part, and neither is answerable for delay caused by vis major. Ford v. Cotesworth, 10 B. & S. 991; 39 L. J., Q. B. 188; L. R. 5 Q. B. 544; 23 L. T. 165; 18 W. R. 1169—Ex. Ch.

A charterparty for a voyage from Liverpool to Lima or Valparaiso provided that the vessel should proceed to the port of discharge, or as near thereto as she could safely get, and there deliver her cargo in the usual and customary manner. A specified number of days was agreed upon for loading the vessel at Liverpool, but there was no such agreement as to the discharge at her port of destination. The vessel arrived at the port of discharge, and remained discharging till, owing to apprehension of a bombardment by a hostile fleet, the authorities suspended all landing of goods for seven days, after which she returned, and her discharge was completed:—Held, that the discharge of the cargo being an act to be done by the shipowner and freighter, the shipowner could not maintain an action against the freighter for the loss from the delay occasioned by the vis major. Ib. See Cunningham v. Dunn, 48 L. J., C. P. 62; 3 C. P. D. 443; 38 L. T. 631—C. A. And cases ante, cols. 285, 507.

Refusal of Authorities to allow Cargo to be Landed — Freight.] — A cargo of petroleum belonging to an English owner was shipped on board an English ship in London, under a bill of lading whereby the goods were to be delivered in the port of Havre, subject to the usual exceptions. It was stipulated that demurrage was to be paid if the goods were not taken out within twenty-four hours after arrival. The local authorities refused to allow the petroleum to be landed at Havre, and compelled the ship to leave the port without unloading any of her cargo. The master, having made unsuccessful attempts to land the petroleum at other ports, returned to Havre and transhipped it into a lighter in the roads while he went into dock, unloaded the rest of his cargo, and reloaded for his return voyage. He was then compelled by the authorities to reship the petroleum, and brought it back to London. No bill of lading was presented to him, nor any request made by the consignees for delivery:—Held, first, that the master having been ready and able to give delivery in the harbour, and having kept the goods a reasonable time there for the purpose, the freight had been earned. Argos, Cargo ex, Gaudet v. Brown, L. R. 5 P. C. 134; 28 L. T. 745; 21 W. R. 707.

Held, secondly, that all obligation on the part of a master to act for the merchant does not cease after a reasonable time for the latter to take delivery of the cargo has expired, and that therefore the master was entitled to compensation for bringing the goods back to England, as that was the best way of making them available to the owner, and also for the expenses incurred at Havre. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that he was not entitled to demurrage, and the expenses of attempting to enter other ports, as they were incurred before the ship was ready to deliver at all in the port of Havre. Ib.

Embargo.]—The defendant contracted to carry the plaintiff's goods from Liverpool to Leghorn; on the vessel's arriving at Falmouth, in the course of her voyage, an embargo was laid on her "until the further order of council":—Held, that such embargo only suspended, but did not dissolve the contract between the parties; and that, even after two years, when the embargo was taken off, the defendant was answerable to the plaintiff in damages for the non-performance of the contract. Hadley v. Clarke, 8 Term Rep. 259; 4 R. R. 641.

Obligation to Unload Ship in Reasonable Time.]—By a charterparty entered into between the plaintiff and G. it was agreed that the plaintiff's vessel should at the port of discharge be unloaded as fast as the custom of the port would allow. By the bill of lading, signed by the master, the cargo was stated to have been shipped by G. and was to be delivered to the defendant or his assigns, he or they paying freight for the goods as per charterparty. No time for the discharge of the cargo was mentioned in the bill of lading. At the port of discharge there was no custom as to unloading vessels, but a delay occurred in unloading the ship. The defendant never assigned the bill of lading, but before the arrival of the ship he sold the cargo, and the ultimate purchaser took delivery of it upon an order signed by the defendant:—Held, in an action for not discharging within a reasonable time, that, as there was no custom of the port of discharge as to unloading vessels, the charterparty did not by its terms vary the implied contract contained in the bill of lading to deliver the cargo within a reasonable time. Fowler v. Knoop, 48 L. J., Q. B. 333; 4 Q. B. D. 229; 40 L. T. 180; 27 W. R. 299; 4 Asp. M. C. 68—C. A.

Delivery—Presentation of Bill of Lading.]—See The Stettin, infra, col. 314.

Deviation in Course of Voyage and Delay in Delivery—Risk of War.]—The master of a Prussian vessel, a subject of the king of Prussia, having on board a cargo of nitrate of soda (contraband of war) under a charterparty, and a bill of lading from Pisagua, bound to Cork, Cowes, or Falmouth, for orders to proceed to any safe port in Great Britain or on the continent between Havre and Hamburg, both included, and there deliver the cargo, "the act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire, and all and every other risk, dangers, and accidents of the seas, rivers, and navigation of whatever nature and kind soever excepted"; arrived at Falmouth on the 10th of July, 1870, and received orders on the 11th of that month to proceed to the French port Dunkirk, and there deliver her cargo. On the ship's arrival off Dunkirk on the 16th the master was informed by a French pilot that war had broken out between France and Prussia, whereupon the master put back to the Downs to make inquiries, and anchored there on the 17th, which was Sunday. On the 18th, having telegraphed to the owner of the vessel for instructions, he was ordered not to go to Dunkirk, and on the 19th he put into Dover, where he was informed, as the fact was, that war, which had been imminent from the 10th, had been declared between France and the North German Confederation, formal declaration thereof having been given as upon the 19th of July:—Held, that the master was justified in putting back to the Downs for the purpose of ascertaining whether war had been declared, and was guilty of no improper deviation or delay in not returning to Dunkirk before the 19th of July, when war was actually declared. The Teutonia, Duncan v. Köster, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 411; 41 L. J., Adm. 57; L. R. 4 P. C. 171; 26 L. T. 48; 20 W. R. 421.

Held, also, that the master committed no breach of contract in refusing to deliver the cargo at Dunkirk, and as the charterparty provided what freight was to be paid if the cargo was delivered, the delivery at Dover was within the terms of the charterparty, and the master was entitled to freight for the cargo from the owners before delivery. Ib.

When a master receives credible information that if he continues in the direct course of his voyage his ship will be exposed to some imminent peril—as from pirates, or icebergs, or other dangers of navigation—he is justified in pausing and deviating from the direct course, and taking any step that a prudent man would take for the purpose of avoiding the danger. Ib.

By a charterparty in the English language entered into at Constantinople between the master of a North German vessel, and North German merchants there resident, it was agreed that the vessel should load a cargo, and proceed therewith to Falmouth, Plymouth, or Queenstown, for orders for a safe port in the United Kingdom, or on the continent between Havre and Hamburg, Queen's enemies, &c., excepted. The cargo was laden. The vessel sailed, but her master learning on his voyage that war existed between France and Germany, and fearing capture by French cruisers, put into Gibraltar. During the war there would have been great risk of capture off that port and off the ports of call if the vessel had continued her voyage; her master in consequence remained there until the end of the war (nine months). He then sailed, and arriving at a port of call was ordered to an English port. The cargo was damaged by the delay. In a claim by the consignees:—Held, that by both English and North German law the master was justified in putting into and remaining in port, and that the shipowners were not responsible for the damage caused by the delay. The Express, 41 L. J., Adm. 79; L. R. 3 A. & E. 597; 26 L. T. 956; 1 Asp. M. C. 355.

—— Risk of Capture.]—An apprehension of capture founded on circumstances calculated to affect the mind of a master of ordinary courage, judgment, and experience, will justify delay in the prosecution of a voyage; and a ship is not answerable in a suit under the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, s. 6, for damage to cargo caused by such delay. The San Roman, Anderson v. San Roman (Owners), 42 L. J., Adm. 46; L. R. 5 P. C. 301; 12 W. R. 393; 28 L. T. 381; 1 Asp. M. C. 603.

A charterparty was entered into between an English and a German firm, the owners of a vessel belonging to Hamburg. The charterparty provided that the vessel should proceed to a foreign port, and there load a cargo, and proceed to a port within certain limits mentioned. After the making of the charterparty, and the shipment of the goods, war broke out between Germany and France. On the homeward voyage the ship sustained damage, and was compelled to put into a neutral port for repairs; and finding that French cruisers were in the vicinity, she remained there for a long time after the repairs were completed, to avoid the risk of capture. The risk was such as to render it reasonable and prudent for the master to remain in port. On the departure of the cruisers the master sailed on his voyage, and delivered the cargo according to orders:—Held, that the delay was justifiable. Ib.

The master of a North German ship lying at Constantinople entered into a charterparty with North German subjects, there resident, to carry a cargo to a port in the United Kingdom or on the continent, to be delivered to English consignees. The charterparty and the bill of lading given under it were in the English language, and it was stipulated that the ship should call at one of three ports in the United Kingdom for orders. The ship duly called at Falmouth, and was ordered to proceed to an English port to discharge. War then existed between France and Germany. The master sailed from Falmouth, but, through a reasonable fear of capture, put into Dunkirk. The cargo was damaged by the delay:—Held, that the contract was to be construed according to English law, and that the master was justified. The Wilhelm Schmidt, 25 L. T. 34; 1 Asp. M. C. 82.

A North German vessel shipped goods in the Black Sea for a port in the United Kingdom or on the continent under an English charterparty, by which she was to call at Falmouth or Plymouth for orders, such orders to be given by the charterer's agent in London by return of post, on receipt of the master's announcement of his arrival. She arrived at Falmouth on August 9th. Orders were given, but not till September 3rd, to proceed to Leith; but from that date to the arrest of the ship, on September 21st, negotiations were going on for discharge of the cargo at Falmouth. Between those dates the winds were light and variable, and the master remained in port for fear of capture by French cruisers in the channel, war then existing between France and Germany:—Held, that the delay was reasonable, and that neither by English nor German law was the master bound to proceed, and that the negotiations waived the orders to proceed. The Heinrich, L. R. 3 A. & E. 424; 24 L. T. 914; 1 Asp. M. C. 79.

Loss of Cargo after Deviation.]—The law implies a duty on the owner of a vessel, whether a general ship or hired for the special purpose of the voyage, to proceed without unnecessary deviation from the usual course. Davis v. Garrett, 6 Bing. 716; 4 M. & P. 540; 8 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 253; 31 R. R. 524.

A. put on board B.'s barge, lime to be conveyed from the Medway to London. The master of the barge deviated unnecessarily from the usual course, and, during the deviation, a tempest wetted the lime, and the barge taking fire thereby, the whole was lost:—Held, that B. was liable, and the cause of loss sufficiently proximate to entitle A. to recover under a declaration alleging B.'s duty to carry the lime without unnecessary deviation, and averring a loss by unnecessary deviation, Ib.

A count, stating that the defendants being owners of a ship at Liverpool bound on a voyage thence to Waterford, the plaintiff shipped goods on board, to be carried upon that voyage by the defendants, and to be delivered at W. to the plaintiff's assigns, and thereupon the plaintiff insured the goods at and from L. to W.; and then averring that it was the duty of the defendants, as such owners, to cause the ship to proceed on the voyage from L. to W. without deviation; and alleging a breach of such duty by their causing the ship to deviate from the course of that voyage; after which she was lost with the goods; and the plaintiff by reason of such deviation lost his goods and the benefit of his policy—cannot be sustained for want of alleging, that the goods were delivered to or received by the defendants for the purpose of carriage, or that they had notice of the shipment, whence a promise or a duty founded upon an agreement to carry the goods might be inferred; and also for want of an allegation, that the defendants undertook to carry the goods directly to W. from L.; for, though the ship's ultimate destination might be W., yet she might have been first destined to other places on a coasting voyage. Max v. Roberts, 12 East, 89; 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 454.

The owners of vessels on the navigation between A. and C., having given public notice that they would not be answerable for losses in any case, except the loss was occasioned by the want of care in the master, nor even in such cases beyond 10*l.* per cent., unless extra freight was paid, the master of one of the ships took on board goods to be carried from A. to B. (an intermediate place between A. and C.) and delivered at B.: the vessel passed by B. without delivering the goods there, and sunk before her arrival at C., without any want of care in the master:—Held, that the owner of the vessel was responsible to the owner of the goods for the whole loss. Ellis v. Turner, 8 Term Rep. 531; 5 R. R. 441.

"Cargo to be brought to and taken from alongside free of Expense and Risk to the Ship."]—The defendants chartered the plaintiffs' vessel, the "C.," for a voyage to the port of L. The charterparty provided that the cargo was "to be brought to and taken alongside free of expense and risk of the ship"; but it contained no other clause as to discharging the cargo. The number of lighters at L. was small, and when the "C." arrived the port was crowded with vessels, about half of which belonged to the defendants or had been consigned to them. Seventy-two days elapsed after the arrival of the "C." before her discharge was completed by the defendants' agents; but the number of days upon which the cargo was unloaded was only thirty-four. The delay arose from the lighters being engaged in discharging the other vessels lying at the port:—Held, that in determining whether the terms of the charterparty had been broken by the defendants, the delay occasioned by the lighters being engaged in discharging other vessels was not to be taken into account. Wright v. New Zealand Shipping Co., 4 Ex. D. 165; 40 L. T. 413; 4 Asp. M. C. 118—C. A.

"Cargo to be discharged with all Despatch according to the Custom of the Port."]—The defendants chartered the plaintiff's vessel, the "C.," to carry a cargo of rails to the port of L. The charterparty provided that the cargo should be taken from alongside at merchants' risk and expense, and should be "discharged with all despatch according to the custom of the port." By the custom of the port of L. vessels were discharged by lighters worked along a warp, and upon the arrival of a vessel she was reported at the port office, and in her turn, with respect to vessels which had previously arrived, one lighter was sent to her every working day until she was discharged. Upon the arrival of the "C." at L., in consequence of the scarcity of suitable lighters, and the number of vessels lying there, the defendants were unable to begin to discharge until twenty-four working days had elapsed. In an action to recover damages for the detention of the "C." at L. during these twenty-four days, the judge directed the jury that there was no obligation upon the defendants to provide one lighter for unloading the cargo of the "C." for every working day after she was ready to unload, and that if the defendants used the existing appliances at L. with due despatch, according to the custom of the port, the jury ought to find for them:—Held, that the direction was correct. Postlethwaite v. Freeland, 49 L. J., Ex. 630; 5 App. Cas. 599; 42 L. T. 845; 28 W. R. 833; 4 Asp. M. C. 302—H. L. (E.)

Delivery of Cargo according to Custom of Port.]—A shipowner was sued on a clause in a bill of lading, by which he was bound to forward the goods by steamer from London to a foreign port, the breach of duty being in not using due diligence to do so, whereby the season was lost:—Held, that it was not enough that he had let the discharge and sorting of the cargo take the usual course of business at the docks where the vessel discharged, if he neglected means which might well have been used to hasten the sorting, and to procure vessels for the transhipment. Carali v. Xenos, 2 F. & F. 740.

Delivery prevented by Circumstances beyond Charterer's Control—Implied Contract.]—When, by a charterparty, a given number of days is allowed to the charterer for unloading, a contract is implied on his part that, from the time when the ship is at the usual place of discharge he will take the risk of any ordinary vicissitudes which may occur to prevent his releasing the ship at the expiration of the lay-days. Tiis or Thiis v. Byers, 45 L. J., Q. B. 511; 1 Q. B. D. 244; 34 L. T. 526; 24 W. R. 611.

Delayed by Stress of Weather.]—When the shipowner was prevented from unloading and the charterer from receiving by stress of weather after the arrival of the ship:—Held, that the charterer was liable under the above rule. Ib.

Delivery and Payment of Freight — Concurrent Acts.]—By the terms of a bill of lading freight was to be paid, one-third in cash on arrival at B. and two-thirds on right delivery of cargo, by good and approved bills or cash, at shipper's option. The vessel arrived at B., the one-third freight was paid, and the consignee elected to pay the two-thirds in cash:—Held, that the delivery of the cargo and payment of the balance of the freight were to be concurrent acts, and that the master was not bound to deliver the cargo unless the consignee paid, or was ready and willing at the same time to pay, the balance of the freight. Paynter v. James, 18 L. T. 449; 16 W. R. 768—Ex. Ch.

A master hearing that war had broken out between two powers, to one of which his vessel belonged, stopped at a neutral port for the purpose of obtaining intelligence. While he was thus justifiably engaged in inquiries the consignees demanded delivery of cargo without any payment of freight:—Held, that the master was justified in refusing to deliver the cargo. The Teutonia, 8 Moore, P. C. 411; 41 L. J., Adm. 57; L. R. 4 P. C. 171; 26 L. T. 48; 20 W. R. 421.

Sale of Cargo — Purchaser to Discharge—Practice — Third Party Order — Ord. XVI. rr. 17, 18.]—An action was brought against the defendants for breach of charterparty, by which they had agreed to discharge a cargo of nitrate of soda as fast as the custom of the port would allow. The defendants had sold, at Liverpool, to a company carrying on business in Scotland, the cargo to arrive, and it was shewn that by the custom of the trade, of which the company were aware, on such sale of a cargo the buyers would be bound to discharge in accordance with the custom of the port:—Held, that the defendants were entitled to a third party order against the company. Swansea Shipping Co. v. Duncan, Fox & Co., 45 L. J., Q. B. 638; 1 Q. B. D. 644; 35 L. T. 879; 25 W. R. 233; 3 Asp. M. C. 345—C. A.

Delivery—Defects of Ship's Gear.]—Part of a cargo of salt was lost during the discharge by reason of defects in the ship's gear. By the charterparty the cargo was to be "brought to and taken from alongside":—Held, that the shipowners were liable. Avon Steamship Co. v. Leask, 18 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 280.

Consignee not ready to Receive—Refusal of Shipowner to deliver Part.] — The bill of lading provided that the consignee of goods should be ready to receive them at the ship's side as soon as she was ready to deliver, and in default that the shipowner was to land them at the consignee's risk and expense. The consignee was not ready to receive the goods, and, when part had been landed by the shipowner, he claimed delivery of the rest. The shipowner refused, and landed the rest himself:—Held, that, unless prejudiced by such delivery, the shipowner was bound to deliver to the consignee the part of the goods claimed. Semble, the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 67, should be similarly construed. Wilson v. London, Italian and Adriatic Steam Navigation Co., 1 H. & R. 29; L. R. 1 C. P. 61; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 522; 13 L. T. 465.

Landing Goods without Notice to Consignee —Liability for Loss by Fire after Landing.]—A carrier by sea, under a bill of lading of goods, "to be delivered in the like good order, &c., at the port of, &c., unto A. or his assigns, on paying for the goods, freight and charges, as per margin, with primage and average accustomed," is not entitled, immediately on the arrival of the vessel, and without notice to the owner, to land the goods; and if he should land them, and they should be destroyed by fire, he will be answerable to the owner for the loss. Bourne v. Gatliff, 11 Cl. & F. 45; 8 Scott (N.R.) 604; 7 Man. & G. 850.

Liability of Shipowner to cease on Delivery from Deck.] — Goods were shipped under a bill of lading which contained these words, "to be delivered from the ship's deck, where the ship's responsibility is to cease." The usage at the port required that the unloading should be done by the dock company, at the expense of the shipowner, on to a quay, and then that the consignee should send lighters into which the goods were delivered also by the dock company, and also, if not within a specific time, at the expense of the shipowner. The usage was followed, but one bale of goods was lost after delivery on to the quay, and before delivery into the lighters:—Held, that the shipowner was not responsible for the loss to the consignee. Petrocochino v. Bott, 43 L. J., C. P. 214; L. R. 9 C. P. 355; 30 L. T. 840; 2 Asp. M. C. 310.

Refusal to Deliver without Payment of Freight —Liability for Demurrage.]—By charterparty the shipowner agreed with the freighter to deliver cargo at a named port on payment of freight according to bills of lading; lay days allowed, and demurrage afterwards; the bills of lading stipulated for delivery to the freighter or his assigns paying freight as by charterparty. The defendant, assignee of the bill of lading, demanded and received delivery of part of the goods, but the plaintiff refused to deliver the rest without payment of freight. The defendant refused to pay freight and the remaining lay days expired and demurrage became payable. The plaintiff then delivered the rest of the goods and freight was paid:—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover against the defendant for not receiving the goods, whereby demurrage became payable. Young v. Moeller, 5 El. & Bl. 7, 755.

Delivery on Wharf contrary to Orders—Wharfage Dues—Trover.]—The owner of goods on board a ship directed the master not to land them on the wharf against which the ship was lying, which he promised not to do, but afterwards did, delivering to the wharfinger for the owner's use, thinking that there was a lien for wharfage dues:—Held, that the goods owner could maintain trover against the captain unless the latter could prove the wharfinger's right. Syeds v. Hay, 4 Term Rep. 260; 2 R. R. 377.

Sufferance Wharfs.]—The acts relating to landing goods at a sufferance wharf were for the protection of the shipowner. Barber v. Meyerstein, 39 L. J., C. P. 187; L. R. 4 H. L. 317; 22 L. T. 808; 18 W. R. 1041.

Delivery, when Complete.]—Where goods are shipped for delivery at a certain port, the general rule is that delivery of each bale is complete as soon as it passes over the ship's side into the hands of the harbour porters employed by the consignees. British Shipowners Co. v. Grimoud, 3 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 968.

b. Manner.

Discharge of Cargo "into Lighters"—Duties of Shipowner and Consignee.]—The plaintiff's ship was chartered for the carriage of a cargo of spars from Christiania to the Surrey Commercial Docks in the port of London. By the charterparty the ship was to discharge "over side in the river or dock into lighters or otherwise if required by consignees." In an action by the plaintiff against the consignees of the cargo for demurrage:—Held, that under the charterparty the shipowner was only bound to put the goods within the reach of the consignees' men in the lighters, and that it was then their duty to take part in the operation; that the delay had arisen from the fault of the consignees in not having a sufficient number of men upon their lighters for the purposes of taking delivery within the lay days, and that the shipowner was therefore entitled to claim demurrage. Petersen v. Freebody, 65 L. J., Q. B. 12; [1895] 2 Q. B. 294; 14 R. 493; 73 L. T. 163; 44 W. R. 5; 8 Asp. M. C. 55—C. A.

Deals—Delivery into the Water—Acquiescence by Consignees.]—By charterparty a timber cargo was to be delivered as customary at the port of discharge at a wharf or dock to be named by the consignees. The ship was ordered by the consignees to discharge at Queen's Dock, Glasgow, but the harbour-master refused a berth there and ordered the ship to a berth where the deals had to be discharged into the water. The consignees took discharge there, and sued the shipowner for damage to the deals by water:—Held, that having acquiesced in the mode of discharge, they could recover nothing. Thorsen v. McDowall, 19 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 743.

c. Place.

See also ante, XIV. DEMURRAGE, col. 461.

Delivery of Cargo at Safe Port.]—A shipowner entered into a charterparty with the consignor of goods by which he was to deliver them at a good and safe port to be named by the consignor. The consignor named a port at which it was found that the ship could not safely unload, and the captain proceeded elsewhere and unloaded. The consignee brought an action against the captain for damages for delivering elsewhere; the consignor wrote to the captain, "We would recommend you to settle the matter in the best way you can." The shipowner defended the action, and was ultimately successful; but he incurred considerable costs in excess of those which the unsuccessful party had to pay:—Held, in an action by the shipowner against the consignor, that, such costs not being damages flowing from the consignor's breach of contract, and the consignor not having given authority to incur them, the shipowner could not recover them; that the amount recoverable by the shipowner in respect of port dues was only the difference between what he would have paid had the ship unloaded at the port named, and what he actually did pay; and that insurance on the voyage from the port named to a safe port must be taken to have been included in the claim for demurrage, which had been allowed in full. Evans v. Bullock, 38 L. T. 34; 3 Asp. M. C. 552.

At which Port or Dock.]—The plaintiffs were indorsees of the bill of lading of a cargo which, according to the charterparty, which contained a reference to the bill of lading, was to be unloaded at S., "at the usual place of discharge, and according to the custom of the port." On the arrival of the vessel at S. the master put into the South Dock, when the indorsees of the bill of lading ordered him to remove her to the Gill Dock, which the master refused to do until he had been paid the expenses incurred by entering the South Dock. Both docks were usual places of delivery for a similar cargo as that in the bill of lading:—Held, that, in default of a custom to the contrary being proved, the master was not bound to lie in the river waiting for instructions, and was justified in mooring in the South Dock, but that, having received directions to deliver his cargo in the Gill Dock, he was bound to obey them. The Felix, 37 L. J., Adm. 48; L. R. 2 A. & E. 273; 18 L. T. 587.

Under an open charterparty to deliver a cargo at a certain port, it is the duty of the master to obey the directions of the owner of the cargo as to the place of discharge in such port. Ib.

If before the directions of the owner of the cargo are received, the master has already incurred expenses by going to another place of discharge, he is not entitled to prepayment of those expenses as a condition of going to the place of discharge directed. Ib. See The Bahia, ante, col. 521.

Refusal of Freighter to name Wharf.]—By a charterparty the owner of a ship was to carry a cargo of coals to London, and there deliver the same "at a good and safe wharf" to the freighter or assigns, paying freight 6*s.* per ton. One market-day to be allowed for sale or 1½*d.* per ton additional freight for each market-day's detention thereafter. The vessel came into collision with a steam-tug in the Thames, and was sunk with the cargo on board, but was got up, and on the afternoon of the 23rd of April arrived at a pier at Wapping, whither she was ordered by the harbour-master. Notice of her arrival was on the same day given to the agents of the freighter, and they were required to name a wharf; but they declined to do so. On the 24th the ship and freight were arrested by process out of the admiralty court in a suit instituted by the owners of the tug:—Held, that the shipowner was entitled to recover, as damages for the refusal to name a wharf, and so refusing to accept the cargo, the amount which he would have received as freight if the cargo had been duly delivered—there having been a complete breach before the arrest; but that he was not entitled to demurrage. Stewart v. Rogerson, L. R. 6 C. P. 424.

Obtaining Pratique or Permission.]—A declaration on a charterparty stated, that "the vessel was ready to be unloaded on a certain day at W., and had received pratique," and issue thereon. It was proved that no custom-house existed at W.; that no sanitary regulations were adopted; and that a licence to unload was never granted. The jury found, that the vessel was ready to be unloaded on the said day, but that she had not received pratique, and they found a verdict for the defendant:—Held, that what took place was equivalent to pratique, and that in substance the issue was found for the plaintiff. Balley v. D'Arroyare, 3 N. & P. 114; 7 A. & E. 919; 7 L. J., Q. B. 91.

Sale of Cargo—Port of Delivery to be Named by Purchaser—Bill of Lading.]—See Bateman v. Green, col. 545.

d. Refusal to Receive.

Dispensing with Delivery.]—A declaration set forth an executory contract, by which the defendant was, on the arrival of a vessel at Belfast, to become the purchaser of a third of her cargo, at a stipulated price, which was to be paid by him to the plaintiff, after delivery of the cargo to the defendant, at Belfast, and alleged that the defendant, before the arrival of the ship at Belfast, discharged the plaintiff from delivering the cargo, and thenceforth wholly refused to perform the contract:—Held, that the defendant was not bound to answer an inquiry made by the plaintiff before the arrival of the ship, as to whether he intended to fulfil the contract. Ripley v. M'Clure, 4 Ex. 345; 18 L. J., Ex. 419.

Held, also, that a refusal by the defendant to perform the contract made before the arrival of the ship was not in itself a breach of the contract, but that a refusal at any time, unretracted up to the time of the arrival of the vessel, was evidence of a continuing refusal down to and inclusive of the time when he was bound to receive the cargo, and that a continuing refusal was a breach of the contract. Ib.

Held, also, that such a refusal before arrival was a waiver, at the time of the delivery of the cargo, and if unretracted, dispensed with the actual delivery of the cargo after arrival. Ib.

Held, also, that the defendant, by insisting that the cargo should be delivered to him at Belfast, but upon terms other than those of the contract, did not withdraw his refusal, or retract his waiver, discharging the plaintiff from delivering the cargo then under the contract. Ib.

It was stipulated by a charterparty, made between the plaintiffs and the defendants, that the master of the ship should sign bills of lading as presented, or pay a named penalty. He refused to sign bills of lading, and sailed without doing so. He proceeded to the port of discharge, delivered a portion of the cargo to the consignees, but ceased doing so, and warehoused the remainder, as they, acting under instructions from the charterers, claimed to deduct from the freight an amount equal to the penalty named in the charterparty:—Held, that the charterers were entitled to nominal damages against the owners for not signing the bills as presented, but that they were not entitled to recover for conversion, as the acts of the plaintiffs had prevented the delivery. Jones v. Hough, 49 L. J., Ex. 211; 5 Ex. D. 115; 42 L. T. 108; 4 Asp. M. C. 248—C. A. See Reyner v. Rederiaktiebolaget Condor, supra, col. 317; Shirwell v. Shaplock, post, col. 554, and cases infra.

Quay Berth—Refusal to Discharge until Alongside.]—A ship was chartered to discharge at "Dundalk quay." She arrived at the quay and moored alongside a vessel that occupied the only berth at the quay. The ship was ready and the master offered to discharge either into lighters or over the deck of the ship alongside, if the charterer would pay for labour and stages. There was evidence that ships usually discharged alongside the quay. The charterer refused to discharge until the ship was alongside the quay; and she was detained until the other ship had loaded:—Held, that the charterer's obligation to discharge did not begin until the ship was alongside the quay. Strahan v. Gabriel, 1 Maude & Pollock on Sh., 4th ed. p. 407, note k.

Timber Cargo—Refusal to Receive in Rafts.]—See La Cour v. Donaldson, ante, col. 473.

e. Warehousing.

And see, supra, 8. DUTY OF MASTER TO PRESERVE, &c., col. 520.

No Warehouses.]—Where consignees do not appear to claim goods at the port of discharge, and there is no statutable warehouse, semble, that the master may still land the cargo without losing his possession and control over it (placing the goods in a warehouse belonging to or hired for his owners), and so preserve his lien. Mors-le-Blanch v. Wilson, 42 L. J., C. P. 70; L. R. 8 C. P. 227; 28 L. T. 415; 1 Asp. M. C. 605.

Where no application for delivery is made, the captain may land and warehouse the cargo at the expense of the merchant; and where that is forbidden by the authorities of the port, he is not justified in destroying the cargo; but in the absence of advices, he may take it to such a place as in his judgment is most convenient, and may charge to the merchant all expenses properly incurred. Argos, Cargo ex, Gaudet v. Brown, L. R. 5 P. C. 134; 28 L. T. 745; 21 W. R. 707; 2 Asp. M. C. 6.

Late Delivery.]—Under the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 67, a shipowner may land goods whenever the delivery of them to the owner within the proper time has been prevented by the force of circumstances, whether the owner is or is not to blame. The Energie, Miedbrodt v. Fitzsimon, 44 L. J., Adm. 25; L. R. 6 P. C. 366; 32 L. T. 579; 23 W. R. 932; 2 Asp. M. C. 555.

And see XIII. FREIGHT, 4. LIEN ON CARGO.

Duty of Shipowner—Notice.]—When goods are landed under sub-s. 6, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 67, sub-s. 7, does not apply, for the latter refers only to the discharging of cargo overside, and not to the landing of it for the purposes of assortment on the wharf, and the written notice referred to in sub-s. 7 applies, therefore, to cases arising under that sub-section only. It is the duty of the owner of goods who receives either a written or verbal notice that he can have them to take them away within a reasonable time, and that whether sub-s. 6 or 7 applies to the case. Notice to the lighterman employed by the owner of the goods is notice to the owner himself. A ship arrived in dock with a general cargo on the 12th of December, and began to unload on the quay on the 13th. The plaintiffs (owners of some of the goods) sent a lighterman and barge to receive their portion of the cargo on the 13th. It was not then ready. On the 14th the lighterman again attended, but could obtain no information. On the 14th the firm of lightermen wrote to the defendants (the shipowners), stating they had made application for the goods, and inclosing a notice requiring twenty-four hours' notice of the defendants' readiness to deliver the goods, and stating that they would not be responsible for any landing charges. On the 15th the landing of the cargo was completed, and the lighterman was that day verbally informed he could have the goods on the morning of the 16th. He did not attend, and the goods were not taken away till the 29th. The plaintiff paid the dock charges under protest, and brought an action to recover them back:—Held, that they could not recover them. The Clan Macdonald, 52 L. J., Adm. 89; 8 P. D. 178; 49 L. T. 408; 32 W. R. 154; 5 Asp. M. C. 148.

Ability of Owner to take Delivery.]—By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 67, where the owner of goods imported fails to make entry thereof, or having made entry, to land the same or take delivery thereof within a certain time, the shipowner may make entry of, and land or unship the goods at the time and in the manner and subject to certain conditions, and, if at any time before the goods are landed or unshipped, the owner has made entry for the landing and warehousing thereof at any particular wharf or warehouse other than that at which the ship is discharged, and has offered and been ready to take delivery thereof, and the shipowner has failed to make such delivery, and has also failed at the time of such offer to give the owner of the goods correct information of the time at which such goods can be delivered, then the shipowner shall, before landing or unshipping such goods under the power hereby given to him, give to the owner of the goods, or of such wharf or warehouse as last aforesaid, twenty-four hours' notice in writing of his readiness to deliver the goods:—Held, that to entitle himself to notice under this condition, the owner of the goods must at the time of his offer be in a condition actually to take delivery thereof. Berresford v. Montgomerie, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 379; 34 L. J., C. P. 41; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 823; 10 L. T. 814; 12 W. R. 1060.

Where the shipowner, at the time of the offer to take delivery, is not able to make it, he is not excused from the duty of giving twenty-four hours' notice of his readiness to deliver, because the owner of the goods or his agent does not ask for correct information of the time at which such can be delivered. Ib.

Goods Landed on Wharf instead of Lighter.]—A bill of lading provided that "simultaneously with the ship being ready to unload the goods or any part thereof," the consignee should be ready to receive the same from the ship's side, either on the wharf or quay at which the ship might lie for discharge, or into lighters, and, in default, the master or agent of the ship was authorised to land the goods at the risk and expense of the consignee. Under this bill of lading, sixty-five pipes of lemon juice were loaded on board a steamer trading between the Mediterranean and London, which arrived at London on the 23rd of March, and early on the morning of the 24th was ready to deliver at the wharf, and had landed fifteen of the sixty-five pipes on the wharf before the holders of the bills of lading were ready with their lighter; they then applied for the delivery of the remainder into their lighter, which the shipowners refused, and landed them on the wharf. In an action to recover wharfage charges and demurrage for detention of the lighter:—Held, that, under the bill of lading, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 67 (5), the shipowners assuming that they would incur no loss or expense by unloading the remaining pipes into the lighter, instead of on the wharf, were bound to deliver them to the holders of the bill of lading; and therefore they were entitled to recover. Wilson v. London, Italian and Adriatic Steam Navigation Co., 1 H. & R. 29; 35 L. J., C. P. 9; L. R. 1 C. P. 61; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 52; 13 L. T. 435; 14 W. R. 101.

Goods Landed—Fire.]—To a declaration on a contract by the master of a steam-vessel, to convey goods from Dublin to London, and to deliver the same at the port of London, a plea that, after the arrival of the vessel at London, the defendant caused the goods to be deposited on a wharf, there to remain until they could be delivered to the plaintiff, the wharf being a place where goods from Dublin were accustomed to be landed, and fit and proper for such purposes, and that, before a reasonable time for delivery elapsed, they were destroyed by a fire, which broke out there by accident:—Held, ill. Gatliffe v. Bourne, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 314; 5 Scott, 667; 7 L. J., C. P. 172.

—— Dock Expenses.]—In an action by consignees against a shipowner for non-delivery of goods according to bills of lading, in which there was a condition that the goods should be taken from the ship by the consignees immediately the ship was ready for discharge, and that otherwise they would be landed or put into craft at the merchant's risk and expense, and the goods having been landed at a dock the day after the ship was ready for discharge, but after the consignees were ready to receive on payment of freight, and the goods having been detained for some time for dock charges, payment of which was refused:—Held, that it was for the jury whether the consignees had complied with the condition, or whether, if not, the shipowner had gone beyond it in landing the goods, but that, even if the consignees were entitled to recover, yet, since they might have received the goods on payment of a small sum under protest, they would not be entitled to recover full damages for the delay, as their proper course was to have paid the disputed sum, under protest. Alexiadi v. Robinson, 2 F. & F. 679.

Custom of Port of London—Landing on the Quay.]—A bill of lading stipulated (inter alia) that "the merchandise shipped thereunder was to be received on the quay at London, and delivered therefrom by the person appointed by the steamship's agent, &c., the merchandise to be received and delivered according to the customs and usages of the respective ports." A custom was proved with regard to grain cargoes coming to London, that if the merchant does not demand delivery of the grain within twenty-four hours after the ship's arrival, the ship is entitled to discharge the goods on the quay. The merchant did not demand delivery of the cargo within the twenty-four hours, and it was landed on the quay:—Held, that the custom was not inconsistent with the terms of the bill of lading, and that therefore the merchant was bound to pay the expenses incurred in weighing out the cargo and the quay rates. Aste v. Stumore, 1 Cab. & E. 321, n. Reversing S. C., 1 Cab. & E. 319.

Goods were shipped under a bill of landing at Calcutta to be delivered in like good order and condition from the ship's tackles at the port of London. On arrival in the port of London the consignee demanded overside delivery into lighters immediately from the ship's tackles. The shipowner landed them on the dock wharf, and was ready to deliver them thence into the consignee's lighters, but the consignee carted them away, thereby becoming liable to certain dock charges, which he paid. In an action by the consignee to recover the amount so paid, the jury found that there was a custom for steamships having a general cargo (the defendant's ship being such) coming into the port of London and using the docks, to discharge the goods on to the quay, and thence into lighters:—Held, that the custom found was not inconsistent with the terms of the bill of lading, and that the shipowner was entitled to discharge the goods on to the quay, and was not liable for the charge sought to be recovered. Marzetti v. Smith, 49 L. T. 580; 5 Asp. M. C. 166—C. A. Affirming 1 Cab. & E. 6.

Cargo—Jettison—Rights of Cargo Owner.]—Where a ship is stranded by the negligence of her master, and a jettison of cargo is properly made:—Held, that the cargo owners are entitled to general average contribution; secus as to the shipowner. Strang, Steel & Co. v. Scott, 59 L. 11. Sale, Assignment, and Mortgage.

Sale on the Hypothesis of its Existence.]—Merchants at Smyrna chartered a vessel, and loaded it at Salonica with a cargo of Indian corn. The bill of lading was indorsed by them, and sent, together with the charterparty, to B., their agent in London, with instructions to sell the cargo on their account. They also, through B., insured the cargo "at and from Salonica to the port of discharge in the United Kingdom," "corn warranted free from average, unless general, or the ship be stranded." Corn factors in London were accordingly, on the 1st May, 1848, employed by B. to sell the cargo, and they sold it to C. on the 15th May. The bought note stated that C. had bought of them "a cargo of about 1,180 quarters of Salonica Indian corn," &c., "of a fair average quality when shipped," &c., "27*s.* per quarter free on board, and including freight and insurance to a safe port in the United Kingdom;" "payment at two months from this date, or in cash, less discount," &c., "upon handing shipping documents." The vessel sailed from Salonica with a cargo described in the bought note, and was obliged to put into Tunis in distress. It was there found that from the heated and damaged state of the corn it was unfit to be carried farther, and it was consequently unshipped, and sold by the captain on the 24th April. The parties interested in the cargo were ignorant of these facts till after the sale to C.:—Held, that the contract was for the sale of a cargo supposed to exist and to be capable of transfer, and that, as it had been sold and delivered to others before the sale to C., the corn factors were not liable. Couturier v. Hastie, 5 H. L. Cas. 673; 25 L. J., Ex. 253; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1241—H. L. (E.)

Assignment — "Appurtenances."]—B., being entitled to a moiety of a ship engaged in the whale fishery, executed a bill of sale of such moiety, together with a moiety of the tackle of the ship and the appurtenances to the ship belonging to H., for the purpose of indemnifying him against certain bills accepted by H. to accommodate B.:—Held, that the cargo did not pass under the word "appurtenances." Langton v. Horton, 5 Beav. 9; 6 Jur. 357. S. C. on another point, infra.

—— Bankruptcy, Order and Disposition.]—A. was the owner of a ship which, in March, 1857, sailed for the coast of Africa, and in May and July she was supposed by him to be upon that coast, completing her cargo of palm-oil, and it was also expected that she would be home again about October. On the 11th of November, 1857, the ship had not arrived, and A. assigned the cargo to B.; and on the 23rd of January, 1858, B. sent by post, to the captain, notice of such assignment. This notice never reached the captain. The ship remained on the coast of Africa till the 12th of February, 1858, when she set sail and arrived at Bristol on the 14th of April. A. had become bankrupt on the 1st of March, 1858, and when the ship arrived his assignees claimed the cargo:—Held, that they were not entitled to it, as there had been no default upon the part of B., and as, therefore, the cargo could not be said to be in the possession of A. at the time of his bankruptcy, as reputed owner, by the consent and permission of the true owner. Acraman v. Bates, 2 El. & El. 456; 29 L. J., Q. B. 78; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 294; 1 L. T. 322.

A., by deed, assigns the cargo of two ships to B. and C., but has no charterparty or bill of lading to deliver to them. On the arrival of one of the ships, he assigns to another person, and afterwards commits an act of bankruptcy;—Held, that B. and C., not having been ready to take possession of the ship on her arrival, had thereby permitted A. to continue reputed owner under the statute 21 Jac. 1. Philpott v. Williams, 2 Eden, 231.

Advance on Cargo—Consignee for Sale—Lien of Vendor.]—A. being interested in a moiety of a cargo, and having entered into a contract with B. to let him have half his share, wrote to C.

and D., the consignees, informing them and authorising them to sell the cargo, and carry the proceeds to their separate accounts. The consignees acted upon this, and made advances to B., and B. also charged his interest in favour of E. It had been agreed between A. and B. that they should pay for the cargo by two bills each to be paid by one of them. B. did not pay his bill. It did not appear whether A. had paid it or not:—Held, that A. had no lien on the proceeds of B.'s share, either as against him or as against C. and D., or against E. Holroyd v. Griffiths, 3 Drew. 428.

Consignee — Bills drawn against Cargo — Lien.]—The general lien of a consignee cannot be set up in opposition to a positive appropriation by the consignor of cargo to the payment of specified bills of exchange. Frith v. Forbes, 32 L. J., Ch. 10; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1111; 7 L. T. 261; 11 W. R. 4—L.JJ.

Direction to pay out of Proceeds—Lien.]—A. consigns a cargo to B., with a direction to pay to C., out of the proceeds, a sum of money, and writes C. to that effect; C. has no lien on the proceeds. Heywood, Ex parte, 2 Rose, 355.

Of future Cargo — Lien for Purchase-money supplied.]—Under an assignment of a ship and her present and future cargo, freight and earnings, by the owner, for securing to the assignees all moneys which they had advanced, or might become liable to pay, on account of the vessel and her cargo, which they had furnished the means of purchasing:—Held, that the assignees, who were also the ship's agents, were entitled to retain a bill which was given for the purchase of part of the homeward cargo, and was remitted but not indorsed to them by the owner; notwithstanding he denied that it was remitted in payment, and stated that they had not paid, and, contrary to an express understanding, had left him personally liable to some of the debts incurred in fitting out the vessel; and an injunction which had been obtained by the assignees, restraining an action of trover for the bill, was continued until the hearing. Curtis v. Auber, 1 Jac. & Walk. 526.

Execution Creditor.]—Equitable assignment of a future cargo (whales to be caught), perfected by possession taken on the ship's arrival, held good as against an execution creditor. Langton v. Horton, 1 Hare, 549; 11 L. J., Ch. 299. S.C., on another point, supra.

Fraud—Bills accepted against Cargo—Subsequent Sale.]—A. chartered a ship in his own name, and consigned it to B. in Cuba, under an agreement that B. should ship goods and consign them to A., and that A. should accept B.'s bills for their value. After A. had accepted bills on the faith of the agreement, B. sold the cargo to C., who had notice of the terms of the charterparty, and that it was consigned to another person:—Held, that assuming that the fact of A.'s appearing principal on the charterparty made it incumbent on C. to ascertain the relations between A. and B., yet that, as B. was actually the principal, and not the agent of A., C. could safely deal with him for the cargo, and that the circumstances that B. had committed a fraud on A. did not prevent C. from obtaining a good title to the goods. Zulueta v. Tyrie, 15 Beav. 577.

A merchant in Cuba sold part of a cargo shipped by him to B., and C. (who was A.'s correspondent in England), being informed thereof by B., made no claim until four months afterwards, when he insisted on a paramount right over B. to the cargo:—Held, that even assuming he had originally such right, his conduct had been such, that a court of equity would not allow him to enforce it against B. Ib.

Sale by Consignor—Property in Consignor or Consignee.]—When by a bill of lading goods are made deliverable to the shipper, or his order, and not to the consignee, the jus disponendi, or control over the property in the goods shipped, remains with the shippers, although the invoice states that the goods were shipped "on account of and at the risk of" the consignee; such statement being not conclusive, of itself, that the right to the possession of, as well as the property in, the goods was intended to be unconditionally passed to the consignee. Shepherd v. Harrison, 40 L. J., Q. B. 148; L. R. 5 H. L. 116; 24 L. T. 857; 20 W. R. 1; 1 Asp. M. C. 66—H. L. (E.)

The burden of shewing the existence of a different state of things lies with the person who contradicts what would be the ordinary legal conclusion from the transaction. Ib.

Purchaser taking Risk of Voyage.]—C. agreed with P. to ship on board a vessel a cargo of fresh-water ice, and to despatch the vessel with all speed to any ordered port in the United Kingdom, "the vendor forwarding bills of lading to the purchaser, and upon receipt the purchaser takes upon himself all risks and dangers of the seas"; and purchaser agreed to buy and receive the ice on its arrival, and pay for it in cash on delivery, at the rate of 20*s.* a ton of 20 cwt., weighed on board during delivery. The vessel was lost during the voyage by risks and dangers of the seas within the meaning of the agreement, and after the receipt by the purchaser of the bills of lading. The vendor having brought an action against the purchaser to recover the value of the cargo:—Held, that he was entitled to recover. Castle v. Playford, 41 L. J., Ex. 44; L. R. 7 Ex. 98; 26 L. T. 315; 20 W. R. 440; 1 Asp. M. C. 255—Ex. Ch.

Delivery of Clean Bill of Lading — Non-acceptance of Bill of Exchange by Purchaser.]—In January, 1868, C. & Co. contracted to purchase 1,400 quarters of rye, then at Salonica, from the plaintiffs, at 41*s.* per quarter, free on board, March shipment, the plaintiffs finding the vessel. The plaintiffs having chartered the "Agatha," the captain on loading her informed the bank that she would take from 200 to 300 quarters of rye beyond that ordered by the defendants. The plaintiffs, being unable to obtain any rye, purchased seventy quarters of maize to make up the cargo. The rye and maize were shipped on board, and one bill of lading was made out for both rye and maize and sent to the plaintiffs. The maize was then offered to the defendants, and two invoices and two bills of exchange were made out, one for the rye, the other for the maize. The defendants, who refused to have anything to do with the maize, had in the meantime sold the rye to C., but C., on finding there was not a clean bill of lading, refused to accept either it or the bill of exchange. The plaintiffs on being informed of this informed the defendants, that they would discharge the maize from the ship at their own expense, and shortly afterwards indorsed the bill of lading as follows: "Deliver the rye to Messrs. C. & Co. or their order, and the within-mentioned maize to us or our order. The delivery of the maize, and the freight, and all charges thereon to be at our expense, and the maize to be delivered so as not to interfere with the working and delivery of the rye":—Held, that the delivery of a clean bill of lading was not a necessary condition of the contract, the plaintiffs having been ready to pay all the expenses incident to the maize being included in the bill of lading, and also absolutely and unconditionally to deliver the rye in time; and also that there was a sufficient delivery to entitle the plaintiffs to recover for non-acceptance. Imperial Ottoman Bank v. Cowan, 31 L. T. 336; 2 Asp. M. C. 418—Ex. Ch.

Naming Port—Right of Purchaser of Cargo—Bill of Lading.]—Where a grain cargo was sold upon terms that the purchaser should have the right to name a port in the United Kingdom to which it was to be brought, and bills of lading were taken by the vendors without consulting the purchasers as to the port of delivery:—Held, that the vendors could not recover against the purchasers for not accepting the cargo. Knox v. Mayne, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 557; Bateman v. Green, Ir. R. 2 C. L. 166.

Retaining Bill of Lading.]—When an unpaid vendor shipping goods under a contract of sale takes a bill of lading making the goods deliverable to his order, and retains such bill of lading in his own or his agent's hands for his own protection, he does not reserve the vendor's lien only, in case of the purchaser's making default in payment of the price, but reserves a right of disposing of the goods so long at least as the purchaser continues in default. Ogg v. Shuter, 45 L. J., C. P. 44; 1 C. P. D. 47; 33 L. T. 492; 24 W. R. 100; 3 Asp. M. C. 77—C. A.

Custom of Vendors to hold Bills of Lading.]—A. having ordered goods from B., a firm at Calcutta, through C., their agent in this country, received an invoice of the goods, with a notice that B. had drawn upon him for the price at six months. On calling at C.'s office, A. was met by C.'s messenger, who handed to him for his acceptance the bill of exchange drawn upon him in respect of the goods, and the bill of lading, which was pinned to the bill of exchange. A. accepted the bill of exchange, and afterwards deposited the bill of lading with E. as a security for an advance, together with a policy of insurance upon the goods effected by himself in his own name, C. having declined to part with the original policy on the ground that it included other goods besides those purchased by A. A. having become bankrupt, and unable to take up his acceptance, the goods were claimed by B. and C., on the ground that the bill of lading had been improperly pledged, having come into A.'s hands irregularly, and without their knowledge, and contrary to an alleged custom amongst East India merchants not to part with the bill of lading of goods until the vendee has taken up his acceptances on account thereof:—Held, that the alleged custom of trade was merely exceptional, and was not established as being the usual course of business; and that the title of E., as bonâ fide assignee for value, must prevail over any claim by the unpaid vendors. Coventry v. Gladstone, 37 L. J., Ch. 30; L. R. 4 Eq. 493; 16 W. R. 304.

Sale of Cargo to include Cost Freight and Insurance—Bill of Lading indorsed to Purchaser—Transfer of Property — Charterparty.]—See Delaurier v. Wyllie, XI. CHARTERPARTY, supra, col. 237.

War Risk—Agreement to Insure.]—An agreement for purchase of a cargo of oats to be shipped by the "Ems," a German ship, at Archangel, stipulated that the seller should pay "cost freight and insurance to London or the east coast of Great Britain according to charterparty, . . . payment to be made in London on handing invoice and in exchange for shipping documents." After the agreement was made war between France and Germany was declared:—Held, that the seller was bound to insure against war risk; and that having refused to do so, the purchaser was entitled to rescind the contract. Birkett v. Engholm, 10 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 170.

Delivery Order of Cargo to arrive—Bankruptcy—Lien.]—On the 20th of August, 1857, B., the senior partner of a firm of Bristol merchants and shipowners, being then in London, delivered to the plaintiff, for valuable consideration, a delivery order, directing D., one of the partners of B., then at Bristol, in whose name the wharfage business of B.'s firm at Bristol was carried on, to deliver to the order of the plaintiff "fifty tons of palm oil out of the first of our ships which shall arrive, whether it be the 'Glenelg,' 'Arab,' 'Mary Ann B.,' or 'Victory.'" On the following day the Bristol firm suspended payment, and their affairs were wound up, under the provisions of the arrangement clauses of the bankrupt act, by deed of assignment, dated the 8th of September, 1857, of which the defendants were trustees. The deed provided that no creditor having a specific lien or security for his debt, who executed the deed, should be prejudiced as to his security. Notice of delivery order was given to the defendants at latest on the 5th of September. The first of the ships named in the order which came to port arrived at Bristol on the 23rd of October, 1857; but of her cargo only twenty-seven tons of palm oil remained unaffected by contracts for sale, entered into by B.'s firm before the date of the delivery order:—Held, that the delivery order was an assignment of and a valid security upon fifty tons of palm oil, the first that should arrive belonging to the firm of B. & Co., in the ships named in the order. Rayner v. Harford, 27 L. J., Ch. 708; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 703; 6 W. R. 743.

Quantity Stated in Bill of Lading.]—Upon a purchase and sale of corn afloat, made before the arrival in England of the shipping documents, the written contract was in form "for the purchase of the cargo per 'Prima Donna,' from Ibraila, now at Queenstown, as it stands, consisting of about 1,300 quarters Ibraila Indian corn, at the price of 30*s.* per imperial quarter, free on board, including freight and insurance to a safe port in the United Kingdom; the quantity to be taken from the bill of lading, and measure calculated at 220 quarters = 100 kilos. Payment, cash on handing shipping documents." Upon the arrival of the bill of lading, it was found to be expressed as for a shipment at Ibraila of "1,667 quarters; quantity and quality unknown to the master."

Whereupon the vendee paid to the vendor as for 1,667 quarters, deducting freight on that number of quarters; but on delivery it was found that the cargo really contained only 1,614 quarters:—Held, that the construction of the contract was, that it was a sale of the cargo, whatever it might be, at a price which was to depend upon the amount which should be found stated in the bill of lading when it should come to hand, and not upon the real amount of corn; that the purchaser took the chance of the cargo really turning out more or less than mentioned in the bill of lading; and that he could not recover for a short delivery. Covas v. Bingham, 2 El. & Bl. 836; 2 C. L. R. 212; 23 L. J., Q. B. 26; 18 Jur. 596. And see XIII. FREIGHT, Immanuel (Owners of) v. Glenholm, ante, col. 425.

Adverse Claimants to Cargo.]—See XII. BILL OF LADING; 5, INDORSEMENT, ASSIGNMENT AND TRANSFER, ante, cols. 343, seq.

Payment—Tender by Vendor of One of a Set of Bills of Lading.]—Where by the terms of the contract for sale of goods to be shipped, payment is to be made in exchange for bills of lading of each shipment, the purchaser is bound to pay when a duly indorsed bill of lading, effectual to pass the property in the goods, is tendered to him, although the others of the set of three bills of lading are not tendered or accounted for. If he refuses to pay he does so at his own risk as to the bill of lading tendered being effectual or not. Sanders v. Maclean, 52 L. J., Q. B. 481; 11 Q. B. D. 327; 49 L. T. 462; 31 W. R. 698; 5 Asp. M. C. 160—C. A.

Contract to Deliver f. o. b.]—Semble, a charterer who buys goods f. o. b. is liable for the cost of putting them on board. Glengarnock Iron & Steel Co. v. Cooper, 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 672.

Successive Mortgages of Whaler's Oil Cargo—Priorities—Oil Transhipped.]—The owner of a vessel made a mortgage of it and of the cargo in London to A., whilst the vessel was on a whaling voyage to the South Seas, subject to two prior mortgages thereof, and the third mortgagee forthwith gave notice of his mortgage to the two prior incumbrancers. The master of the vessel afterwards putting into Sydney transhipped the oil taken in the voyage to another vessel, consigned to consignees in London, who honoured his bill of exchange on them upon having a lien on the consignment. The mortgagor induced B. to advance him 1,000*l.* on a mortgage of the cargo so transhipped, and consigned without notice of any other charge thereon except the lien of the consignee. B. gave notice of his mortgage to the consignee. A., as soon as he knew of the consignment (but subsequent to B.'s notice), gave notice to the consignee of the mortgage to him; and after such notice the consignee, after satisfying his own lien, paid over the balance of the proceeds of the oil to B.:—Held, that A., having done all he could do towards possession, was entitled to priority over B. Feltham v. Clark, 1 De G. & Sm. 307.

Outward Bound Cargo — Assignment of.]—Where there is an assignment of an outward bound cargo, it is a complete contract, though the cargo is not delivered to the assignee. Brown v. Heathcote, 1 Atk. 160.

Sale of Corn shipped in good Condition.]—Indian corn, shipped at Orfano for Cork, sold under an agreement that it "had been shipped in good and merchantable condition":—Held, the sale good, though the corn shipped was not in good and merchantable condition for a foreign voyage. Dickson v. Zizinia, 10 C. B. 602.

Sale of Cargo—Passing of Property.]—B. at Bristol sent to L. at Plymouth, asking for samples of barley and for an offer of a cargo. L. sent samples offering to sell 400 or 500 quarters at a specified price, f. o. b., at Kingsbridge. B. accepted L.'s offer, and L. wrote for particulars of the vessel to be sent, in order to insure. L. sent a charterparty of the vessel made out in L.'s name. The vessel was loaded, and L. received from the master a bill of lading by which the barley was deliverable at Bristol to order of L. or assigns on payment of freight. Subsequently L. left the bill of lading unindorsed and invoice at B.'s counting-house. A dispute arose as to the quality of the barley, but B. did not refuse to accept it. B. tendered the price of the barley to L., but L. refused to accept it, took away the bill of lading, and endorsed it to the plaintiffs. B., on the ship's arrival, claimed and obtained part of the barley; but the plaintiffs claimed and obtained the rest, paying freight:—Held, in trover, that no property in the barley passed to the defendant, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Wait v. Baker, 2 Ex. 1.

Mistaken Shipment—Refusal to accept.]—The plaintiffs, at New York, contracted to sell and deliver 1,000 quarters of wheat to the defendants at Bristol upon the terms "cost, freight, and insurance." By mistake they shipped, by sailing vessel, a cargo of 2,000 quarters of wheat to K. at Bristol. They also forwarded by steamer to K. at Bristol a bill of lading and policy of insurance of the whole cargo of wheat. This policy was "free from particular average." K., at the request of the plaintiffs, accepted a bill of exchange drawn upon him by them for the price of the 2,000 quarters. The defendants afterwards refused to accept the 1,000 quarters from K.:—Held, in an action against the defendants for refusing to accept the 1,000 quarters, that the plaintiffs were not ready and willing to deliver the 1,000 quarters to the defendants within the terms of the contract. Hickox v. Adams, 34 L. T. 404; 3 Asp. M. C. 142.

Actions for Possession of Cargoes in England and in France—Election as to Tribunal.]—An action was brought in this country by an English company against French merchants for the delivery of the cargoes of certain ships or, in the alternative, for damages and for an injunction and a receiver. When the action was brought the ships were in British waters, but they were afterwards removed, by order of the defendants to French waters, and the defendants had taken possession of the cargoes. Proceedings had been instituted by the plaintiffs in a French court for recovery of the cargoes. The English action comprised a claim for the cargo of one ship which was not claimed in the French action. Motion by the defendants that the plaintiffs should be ordered to elect whether they would proceed in the English or in the French action refused. Peruvian Guano Co. v. Bockwoldt, 52 L. J., Ch. 714; 23 Ch. D. 225; 48 L. T. 7; 31 W. R. 851; 5 Asp. M. C. 29—C. A.

Assignment of Cargo — Bankruptcy — Notice of Assignment.] — On November 11, 1857, A.

assigned to B. the cargo of a ship belonging to him, and then supposed to be about to sail to England from Africa. If B. had sent notice to the master of the assignment, it would have reached him before February 12, 1858, the day on which the ship sailed. B. did not send notice until January 23, 1858, and the notice never reached the master. On April 14, 1858, the ship arrived, and the master, on receiving notice of the assignment, delivered the cargo to B., notwithstanding notice from A.'s assignees in bankruptcy:—Held, that B. was entitled to the cargo. Acraman v. Bates, 2 El. & El. 456; 29 L. J., Q. B. 78; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 294; 1 L. T. 322.

Mortgage of Cargo—Notice—Reputed Ownership.]—London sub-mortgagees of shipments from China sent by the next mail notice of the mortgage to the persons in possession. They became bankrupt before the notice reached its destination. There was another mail route by which the notice might have arrived earlier, but not before the bankruptcy:—Held, the notice was sufficient to take the goods out of the mortgagors' reputed ownership. Kelsall, Ex parte, 1 De G. 352.

—— Bankruptcy of Mortgagor—Order and Disposition.]—Mortgagees of a cargo on board a ship on the coast of Africa, sent no notice of their security to the captain for two months after the date of the mortgage, and the captain received no notice until the mortgagor was bankrupt:—Held, that there was a primâ facie case for an application, ex parte, for a sale of the cargo as being in the order and disposition of the bankrupt. Lucas, Ex parte, Gwyer, In re, 3 De G. & J. 113.

Right of Holder of Bill of Lading—Mortgage.]—Goods which, by the terms of the bill of lading, have been carried upon a nominal freight, can be lawfully demanded, by the holder of the bill of lading, on payment of that amount. Keith v. Burrows, 46 L. J., C. P. 801; 2 App. Cas. 636; 37 L. T. 291; 25 W. R. 831; 3 Asp. M. C. 481—H. L. (E.)

The owner of a ship cannot, by his subsequent acts, give to his mortgagees, as against the holder of a bill of lading, rights different from those possessed by himself under it. Ib.

Bill of Lading—Pledge—Execution Creditor—Re-delivery of Goods to Pledger—Scotch Law.]—In the law of Scotland, as in the law of England, a pledgee may deliver the goods to the pledgor for a limited purpose without thereby losing his rights under the contract of pledge. The pledgees of a bill of lading representing a specific cargo were under contract to sell a larger quantity of goods to a third person. The pledgees returned the bill of lading to the pledgors to obtain delivery of the goods and sell on the pledgees' behalf, and account for the proceeds towards satisfaction of the debt. Held, that the pledgees' security was not affected, and that they were entitled to the proceeds of the cargo, as against the diligence of general creditors of the pledgors. North Western Bank v. Poynter, [1895] A. C. 56; 11 R. 73; 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 1—H. L. (Sc.)

Right to Goods on board belonging to Bankrupt Master—Shipowner or Assignees.]—D., captain of a ship bound to the East Indies, and owner of the cabin furniture, deserts the ship on the voyage; the command is taken by the mate, who is confirmed in his position as master by the owners. On the voyage home, D., being indebted to the owners, authorises them in writing to keep possession of the furniture on the ship's arrival, as security for their debt. The ship arrived on December 5; a fiat in bankruptcy against D. issued on December 18 on an act of bankruptcy committed on December 2:—Held, that D.'s assignees could not recover in trover against the shipowner for the furniture. Belcher v. Oldfield, 8 Scott, 221; 6 Bing. (N.C.) 102; 9 L. J., C. P. 34; 3 Jur. 1194.

Sale by Court of Salved Cargo.]—See The Kathleen, infra, col. 670.

12. Action for Loss, Detention, Damage or Non-Delivery.

a. Parties.

Consignor or Consignee.]—By a bill of lading, the captain undertook to deliver goods therein specified for the consignor, and in his name, to the consignee. At the time of shipment the consignee had no property whatever in the goods:—Held, that an action against the owner of the ship for damage done to the goods by their being imperfectly stowed must be brought in the name of the consignor, although the consignee had insured the goods, and advanced the premiums of insurance before the ship arrived. Sargent v. Morris, 3 B. & Ald. 277; 22 R. R. 382. See also The Marathon, infra, col. 970.

A consignee of goods has such a right of property in the goods consigned to him, as to maintain an action of assumpsit against the shipowner for non-delivery of the goods. Tronson v. Dent, 8 Moore, P. C. 419.

A., as captain, by a charterparty between himself and B., agreed to receive a cargo from the agents and assigns of B., and B. agreed to procure the same; A., having received a cargo aboard, signed a bill of lading, stating the goods to have been shipped by order of C., and to be delivered to his order, and freight to be paid according to the charterparty. In an action for negligence in stowing the goods, brought by C. against A., held that C. was only an agent, and that the action should have been brought in the name of B. Moores v. Hopper, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 411.

Amount of Interest.]—A., a resident at Naples, sent an order to M. & Co., hardwaremen at Birmingham, to despatch to him certain goods, on insurance being effected. Terms, three months' credit from the time of arrival. M. & Co. having marked the package with A.'s initials, despatched the goods by the canal to Liverpool, and effected an insurance declaring the interest to be in A. At Liverpool the goods were delivered by the agent of M. & Co. to the owner of a vessel bound to Naples, through whose negligence they were damaged:—Held, that the property in the goods vested in A. as soon as they were despatched from Birmingham, and that the terms of the order did not make the arrival of the goods at Naples a condition precedent to A.'s liability to pay for them, and that he might therefore maintain an action for an injury done to the goods through the negligence of the shipowner. Fragano v. Long, 4 B. & C. 219; 6 D. & R. 283; 3 L. J. (O.S.) Q. B. 177 on account of the former, and of frequently drawing bills of exchange on the plaintiff, in anticipation of future consignments; and on the 5th of January there was a balance due to the plaintiff of 1,659*l.*; and on the 6th, S. shipped goods on board the defendant's vessel to the amount of 5,926*l.*, consigned to the plaintiff, sending him the bill of lading and invoice, and at the same time drew a bill on him for 500*l.*, which the plaintiff having refused to accept, S. indemnified the defendant, who thereupon relanded the goods, and redelivered them to S.:—Held, that the plaintiff might sue the defendant for the non-delivery of the goods, as he had at all events a sufficient qualified interest in them to enable him to maintain such an action. Anderson v. Clarke, 2 Bing. 20.

Parties to be Sued — Negligence of Third Party.]—An action will lie by the owners of goods in a ship against the owners for a loss occasioned by the ship's striking against an anchor lying under water in the river Trent, without a buoy. Trent and Mersey Navigation v. Wood, 3 Esp. 127; 4 Dougl. 287; 1 Term Rep. 28, n.

—— Master or Owner.]—A separate action cannot be maintained against the master and the owner of a ship for the same identical cause of action. The creditor has an election to sue either the one or the other; but he cannot, after he has sued the one to judgment, maintain another action against the other. Priestley v. Fernie, 3 H. & C. 977; 34 L. J., Ex. 172; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 813; 13 L. T. 208; 13 W. R. 1089.

Where a cargo consisting of oranges had been materially damaged through the improper conduct of the captain, who was also a part owner of the vessel, and the freighters brought an action against him and his co-partners, for negligence in the conveyance of the goods:—Held, that such action was well brought, although the captain had entered into a charterparty under seal with the freighters, by which he engaged to convey the cargo to its port of destination; it not appearing from that instrument that he possessed any other character or interest than that of commander or master. Leslie v. Wilson, 6 Moore, 415; 3 Br. & B. 171; 23 R. R. 605.

Liability of Shipowner for Detention of Cargo by Arrest of Bottomry Bondholder.]—See Anderston Foundry Co. v. Law, ante, col. 210.

Collision — Authority of Master to Sue on Behalf of Cargo Owner.]—The master of a ship that has been in collision abroad has authority on behalf of the cargo owners to institute a suit in a foreign court on behalf of ship and cargo owners against the other ship. The Reinbeck, 60 L. T. 209; 6 Asp. M. C. 366.

Owner of Ships Primâ Facie Owner of Goods on Board.]—As against a wrongdoer, the owner of a ship is primâ facie owner of the goods on board. Brancker v. Molyneux, 3 Scott (N.R.) 332; 3 Man. & G. 84; 10 L. J., C. P. 310.

Non-Delivery—Property in Consignee—Action by Shipowner.]—If a consignor of goods makes a special contract with the shipowner as to the carriage of the goods, the consignor may maintain an action for their loss, though the goods be the property of the consignee. Dunlop v. Lambert, 6 Cl. & F. 600.

Shipowner Estopped from Denying that Contract made with him.]—A company owned a line of steamers called the "Monarch Line," running between New York and London. A. was in the habit of shipping goods on steamers running on this line. A. shipped goods on a steamer at New York and received a bill of lading made out in the ordinary form given by the company for goods shipped on their steamers, save that it had the words "extra steamer" added after the words "Monarch Line of Steamships." At London an overside release for the goods was signed and given by the company's agent to A., and the freight received by them from A.:—Held, in an action by A. against the company for non-delivery of the goods that the company were estopped from saying that the contract of shipment was not made with them. Herman v. Royal Exchange Shipping Co., 1 Cab. & E. 413. Affirmed in C. A.

Ship Demised — Supplementary Action.]—Action for loss of goods carried in defendant's ship; defence, ship demised to another; supplementary action against the latter; conjoinder of actions; issues directed in both actions. London and Caledonian Marine Insurance Co. v. London and Edinburgh Shipping Co., 5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 982.

Charterer or Shipowner—Third Party Order.]—A cargo owner sued the charterers of the ship for damage to cargo. Defendants applied for leave to serve a third party notice on the shipowner, alleging that the damage was caused by the unseaworthiness of the ship. Speller v. Bristol Steam Navigation Co., 50 L. T. 419; 32 W. R. 670; 5 Asp. M. C. 228.

b. Proof of Receipt.

What is Sufficient.]—If a ship is chartered for a particular voyage, and put up as a general ship by the charterer, it is not enough, to make the owners liable for the non-delivery of goods, to shew that they were put on board the ship to be carried on this voyage, unless it is proved that they were received on board by some person appointed or authorised by the owners. Mackenzie v. Rowe, 2 Camp. 482.

It is not necessary, in order to render a shipowner liable for the loss of the goods of a shipper, that the goods should have been actually delivered on board the ship. British Columbia and Vancouver's Island Spar, Lumber and Saw Mill Co. v. Nettleship, 37 L. J., C. P. 235; L. R. 3 C. P. 499; 18 L. T. 291; 16 W. R. 1046.

Where goods are to be carried coastwise, and the usage of the wharf is to deliver them on the wharf to the mate of the ship by which they are to be carried; if they are delivered to the mate, the wharfinger's responsibility is at an end, and he is not liable, though the goods are lost from the wharf before they are shipped. Cobban v. Downe, 5 Esp. 41; 8 R. R. 825.

Shipowner Estopped from Denying Receipt.]—Shipowner under special circumstances not estopped from proving non-shipment of cargo declared by bill of lading signed by the master to have been shipped. Berkeley v. Watling, 7 A. & E. 29; 2 N. & P. 178; 6 L. J., K. B. 195.

c. Proof of Loss or Negligence.

In Unloading.]—Where goods were landed according to the custom of the port of London, on one of the quays of the Victoria Dock, and the dock company loaded the lighter, and it was proved that although all the bales were landed on the quay one of them was lost and was never put upon the lighter:—Held, that by the terms of the bill of lading, "goods to be delivered from the ship's deck, where the ship's responsibility shall cease," the shipowner's liability was over, and that he was therefore not liable for the non-delivery of the missing bale. Petrococchino v. Bott, 43 L. J., C. P. 214; L. R. 9 C. P. 355; 30 L. T. 840.

Primâ facie Evidence.]—In an action against the owner of a chartered vessel for negligence, in consequence of which the plaintiff's goods were lost, the non-arrival of the vessel at her destined port is not even primâ facie evidence of negligence. Boyson v. Wilson, 1 Stark. 236.

—— Burden of Proof.]—See Beckford v. Clerke, 1 Keb. 830, supra, col. 332, and Cases, infra, cols. 555, 556.

—— Loss by Perils of the Sea—Negligence—Onus of Proof.]—In an action brought by a shipper against a shipowner for damage to the goods shipped under a bill of lading, containing the usual exception of damage or loss by perils of the sea, upon the shipowner showing that the loss was within the exception, the onus of proving that the loss was occasioned by the negligence of the shipowner's servants is on the shipper of the goods. Wilson v. The Xantho, supra, col. 329, discussed. The Glendarroch, 63 L. J., Adm. 89; [1894] P. 226; 6 R. 686; 70 L. T. 344; 7 Asp. M. C. 420—C. A.

—— Interrogatories.]—In an action for non-delivery of cargo the defendant admitted non-delivery, alleging that delivery was prevented by excepted perils. The plaintiff delivered interrogatories for the purpose of shewing that the ship sank in consequence of a sea cock being negligently left open:—Held, that such interrogatories were not admissible. Grumbrecht v. Parry, 32 W. R. 558—C. A. Affirming 49 L. T. 570; 5 Asp. M. C. 176.

As to Condition of Goods.]—In a suit against shipowners for damage to cargo, the onus is upon the shipper to shew in the first instance that the goods were shipped in good order and condition before he can call upon the shipowners to shew excuse for the injury done to the goods. The Prosperino Palasso, 29 L. T. 622; 2 Asp. M. C. 158.

There is no rule of law by which the consignee of goods under a bill of lading stating the goods to have been shipped in good order and condition, but containing the words "quantity and quality unknown," is bound to shew that the goods were shipped in good order and condition, or fail in his suit against the shipowner for damage done to the cargo; but failing proof of the condition of the cargo when shipped, the consignee is bound to shew that the damage which it sustained is traceable to causes for which the shipowner is responsible. The Ida, 32 L. T. 541; 2 Asp. M. C. 551—P. C. And see Cases, ante, col. 319 et seq.

Stowing.]—In an action against the proprietors of a steam-vessel to recover compensation for damage done to goods sent by them as carriers, if, on the whole, it is left in doubt what the cause of the injury was, or, if it may as well be attributable to perils of the sea as to negligence, the plaintiff cannot recover;—but if the perils of the sea require that more care should be used in the stowing of the goods on board than was bestowed on them, that will be negligence for which the owners of the vessel will be answerable. Muddle v. Stride, 9 Car. & P. 380.

Management of Boiler.]—Where damage was done to the cargo of a steam-vessel, by water escaping through the pipe of a steam boiler, in consequence of the pipe having been cracked by frost:—Held, that this was not an act of God, but negligence in the captain in filling his boiler before the time of heating it, although it was the practice to fill over-night when the vessel started in the morning. Siordet v. Hall, 4 Bing. 607; 1 M. & P. 561; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 137; 29 R. R. 651.

Delay in Taking in Stores.]—The master, whilst waiting for cargo, omitted to take in sufficient stores and provisions for his voyage, and whilst subsequently taking in such provisions and stores the frost set in, and the ship was frozen in port, and detained from the beginning of October until the breaking up of the ice in the ensuing year:—Held, that the owners of the ship were responsible to the owners of the cargo for any loss accruing from such detention; it being, by maritime law, the duty of the master to convey the cargo to its port of delivery with all expedition; and if by neglecting to avail himself of all fair opportunity the voyage is delayed, and damage accrues to the owners of the cargo, the owners of the ship are liable to make good the loss. The Wilhelm, 14 L. T. 636.

Incorrect Entry at the Excise.]—Where a consignee was not ready to receive a cargo consisting of rums, and the owners of the ship, being desirous to get her cleared, unloaded the cargo, and incorrectly entered it at the excise, in consequence of which the cargo was seized:—Held, that the shipowners were not liable to the consignees for the non-delivery of the cargo, as the bill of lading did not properly describe the same. Shirwell v. Shaplock, 2 Chit. 397.

Seizure of Goods and Acknowledgment of Master.]—In an action against the master for not safely conveying goods consigned to the plaintiffs at a foreign port agreeably to bills of lading, evidence that the goods were seized in another foreign port, coupled with a letter of the master, in which he acknowledged that he was accountable for the goods, agreeably to the tenor of the bills of lading, is sufficient to warrant the jury in finding for the plaintiffs. Cullen v. MacAlpine, 2 Stark. 552.

Mate's Receipts.]—The plaintiff having verbally chartered a ship to carry iron from Glasgow to Swansea, the ship was loaded with iron brought by the plaintiff from W. & Co. The iron was weighed by the agents of W. & Co., to whom the mate gave a receipt signed by him for 330 tons, but there was no bill of lading. On delivery at Swansea, the quantity of iron was discovered to be 326½ tons only, but the mate deposed, and was not contradicted, to the delivery of all that had been shipped. The plaintiff having paid on the full amount of 330 tons to W. & Co., who refused to repay them the difference, sued the shipowner for short delivery :—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence in the shipowner, and that if there had been, it would not be negligence causing loss to the plaintiff. Biddulph v. Bingham, 30 L. T. 30.

Short Delivery of Cargo by Porters in the Mersey Docks.]—The Mersey Docks Acts Consolidation Act, 1858, s. 36, making the master porters, appointed under that act to discharge cargoes in the Mersey Docks, responsible for any loss, damage, or injury sustained by the cargoes discharged by them during the receiving, weighing, and loading off by the master porters or their servants, does not in any way discharge the shipowner from his liability existing before he delivers to the master porter, and his responsibility for short delivery remains unaffected by the act. The Emilien Marie, 44 L. J., Adm. 9 ; 32 L. T. 435.

Defence—Ship and Goods Arrested for Bottomry—Master Carrying on Goods without Authority.]—Held, that to a count upon a bill of lading for non-delivery, a plea, alleging that the injury and damage could not be repaired, so as to enable the ship to proceed to its destination, except at a cost exceeding what would be the value of the ship, after her repair, on her arrival, and that no prudent owner would have incurred the expense ; and that the master acted imprudently, and without authority from the defendant ; and that the defendant never had the control of the goods after the arrival of the vessel at the port of its destination, was bad after verdict. Benson v. Duncan, 3 Ex. 644 ; 18 L. J., Ex. 169 ; 14 Jur. 218.

Admiralty Action—Damage to Cargo—Tort or Contract.]—Oil-cake, which the master had agreed to deliver in good order and condition, was stowed with hogsheads of tobacco, oaken staves being placed between them, and the oil-cake was damaged on the voyage :—Held, that the damage, however caused, was occasioned by the negligence or misconduct, as well as by the breach of contract, of the shipowner and his servants. The Figlia Maggiore, 37 L. J., Adm. 52 ; L. R. 2 A. & E. 106 ; 18 L. T. 532.

Damage to Cargo by Sea Water—Onus of Proof.]—Where cargo shipped in good condition is delivered damaged by sea water, the burden of proof is in the first instance on the shipowner to shew that he met with weather sufficient to cause the damage ; the burden then shifts to the cargo owner to shew that the damage was by fault of the shipowner or his servants and not by weather. Williams v. Dobbie, 10 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 982.

Short Delivery — Burden of Proof.] — The master of a ship has no authority to grant bills of lading for goods which were not put on board his vessel ; but when he signs a bill acknowledging the receipt of a specific quantity of goods, the shipowner is bound to deliver the full amount specified unless he can show that the whole or some part of it was in fact not shipped. Smith v. Bedouin Steam Navigation Co., 65 L. J., P. C. 8 ; [1896] A. C. 70—H. L. (Sc.)

Where the quantity of goods delivered is less than that stated in the bill of lading, the burden of proving that the quantity stated in the bill of lading was not in fact shipped is on the shipowner. Horsley v. Grimond, 21 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 410 ; and see Cases supra, cols. 552, 553, as to burden of proof.

Negligence of Crew—Burden of Proof.]—An organ was shipped under a bill of lading, marked, "At owner's risk," and under printed sailing bills which exempted the shipowner from liability for loss or damage on board ship, or at or after landing, or by negligence, default, or error in judgment of the crew. The organ was destroyed by falling into the hold whilst being landed ; and the facts proved were consistent with negligence in the crew or accident :—Held, that the shipowners were not liable for the loss. Wood v. Burns, 20 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 602.

Cargo in Bags—Duty to Deliver in Bags as signed for in Bill of Lading.]—By signing bills of lading for cargo in bags, the shipmaster becomes bound to deliver the same bags with their contents ; and, if not, the burden is on him to shew that he has delivered the contents, and that the bags were rotten without negligence on his part. Shankland v. Athya, 3 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (3rd ser.) 810.

Cargo incapable of Indentification — Non-delivery.]—Semble, per Lord Russell of Killowen, that where in the shipment of cotton some of the bales become unidentifiable, the several owners of the cotton become, in point of law, owners in common of the bales in proportion to their respective interests, and in an action by a single owner the shipowner can only attribute such proportion in answer to a claim for non-delivery. Smurthwaite v. Hannay, 63 L. J., Q. B. 737 ; [1894] A. C. 494 ; 6 R. 299 ; 71 L. T. 157 ; 43 W. R. 113 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 485—H. L. (E.)

Foreign Bill of Lading—Proof as to Quantity of Cargo.]—XIII. FREIGHT ; 3. PAYMENT ; e. RATE AND AMOUNT, Immanuel (Owners) v. Denholm, supra, col. 425.

Extent of Liability when Ship Sold—Value of Ship and Freight.]—In an action against an owner to recover damages, in consequence of the loss of goods laden on board his ship, the extent to which he is liable, where the completion of the voyage was prevented by the improper sale of the ship, is her value at the time of such sale, and the amount of freight she would have earned had she completed her voyage, and not the amount of freight as calculated at the time of its commencement. Cannan v. Meaburn, 2 Moore, 633 ; 1 Bing. 465 ; 1 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 84.

Loss of Part of Goods—Deterioration of Rest.]—In the absence of notice of the consequences which will ensue from a part of goods shipped being lost, and of any contract express or implied to be answerable for such consequences, the shipper of such goods, on a part being lost, is, over and beyond the sum necessary to replace it, only entitled as for the delay to receive interest on the said sum till payment, even though the rest of the goods has been rendered useless till the portion lost was replaced. British Columbia and Vancouver's Island Spar, Lumber and Saw Mill Co. v. Nettleship, 37 L. J., C. P. 235 ; L. R. 3 C. P. 499 ; 18 L. T. 291, 604 ; 16 W. R. 1046.

Insurance Policy.]—Where goods destined to a foreign port are captured in consequence of a deviation, the owners of the goods are entitled to recover from the owners of the ship only the prime cost of the goods, together with the shipping charges, and not the expense of effecting a policy of insurance upon them, without direct proof that the goods, at the time of the loss, were enhanced in value beyond their first price, to the amount sought to be recovered for insurance. Parker v. James, 4 Camp. 112.

Neglect to obtain Possession.]—Through the negligence of a pilot, not compulsorily taken, a vessel got aground in the course of the voyage, and part of the cargo (rice) was thereby damaged, and other parts it became necessary to throw overboard. The vessel subsequently put into the Mauritius for repairs, where the damaged portion was sold. On the arrival of the vessel at her port of discharge, the master, who was under the circumstances entitled to land and warehouse the cargo, neglected to cause it to be assorted, and also wrongfully refused delivery to the consignee:—Held, that the consignee was entitled to damages for the goods jettisoned; for the goods sold at the Mauritius; for the non-assortment of the cargo at Liverpool; and for the loss of interest occasioned by the wrongful withholding of the cargo. In estimating the damages for non-delivery of cargo, the court will not take into account that the consignee might have prevented some damage if he had availed himself of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, ss. 70, 71, to obtain possession of his cargo; that privilege being conditional upon the consignee depositing with the wharfinger the full amount claimed by the master. The Norway, 12 L. T. 57; 13 W. R. 296.

Wrongful Detention of Cargoes—Right of Wrongdoer to be reimbursed Freight and Landing charges.]—In an action by the plaintiffs claiming as consignees named in a bill of lading of certain cargoes and damages for detention, the defendants, who claimed the goods under a contract with the consignor, were allowed to receive and hold the goods pending trial, under a consent order, without prejudice. Ten months later a receiver was appointed. The court subsequently held that the plaintiffs were entitled to the cargoes, and directed an inquiry as to damages, refusing to allow the defendants freight and landing charges paid by them. On appeal to the house of lords the freight and landing charges were allowed to the defendants, no order being made as to the terms of the inquiry. The chief clerk awarded damages as for wrongful detention from the arrival of the cargoes until the decree of the court. Upon summons to vary the certificate it was held that the wrongful detention was from the arrival of each cargo to the appointment of the receiver; per Lords Watson and Macnaghten—on general principles, notwithstanding the wrongful detention by them, the defendants were entitled to be reimbursed freight and landing charges. Peruvian Guano Co. v. Dreyfus, 61 L. J., Ch. 749; [1892] A. C. 166; 66 L. T. 536; 7 Asp. M. C. 225—H. L. (E.) d. Damages.

Market Value—Price.]—The defendants, by charterparty, agreed with the plaintiff that their ship should, at a specified time, load 1,300 tons of coal in the river Tyne, to be carried to Havre for the plaintiff. They broke their contract, and the plaintiff had, in consequence, first, to hire other vessels at an advanced freight, and, secondly, to buy 1,300 tons of coal at an enhanced price. He was unable, according to the custom of the colliery trade in the Tyne, to secure a cargo until he had chartered vessels to carry it. The plaintiffs having sued the defendants in respect of both these heads of damage, they admitted their liability to pay the advanced freight, but denied that they were liable for the enhanced price of the coal. At the trial the rise in price at the pit's mouth was not disputed; but it was not directly proved that there had been an equivalent rise at Havre:—Held, that the fact of the plaintiffs having paid the additional price was primâ facie evidence of damage to that extent, and entitled him, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to recover. Featherston v. Wilkinson, 42 L. J., Ex. 78; L. R. 8 Ex. 122; 28 L. T. 448; 21 W. R. 422; 2 Asp. M. C. 31.

Loss of Market.] — The carriage of goods by ship on a long voyage is entirely different from the carriage of goods by railway, when they may be expected to arrive on a particular day or for a particular market, and loss of market on such a voyage cannot (in the absence of express stipulation) be said to have been within the contemplation of both parties at the time of making the contract so as to be recoverable as damages in case of delay in the carriage. The Parana, 2 P. D. 118; 36 L. T. 388; 25 W. R. 596; 3 Asp. M. C. 399—C. A.

The assignee of a cargo of hemp and other goods instituted a cause under s. 6 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), against a British ship, and claimed to recover damage for a breach of contract resulting from unreasonable delay in the carriage of the goods. The shipowner admitted his liability, and the amount of damage was referred to the registrar, assisted by merchants, to report upon. The registrar found that there had been a fall in the market value of the hemp between the date when the ship ought to have delivered her cargo and the date when the delivery actually took place, and reported that the plaintiff was entitled as compensation for the delay to interest at 5*l.* per cent. on the invoice value of the hemp, but not to any further compensation for loss of market. On appeal to the judge of the admiralty division:—Held, that the registrar was wrong, and that the proper measure of damage was the difference between the market value of the hemp when it was delivered and when it ought to have been delivered; but, on appeal to the court of appeal:—Held, that the registrar's decision must be restored, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to any claim for loss of market. Ib.

The defendant, the master of the steamer "Carbis Bay," lying at Wilmington, signed bills of lading for 400 bales of cotton "shipped on board the 'Carbis Bay'" for Liverpool. In consequence of insufficient room only 165 bales could be shipped, and the defendant directed the remaining 235 bales to be shipped on board the steamer "Wylo," then lying in the same port, bound for Liverpool. The "Carbis Bay" arrived at Liverpool on the 26th of October, and the "Wylo" on the 29th of October, and both cargoes were delivered to the plaintiffs, who were indorsees of the bills of lading. Between the 26th and the 29th of October a fall in the price of cotton took place, and the plaintiffs sued the defendant for the loss thereby occasioned :—Held, that on the 26th of October the plaintiffs had a right of action against the defendant for non-delivery, that the measure of damages was the market price of cotton on that day, and that the subsequent delivery of the cotton ex "Wylo" could only be taken into account in reduction of damages. Smith v. Tregarthen, 56 L. J., Q. B. 437; 57 L. T. 58; 35 W. R. 665; 6 Asp. M. C. 137.

Cargo damaged by Unseaworthiness of Ship — Limitation of Liability.]—A ship loaded with beans, whilst in dock before sailing, was damaged in a gale, started a plank and wetted some of the beans; and there was delay in carying the rest of the beans to their destination. The market for the beans was lost and they were sold at a lower rate. The jury found that the ship was unseaworthy, and gave damages for the wetting of the beans and for loss of market. New trial applied for and refused. Rule nisi to reduce the damages to the amount limited by 53 Geo. 3, c. 159, s. 1. Christie v. Trott, 2 W. R. 15.

Advanced Freight insured—Subrogation of Insurer to Rights of Assured.]—Goods were shipped by the plaintiffs on the defendants' ship under a charterparty, which provided that if required the whole freight should be advanced subject to a deduction for interest and insurance. The freight was paid in advance, and the amount was insured. The charterers sold the goods to the plaintiffs at a price covering cost, freight, and insurance. The cargo was lost by the negligence of the defendants. In an action for the loss of the goods :—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover as part of the damages sustained by them the amount of the advanced freight, which was included in the price paid by them for the goods, for the insurers of the freight who had indemnified the plaintiffs were entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the plaintiffs in respect of the advanced freight, and to have the action maintained for their benefit for the amount insured, as it would, but for the insurance, have formed part of the damages to which the plaintiffs would have been entitled. Dufourcet v. Bishop, 56 L. J., Q. B. 497; 18 Q. B. D. 373; 56 L. T. 633; 6 Asp. M. C. 109.

Right of Owner of Cargo to recover Salvage Expenses from Shipowner.]—The plaintiffs under a charterparty shipped a large quantity of rye on board one of the defendants' ships, to be carried from the port of T. to the port of A. Owing to the negligent navigation of the defendants' servants the ship was cast ashore, and a large quantity of the rye was lost; but a considerable quantity was saved by the salvage association, who were employed by the underwriters of the cargo with the assent of the defendants. The average statement was prepared, and the sum assessed was agreed to by the plaintiffs, and the salvage association were paid by the underwriters the expenses claimed by them. The plaintiffs brought their action to recover the amount of the salvage expenses so paid by the underwriters. The plaintiffs recovered a verdict for an amount to be settled out of court. The question of law involved in the case was reserved for further consideration. The defendants contended that they were not liable because the plaintiffs themselves had not paid the expenses, and the payment under the circumstances was voluntary :—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the amount of the salvage expenses, as, without their being incurred, the remainder of the cargo could not have been sent to it destination, which was for the benefit of the defendants, and that the payment under the circumstances was not voluntary. Scaramanga v. Marquand, 53 L. T. 810; 5 Asp. M. C. 506—C. A. Affirming 1 Cab. & E. 500.

Circumstances peculiar to Plaintiff—Advanced Freight "subject to Insurance."]—The plaintiffs having sold the cargo "to arrive," at a price less than the market value of the goods at the port of discharge at the time when the cargo should have arrived :—Held, that in estimating the damages such market value must be looked to, and not the price at which the plaintiffs had sold the cargo. The charterparty provided that sufficient cash for ship's disbursements should be advanced, if required, to the captain by the charterers on account of freight, subject to insurance only. The plaintiffs having advanced sums for ship's disbursements on account of freight as provided for in the charterparty :—Held, that, in estimating the damages for non-delivery of the cargo, only the unpaid freight must be deducted from the market value of the goods, not the advanced freight as well. Rodocanachi v. Milburn, 56 L. J., Q. B. 202; 18 Q. B. D. 67; 56 L. T. 594; 35 W. R. 241; 6 Asp. M. C. 100—C. A.

Collision — Both Ships to Blame — Damage to Cargo.]—The admiralty court rule that in cases of collision the damages are to be equally divided where both ships are to blame, does not apply to actions for breach of contract of carriage brought by owners of cargo against the carrying ship to recover damages for loss of, or injury to, their goods, and hence the plaintiffs in such actions are entitled to recover their full damages from the owners of the carrying ship. The Bushire, 52 L. T. 740; 5 Asp. M. C. 416.

—— Transhipment — Loss by Perils not previously excepted — Limitation Action.]—A cargo was shipped by the plaintiff on the defendants' vessel under a charterparty and bill of lading, not excepting the negligence of the master and crew. During the voyage, and through the negligence of the masters and crews of both ships, the vessel came into collision with another, and was so much damaged as to render it necessary to discharge her cargo at a port of refuge, and, after temporary repairs, to complete the voyage in ballast. The master transhipped the cargo with the knowledge, but without the assent or dissent of the plaintiff, into three other vessels, under bills of lading excepting the negligence of the masters and crews. Two of these vessels with their cargoes were, through the negligence of their masters and crews, lost before reaching the port of discharge. The defendants obtained a decree limiting their liability arising out of the collision to 8*l.* per ton, and the proceeds were distributed to the claimants, of whom the plaintiff was not one. In an action for non-delivery of the portion of the cargo lost :—Held, that the defendants were liable; for the loss did not arise from an excepted peril, and the transhipment, though justifiable, was for the purpose of earning the freight under the charterparty; and that the judgment in the limitation action was no bar to the present claim, as the loss of the portion of the cargo, the subject of this action, was not caused by the collision in respect of which the defendants had limited their liability. The Bernina, 56 L. J., Adm. 38; 12 P. D. 36; 56 L. T. 450; 35 W. R. 214; 6 Asp. M. C. 112.

13. Lien on Cargo.

By Indorsees of Bill drawn against Cargo.]—B. consigned a cargo of maize to O. & Co., for sale by them on a joint speculation of himself and them, and he drew upon them against the cargo six bills of exchange for sums amounting to 1,500*l*. He wrote them a letter advising them of the bills and sent them the bill of lading of the cargo, and asked them to protect the bills on presentation. They replied that they would do so. The bills of exchange were on the face of them expressed to be on account of the cargo. B. afterwards indorsed three of the bills to R. & Co. Before the bills were presented to O. & Co. for acceptance they had heard that B. had stopped payment, and when the bills were presented they declined to accept them:—Held, that R. & Co. were not entitled to any lien upon the cargo as against O. & Co. in respect of the three bills indorsed to them. Robey & Co.'s Perseverance Ironworks v. Ollier, L. R. 7 Ch. 695; 27 L. T. 362; 20 W. R. 956; 1 Asp. M. C. 413.

Of Agent for Expenses.]—A vessel having gone ashore with a cargo on board, a ship agent was put in possession of the ship and cargo by the captain, with authority from the captain to do, as his agent, what was for the benefit of all concerned. The agent did work and expended money in discharging the cargo, and brought it to a place of safety, where he took possession of it. The hull broke up and became a wreck. The expenditure by the agent was not for the purpose of enabling the shipowner to perform his contract and to earn freight, but was an extraordinary expenditure for the purpose of saving the property at risk, namely, the cargo:—Held, that the agent had a lien on the cargo for his charges as against the owner, though such charges were incurred without authority from the owner, the claim being analogous to that for general average or salvage. Hingston v. Wendt, 45 L. J., Q. B. 440; 1 Q. B. D. 367; 34 L. T. 181; 24 W. R. 664; 3 Asp. M. C. 126.

Authority of Agent to pay Charges on Cargo.]—Held, also, that an agent to whom bills of lading are handed for the purpose of obtaining possession of the cargo of a stranded vessel, is impliedly authorised to bind the owner by an agreement to pay, on condition of the cargo being given up, charges for which there is a lien on the cargo. Ib.

Goods Loaded under Agreement with Broker —Notice of Charterparty.]—A firm of brokers, having chartered a ship, advertised her as about to sail, and invited shippers to send their goods by her. Under the charterparty, the captain was to have an absolute lien on the cargo for freight, dead freight and demurrage. The plaintiff, who had no notice of the charterparty, dealing with the charterers only, sent some tea on board, to be carried at a rate of freight agreed upon between himself and the charterers. Afterwards the charterers were unable to fill the ship and so to carry out their contract with the owner, and the ship accordingly did not sail. No bills of lading for the tea had been signed, and the captain refused to sign them unless they were expressly made subject to the charterparty. The shipowner claimed a lien on the tea, for the expenses incurred by him through his dealings with the charterers:—Held, that he had no such lien, the plaintiff having had no notice of the charterparty, and there being nothing to put him on inquiry; and the tea was ordered to be given up to the plaintiff, the intended carriage thereof having failed. Peek v. Larsen, 40 L. J., Ch. 763; L. R. 12 Eq. 378; 25 L. T. 580; 19 W. R. 1045.

The goods of a shipper in a general ship are not affected by a clause in a charterparty of which he has no notice or knowledge, giving the shipowner a lien on all cargo and freight for arrears of hire due under the charterparty. Semble, the fact that no bills of lading were given for the goods makes no difference in this respect as to the rights and liabilities of the parties. T. hired a ship from M., and by the charterparty gave M. a lien on all cargo and freight for arrears of hire. T. advertised the ship as a general ship, and gave no notice of the charterparty. B. shipped goods and obtained a receipt, but no bill of lading. The hire being in arrears, M. detained the goods of B. for the whole of the arrears:—Held, that M. was not entitled to detain the goods of B., and that B. was entitled to damages for their detention. The Stornoway, 51 L. J., Adm. 27; 46 L. T. 773; 4 Asp. M. C. 529.

Default of Owner of Goods.]—If a shipowner is prevented from carrying the cargo to its destination by the act or default of the owner, he has a possessory lien on the cargo for the entire freight and for contribution to any general average expenses incurred. Galam, Cargo ex, Br. & Lush. 167; 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 216; 33 L. J., Adm. 97; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 477; 9 L. T. 550; 12 W. R. 495.

Landing and Warehousing Cargo—Excessive Claim.]—Under the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 67, a shipowner may land goods whenever the delivery of them to the owner within the proper time has been prevented by the force of circumstances, whether the owner of the goods is or is not to blame. The Energie, Miedbrodt v. Fitzsimon, 44 L. J., Adm. 25; L. R. 6 P. C. 306; 32 L. T. 579; 23 W. R. 932; 2 Asp. M. C. 555.

If, on landing the goods, the shipowner warehouses them under a stop-order for a sum manifestly, and to his knowledge, in excess of the amount of his lien, such conduct is equivalent to a wrongful detention of the goods, for which the owner of them may bring an action. Ib.

A fortiori an action will lie against the shipowner if, on payment of a sum due for average by the owner of the goods, he refuses to reduce the stop-order to the amount for which he then has, or can reasonably claim, a lien. Ib.

Where no Statutable Warehouses.]—Semble, that the master may still land the cargo without losing his possession and control over it (placing the goods in a warehouse belonging to or hired for his owners), and so preserve his lien. Morsle-Blanch v. Wilson, 42 L. J., C. P. 70; L. R. 8 C. P. 227; 28 L. T. 415; 1 Asp. M. C. 605.

Lien of Consignee Charterer.]—A. B. chartered nine vessels in England, to fetch C. D.'s timber from Nova Scotia, under an agreement between them, that he, A. B., was to be the consignee. C. D., in breach of the contract, consigned the cargoes to other persons, but A. B. arrested the produce of one of them in the hands of the consignee, by means of an injunction:—Held, that A. B. could maintain a bill against C. D. and the consignee to enforce his lien on the produce of that cargo, and that such lien extended to all sums properly expended by him in respect of the nine ships, and to all pecuniary losses and liabilities, but not to commission, consignee's profits, or damages for breach of the contract. Young v. Neill, 32 Beav. 529; 2 N. R. 212; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 976; 9 L. T. 9; 11 W. R. 1052.

Advances on Cargo—Lien—Foreign Attachment.]—The plaintiffs advanced several sums of money to S. M. & W. on the security of shipments coming to them as return remittances from their correspondents in Hayti, which shipments they directed the Haytian house to consign to the plaintiffs. The Haytian house was informed of the contracts, and promised the plaintiffs to make the remittances accordingly. In June, 1842, a cargo of goods was prepared by the Haytian house as return remittances, and they directed the plaintiffs to insure a part of the cargo on the account of S., and informed W. that a part of the cargo was intended for him, which W. communicated to the plaintiffs. The resident partner in the Haytian house died in June, 1842, after the cargo had been shipped but before it was consigned, and his administratrix consigned the cargo to B. in London, under whose orders it was sold, and by whom the proceeds were received in December, 1842. S. & Co., creditors of the Haytian house, on the 29th August, 1842, attached by foreign attachment, according to the custom of London, the goods of the Haytian house in B.'s hands. By a letter dated the 7th September, 1842, the surviving partner in the Haytian house directed B. to hold the cargo for S. M. & W. in certain parts. On a bill and motion to restrain the proceedings of S. & Co. against B., in the lord mayor's court:—Held, that the right of the plaintiffs, if any, was an equitable and not a legal right; that the plaintiffs were entitled to the aid of the court in the trial of the right; and that the proceedings in the lord mayor's court should be restrained by injunction. Cotesworth v. Stephens, 4 Hare, 185.

Passenger's Luggage.]—The master has a lien upon the luggage of a passenger for his passage money. Wolf v. Summers, 2 Camp. 631; 12 R. R. 764.

Money borrowed by Master to buy Cargo—Lien of Lender.]—The master without authority borrowed money abroad to buy cargo to bring home. The shipowners having taken the benefit of the advance are liable to the lender for repayment; but the lender has no lien on the cargo. Ashmall v. Wood, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 232; 5 W. R. 397. And see S. C., 2 Jur. (N.S.) 837; 4 W. R. 694.

Warehouse Owners' Lien—Custom.]—A custom for warehouse owners in London to have a general lien on goods for moneys due from the merchants employing them in respect of goods consigned to them from abroad, is bad, because unreasonable. Leuckhart v. Cooper, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 99; 3 Scott, 521; 6 L. J., C. P. 131.

Money Awarded as Compensation for Seizure of Cargo—Lien of Consignee.]—A consignee in Denmark paid charges for freight, &c., upon a cargo, the property of the consignor, who afterwards became bankrupt. The cargo was seized by the Danish government in consequence of war having broken out with England. At the end of the war a sum of money was awarded by the British government to the assignee of the bankrupt as compensation for the cargo:—Held, that the consignee had a lien on the compensation money for the charges paid by him. Good, Ex parte, Atkinson, In re, 3 Mont. & Ayr. 246; 2 Deac. 389; 7 L. J., Bk. 7; 1 Jur. 456.

Bill of Exchange—Appropriation of Cargo to Meet.]—B. & Co. consigned a cargo to the defendants, and sent them a bill of lading in a letter as follows: "The present serves to cover bill of lading for timber, &c., shipped per 'China,' against which we have valued on you at six months in favour of F. S. & Co. for 1,200*l.*, which kindly protect." On the same day B. & Co. sent to F. S. & Co. the bill of exchange, which was drawn on the defendants to the order of F. S. & Co., and concluded: "Place the same with or without advice to account consignment per 'China.'" After the cargo arrived F. S. & Co. presented the bill for acceptance, but the defendants refused to accept it. Shortly after B. & Co. stopped payment, and the cargo arrived:—Held, that it was appropriated to meet the bill, and that F. S. & Co. had a lien prior to that of the defendants for their general balance. Frith v. Forbes, 4 De G. F. & J. 409; 32 L. J., Ch. 10; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1113; 10 W. R. 291.

Lien for Freight.]—See XIII. FREIGHT, supra, cols. 428, seq.

14. MISCELLANEOUS.

Breach of Blockade—Condemnation of Cargo.]—The cargo of a ship condemned for breach of blockade, though not belonging to the shipowner, is subject to condemnation. The Alexander, 4 C. Rob. 93. S. P., The Adonis, 5 C. Rob. 256.

Cattle Cargo — Cleansing and Disinfecting Ship.]—Clause 100 of the Animals Order in Council of 1886, made under s. 32, sub-s. 21, of the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1873, requires that a vessel used for carrying animals by sea should, after landing animals therefrom, and before taking on board any other animal or other cargo, be cleansed and disinfected by having all parts of the vessel with which animals or their droppings had come in contact scraped and swept:—Held, that this order requires that before any new cargo can be put on board any part of the vessel, even those parts which had not been used for carrying cattle, must be cleansed and disinfected as mentioned above. Ismay v. Blake, 66 L. T. 530; 7 Asp. M. C. 189; 56 J. P. 486.

Perishing Cargo Salved—Sale by Court.]—A barque laden with a cargo shipped at Charleston under bills of lading whereby the cargo was to be delivered on payment of freight at Bremen, whilst prosecuting her voyage to Bremen was run into in the English Channel and damaged by another vessel, which was alone to blame for the collision. The master and crew of the barque abandoned her, and in her abandoned state she was taken possession of by salvors, who brought the barque and her cargo into Dover. The cargo was damaged by seawater, and was alleged to be deteriorating. In a suit instituted by some of the salvors against the barque, her cargo and freight, the court, on an application made on their behalf, without notice to the owners of the barque, ordered the cargo to be sold. The owners of the barque afterwards hearing of the order, and wishing to have the cargo transhipped and carried on to its destination, applied to rescind the order, and offered to give bail for the cargo. The court, being of opinion that it was for the benefit of all parties that the cargo should be sold, refused to prevent the sale, but reserved all questions of freight. Afterwards the cargo was sold and the proceeds brought into court, and the owners of the barque then applied for an order for payment out of the proceeds in court of a sum of money in respect of freight:—Held, that, by the abandonment of the barque, the contract to pay freight had been dissolved, and that the owners of the barque were not entitled to any payment in respect of freight. The Kathleen, 43 L. J., Adm. 39; L. R. 4 A. & E. 269; 31 L. T. 204; 23 W. R. 350; 2 Asp. M. C. 367.

1. GENERALLY.

Who may Stop—Surety for the Price.]—One who is merely surety for the price of the goods cannot stop them in transitu. Siffken v. Wray, 6 East, 371; 2 Smith, 480.

—— Alien Enemy—Licence to Trade.]—A licence to a British merchant to bring a cargo from an enemy's port legalises the sale of the cargo by the enemy and enables him to stop it in transitu. Fenton v. Pearson, 15 East, 419.

—— Foreign Purchaser.]—A trader abroad who, on his own credit, buys goods, and ships them to a merchant in England upon the order of the latter, charging a commission, may, upon the bankruptcy of the merchant in England, stop the goods in transitu; and that although the merchant had before his bankruptcy accepted bills for the cost of the goods. Feise v. Wray, 3 East, 93; 6 R. R. 551.

—— Agent.] — M. & Co., merchants, of Jamaica, ordered of P. & G., merchants, of Baltimore, goods to be shipped to Jamaica at the risk and expense of M. & Co. The goods were shipped under bills of lading making them deliverable to M. & Co. on payment of freight. The goods were not paid for. During the voyage M. & Co. became bankrupt. On the arrival of the ship at Jamaica the agents of P. & G. went on board and demanded a package of the cargo, in the name of the whole, on behalf of P. & G. Before the ship's arrival P. & G. had written to their agents, saying, "In disposing of the cargo use your own judgment," forwarding a power of attorney; but the letter did not arrive until after the agents had taken possession of the cargo:—Held, that the agents had authority to stop the cargo on behalf of P. & G.; and that there had been a valid stoppage in transitu. Hutchings v. Nunes, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 243; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 109; 9 L. T. 125. See also Bird v. Brown, infra, col. 579.

Policy Moneys not subject to Right of Stoppage in Transitu.]—The right of stoppage in transitu does not extend over policy moneys paid in respect of insurances effected upon the goods by the vendee. Berndtson v. Strang, 37 L. J., Ch. 665; L. R. 3 Ch. 588; 19 L. T. 40; 16 W. R. 1025.

Sub-sale does not put an End to Right of Stoppage.]—Where the master of a ship is still a carrier and retains a lien for freight, a sub-sale of the cargo and handing over of a delivery order to the sub-purchaser, and actual receipt by him of part, do not put an end to the transitus, and the unpaid vendor has, upon giving notice to the master, the right to stop the surplus proceeds payable by the sub-purchaser after discharging intermediate equities. Falk, Ex parte, Kiell, In re, 14 Ch. D. 446; 42 L. T. 780; 28 W. R. 785; 4 Asp. M. C. 280—C. A.

The mere fact that the purchaser has resold the goods, and that the bill of lading has been made out in the name of the sub-purchaser, does not put an end to the transitus, or destroy the vendor's right to stop the goods in transitu. Golding, Davis & Co., Ex parte, Knight, In re, 13 Ch. D. 628; 42 L. T. 270; 48 W. R. 481—C. A.

Mutual Dealings — Right to Stop though Accounts not Adjusted.]—A merchant in England sent goods of a given value to a merchant at Quebec for sale on his account. Before the goods were sold the latter shipped three cargoes of timber to the former to credit on his account. Two of them arrived; against the third the consignor drew a bill for the amount whilst it was in transitu. The consignee dishonoured the bill, and became bankrupt:—Held, that the consignor was entitled to stop the cargo in transitu, and was not bound to wait until their mutual accounts were adjusted. Wood v. Jones, 7 D. & R. 126.

Transitus not Begun—Right to hold Possession.]—It follows from the right of the vendor to stop in transitu, if he hears of the bankruptcy of the vendee before delivery, that he has à fortiori a right to refuse to part with possession of the goods, if he has notice of bankruptcy whilst the goods are in his possession. Gibson v. Carruthers, 8 M. & W. 321; 11 L. J., Ex. 138.

Provisional Stoppage—Insolvency Expected.]—The right of stoppage in transitu may be exercised provisionally without actual insolvency of the consignee; but if insolvency does not take place, the right does not arise, and the act is a nullity. The Constantia, 6 C. Rob. 321.

Foreign Law.]—Goods were delivered on board a ship chartered by the consignee, and by the law of Russia the owner of such goods may by process of law retake possession of them until payment, in case of the bankruptcy of the vendee. The master of the ship, upon the application of the owner of the goods, who had heard of the bankruptcy of the vendee, signed bills of lading for the goods, making them deliverable to their order:—Held, that this was a substantial compliance with the Russian law, and that the master was bound to deliver the goods on arrival to the vendor, and not to the assignees of the vendee. Inglis v. Usherwood, 1 East, 515. And see Fowler v. McTaggart, 1 East, 522, n.; 7 Term Rep. 442, n.; 4 R. R. 485.

General Principle—No Relief in Equity.]—A. beyond seas consigns goods to B. in London. Before the goods arrive B. becomes bankrupt. If A. can by any means prevent the goods coming to the hands of B. or his assignees, he may do so, and equity will not relieve. Wiseman v. Vandeputt, 2 Vern. 203.

Whether Contract rescinded by.]—A vendor of cotton in America, by direction of purchasers in England, shipped the cotton on board a vessel belonging to the purchaser, who became bankrupt before its arrival. A mortgagee of the ship, who was an agent of the vendor, took possession of the ship under his mortgage, and sold the cotton under a supposed right of his principal to stop it in transitu; and the principal in account with his agent gave credit for the proceeds of the cotton. The assignees of the purchaser then brought an action against the mortgagee for the seizure, and he paid them, under a compromise, the amount for which the cotton sold:—Held, that the contract was not rescinded by the seizure of the cotton, and that the vendor could prove for the purchase-money. Humberston, In re, De G. 262; 8 Jur. 675.

What Amounts to—Notice to hold Proceeds of Goods—Notice to Consignees and not to Carrier.]—J. P. & Co., merchants at Pernambuco, having received orders to purchase goods at New York for customers, instructed S. J. & Co., their agents at Liverpool, to purchase and ship the goods, and have them shipped to J. P. & Co.; S. J. & Co. thereupon instructed R. B. B., the agent at New York of J. P. & Co. and S. J. & Co., to purchase the goods. R. B. B. purchased the goods and shipped them to J. P. & Co., sending the invoices and bills of lading. To provide himself with funds to purchase the goods, R. B. B. drew bills of exchange on S. J. & Co., in which were the words: "And charged to account as advised." Attached to each bill was a counterfoil headed "Advice of draft." This was addressed to S. J. & Co., mentioning the particulars of the bill, and concluded with these (or similar) words: "Against shipments per steamship 'Glensannox,' No. 6, N. Y. to Brazil viâ Baltimore. Please protect the drafts as advised above, and oblige drawer. R. B. B., New York, May 9th, 1879." These bills were sold in New York, and R. B. B. advised S. J. & Co. of the bills, and at the same time forwarded a statement of account. On presentation of the bills for acceptance, S. J. & Co. detached the counterfoils and kept possession of them. On June 10th, 1879, while the plaintiffs, P. S. & Co., were holders of these bills, drawn according to their course of business in respect of a shipment to J. P. & Co., to whom the bills of lading were at the same time sent, S. J. & Co. suspended payment. The same day the failure was known in New York, and R. B. B., under pressure from P. S. & Co., telegraphed to J. P. & Co.: "Having pledged documents and shipments 'Glensannox,' hold proceeds subject order P. S. & Co." The next day, June 11th, the "Glensannox" arrived at Pernambuco, and the goods were delivered to the customers of J. P. & Co., who received from them the purchase-money. The bills of lading had been delivered to the customers before the telegram was received. The bills of exchange were dishonoured by S. J. & Co. J. P. & Co. claimed to be entitled to retain the purchase-money against sums alleged to be due to them from S. J. & Co.:—Held, that even if the telegram had been addressed to the owner or master of the ship, or had been received before the bills of lading had been delivered to the customers, it would not have operated to stop them in transitu. Phelps v. Comber, 54 L. J., Ch. 1017; 29 Ch. D. 813; 52 L. T. 873; 33 W. R. 829; 5 Asp. M.C. 428—C. A.

2. Transfer of Bill of Lading.

Effect of—Assignment for Value.]—The consignor may stop goods in transitu before they get into the hands of the consignee, in case of the insolvency of the consignee; but if the consignee assigns the bills of lading to a third person for a valuable consideration, the right of the consignor as against such assignee is at an end. Lickbarrow v. Mason (in error), 4 Bro. P. C. 57; 2 Term Rep. 63; 5 Term Rep. 367, 683; 6 Term Rep. 131; 1 H. Bl. 357; 2 H. Bl. 211. And see 6 East, 20, n. 3; 1 R. R. 425.

L. & S., carrying on business at Hong Kong and London, bought goods of L. and others, Manchester merchants, to be shipped to their firms at Hong Kong. The goods were on a ten months' credit, and it was agreed that remittances of the proceeds of the goods should be made from Hong Kong, to asset the acceptances of L. & S. for the price of the goods, on receipt of the bill of lading. L. & S. shipped the goods in a vessel engaged by them for the purpose, and bills of lading, making the goods deliverable to their firm in Hong Kong, or their assigns, were signed by the master, and delivered to L. & S., who accepted the vendors' draft for the price of the goods. Before the goods or bills of lading reached Hong Kong, L. & S., being insolvent, in consideration of debts to two banks at Hong Kong, assigned all their property to the banks, and indorsed the bills of lading to them, the banks knowing of the insolvency of L. & S.:—Held, that there was no sufficient consideration for the assignment of the bills of lading, so as to defeat the right of the unpaid vendors to stop in transitu, and that the transitus continued until the goods were delivered at Hong Kong. Rodger v. Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 538; 38 L. J., P. C. 30; L. R. 2 P. C. 393; 21 L. T. 33; 17 W. R. 468.

Assignee of Bill of Lading becoming Partner with Consignee.]—If the consignee of goods, to whom the bill of lading was indorsed in blank, assigns it over as a security for acceptances given by the assignee, not amounting to the value of the goods, and afterwards by an agreement between them they become partners in the goods, by which agreement it appears that the consignor has not been paid for them, the assignee of the bill of lading cannot maintain trover against the consignor if he stops the goods in transitu upon the insolvency of the consignee. Salomons v. Nissen, 2 Term Rep. 674 ; 1 R. R. 592.

Sub-Vendee taking Bill of Lading.]—If the shipper of goods takes a receipt from the captain, who executes a bill of lading in favour of a sub-vendee, the former may stop the goods in transitu. Craven v. Ryder, 2 Marsh. 127 ; 6 Taunt. 433 ; Holt, 100 ; 16 R. R. 644.

Indorsement bonâ fide.]—A bill of lading for the delivery of goods to order and assigns is a negotiable instrument, which by indorsement and delivery passes the property in the goods to the indorsee, subject only to the right of the unpaid vendor to stop them in transitu. Pease v. Gloahec, 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 556 ; 35 L. J., P. C. 66 ; L. R. 1 P. C. 219 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 677 ; 15 L. T. 6 ; 15 W. R. 201. S. C., nom. The Marie Joseph, Br. & Lush. 449.

The indorsee may deprive the vendor of this right by indorsing the bill of lading for a valuable consideration, although the goods are not paid for, even if bills had been given which are certain to be dishonoured, provided the indorsee for value has acted bonâ fide, and without notice. Ib.

If the vendee of goods having received from the vendor an indorsed bill of lading, making the goods deliverable to order or assigns, indorses and delivers it to a banker as a security for past and future advances, the banker's claim upon the goods for all such advances will prevail against a claim of the unpaid vendor to stop the goods in transitu. Ib.

The vendee of goods having received from the vendor an indorsed bill of lading, making the goods deliverable to order or assigns, and having given an acceptance for the price, returned a bill of lading to the vendor, to hold as security against the acceptance until the goods were sold or the vessel arrived, and afterwards by fraudulent representation again obtained possession of the bill of lading from the vendor, and negotiated it by indorsement and delivery to a third person, who took it without notice of the fraud :—Held, that the vendee's fraud did not vitiate his power to pass a good title by indorsement, and that the right of such third person under the indorsement should prevail against the claim of the unpaid vendor to stop the goods in transitu. Ib.

—— Of One of Set of Three.] — The mere indorsement and delivery of one of a triplicate set of bills of lading is not necessarily such a negotiation as to preclude a vendor from exercising his right of stoppage in transitu. The Tigress, Br. & Lush. 38 ; 32 L. J., Adm. 97 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 361 ; 8 L. T. 117 ; 11 W. R. 538.

—— Without Notice of Consignee's Insolvency.]—The consignor loses his right of stoppage in transitu upon the insolvency of the consignee, when, prior to the insolvency, the bill of lading has been transferred, by indorsement, to a purchaser for value bonâ fide, and without notice of the consignee's insolvency, under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111. Kemp v. Canavan, 15 Ir. C. L. R. 216.

The right of an unpaid consignor to stop in transitu is not taken away by an assignment of the bill of lading, for a valuable consideration, to, a third person, with notice of the insolvency of the consignee. Vertue v. Jewell, 4 Camp. 31.

Mere Delivery to Consignee.]—The delivery by the consignor of a bill of lading to the consignee is not such a transfer of the property as will preclude him from stopping the goods in transitu. Tucker v. Humphrey, 4 Bing. 516 ; 1 M. & P. 378, n. ; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 92.

The unpaid vendor may stop goods in transitu before they come to the hands of the vendee's factor ; although such factor has the bill of lading indorsed to order in his hands, and is under an acceptance to the vendee on a general account. Patten v. Thompson, 5 M. & S. 350 ; 17 R. R. 350. See 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39.

Purchase on Account of Third Person.]—A merchant who purchases goods on his own credit for another, to whom he indorses a bill of lading of the goods, stands for the purpose of stoppage in transitu in the position of a vendor, and the indorsement by him of one bill of lading to the vendee does not of itself defeat his right to stop in transitu. Ib.

The vendor claiming to stop need not represent to the master that the bill of lading is still in the hands of the vendee. Ib.

When Goods Pledged.]—The purchaser of goods (shipped by the vendor) consigned them abroad, and indorsed the bill of lading to a bank as security for an advance. Afterwards, and before the arrival of the ship, the consignees sold the goods "to arrive" to sub-purchasers, to whom they were delivered. The purchaser having become bankrupt, the unpaid vendor gave notice to the master, after the sub-sales, but before delivery and before payment of the freight, to stop the goods in transitu. The consignees remitted the proceeds of the sub-sales to the bank, who, after repaying themselves their advance, handed to the trustee of the bankrupt the balance, which was less than the original purchase-money : — Held, that the principles established by Westzinthus, In re (infra), and Spalding v. Ruding (infra), were applicable ; that the right of stoppage in transitu was not at an end when the notice was given ; and that the vendor was entitled to the balance after satisfaction of the bank's claim. Kemp v. Falk, 52 L. J., Ch. 167 ; 7 App. Cas. 573 ; 47 L. T. 454 ; 31 W. R. 125 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 1—H. L. (E.)

In equity the vendor may, when goods under a bill of lading have been pledged, by giving notice to the pledgee, resume his former interest in the goods, subject to the pledgee's claim, and will be entitled to the residue of their proceeds after the pledgee's demand has been satisfied out of them, or to the goods themselves if it be satisfied aliunde, notwithstanding the pledgee may have other demands against the consignee. Westzinthus, In re, 5 B. & Ad. 817 ; 2 N. & M. 644 ; 3 L. J., K. B. 56.

In equity a transfer of goods for valuable consideration by a consignee for a limited purpose, does not destroy the consignor's right of stoppage in transitu, ultra the particular lien of the transferee. Spalding v. Ruding, 12 L. J., Ch. 503 ; 6 Beav. 376.

A. consigned goods to the value of 1,000*l.* to B., who transferred the bill of lading to C. to secure 1,000*l.* B. having become bankrupt, C., as B.'s factor, claimed, as against A.'s title to stop in transitu, a right to retain the whole in satisfaction of a general balance due to him from B. :—Held, that he was entitled to retain the goods, but only against the advance of 1,000*l*. Ib.

3. TRANSITUS NOT AT AN END.

Termination of Transitus—Not until Goods in Possession of Consignee.]—M. bought lead of the plaintiff at Newcastle, and some time after directed that it should be sent to him in London. Plaintiff gave his agent at Newcastle a delivery order, which the agent indorsed to a keelman, who put the lead on board a ship bound to London. The ship arrived in London on 21st of June, and the defendants, as wharfingers, undertook to deliver the lead. M. failed upon the same day. On the 23rd and 24th June M. demanded delivery of the lead from the master of the ship, who refused to deliver it, alleging that the defendants had stopped it because of his failure. On the 28th June the plaintiff wrote ordering the lead, which was then in the defendants' lighter, to be stopped :—Held, that the transitus was not at an end. Jackson v. Nichol, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 508 ; 7 Scott, 577 ; 8 L. J., C. P. 294.

Delivery to Carrier named by Purchaser.]—The transit continues until the goods are in the possession of the buyers, and it makes no difference that their ultimate destination has not been communicated to the vendor. Delivery by the vendor to the carrier is not delivery to the purchaser, although the carrier be named and paid by the purchaser. Rosevear China Clay Co., Ex parte, Cock, In re, 48 L. J., Bk. 100 ; 11 Ch. D. 560 ; 40 L. T. 730 ; 27 W. R. 591 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 144.

Delivery to Forwarding Agent.]—A., in Guernsey, employed his agent at Southampton to ship all goods arriving there addressed to him. The agent paid carriage and wharfage dues, and selected the ship to carry the goods on :—Held, that the vendor could stop the goods after shipment from Southampton. Nicholls v. Le Feuvre, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 81 ; 1 Hodges, 255 ; 2 Scott, 146 ; 7 Car. & P. 91 ; 4 L. J., C. P. 281.

Goods in King's Stores — Nonpayment of Duties.]—Where goods are consigned, but, on account of the duty not being paid, are lodged in the king's stores, the consignor may stop them in transitu, if he claims them before they are actually sold for the payment of duties ; or, if sold, he is entitled to the proceeds. Northey v. Field, 2 Esp. 613.

—— Delivery of Bill of Lading "to Order or Assigns."]—F. ordered wine of A. of Oporto, who loaded the wine and took from the master bills of lading for delivery to order or assigns. One of these bills they sent to F. in a letter advising him of the shipment on his account, and stating that they had drawn upon him for the price. F. accepted the bill, payable nine months after date. Before the bill was due the wine arrived, and, F. not being able to pay the duties, it was sent to the king's warehouse. F. being indebted to N., and called upon to pay, sold the wine whilst in the warehouse to N. for his debt and 40*l*. F. soon after became bankrupt. A., having paid the duties, obtained possession of the wine ; whereupon N. sued him for its value :—Held, that the right of the consignor to stop in transitu was not at an end. Nix v. Olive, Abbott on Shipping, 13th ed. 707.

Notice to Master of Consignee's Ship.] — A timber merchant in Sweden sold timber to L. & R. By the original contract the goods were to be delivered "free on board, payable by buyers' acceptance at six months from date of bills of lading, shipment to London, &c." ; the seller was to provide ships at rates specified. Afterwards it was agreed that the buyers should charter a ship to bring the timber, and this was done. The ship put into Copenhagen, and the buyers having stopped payment before the acceptance became payable, the vendor caused a notice of stoppage in transitu to be served on the master :—Held, a good stoppage. Berndtson v. Strang, 37 L. J., Ch. 665 ; L. R. 3 Ch. 588 ; 19 L. T. 40 ; 16 W. R. 1025.

Demand of Bills of Lading—Lien.]—An agreement was entered into between L. in London and W. in Yorkshire, that W. should supply L. with goods, W. drawing on L., who was to accept bills for the price of the goods. L. was to ship the goods to Shanghai for sale on W.'s account. On receipt of the bills of lading L. was to send them to R., to whose order they were to be made out. W. was to have a lien on the bills of lading and each shipment on transit outwards or in the hands of consignee or other person, which lien was to cease on payment of the bills of exchange in respect of each shipment. No notice of this agreement was given to R. W.'s packer forwarded a parcel of goods to London, marked for Shanghai and per a ship, the "Gordon Castle," named by L. W. paid the freight. The packer advised L. of the despatch of the goods, and told him that they were at his disposal. L. accepted a six months' bill drawn on him by W. for the price of the goods. The railway company advised L. of the arrival of the goods at the docks, and told him that they remained at his risk for shipment by the "Gordon Castle." The goods were shipped and the bills of lading made out to order of L. or his assigns, by his directions ; but they were never delivered to him, as he paid no freight. The ship sailed with the goods on board. A few days before, L. stopped payment, and shortly after she sailed he committed an act of bankruptcy and became a bankrupt. W. and the trustee in bankruptcy both claimed the bills of lading in the hands of the shipowners. It was arranged that the goods should be sold by the agent of the shipowners at Shanghai, and the proceeds paid to the person entitled :—Held, that the agreement did not prevent W. from exercising his right to stop the goods in transitu ; and that the transit did not end until the goods were at Shanghai ; and that the demand by W. of the bills of lading in the hands of the shipowners was an exercise of the right to stop ; and that W. was entitled to have the bill of exchange satisfied out of the proceeds of the goods. Watson, Ex parte, Love, In re, 46 L. J., Bk. 97 ; 5 Ch. D. 35 ; 36 L. T. 75 ; 25 W. R. 489 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 396—C. A.

Goods Shipped but not Arrived.]—The purchaser of goods directed the vendor, who carried on business at Wolverhampton, to consign goods to a vessel then loading in the East India Docks for Melbourne. The vendor delivered the goods to a railway company to be forwarded and shipped. Afterwards the vendor, on the purchaser becoming insolvent, gave notice to the railway company to stop the goods, but too late to prevent shipment. The ship sailed with the goods on board, but before arriving at Melbourne the vendors claimed the goods from the shipowners as their property :—Held, that the transit was not at an end until the goods reached Melbourne, and that the vendors were entitled to the goods. Bethell v. Clark, 57 L. J., Q. B. 302 ; 20 Q. B. D. 615 ; 59 L. T. 808 ; 36 W. R. 611 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 346—C. A.

Ship chartered by Shipper—Bill of Lading to his Order — Indorsement — Ship calling for Orders.]—W. at Bahia sold goods to A. at Glasgow. Under the contract W. shipped the goods on board a vessel chartered by himself to proceed either direct or viâ Falmouth, Cowes or Queenstown, for orders to any port in the United Kingdom or the continent as specified. The bill of lading was made out to W.'s order or assigns, signed by the master, and indorsed in blank by W., who forwarded it with the charterparty and invoice, which expressed the goods to be shipped on the account and at the risk of and to A. The bill of lading, charterparty and invoice were received by A. On the ship's arrival at Falmouth, W.'s agents applied to A. for instructions as to the destination, and before receiving them they heard of A.'s insolvency :—Held, that W.'s agents had a right to stop in transitu. Fraser v. Witt, L. R. 7 Eq. 64 ; 19 L. T. 440 ; 17 W. R. 92.

Ship chartered by Vendee.]—Delivery on ship chartered by vendee does not necessarily end the transitus. Bothlingk v. Inglis, 3 East, 381 ; 7 R. R. 490.

Goods delivered on Board—Receipts taken—Purchaser Passenger in same Ship.]—The purchaser of goods directed the vendors to deliver the goods at a wharf, to be forwarded by a specified ship to the purchaser abroad. The vendors delivered the goods, and took receipts from the shipowners, which they delivered to the purchaser, who exchanged them for the bills of lading, and himself sailed as a passenger in the ship :—Held, that the goods were liable to be stopped in transitu. Lyons v. Hoffnung, 59 L. J., P. C. 79 ; 15 App. Cas. 391 ; 63 L. T. 293 ; 39 W. R. 390 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 551—P. C.

Rejection of Goods by Purchaser—Contract Rescinded.]—A ship's cargo was bought, and after it was unloaded by the purchaser he became insolvent. Part of the cargo was afterwards, at the request of the dock people, removed from the quay to the purchaser's house for the purpose of safe custody. The cargo was, in fact, rejected by the purchaser as not according to the contract ; whereupon the seller had rescinded the contract : —Held, that the seller was entitled to the cargo as against the trustee in bankruptcy. Booker v. Milne, 9 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 314.

Voyage not Completed because of Quarantine.]—Where before the ship's arrival the consignee of cargo becomes bankrupt, the arrival of the ship in the port, where she is taken possession of by the assignees, but from whence she is ordered to perform quarantine, is not such a completion of the voyage as shall vest the property in the assignees ; but the consignor may stop them as in transitu whilst the vessel is performing quarantine. Holst v. Pownal, 1 Esp. 240. See 5 R. R. 658, n.

Mate's Receipt.]—Goods were sold f.o.b., and on shipment the vendor's agent tendered a receipt to the mate by which the goods were acknowledged to be shipped on account of the vendor. The mate kept, but did not sign, the receipt ; and on the next day signed bills of lading, making the goods deliverable to the order of the vendee :—Held, that the vendor could stop the goods on the vendee's insolvency. Ruck v. Hatfield, 5 B. & Ald. 632 ; 24 R. R. 507.

Overside Order.]—Goods were shipped by A., a firm in Calcutta, to the order of B. in England. B. pledged the bill of lading to C., and afterwards became bankrupt. On the ship's arrival C. obtained from the brokers, on payment of freight, an overside order for delivery of the goods. On presenting this order to the officer on board the ship, the lighterman employed by C. was told that he should have the goods as soon as they could be got at. Before they could be got at, or the ship broke bulk, A.'s agents served notice on the master and ship's agents of stoppage in transitu :—Held, that the notice was good, and that A. was entitled to the goods, after satisfying C.'s charge. Coventry v. Gladstone, 37 L. J., Ch. 492 ; L. R. 6 Eq. 44 ; 16 W. R. 837.

Goods in Hands of Forwarding Railway Company.]—A. & Co., of Moscow and Birmingham, bought goods from B. & Co., of Glasgow, to be shipped by C.'s "first steamer from Leith to Riga, to A. & Co.'s orders." By the bills of lading, which stated that the goods were shipped by A. & Co., they were to be delivered at Riga to the agent of a railway company, to be forwarded to A. & Co. at Moscow. A. & Co. became insolvent, and B. & Co. stopped the goods at Riga in the hands of the railway company :—Held, that the transitus was not at an end. McLeod v. Harrison, 8 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 227.

4. Part Delivery.

Freight Lien Existing.]—A cargo of 114 tons of iron castings was consigned from Scotland to London on board a ship chartered by the vendor, the bill of lading being made out in favour of the purchaser or his assigns, he or they paying freight. After thirty tons were delivered to the purchaser the vendor gave notice to stop the unloading. At this time part only of the freight had been paid to the master. Soon after the purchaser became insolvent, and a receiver was appointed. The balance of the freight was paid by the receiver, and the rest of the cargo was placed in medio :—Held, that, inasmuch as it could not be supposed that the master intended to abandon his lien for the unpaid freight, the delivery of the thirty tons did not operate as a constructive delivery of the whole, and that the transitus was not at an end. Cooper, Ex parte, McLaren, In re, 48 L. J., Bk. 49 ; 11 Ch. D. 68 ; 40 L. T. 105 ; 27 W. R. 518 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 63—C. A.

—— Reshipment.]—A. consigned iron to B., and sent it to a carrier, who delivered part on a wharf of B. ; on discovery that B. was insolvent the carrier reshipped the part delivered, and held the whole to satisfy his lien for freight and for a general account between him and B. :—Held, that A.'s right of stoppage in transitu was not gone ; and that he could maintain trover for the iron against the carrier. Crawshay v. Eades, 2

D. & R. 288 ; 1 B. & C. 181 ; 1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 90 ; 25 R. R. 348.

Constructive Delivery of Whole.]—A. at a foreign port ships goods by order and on account of B., to be paid for at a future day, and bills of lading accordingly are signed by the master. One of the bills is sent to B., who before the ship arrives sells the goods and hands the bill of lading to C. After the ship's arrival and delivery of part of the goods to C.'s agent, B. becomes bankrupt :—Held, that there having been constructive delivery of the whole of the goods, the vendor's right to stop in transitu was at an end. Slubey v. Heyward, 2 H. Bl. 504 ; 3 R. R. 486.

Part delivery by carrier to consignee held to be constructive delivery of the whole, so as to put an end to the transitus. Betts v. Gibbins, 4 N. & M. 64 ; 2 A. & E. 57 ; 4 L. J., K. B. 1.

Sampling and Selling Part of Cargo.]—Wheat was shipped in London under bill of lading making it deliverable at Barmouth or Tremadoc to T. or his assigns, on payment of freight. The cargo was paid for partly by cash and partly by acceptance. Before the acceptance became due T. assigned his property to the plaintiff, A., in trust for his creditors ; being at the time insolvent, to the plaintiff's knowledge. T. indorsed the bill of lading to the plaintiff. On the ship's arrival at Barmouth the plaintiff went on board, took samples, and sold seventy of the eighty quarters on board to purchasers, having paid the freight. The remaining ten quarters he ordered to be carried on to Tremadoc. On the ship's arrival at Tremadoc, T.'s acceptance having been dishonoured, the vendor claimed the remaining ten quarters, tendering freight :—Held, that the transitus was determined by the acts done by the plaintiff at Barmouth. Jones v. Jones, 8 M. & W. 431 ; 10 L. J., Ex. 481.

5. Goods in Hands of Wharfinger.

Consignee not in Possession.] — Goods were consigned to A. deliverable in the Thames. A., being pressed by the master of the ship to have them landed, sent his son to tell the master to land them at the wharf where goods usually were landed for him. At the same time, being insolvent, he told his son that he should not meddle with them :—Held, that the transitus was not at an end ; A.'s statement to his son, which was admitted in evidence, shewing that he had not taken possession of the goods as owner. James v. Griffin, 2 M. & W. 622 ; 6 L. J., Ex. 241.

Before Shipment.]—Goods at a wharfinger's in London on their way to be shipped to the vendee at Newcastle are subject to the vendor's right to stop in transitu ; and that although they have been attached by process out of the mayor's court at the suit of a creditor of the vendee. Smith v. Goss, 1 Camp. 282 ; 10 R. R. 684.

After Weighing for Purchaser.]—Bale goods were forwarded by ship to London deliverable to B. & Co. or their assigns, being factors for sale, and were landed at the defendant's wharf. B. & Co. ordered the defendant to weigh and deliver to M., a purchaser from B. & Co. They were weighed, and an account of weight sent to B. & Co., who sent invoices accordingly to M. M. resold some bales, and they were delivered upon his order by the defendants to his vendees. The rest remained on the wharf until stopped by B. & Co. as unpaid vendors. The goods were never transferred in the wharf books from the names of B. & Co. to that of M., and no warehouse rent was ever paid by M. :—Held, that the defendants never held the goods as wharfingers for M. ; and that the right of stoppage in transitu was not determined by part delivery to his vendees. Tanner v. Scovell, 14 M. & W. 28 ; 14 L. J., Ex. 321.

—— Order to Weigh.]—An order by the vendor to the wharfinger to weigh and deliver the goods to the vendee does not defeat the right of stoppage in transitu :—Aliter, where the order is for delivery forthwith. Withers v. Lys, Holt N. P. 18 ; 16 R. R. 781.

In Vendor's Name—Order not to Deliver.]—G. at North Tawton ordered goods to be sent to him from London, not specifying any particular ship, by way of Exeter. They were shipped and carried to Exeter, where they were put into the hands of a wharfinger to be forwarded to North Tawton. In the wharfinger's books they were put into the name of G. The vendor received a letter from G. that he would not receive the goods, and that the vendor might take them back. The vendor ordered the wharfinger not to deliver them, and the wharfinger promised not to do so until he could with safety, but afterwards delivered them to G.'s assignees in bankruptcy :—Held, that C.'s right to stop in transitu was not at an end, and that he could maintain trover against the wharfinger. Mills v. Ball, 2 Bos. & P. 457 ; 5 R. R. 653.

Goods were landed and entered in the wharfinger's book, with freight and charges set opposite to them, not in the name of anyone as consignee. The master of the ship had landed them at the instance of the clerk of the consignee, who was away from home :—Held, that the transitus had not ended. Edwards v. Brewer, 2 M. & W. 375 ; 6 L. J., Ex. 135.

Delivery Order by Consignee — Goods not Arrived.]—A consignee of goods delivering over to a third person the shipping note of such goods, and a delivery order on the wharfinger to deliver such goods when they arrive, does not pass the property in them, so as to prevent a stoppage in transitu by the consignor. Akerman v. Humphrey, 1 Car. & P. 53.

Goods Warehoused for Vendee.]—Goods conveyed by a barge on the Thames were deposited in the carrier's warehouse for the convenience of the vendee, to be delivered as he should want them :—Held, that the vendor's right to stop in transitu was gone. Allen v. Gripper, 2 C. & J. 218 ; 2 Tyr. 217 ; 1 L. J., Ex. 71.

Transfer in Warehouseman's Books to Name of Purchaser.]—Where the purchaser of goods has lodged with the wharfinger an order to deliver them, and the wharfinger has transferred them in his books into the name of the purchaser, the vendor's right to stop in transitu is at an end. Harman v. Anderson, 2 Camp. 242 ; 11 R. R. 706.

6. Transitus at an End.

Corporal Touch of Purchaser — Delivery to Third Person.]—The right to stop in transitu exists until the goods come to the "corporal touch" of the vendee; delivery to a third person, to convey to the vendee, does not determine the transitus. Hunter v. Beale, cited, 3 Term Rep. 466.

Bills of Lading indorsed, and Goods delivered to Railway Company.]—Bills of lading for cotton sent to the vendor's agent at Liverpool provided for delivery at Liverpool to order or assigns. The purchaser at Liverpool sent to the vendor's agent his acceptance for the price of the cotton, and the bills of lading were sent to the purchaser, who indorsed them to a railway company, to whom the cotton was delivered for carriage to the purchaser in Yorkshire:—Held, that the vendor had no right to stop the cotton after delivery to the railway company. Gibbes, Ex parte, Whitworth, In re, 45 L. J., Bk. 10; 1 Ch. D. 101; 33 L. T. 479; 24 W. R. 298.

Delivery on Board Ship of Purchaser.]—H. & Co. were in possession of a ship let to them for three years at 52*l.* 10*s.* per month, they finding stock and provisions for the ship, paying the master, and to have complete control of the ship. The ship went a voyage to Alexandria, and had goods on board her which they were sending upon an adventure:—Held, that the unpaid vendor of the goods could not stop the goods, the delivery having been complete. Fowler v. M'Taggart or Rymer, cited, 1 East, 522; 7 Term Rep. 442; 3 East, 396.

Delivery on board a ship belonging to the vendee under bills of lading making the goods deliverable to the vendee or his assigns ends the transitus. Schotsmans v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 361; L. R. 2 Ch. 332; 16 L. T. 189; 15 W. R. 534.

Shipment by Vendee.]—Goods delivered to the vendee at the wharf and shipped by him cannot afterwards be stopped. Noble v. Adams, 7 Taunt. 59; 2 Marsh. 366; Holt, 248; 17 R. R. 445.

Goods taken to Purchaser's Premises against his Wish.]—Goods were consigned from London to A. in Sunderland, the invoice and bill of lading being forwarded to A. on the arrival of the goods at Sunderland. The goods were, against the wish of A., who was in difficulties, taken from the wharf to A.'s premises. A. wrote to the vendor stating that a stoppage of his business had been decided on, and expressing his regret that he could not return the goods to the wharf. Afterwards he delivered the key of his warehouse in which the goods lay to a trustee for his creditors:—Held, that the transitus was at an end, and that the creditors were entitled to the goods as against the vendor, who claimed a right of stoppage in transitu. Heinekey v. Earle, 8 El. & Bl. 410; 28 L. J., Q. B. 79; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 848; 6 W. R. 687.

Goods delivered on Board to be carried at Purchaser's Risk.]—Coffee was shipped in a ship of the purchaser's under bills of lading making it deliverable to the order or assigns of the vendors "freight free." An invoice was made out, stating the coffee to have been shipped by order, and on account, and at risk of the purchasers. A bill of lading indorsed in blank was sent to the purchasers, but afterwards, and after the bankruptcy of the purchasers, placed in the hands of a third person, at the request of the vendors, to secure bills drawn for the price of the coffee:—Held, that it was a question for the jury whether the coffee was delivered on board on account of, and to be carried at the risk of, the purchasers; if so, the right of stoppage in transitu was at an end. Van Casteel v. Booker, 2 Ex. 691.

Bill of Lading indorsed to Purchaser.]—B. sold wheat to A., the price to be paid by banker's draft on London at two months, to be remitted on receipt of invoice and bill of lading. B. shipped the wheat by order of A. to be carried to M. for the account, and at risk, of A. The master signed a bill of lading, making the wheat deliverable to B.; B. indorsed the bill of lading to A., and sent it to A. with an invoice, asking for payment; A. failed to remit the banker's draft:—Held, that B.'s right of stoppage in transitu was at an end. Wilmshurst v. Bowker, 7 Man. & G. 882; 12 L. J., Ex. 475—Ex. Ch.

Delivery Order of Whisky handed to Excise Officer by Consignee.]—A. in Scotland consigned ten puncheons of whisky to B. at N. in Ireland, sending to B. an invoice and delivery order directed to the collector of excise at N., instructing him to receive the duty and deliver to B. B. lodged the delivery order with the excise and the keeper, and removed six of the puncheons, paying the duty; but no transfer of the whisky was made in the excise books. B. afterwards became bankrupt, and A. transferred the other four puncheons to C. The assignees of B. brought trover for the four puncheons:—Held, that the right of stoppage in transitu was at an end when the delivery order was lodged, and that the transfer in the excise books was immaterial. Orr v. Murdock, 2 Ir. C. L. R. 9.

Receipt given for Goods—Shipment.]—Goods were ordered from R. & Co. by G. and were delivered at the docks marked, according to G.'s order, "J. H. A., Trinidad." With the goods were forwarded shipping instructions from G., directing the goods to be put on board the ship "M." A receipt signed by the dock superintendent was given for them to R. & Co. as follows: "Bought of R. & Co., J. H. A., 500 boxes, ss. 'M.' on account G. Trinidad." During the passage of the goods to Trinidad G. became bankrupt, and R. & Co. gave notice to stop the goods. Under an order of the Trinidad court the goods were delivered to J. H. A., who paid the trustee in bankruptcy for them. R. & Co. claimed the money so paid:—Held, that the transit was determined when the receipt was given, and that R. & Co. were not entitled to the money. Gurney, In re, Hughes, Ex parte, 67 L. T. 598; 7 Asp. M. C. 249; 9 Morrell, 294.

Bill of Lading to Consignor or Order—Goods delivered to Purchaser.]—Goods were shipped for the use and at the risk of the consignee, the consignor taking bills of lading making them deliverable to his order. The master delivered the goods to the consignee, in whom the property in the goods was held to have vested:—Held, that the consignor's right to stop in transitu was gone; but semble, per Lord Ellenborough, the master might be liable in an action by the consignor for not delivering according to the bill of lading. Coke

v. Harden, 4 East, 211, 217 ; 1 Smith, 20 ; 7 R. R. 570.

Mate's Receipts.]—The vendor's lighterman took mate's receipts for goods contracted to be sold and delivered f. o. b., to be paid for by cash or bills at the purchaser's option. The goods were paid for by bills, the vendors retaining the mate's receipts. During the currency of the bills the purchaser became insolvent :—Held, that the transitus and the vendor's right to stop were at an end. Cowasjee v. Thompson, 5 Moore, P. C. 165 ; 3 Moore, Ind. App. 422.

Stoppage by Agent—Ratification.]—C. and T., merchants at Liverpool, sent orders to T., a merchant at New York, to purchase goods for them, which were shipped in five vessels for Liverpool, and consigned to C. and T., who, after receipt of the goods in one of the vessels, stopped payment on April 7th. I. had drawn bills for the goods, partly on C. and T., and partly on B. & Co., with whom C. and T. had dealings. B. & Co., who were merchants at Liverpool, having a house at New York, purchased there several of the bills, which were drawn at sixty days' sight and were dated, some on March 28th, and some on March 30th. On May 8th a fiat in bankruptcy issued against C. and T. The four other vessels arrived on May 3rd, 5th, 6th and 9th respectively, and immediately on the arrival of each ship B. & Co., on behalf of I., before the transitus was ended, gave notice to the masters and consignees to stop the goods. B. & Co. were not the general agents of I., nor had they received from him authority to make the stoppage. On May 11th the assignees of C. and T. demanded the goods from the masters and consignees, tendering the freight. The latter refused to deliver them, and on the same day delivered them to B. & Co. The assignees claimed them from B. & Co., who refused to deliver them up. On 28th April I. heard at New York of C. and T. having stopped payment, and executed a power of attorney to H. at Liverpool to stop the goods in transitu. On May 13th H. received the power of attorney and confirmed the stoppage by B. & Co. I. afterwards adopted and ratified all that had been done by H. and B. & Co. :—Held, that after the demand by the assignees there could be no stoppage in transitu, and that the pretended ratification by I. of H.'s and B. & Co.'s acts had no effect. Bird v. Brown, 4 Ex. 786 ; 19 L. J., Ex. 154 ; 14 Jur. 132.

Possession of Consignee.]—The transitus is at an end when the consignee has taken possession of the goods and exercised an act of ownership over them. Wright v. Lawes, 4 Esp. 82.

1. Generally—Average Act.

Loss must be voluntarily Incurred.] — To found a claim for average contribution the loss must be voluntarily incurred—per Lord Stowell. The Copenhagen, 1 C. Rob. 289, 293. S. P., Hallett v. Wigram, infra.

What Necessary to establish Claim to.]—In order to establish a claim to general average against the owner of cargo, the shipowner must shew a common risk existing, and a voluntary sacrifice or an extraordinary expenditure incurred for the joint benefit of both ship and cargo. If, therefore, goods are landed from a stranded ship, and deposited in a place of safety, whence they may be shipped again in another vessel and carried to their destination, without greater expense to the owner of the goods, or deterioration to the goods themselves, so that it is indifferent to him by what ship they go forward, extraordinary expenses subsequently incurred in floating the stranded vessel do not constitute general average to which the cargo is bound to contribute. Walthew v. Mavrojani, 39 L. J., Ex. 81; L. R. 5 Ex. 116; 22 L. T. 310—Ex. Ch.

Not within Suing and Labouring Clause of Policy.]—General average and salvage do not come within either the words or the object of the suing and labouring clause of a policy of marine assurance. Aitchison v. Lohre, 49 L. J., Q. B. 123 ; 4 App. Cas. 755 ; 41 L. T. 323 ; 28 W. R. 1 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 168—H. L. (E.)

Lien.]—There is a lien for general contribution to individual loss by property thrown overboard for the safety of the ship. Hallett v. Bousfield, 18 Ves. 187 ; 11 R. R. 184.

A right to general average contribution from a ship after adjustment made gives the owners of the cargo no lien on the ship by the law maritime. The North Star, Lush. 45 ; 29 L. J., Adm. 73.

When a person has been employed by the master of a stranded vessel to do various acts for the purpose of saving the cargo, such person has a lien on the cargo for his charges, the services being in the nature of salvage, and the charges payable by particular average. Hingston v. Wendt, 45 L. J., Q. B. 440 ; 1 Q. B. D. 367; 34 L. T. 664 ; 24 W. R. 664 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 126.

Silk put Ashore to save Capture.]—A ship with oils and silk on board was surprised by the enemy. The silk, being valuable and light, was sent ashore in boats and saved. The ship and oils were captured :—Held, no case for average contribution as between the owner of the ship and oils and the owner of the silk. Sheppard v. Wright, Shower P. C. 23 (ed. 1876).

Goods Stowed on Deck.]—See infra, 7. Jettison.

Where Insurance effected.]—The fact of an owner having effected an insurance does not affect his right to recover general average. Price v. Noble, 4 Taunt. 123 ; 13 R. R. 566.

Ship and Cargo in Peril—Tipping Ship Head down to repair Propeller—Damage to Cargo.]—A ship, laden with a perishable cargo which could not by any means be discharged, having on her voyage become unnavigable and incapable of moving through damage to her propeller is, with her cargo, in peril, although the ship be tight and strong and the cargo sound. If tipping the ship head down to repair her propeller be resorted to, and in the course of the operation a portion of the cargo be damaged by salt water, the cargo-owners have a right to a general average contribution. The operation of so tipping the ship is under the circumstances a general average act, and the loss a general average and not a particular average loss. McCall v. Houlder, 66 L. J., Q. B. 408; 76 L. T. 469.

See also B. MARINE INSURANCE, infra, cols. 1240 seq.

2. SPARS, &c., SACRIFICED.

Spars, &c., burnt to keep Donkey-engine at Work.]—A ship sailed well equipped and manned for the voyage, having a donkey-engine on board and a reasonable supply of coals to work it for pumping purposes. The ship met with very heavy weather and sprang a leak, and in order to keep her afloat it became necessary to use the engine for pumping, and the coals running short, the captain burnt with the coals the ship's spare spars and some of her cargo:—Held, that the sacrifice of the spars and cargo was general average. Robinson v. Price, 46 L. J., Q. B. 551; 2 Q. B. D. 295; 36 L. T. 354; 25 W. R. 469; 3 Asp. M. C. 407—C. A.

Loss of Tackle.]—An action lies by a shipowner to recover from the owner of the cargo his proportion of general average loss incurred by sacrificing the tackle belonging to the ship for an unusual purpose, or on an extraordinary occasion of danger, for the benefit of the whole concern. Birkley v. Presgrave, 1 East, 220; 6 R. R. 256.

If anything on board a ship, which is cut or cast away because it is endangering the whole adventure, is in such a state or condition that it must itself certainly be lost, although the rest of the adventure should be saved without the cutting or casting away, then the destruction of the thing gives no claim for general average. Shepherd v. Kottgen, 47 L. J., C. P. 67; 2 C. P. D. 585; 37 L. T. 618; 26 W. R. 120; 3 Asp. M. C. 544—C. A.

Mast cut away—Question for Jury.]—A ship being caught in a storm, portions of the rigging gave way to such an extent that the mainmast began to lurch violently; whereupon, fearing that the mast would rip up the decks and thereby endanger the safety of the ship, the captain ordered it to be cut away, which was done. In an action by the owner of the ship to recover from the owners of the cargo their proportion of general average loss incurred by the sacrifice of the mast, the judge left to the jury the following questions: first, Are you of opinion that the mast was virtually a wreck, and gone at the time it went over? secondly, Do you find it was hopelessly lost? The jury answered both questions in the affirmative:—Held, that there had been no misdirection, and that substantially the right questions had been left to the jury. Ib.

Mast working through Ship's Bottom.]—Cutting away a steamship's iron mast that had worked loose at the keel and was in the master's reasonable opinion, though not in fact, likely to go through the ship's bottom:—Held, general average. Corry or Corrie v. Coulthard, cited 2 C. P. D. 583; 3 Asp. M. C. 546, n.

3. CARGO SOLD FOR REPAIRS.

Repairs of Damage by Perils of Sea.]—No claim for general average arises when the master has been obliged to sell part of the cargo for the purpose of executing repairs rendered necessary by ordinary perils of the sea. The claim for general average arises when part of the cargo is sacrificed to preserve the rest from impending peril. Hallett v. Wigram, 9 C. B. 580; 19 L. J., C.P. 281.

Repairs of General Average Damage.]—Where cargo is sold necessarily by the master to raise money for repairs of injuries which are the subject of general average, the loss on cargo is also the subject of general average. The Constancia, 4 Not. of Cas. 677. S. P., The Gratitudine, 3 C. Rob. 240, 264.

Advantageous Sale of Cargo.]—The master on the voyage sold part of the cargo to pay for necessary repairs for a higher price than it would have fetched at the port of destination. Upon a reference to settle the average loss between shipowner and charterer, the arbitrator allowed for the actual value of the goods when sold, and not at the port of destination. The court refused to set aside the award. Richardson v. Nourse, 3 B. & Ad. 237.

Sale of Cargo to avoid Arrest.]—Where the master of a ship in a foreign port was arrested by process out of a court of justice, at the suit of the agent of the ship, for sums of money the latter had disbursed on his account, and the master not being able to raise money by other means, that he might procure his liberation and pursue the voyage, sold a part of the cargo:—Held, that the owner of the goods so sold had no right to a contribution in the nature of general average from the shippers of the other goods on board, which arrived safely at the port of destination. Dobson v. Wilson, 3 Camp. 480; 14 R. R. 817.

4. FORWARDING AND SALVING CARGO.

Expenses, &c., in transhipping Cargo and arranging for Sale.]—A ship during her voyage from India to London was stranded on the coast of France. The shipowner dispatched his manager and other persons to take part in the necessary salvage operations and the whole of the cargo was saved, transhipped and brought forward to London and the freight earned. Part of the cargo which could not be identified was sold by the shipowner by an arrangement with the consignees through a broker, who received his brokerage. The shipowner incurred considerable trouble in chartering ships to carry on the cargo from France to London, and in sending out lighters and necessary appliances to France, and in the identification of the cargo, preparing for the sale, answering the inquiries of and arranging with the consignees. In the average statement a remuneration to the shipowner for "arranging for salvage operations, receiving cargo, meeting and arranging with consignees, and receiving and paying proceeds, and generally conducting the business," was charged partly to general average, and partly as particular average on the several interests ratably, the average stater thinking that the amount was a reasonable remuneration to the shipowner for his services and for commission on the sale of unidentified cargo, and on disbursements:—Held, that under the circumstances the amount was improperly charged, and could not be recovered, there being no contract on the part of the owners of the cargo to remunerate the shipowner for his services, a great part of which had been rendered with the object of earning his freight. Schuster v. Fletcher, 47 L. J., Q. B. 530; 3 Q. B. D. 418; 38 L. T. 605; 26 W. R. 756; 3 Asp. M. C. 577. And see Rose v. Bank of Australasia, infra.

Payment by Shipowner—Liability of Cargo-owner—Question for Jury.]—When ship and cargo are in peril, the fact that the shipowners have by the act of the master become bound to pay, and have paid, a sum of money for preservation of ship and cargo, and that the master in so binding them pursued a reasonable course under the circumstances, is not conclusive that the whole sum was chargeable to general average, so as to bind the cargo-owners to pay their proportion. A new trial was ordered on the ground that the question of the amount chargeable to general average ought to have been submitted to the jury. Anderson v. Ocean Steamship Co., 54 L. J., Q. B. 192; 10 App. Cas. 107; 52 L. T. 441; 33 W. R. 433; 5 Asp. M. C. 401—H. L. (E.)

Extraordinary Expenditure—Sale of Unidentified Cargo—Commission.]—Where a ship, which carries a perishable cargo, is thrown away, the shipowner is bound to convey the goods to a place of safety. He need not, therefore, make his election as to whether he will earn freight by carrying the goods to their destination at any particular time, but has a reasonable time within which to make up his mind, and expenditure incurred while carrying the goods to a place of safety cannot be regarded as expenditure on account of freight alone. Rose v. Bank of Australasia, 63 L. J., Q. B. 504; [1894] A. C. 687; 6 R. 121; 70 L. T. 422; 7 Asp. M. C. 445—H. L. (E.)

The shipowner cannot render owners of cargo liable for the cost of employing assistance to do that which he might himself have done. But where he acts reasonably in incurring extraordinary expenditure—either by employing extraneous aid to salve the cargo, or a commission merchant to sell unidentified parts of it—for the benefit of the adventure generally, he is at liberty to charge such expenditure upon those who are benefited. Schuster v. Fletcher, supra, disapproved. Ib.

Cargo forwarded—Expense of getting Ship afloat.]—A ship got ashore, and her cargo was landed and forwarded in another ship:—Held, that expenses subsequently incurred in getting the ship off were not general average, to which the cargo should contribute. Job v. Langton, 6 El. & Bl. 779. S. P., Oppenheim v. Fry, 5 B. & S. 348; Moran v. Jones, 7 El. & Bl. 523.

5. Port of Refuge Expenses.

Expenses of unloading, &c., during Repairs—Deserters.]—A ship after collision had to cut away part of her rigging and return to put to repair:—Held, that, the expenses of unloading and repairs to enable the ship to proceed were general average, but not the expenses of the master, or of replacing deserters during the repairs, which fell on the shipowner. Plummer v. Wildman, 3 M. & S. 482; 16 R. R. 334.

Expenses during Repairs—Press of Sail on Lee Shore.]—Wages of crew and repairs to ship compelled to put into port of refuge to repair damage caused by bad weather not general average, nor damage to ship caused by carrying press of sail to keep off a lee shore. Power v. Whitmore, 4 M. & S. 141; 16 R. R. 416.

Average Adjustment at a Port of Refuge—Pro ratâ Freight.]—The mere temporary suspension of the voyage by reason of the necessity of repairing the ship at a port of refuge does not, as between the shipowner and the owner of cargo, warrant an average adjustment at the intermediate port. Hill v. Wilson, 48 L. J., C. P. 764; 4 C. P. D. 329; 41 L. T. 412; 4 Asp. M. C. 198.

A ship sailed from Riga for Hull with a general cargo and was stranded, but was afterwards got off (part of the cargo having been washed out of her, and part jettisoned) and towed into Copenhagen, where her cargo was discharged, and the ship, having been repaired at considerable expense, was sent on to Hull after a delay of about two months, with some of her cargo on board, other part having been sent on by the master in other vessels. The plaintiffs' goods were so much damaged as not to be worth sending on, and were (properly, but without the plaintiffs having an opportunity of exercising an option) sold at Copenhagen, and an average adjustment took place there according to Danish law, under which the plaintiffs were charged with pro ratâ freight from Riga to Copenhagen. In an action for the price realised by the sale at Copenhagen:—Held, that the shipowners were not entitled to deduct the general average expenses ascertained by the adjustment at Copenhagen, nor pro ratâ freight. Ib.

Expense of Warehousing, Seamen's Wages and Repairs.]—Where a ship has for the benefit of all concerned to put into a port of refuge for repairs, the charges for unloading for repairs, warehousing cargo and seamen's wages during repairs are general average. Da Costa v. Newnham, 2 Burr. 407; 2 Term Rep. 413.

Where a ship is compelled to put into port to repair damage occasioned by a general average sacrifice, the expenses of warehousing and reshipping cargo, necessarily unloaded in order to repair, and the port and pilotage charges and other expenses on leaving the port, are the subject of a general average contribution. Attwood v. Sellar, 49 L. J., Q. B. 515; 5 Q. B. D. 286; 42 L. T. 644; 28 W. R. 604; 4 Asp. M. C. 283—C. A.

Expenses of reshipping Cargo and of Ship leaving Port of Refuge.]—A ship on a voyage having sprung a dangerous leak, the captain, acting justifiably for the safety of the whole adventure, put into a port of refuge to repair. In port the cargo was reasonably, and with a view to the common safety of the ship, cargo and freight, landed in order to repair the ship. The ship was repaired, the cargo reloaded, and the voyage completed:—Held, that the cargo-owners were not chargeable with a general average contribution in respect of the expenses of reshipping the cargo. Attwood v. Sellar, supra, discussed.

Svensden v. Wallace, 54 L. J., Q. B. 497; 10 App. Cas. 404; 52 L. T. 901; 34 W. R. 369; 5 Asp. M. C. 453—H. L. (E.)

Port of Refuge—Refitting.]—If A. let his ship to B. for a voyage, engaging to keep it in repair during the whole time, for which he is to receive freight on the return of the ship; and, for the safety of the ship, it becomes necessary during the voyage to put into a port to refit, the expense of refitting must be borne entirely by A; and B. is not liable to contribute to it in proportion to his interest in the cargo, as for a general average. Jackson v. Charnock, 8 Term Rep. 509; 5 R. R. 425.

Discharge of Part of Cargo before Commencement of extraordinary Measures.]—A steamer, carrying among other cargo a large amount of specie, ran aground, and lay in a dangerous position. The specie was landed by the master soon after the vessel struck. After the landing of the specie, the master jettisoned part of the cargo, and had recourse to other extraordinary measures for getting off the vessel. These measures succeeded, and she completed her voyage with the cargo remaining on board. The specie was conveyed to a neighbouring port, whence it was sent on in another vessel, but for the purposes of the case was to be treated as having arrived in the steamer:—Held, that the losses and expenses incurred in getting the steamer off, and the expenses incurred in landing and conveying the specie, were not general average to which the owners of the specie were liable to contribute. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. v. English Bank of Rio de Janeiro, 57 L. J., Q. B. 31; 19 Q. B. D. 362; 36 W. R. 105.

6. Fire.

Scuttling Ships to put out Fire.]—Damage to cargo by scuttling a ship to put out a fire is the subject of general average contribution. Achard v. Ring, 31 L. T. 647; 4 Asp. M. C. 422.

Damage by Water to put out Fire.]—Bark was shipped on board a general ship, under a bill of lading, from Santa Martha to London, by which average, if any, was to be adjusted according to British custom. When the ship was about to sail, a fire broke out in the forehold, and pumping water through the deck of the forecastle not being sufficient to extinguish the fire, a hole was cut in the side of the ship, and her fore compartment being thereby filled with water, the fire was extinguished. If this course had not been adopted the cargo on board would in all probability have been destroyed, and the ship most seriously damaged, if not rendered a total wreck. The bark was destroyed by the water poured into the ship. In an action for general average contribution in respect of the destruction of the bark it was found, in addition to the above facts, that it is the practice of British average adjusters to treat a loss so caused as not a general average loss:—Held, that the loss was, according to the general law of England, the subject of general average contribution, as a voluntary and intentional sacrifice of the bark made under pressure of imminent danger, and for the benefit and with the view to secure the safety of the whole adventure then at risk. Stewart v. West India and Pacific Steamship Co., 42 L. J., Q. B. 191; L. R. 8 Q. B. 362; 28 L. T. 742; 21 W. R. 953; 1 Asp. M. C. 528—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, that the shipper, by the terms of the bill of lading, had made the admitted practice of British average adjusters part of the contract; and he was bound by it, although erroneous. Ib.

Ship on Fire in Harbour—Water poured upon Cargo—Termination of Maritime Adventure.]—To pour water upon the cargo, pursuant to the master's orders, for the purpose of extinguishing a fire which has broken out in a ship's hold, is a general average act; and if the cargo is thereby injured, the owner is entitled to a contribution. Whilst the cargo remains on board a ship after her arrival at the port of destination, the maritime adventure is not terminated so as to absolve the owners of the cargo and the ship from mutual rights and liabilities. The defendants were the owners of the "H.," which, having arrived at her port of destination at the end of a voyage, unloaded about 1,300 tons of her cargo; about 100 tons remained on board. Whilst she was lying at a wharf, a fire broke out in her hold; and, in order to extinguish it, her master caused water to be poured into her, whereby some goods, forming part of the cargo and belonging to the plaintiffs, were damaged. The "H." might have been scuttled and raised again; but if the fire had not been extinguished, she would have been in peril of partial destruction:—Held, that the defendants were liable to contribute by way of general average for the damage done to the plaintiff's goods. Whitecross Wire Co. v. Savill, 51 L. J., Q. B. 426; 8 Q. B. D. 653; 46 L. T. 643; 30 W. R. 588; 4 Asp. M. C. 531—C. A.

7. Jettison.

General Principles as to Jettison.]—Where goods are jettisoned for the common good, the loss, as a rule, comes within general average, and must be borne proportionally "by those interested." To this rule there is an exception, viz., that deck cargo jettisoned is not entitled to general average contribution. To this exception, however, there are two exceptions, viz., that coasting vessels are without the exception, and also those cases where by custom the deck cargo is one customary in the trade, and, perhaps, also from the port. It is said that there is a further exception, viz., where by agreement with the shipper the cargo is shipped on deck. We are of a different opinion. Per cur., in Wright v. Marwood, infra.

Of Deck Cargo—Liability of Shipowner for.]—The plaintiffs shipped certain cattle as a deck cargo on board the defendants' vessel: during the voyage a storm arose, and owing to stress of weather the master jettisoned the deck cargo by throwing the cattle overboard. The act of jettison was proper and necessary on the part of the master for the safety of the defendants' vessel:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not recover from the defendants a general average contribution for the loss of the cattle. Johnson v. Chapman, infra, commented on. Wright v. Marwood, 50 L. J., Q. B. 643; 7 Q. B. D. 62; 45 L. T. 297; 29 W. R. 673; 4 Asp. M. C. 451—C. A.

In consequence of a severe storm which a vessel encountered, her deck cargo of timber, which was lawfully stowed on deck according to the terms of the charterparty between the shipowner and the charterer, broke adrift, and knocked against the pumps, so that the captain was compelled, in order that the crew might work the pumps and to prevent damage to the bulwarks and pumps, and for the safety of the ship and all on board, to throw a portion of such cargo overboard :—Held, that such jettison was the subject of a general average contribution, it being both voluntary and to save all from the danger caused by the storm, which was common to the whole adventure. Johnson v. Chapman, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 563; 35 L. J., C. P. 23; 15 L. T. 70; 14 W. R. 264.

The proprietor of goods laden on the deck of a ship, according to the custom of a particular trade, is entitled to contribution from the shipowner for a loss by jettison. Gould v. Oliver, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 144 ; 5 Scott, 445 ; 3 Hodges, 307 ; 7 L. J., C. P. 68.

General average contribution payable in respect of deck cargo (pigs) jettisoned, if there is a custom to carry such cargo on deck. Milward v. Hibbert, 3 Q. B. 120 ; 2 G. & D. 142 ; 11 L. J., Q. B. 137 ; 6 Jur. 706. Royal Exchange Shipping Co. v. Dixon, supra, col. 504.

Goods stowed on deck have no benefit of general average. Myer v. Van der Deyl, Abbott, on Shipping, 13th ed. 652.

—— Deck Cargo "at Merchant's Risk."]—It was stipulated in a charterparty that the "ship should be provided with a deck cargo, if required, at full freight, but at merchant's risk " :—Held, that the words "at merchant's risk" did not exclude the right of the charterers to general average contribution from the shipowners in respect of deck cargo shipped by the charterers, and necessarily jettisoned to save the ship and the rest of the cargo. Burton v. English, 53 L. J., Q. B. 133 ; 12 Q. B. D. 218 ; 49 L. T. 768 ; 32 W. R. 655 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 187—C. A.

Right to Contribution—Remedies—Lien on Goods salved.]—The right of contribution in respect of jettisoned cargo is based on the danger to ship and cargo requiring sacrifice to which all must contribute. Such right does not belong to the wrongdoers whose acts have led to the jettison, or to those who are legally responsible for them. Where a ship is stranded through the negligence of her master, and thereby ship and cargo are placed in a position of such imminent danger as to make it prudent and necessary to jettison part of the cargo in order to save the remainder and the ship :—Held, that innocent owners of the jettisoned cargo are entitled to general average ; secus with regard to the owners of the ship unless their ordinary relations to the shippers have been varied by contract. Strang or Steel v. Scott, 59 L. J., P. C. 1 ; 14 App. Cas. 601 ; 61 L. T. 597 ; 38 W. R. 452 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 419—P. C.

The rules of maritime law relating to the rights and remedies resulting from a proper case of jettison are :—(1) Each owner of jettisoned goods becomes a creditor of ship and cargo saved. (2) He has a direct claim against each of the owners of ship and cargo for a pro ratâ contribution towards his indemnity ; which he can recover (a) by direct action ; (b) by enforcing through the ship master, who is his agent for that purpose, a lien on each parcel of goods salved to answer its proportionate liability. Ib.

Master decides what Goods to be jettisoned.]—It is for the master to decide what part of the cargo is to be sacrificed in case of jettison—per Lord Stowell. The Gratitudine, 3 C. Rob. 240, 258.

Of Ship's Stores.]—The owners of a ship's cargo are liable to contribution for ship's stores necessarily thrown overboard, after a vessel was captured, and while she was in the hands of an enemy. Price v. Noble, 4 Taunt. 123 ; 13 R. R. 566.

Exception of Jettison in Bill of Lading—Cargo carried on Deck in Breach of Bill of Lading—Liability of Shipowner.]—See Royal Exchange Shipping Co. v. Dixon, supra, col. 504.

Collision—Jettison of Cargo.]—See The Marpessa, post, col. 728.

See also Butler v. Wildman and cases infra, cols. 1101 seq.

8. Contribution, by What Law.

Law of Port of Discharge.]—In the absence of a contract to the contrary, general average as between shipowner and cargo, owner is computed according to the law of the port of discharge. Simonds v. White, 4 D. & R. 375 ; 2 B. & C. 805 ; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 159 ; 26 R. R. 560.

Custom excluding, not Valid.]—There is no valid custom excluding general average. Achard v. Ring, 31 L. T. 647 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 422.

The plaintiff chartered a ship from the defendant, and by the charterparty it was provided : "All questions of general average to be settled according to the custom of the London underwriters at Lloyds'." A fire broke out on board, the ship was scuttled to extinguish it, and the cargo was damaged thereby. The loss was adjusted as general average, and the plaintiff brought his action to recover from the defendant the ship's contribution. The judge directed the jury that the loss was general average according to law, and the question was whether there was a valid custom excluding such loss from general average. The jury found that no such custom existed, and the verdict was entered for the plaintiff. Ib.

"British Custom"—Damage by Water used to extinguish Fire.]—It became necessary for the safety of the whole adventure to extinguish a fire on board a ship by means of water, and the water caused damage to part of the cargo. The damaged goods were shipped pursuant to a bill of lading, which contained the following clause : "Average, if any, to be adjusted according to British custom." The usage among average staters in England is, that goods thus damaged are not brought into account in an average adjustment :—Held, that the phrase "British custom" in the bill of lading referred to this usage, and that the goods damaged could not be deemed subject to general average. Stewart v. West India and Pacific Steamship Co., 42 L. J., Q. B. 191 ; L. R. 8 Q. B. 362 ; 28 L. T. 742 ; 21 W. R. 953—Ex. Ch.

To be calculated by Foreign Usage—Admiralty Jurisdiction.]—See Gold v. Goodwin, post, col. 935.

9. Who and What Contribute ; in what Manner.

Cargo Owners amongst themselves.]—An action may be maintained to recover a contribution in the nature of general average by one shipper of goods against another. Dobson v. Wilson, 2 Camp. 480; 14 R. R. 817.

Consignee not Owner.]—A consignee (not the owner) of goods, receiving them in pursuance of a bill of lading, whereby the shipowner agrees to deliver them to the consignee, by name, he paying freight, is not liable for general average, although he has had notice, before he received the goods, that they have become subject to that charge. Scaife v. Tobin, 3 B. & Ad. 523; 1 L. J., K. B. 183.

Provisions do not contribute.]—Provisions do not contribute to general average, even where the cargo of the ship consists only of passengers. Brown v. Stapleton, 4 Bing. 119; 12 Moore, 334; 5 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 121; 29 R. R. 524.

Right of Shipowner for Loss of Freight.]—P. shipped a cargo of coals upon D.'s ship to be carried to S. and there delivered on payment of freight. A fire broke out spontaneously in the coals, and portions were thrown overboard, and the remainder so wetted and damaged by water poured upon them to extinguish the fire, that they were necessarily discharged, and sold at a port of refuge. Owing to no freight being payable there, they realised nett a larger sum than if they had safely reached their destination; but the freight upon them was wholly lost:—Held, that the shipowner was entitled to a contribution in general average for the lost freight. Pirie v. Middle Dock Co., 44 L. T. 426; 4 Asp. M. C. 388. See per cur., in Wright v. Marwood, supra, col. 586.

Loss of Cargo.]—Semble, that there was no claim on account of the cargo; first, because there was no loss on account of it: secondly, because the vice in it was the cause of the sacrifice. Ib.

General and Particular — Ship and Cargo — Value of Ship, how ascertained—"New for Old Allowance."]—For the purpose of ascertaining the amount to be contributed to in general average in the case of a ship which has suffered both particular and general average damage and has been sold as a constructive total loss, the value of such ship is her value at the time immediately preceding the general average sacrifice in respect of which contribution is to be made, and such value is to be ascertained by deducting from the value of the ship at the time she left port the amount which it would have cost to repair the particular average damage, and also the amount which she fetched when sold as a constructive total loss. Henderson v. Shankland, 65 L. J., Q. B. 340; [1896] 1 Q. B. 525; 74 L. T. 238; 44 W. R. 401; 8 Asp. M. C. 136—C.A.

Where no repairs have in fact been done, the shipowners are not entitled to the one-third "new for old" allowance in estimating the value of a ship for the purpose of ascertaining the amount to be contributed to in general average as above. Ib.

Loss caused by Negligence of Crew—Right of Shipowner.] — The shipowner is entitled to average contribution from cargo-owner, although the loss was occasioned by negligence of the crew, if by the terms of the charterparty the shipowner is not liable to the cargo-owner for such negligence. The Carron Park, 59 L. J., Adm. 74; 15 P. D. 203; 63 L. T. 356; 29 W. R. 191; 6 Asp. M.C. 543.

10. AVERAGE STATEMENT.

Duty of Shipowner to get Average Statement.]—A shipowner, where a general average loss has occurred, may be liable to an action for damages for delivering up the cargo without taking the necessary steps for procuring an adjustment of the general average and securing its payment. The plaintiffs shipped goods at Liverpool on board a steamer belonging to the defendants under a bill of lading, by which the defendants undertook to deliver the goods at the port of Montreal unto the Grand Trunk Railway, by them to be forwarded (upon the conditions before and after expressed) thence per railway to the station nearest to Toronto, &c., and among the conditions was the following: "The shipowner or railway company are not to be liable for any damage to any goods which is capable of being covered by insurance," &c. In the course of the voyage the plaintiffs' goods sustained damage which came under the heading of general average. The ship returned to Liverpool, and the cargo was discharged and handed over by the defendants to a company to be distributed and disposed of for the benefit of the parties concerned, without giving any assistance to the bailees, the underwriters, or the persons whose goods were damaged to get an average statement made out, or taking any steps to enable the plaintiffs to recover contribution:—Held, first, that the bill of lading did not relieve the defendants from contribution to general average; and, secondly, that they were liable to an action by the plaintiffs for their omission to take the necessary steps to secure an adjustment and payment of the general average. Crookes v. Allen, 49 L. J., Q. B. 201; 5 Q. B. D. 38; 41 L. T. 800; 28 W. R. 304; 4 Asp. M. C. 216.

At Foreign Port—Expenses.]—An owner of a British ship may avail himself of a statement of average made at the port of delivery in a foreign country, according to the law thereof, so as to charge a British freighter of goods, under a charterparty made in Britain, with the expenses of wages and provisions for the seamen incurred during the necessary detention of the ship at an intermediate port, although by the law of this country such expenses would not be recoverable as average. Dalgleish v. Davidson, 5 D. & R. 6; 27 R. R. 519.

Average Stater—Employment of.]—The parties to an average bond agreed to pay their proper and respective proportions of any general average charges to which they might be liable, and forthwith to furnish to the captain or owners of the ship a correct account and particular of the value of the goods delivered to them respectively, in order that any such general average charges might be ascertained and adjusted in the usual manner:—Held, that there was no implied condition to employ an average stater residing at the port of discharge. Wavertree Sailing Ship Co. v. Love, 66 L. J., P. C. 77; [1897] A. C. 373; 76 L. T. 576—P.C.

There is no obligation on shipowners to employ an average stater at all for the adjustment of liabilities. (Simonds v. White, 2 L. J. (O.S.) K.B. 159; 2 B. & C. 805; 26 R. R. 560) explained. Ib.

11. AVERAGE BOND.

Average Bond—Proportion of Salvage—Duty of Shipowner.]—See The Raisby, ante, col. 656.

Security for Payment—Unreasonable Terms—Liverpool Bond.]—Where a shipowner in the exercise of his lien for general average requires security from the owner of the cargo liable to contribution without insisting upon immediate payment of the amount due, the security so required must be reasonable. The defendants, who had a lien upon goods on board their ship for general average, did not demand payment of the amount due, but required as security that the consignees should make a deposit of 10 per cent. on the estimated value of the goods in the joint names of the defendants and their average adjuster, or in the names of the defendants, or in the name of the average adjuster, or should execute a bond providing that the deposit should be held as security for the general average and particular charges, and that the parties in whose name it stood might pay thereout such sums as they should from time to time consider ought to be paid to the owners or master on account of money actually disbursed by them or him, or to enable them or him to pay off and discharge claims which formed part of the general average and other expenses. It also provided that all questions of general average should be referred to the average adjuster of the shipowner, subject to an appeal from the adjustment to arbitrators, whose decision should be final:—Held, that the conditions of the deposit and the form of the bond were both unreasonable, and could not in the circumstances be imposed upon the consignees. Huth v. Lamport, or Gibbs v. Lamport, 55 L. J., Q. B. 239; 16 Q. B. D. 735; 54 L. T. 663; 34 W. R. 386; 5 Asp. M. C. 593—C. A.

Delivery of Cargo—Duty of Master to take Average Bond.]—It is the practice in the case of a general ship, for the master, before delivering cargo, to take security from the merchants for payment of general average. Myer v. Van der Deyl, Abbott on Shipping, 13th ed. 446.

And see 10, AVERAGE STATEMENT, supra.

12. ACTION FOR—PRACTICE.

Inspection of Documents.]—In an action by a shipowner for contribution in respect of general average, the defendant is entitled to an inspection of the statement of the general average, but not of the documents from which it is drawn up. Twizzell v. Allen, 5 M. & W. 337; 7 D. P. C. 496; 8 L. J., Ex. 269.

Pleading Unseaworthiness.]—In an action for contribution for an average loss, it is not sufficient to allege in a plea that the vessel was unseaworthy at the time of sailing, but that the average loss was occasioned by her being unseaworthy. Schloss v. Heriot, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 59; 32 L. J., C. P. 211; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 76; 8 L. T. 246; 11 W. R. 596.

Counter-claim before Adjustment.]—Where to a claim for damage to cargo a counter-claim of general average is set up, it is not necessary that such general average should have been adjusted; but if the evidence supports the fact of a general average loss having been sustained, the amount, together with the amount of loss sustained through damage to the cargo, will be referred to the registrar and merchants to report. The Oquendo, 38 L. T. 151; 3 Asp. M. C. 558.

13. JURISDICTION, ADMIRALTY.

The rule of the court of admiralty as to deciding upon questions of average is this: not that when a possessory right of lien arises incidentally before it, such right will be treated as a nullity; but that when the court is called upon to enforce such a lien not depending upon possession, or to adjust the rights which grow out of it, the court will then refuse to interfere. Galam, Cargo ex, Cleary v. McAndrew, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 216; Br. & Lush. 167; 3 N. R. 254; 33 L. J., Adm. 97; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 477; 9 L. T. 550; 12 W. R. 495.

The possessory lien of the master for general average will be supported in admiralty when it arises incidentally in the progress of a cause over which the court properly has jurisdiction. A court of admiralty will not interfere to enforce a lien for general average which does not depend on possession, or to adjust the rights which grow out of it. But where a clear legal right of lien is proved in the court of admiralty to exist, the court will not dispose of the property without regarding it. As between the owner of the cargo and the holder of a respondentia bond, the latter is not liable to contribute to general average, but as between him and those who have a lien for salvage services, he is liable. Ib.

Semble, the court of admiralty had no jurisdiction, except perhaps where the proceeds of the ship, cargo and freight were in court, to enforce general average contribution. The Constancia, 4 Not. of Cas. 677. See also Gold v. Goodwin, post, col. 935.

Semble, since the passing of the judicature acts the admiralty division has acquired a right to entertain a claim for a general average loss which the high court of admiralty did not possess. The Oquendo, supra.

Ship's Agent has no Lien for.]—Although the master has a lien upon the ship for average expenses, the ship's agent, if he has paid them, has no such lien. A claim by ship's agent for disbursements cannot be recognised in the court of admiralty, even against the proceeds of ship or cargo. The Soblomstein, 36 L. J., Adm. 5; L. R. 1 A. & E. 293; 15 L. T. 393; 15 W. R. 591.

1. GENERALLY.

Ingredients of Salvage Service.]—The ingredients of salvage service are (1) enterprise in the salvors and risk incurred; (2) risk of loss to the property salved; (3) the skill and labour shewn and incurred by the salvors; (4) the value of the salved property. Where all these circumstances concur a large and liberal reward is given; where none or only in a small degree, it is little more than remuneration for work and labour. The Clifton, 3 Hag. Adm. 117.

Origin and Principles of.]—Origin and principle of salvage reward discussed by Sir Christopher Robinson. The Calypso, 3 Hag. Adm. 209, 217.

Acceptance of Service.]—An express demand or an express acceptance of salvage services actually performed is not necessary to entitle to salvage reward; but for services rendered without demand or acceptance, and indirectly only no salvage is due. The Annapolis and The Golden Light and H.M.S. Hayes, Lush. 355; 5 L. T. 37; followed in The Vandyck, 7 P. D. 42; affirmed, 47 L. T. 695; 5 Asp. M. C. 17.

Salvage Service under Contract with Insurers.]—See The Solway Prince, infra, col. 626.

Vessels Sailing as Consorts.]—Where vessels sail as consorts, under an agreement to render each other assistance, salvage will not be given for services rendered by one to the other. The Zephyr, 2 Hag. Adm. 43. See The Margaret, 2 Hag. Adm. 48, n.

In a cause of salvage of a vessel engaged in the South Sea fishery, the defendants alleged a custom for vessels in that fishery to assist each other gratuitously. Issue directed to the common pleas under 3 and 4 Vict. c. 5, s. 11, to try the existence of the custom; verdict for the custom. Motion for new trial rejected. The Harriot, 1 W. Rob. 439.

Rescue from Ice—Custom of Whalers.]—A Greenland whaler that sailed to rescue another that was fast in the ice:—Held, not to be prevented by custom from claiming salvage. The Swan, 1 W. Rob. 68.

River and Sea Salvage.]—There is no distinction between river salvage and sea salvage, the danger and meritorious nature of the services in either case being the ground on which the quantum of compensation is awarded. The Carrier Dove, Trask v. Maddox, 2 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 243; 19 L. T. 768.

Notice to Receiver of Wreck—Salvage.]—The provisions of s. 450 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, requiring a person who finds or takes possession of a wreck to give notice to the receiver are not applicable to the case of a person who takes possession of a stranded vessel under the belief that he is the purchaser thereof, and in such a case these provisions do not operate to deprive him of his right to recover salvage. The Liffey, 58 L. T. 351; 6 Asp. M. C. 255.

Receiver of Droits—9 & 10 Vict. c. 99—Lien of Receiver.]—A ship having been stranded near D., A. as receiver of droits and also acting as Lloyds' agent, assisted in getting the ship off the bank and employed tugs and men for that purpose. Part of the ship's cargo was taken out, in order to lighten her, and was taken to D. A. detained the cargo on its arrival at D. claiming salvage, also fees payable to him as receiver of droits. B., agent for the shippers, paid the fees under protest:—Held, that B. could recover from A. the money paid for fees, which were payable to B. only whilst salving property and were payable by the owners only, and that there was no lien for them; also, that A. could set off his claim for salvage under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99. Coatesworth v. Walsh, 3 Ir. C. L. R. 93.

Derelict Must be Brought in.]—A derelict ship and cargo picked up at sea must be brought into the admiralty—to be restored to the owner on payment of salvage—or subject to salvage to be condemned as a droit of the admiralty. The King v. Property Derelict, 1 Hag. Adm. 383, n.; and see 12. DERELICT AND WRECK, infra.

Custom that Salvor shall have best Anchor and Cable.]—Semble, a custom that the lord of the manor shall have the best anchor and cable from a ship cast upon the shore of the manor, in consideration of his burying the dead and caring for the living persons and the goods coming ashore from the ship, is good. Simpson v. Bithwood, 3 Lev. 307; 2 Danv. 429. But see aliter, Geere v. Burkensham, 3 Lev. 85; 2 Danv. 429 (where no consideration was pleaded).

Civil Salvage awarded to Military Salvors.]—Civil salvage awarded in addition to military salvage to a ship of war that took in tow a ship recaptured from the enemy, she being in a distressed state. The Louisa, 1 Dods. 317. S. P., The Franklin, 4 C. Rob. 147.

Services asked for, but not allowed to be rendered.]—Where a vessel has rendered necessary services to another, and is in a position to render further services of a valuable kind, but her assistance is dispensed with, she has a right to have the further services which she was ready and able to render taken into account in a salvage award. The Maasdam, 6 R. 716; 69 L. T. 659; 7 Asp. M C. 400.

Services rendered by Request—No actual Benefit resulting therefrom.]—Where a vessel stands by or renders services to another upon request, even though no benefit results from her so doing, she is entitled to salvage remuneration. The Cambrian, 76 L. T. 504.

Salvors not required to take Ship to Foreign Port.]—Salvors are not bound to take the salved ship to a foreign port at the request of her master. Their duty is to take her to a place of safety; the onus is on the objectors to show that it was not a proper place. The Houthandel, 1 Spinks, 25.

Tug and Tow—Tug not entitled to Salvage where Danger caused by her own Fault.]—See The Robert Dixon, infra, col. 607.

Protest—Duty of Salved Ship to make.]—The James McQueen, 4 W. R. 91.

Royal Fish.]—Salvage is payable to those who bring in royal fish, being admiralty droits. Rex v. Cinque Ports (Lord Warden), 2 Hag. Adm., 438.

Agreement to refer—Jurisdiction.]—An agreement to refer to arbitration does not prevent the salvor from arresting the ship in a cause of salvage. La Purissima Concepcion, 13 Jur. 545.

Salvage at Common Law.]—A seaman was ordered by his captain to go on board a ship that was stranded and in distress, and to put himself under the orders of her captain. He did so and helped to get the ship afloat. He sued the owners of the stranded ship for salvage at common law: —Held, without deciding whether an action for salvage would lie at common law, that the owner was not liable, there being no contract. Lipson v. Harrison, 2 W. R. 10. See also, per Lord Mansfield, Cornu v. Blackburne, 2 Dougl. 641, 649.

Salvage Actions at Common Law.]—The Ooster Ems, 1 C. Rob. 284, n.; Hay and Mar. Pref. xxvii.; cited, 3 C. Rob. 357. The True Briton, cited, 3 C. Rob. 360.

A. found on the towpath timber that had got adrift from a dock in the Thames and secured it. He refused to deliver it up until the owner paid him for his trouble:—Held, that he was liable in trover. Nicholson v. Chapman, 2 H. Bl. 254. See also Vivian v. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, 39 L. J., C. P. 3; L. R. 5 C. P. 19; 21 L. T. 362.

Subject-matter of Salvage Services — Gas Float.]—Salvage (apart from life salvage) is by the maritime law of England confined to ship, apparel, and cargo, or what has formed part of these, and to freight earned by carriage of cargo, and is not applicable to a gas float used as a floating beacon, which, though capable of being moved on the face of the water, is not "a ship or vessel" in the sense in which the merchant shipping act uses these terms, or in any fair sense of the words. Gas Float Whitton (No. 2), 66 L. J., Adm. 99; [1897] A. C. 337; 76 L. T. 663—H. L. (E.) Affirming 44 W. R. 263; 8 Asp. M. C. 110—C. A.

—— "Ship or Boat Stranded or in Distress."]—Justices awarded salvage in respect of services rendered to a hopper barge which had been found adrift without any person on board of her in the Wash, about three miles from Boston. The barge was not furnished with any means by which she could be propelled, and was used for dredging purposes:—Held, that the barge was "a ship in distress" on the shore of a sea or tidal water within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 458. The Leda (Swabey 40) followed. The Mac or Macadam v. Saucy Polly, 51 L. J., Adm. 81; 7 P. D. 126; 46 L. T. 907; 4 Asp. M. C. 555—C. A.

2. Success.

Attempt to render Assistance.]—A steam-tug attempting to render assistance to a ship exhibiting signals of distress may, in a case where such ship is afterwards salved by means of other assistance, be entitled to salvage reward, even though her efforts have been practically unavailing. The Melpomene, 42 L. J., Adm. 45; L. R. 4 A. & E. 129; 29 L. T. 405; 21 W. R. 956.

When a ship makes a signal of distress, and another goes out with the bonâ fide intention of assisting that distress, and as far as she can does so, but an accident occurs which prevents her services being as effectual as she intended them to be, and no blame attaches to her, the court will not allow her to go entirely unrewarded, but for the interests of commerce and of navigation, and as an encouragement to perform salvage services, will give some reward if the property is salved by other means. Ib.

When Service Unsuccessful.]—When salvors enter into an agreement to take a disabled vessel into harbour for a specific sum, and do all in their power to perform their engagement; but in consequence of an adverse change of wind fail to fulfil it, they are nevertheless entitled to salvage reward. The Aztecs, 21 L. T. 797. And see The Cumbrian, infra, col. 657.

Efforts to give assistance under an engagement to a ship in distress will, although the ship receives no benefit from them, be rewarded as being in the nature of salvage services, if the ship is otherwise saved. The Undaunted, Lush. 90; 29 L. J., Adm. 176; 2 L. T. 520.

Attempted services performed under an agreement of salvage are entitled to be rewarded where the performance of them is rendered impossible by the act of God. Ib.

Salvage is a reward for services actually conferred, and not for services attempted to be rendered. The Chetah, 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 278; 38 L. J., Adm. 1; L. R. 2 P. C. 205; 19 L. T. 621; 17 W. R. 233. S. P., The Eintracht, 29 L. T. 851; 2 Asp. M. C. 198.

A steamer employed under an agreement for a specific sum to tow a partially-disabled steam vessel to a specific destination, towed the vessel for some hours, but in consequence of a gale causing the breaking of the hawser, left the vessel in a position of considerable danger, from which she was only saved by her own exertions:—Held, that as it did not appear that the towing had contributed to her safety, the steamer was not entitled to towage, as she had not performed her contract; nor to salvage, as no attempt was made by her to save the vessel. The Edward Hawkins, 15 Moore, P. C. 486; Lush. 515; 31 L. J., Adm. 46.

Unsuccessful salvage services does not entitle those rendering them to reward. The Zephyrus, 1 W. Rob. 329.

Where salvors found a derelict, but were unable to take her into safety, and a second set of salvors dispossessed the first set and brought her into safety, the first set were awarded a sum to cover their expenses. The Magdalen, 31 L. J., Adm. 22 ; 5 L. T. 807.

Salvage Agreement — Service impossible.]—See The Hestia, infra, col. 655.

The time occupied in endeavouring to render unsuccessful salvage services will be taken into consideration in awarding compensation for subsequent successful services, if it appear that the original services were rendered at the request of the defendants. The Arenir, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 111.

Agreement to attempt to Tow—Payment for Work done.]—In an action of salvage it appeared that the master of the defendants' ship requested the master of the plaintiffs' ship to tow his vessel to Gibraltar, which the latter agreed to attempt to do. The value of the defendants' ship, her cargo and freight, was 78,000*l.*, and at the time this request was made she was in a disabled state. The plaintiffs' ship, after towing the defendants' ship for 130 miles towards Gibraltar, left her, the hawsers having parted owing to severe weather, in a more dangerous position than she was in when she was taken in tow. The defendants' ship was afterwards towed into Gibraltar by another vessel :—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a salvage reward, but were entitled to adequate remuneration for what they had done in fulfilment of their contract. The court awarded them 400*l.* The Benlarig, 58 L. J., P. 24 ; 14 P. D. 3 ; 60 L. T. 238 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 360.

The "C." broke down in the English Channel ten miles from Anvil Point, and was then in a position of risk, but not of imminent danger. The "H." at her request took the "C." in tow ; near the Shambles the hawsers parted, and the "C." then anchored and was in a position of considerable danger, greater than when the "H." took her in tow. The "H." was unable to make fast a hawser again, and in trying to do so came into collision with the "C." The "H." then left the "C.," which was soon after taken in tow by two tugs and brought in safety to Portland : —Held, that the "H." was not entitled to salvage. The India (1 W. Rob. 406) followed. The Cheerful, 55 L. J., Adm. 5 ; 11 P. D. 3 ; 54 L. T. 56 ; 34 W. R. 307 ; 5 Asp. M. C. 525.

Agreement to Pay for Unsuccessful Service.]—See The Alfred, Wellfield (Owners) v. Adamson, infra, col. 681.

Salvors contributing to but not alone effecting Salvage.]—Salvors whose services, though contributing to the ultimate salvage of the property, would not by themselves have effected the salvage, are entitled to salvage reward. The E. U., 1 Spinks, 63.

Salvors abandoning Ship on a Sand.]—Where salvors abandoned the ship on a sand from which she was afterwards salved by others, the first salvors were awarded nothing. The India, 1 W. Rob. 406.

First Salvors Negligent — Second Salvors Successful.]—One set of salvors negligently put the vessel on the Long Sand ; a second set got her off. Salvage awarded to the second set and none to the first set of salvors. The Neptune, 1 W. Rob. 297.

Second salvors not prejudiced by joining with first salvors in salvage suit. Ibid.

Ship extricated before Salvors arrive.]—Where the ship in distress extricates herself before the intended salvors come up, no salvage awarded, though risk incurred. The Ranger, 3 Not. of Cas. 589 ; 9 Jur. 119.

A vessel ashore on the rocks off Folkestone was boarded by boats, who could not get her off. A steamship towed her off, but the tow rope parting she drove ashore and was lost. Her cargo was saved. Salvage was awarded to the boats and to the steamship. The Santipore, 1 Spinks, 231.

3. Possession of Salvors.

Legal Interest of Salvors.]—Salvors in possession have a legal interest, which cannot be divested except by adjudication. Salvors, who have dispossessed other salvors must show an actual or apparent necessity for their interference. The Blendenhall, 1 Dods. 414 ; and see The Fleece, 3 W. Rob. 278.

Salvors have a common law lien on the salved property. Baring v. Day, 8 East, 57.

A ship that has been taken into a roadstead by salvors is not to be removed without the salvors' consent. The Nicolai Heinrich, 17 Jur. 329.

Right to retain Possession against Owners.]—Where salvors have brought a vessel into a position of safety they are bound on demand by the owners, to deliver up possession of the salved property, and have no right to retain it for the alleged purpose of completing the repairs. If the vessel is at the time of the demand in such a critical position that there may be risks of loss or damage to her unless the salvors are allowed to complete their operations, semble that the salvors may retain possession pending their completion. The Pinnas, 59 L. T. 526 ; 6 Asp. M. C. 313.

A salvor has a right to retain possession of the salved property until payment of salvage. Hartfort v. Jones, 1 Ld. Raym. 393.

Subsequent Salvors—Unnecessary Interference by.]—Two smacks picked up an abandoned vessel in the North Sea and were towing her to Harwich, when a gun brig came up and insisted upon taking the vessel in tow. Eventually she ordered the smacks to cast off, and took the vessel to Dover :—Held, that the claim of the gun brig to salvage was of the weakest kind ; her assistance being unnecessary. 50*l.* awarded to her and two-fifths of the salved property to the smacks. The Maria, Edwards, 175.

Where salvors are in possession, and are able to perform the service, no others may interfere. The Queen Mab, 3 Hag. Adm. 242. S. P., The Glory, 14 Jur. 676.

Second Salvors wrongfully dispossessing First.]—If first salvors lawfully in possession of a derelict ship are wrongfully and violently dispossessed by second salvors, who succeed in bringing the ship into safety, the second salvors will receive no benefit from the service they may render, but the whole reward will go to the benefit of the original salvors. The Kathleen, 43 L. J., Adm. 39; 31 L. T. 204. See also The Magdalen, 31 L. J., Adm. 22; 5 L. T. 807.

Two fishing smacks fell in with a derelict vessel twenty miles from the English coast, and took her in tow after great risk, and two days afterwards brought her close to Yarmouth, when the smacksmen to expedite the completion of the salvage engaged a steam tug to take her in tow, but through the mistake or misconduct of those on board the tug the vessel got aground, whereupon the tug left the smacksmen and went in search of assistance. In their temporary absence a number of beachmen took possession of the vessel and brought her safely into harbour. A liberal salvage was allowed to the smacksmen on appeal, reversing the decision of the admiralty court, which had decreed salvage to the beachmen only. The Atlas, Hewett v. Aylan, 15 Moore, P. C. 329; 31 L. J., Adm. 210; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 753; 6 L. T. 737; 10 W. R. 850.

The court jealously maintains the right of original salvors; subsequent salvors acquire a right to salvage only where their assistance is necessary to preserve the property. The Charlotta, 2 Hag. Adm. 361.

The burden is upon subsequent salvors to prove that previous salvors in possession were unable to effect the service, or engaged or adopted their assistance. The Eugene, 3 Hag. Adm. 156, 160.

Jurisdiction does not depend on Salvors' Possession.]—The Lady Katherine Barham, Lush. 404.

Salvors do not impair their right to salvage by quitting possession of the salved ship. The Eleanora Charlotta, 1 Hag. Adm. 156.

Possession of Derelict.]—Salvors of a derelict have a right to retain possession until they are divested by law. The Tritonia, 5 Not. of Cas. Supp. 1.

Salvors in possession of a ship abandoned by all her crew who could get away are under no obligation to wait to take the crew on board again. The Orbona, 1 Spinks, 161.

Semble, a salvor of derelict has a right of exclusive possession. He takes possession on behalf of the crown. The Dantzic Packet, 3 Hag. Adm. 383.

Seizure of Salved Property by Colonial Governor.]—A governor of an island near which a ship was cast away, on pretence of recovering the cargo for the seamen, seized it all to his own use as wreck-fishing. On his return to England he was decreed to account for the whole. Trott v. Le Clé, Colles' P. C. 219; Pre. Ch. 239.

4. Misconduct or Want of Skill.

Forfeits Right to Salvage.]—The right to salvage is forfeited by misconduct of the salvors in retaining possession of and improperly dealing with the salved property. The Lady Worsley, 2 Spinks, 253.

Misconduct of salvors punished by forfeiture of salvage and liability to costs of salvage suit. The Barefoot, 14 Jur. 841.

Misconduct of salvors punished by diminished award. The Clarisse, Swabey, 129, 133; nom. Gann v. Brun, 12 Moore, P. C. 340.

Salvors may forfeit, partially or totally, by various degrees of misconduct, their right to salvage reward; but the evidence to establish their misconduct must be conclusive. The Charles Adolphe, Swabey, 153.

Forcibly retaining Possession.]—A salvage claim dismissed in part because of the misconduct in the salvors in obtruding their services after being formally discharged by the owners of sunken vessel. The Glasgow Packet, 2 W. Rob. 306.

Not taking Necessary Assistance.]—Salvage award diminished by reason of the salvors not placing the ship in a position of safety, as they might have done, if they had taken further assistance which was offered. The Dosseitei, 10 Jur. 865.

Prior salvors have no right, whilst the master is in command, to exclude subsequent salvors. The Dantzic Packet, 3 Hag. Adm. 383. S. P., The Glory, 14 Jur. 676.

——Resisting Employment of Tug.]—Boatmen who resisted the employment of a steamship to get the vessel off a sand held to have forfeited all claim to salvage. The Martha, Swabey, 489; and see The Magdalen, infra, col. 601.

Associated Salvors—Misconduct of Some.]—In cases of associated salvage service all the salvors may be prejudiced by the misconduct of one of their number. The Cherubim, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 172.

Robbing Wreck—Conviction.]—Persons who have been convicted under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99, for improper interference with a wreck cannot claim as salvors. The Wear Packet, 2 Spinks, 256.

Inflated Claim.]—Salvors setting up an inflated and exaggerated case dismissed with costs. The Towan, 2 W. Rob. 259.

Effect of Mere Mistake.]—Where salvage is finally effected, those who meritoriously contribute to that result are entitled to a share in the reward, although the part taken by them would not of itself have produced the result. The Atlas, Hewett v. Aylan, 15 Moore, P. C. 329; 31 L. J., Adm. 210; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 753; 6 L. T. 737; 10 W. R. 850. See The Rosalind, 12 L. T. 553.

If success is finally obtained, no mere mistake or error of judgment in the manner of procuring it, nor misconduct short of that which is wilful and may be considered criminal on the part of the salvors (which must be proved by those who impute it), will work an entire forfeiture of the salvage. Ib.

Mistake or misconduct, other than criminal, which diminishes the value of the property salved, or occasions expense to the owners, is properly to be considered in the amount of compensation to be awarded. Ib.

Damage by Negligence equal to Probable Loss from Peril.]—The master and crew of the "Y.," a vessel in distress, got on board the "K.," a steamer standing by her. The mate and two of the crew of the "K." afterwards went on board the "Y." but refused to take her master back with them. The mate subsequently also refused the services of a steam-tug, and finally having from want of local knowledge anchored the "Y." in an insecure place, she began to drift, was forsaken by the salvors, and sank. She was subsequently raised by her owners at considerable expense. In an action for salvage the owners of the "Y." denied that a reward was due and counter-claimed for damages:—Held, that the mate was guilty of misconduct in refusing to take the master of the "Y." on board of her, and to engage the services of the tug; but that if the "Y." had been ultimately saved such misconduct would have worked a partial forfeiture of the reward only:—Held, further, that as the loss arising from the misconduct of the salvors was probably equal to that from which the "Y." was first rescued, no salvage reward was due. The Yan-Yean, 52 L. J., Adm. 67; 8 P. D. 147; 49 L. T. 186; 31 W. R. 950; 5 Asp. M. C. 135.

Damage by Negligence — Deduction from Award.]—Where a wreck had been greatly damaged by the erroneous conduct of the salvors in their treatment of it, the court awarded them a smaller sum, deducting from the reward which it would have otherwise held that they had earned, a certain amount as compensation for the additional damage thus done to the property, and the court proportioned the amount that it deducted to the want of skill shewn. The Magdalen, 31 L. J., Adm. 22; 5 L. T. 807.

In rendering salvage services, want of skill on the part of the salvors—not amounting to negligence—which occasions damage to the salved property is a ground for reducing the amount of the award, though it will not support a counter-claim by the owners of the salved property to recover damages from the salvors in respect of the injury so occasioned to their property. The Dwina, 61 L. J., Adm. 71; [1892] P. 58; 66 L. T. 862; 7 Asp. M. C. 173.

—— Collision by Salvors' Negligence.]—A screw steamer fell in with a disabled barque in the English Channel, and in answer to signals of distress approached her to render assistance. In rendering salvage services to the barque damage was caused to that vessel by the negligent navigation of the screw steamer, the two vessels coming into collision on three occasions. To recover for the damages sustained in these collisions, the owners of the barque promoted a cause of damage against the steamer, and subsequently an action for the recovery of salvage remuneration was brought by the owners of the steamer against the barque. On the two causes coming on to be heard together:—Held, that the owners of the barque were entitled to recover in the damage cause, and that the owners of the steamer were entitled to recover in the salvage cause. The C. S. Butler. The Baltic, 43 L. J., Adm. 17; L. R. 4 A. & E. 178; 30 L. T. 475; 22 W. R. 759; 2 Asp. M. C. 237.

A salvor whose ship succeeds in bringing an injured ship into safety, but in so doing inflicts damage upon her by coming into collision through negligence and want of proper navigation, which is gross but not wilful, is not thereby deprived of his right to a reward which has been agreed upon between the masters of the respective vessels. Ib.

Negligence of Pilot employed by Salvors.]—Salvors having brought a vessel in distress to a situation of safety from ordinary peril, but not to anchor, and having given up the charge to a licensed pilot, are not prejudiced as to their claim by injury subsequently happening to the ship from the negligence of such pilot. The Bomarsund, Lush. 77.

Misconduct of Tug—Towage Contract—Subsequent Salvage.]—See The Minnehaha, infra, col. 607, The Robert Dixon, infra, col. 607.

Misconduct of Boatmen — Refusal of Sum Tendered.]—Claim of boatmen for salvage dismissed; misconduct of boatmen, refusal of sum tendered for work done. The Black Boy, 3 Hag. Adm. 386, n.

Violence.]—Violent and overbearing conduct on the part of salvors, although it may not amount to such wilful misconduct as to cause an entire forfeiture of salvage reward, will yet operate to induce the court to diminish the amount of the reward. The Marie, 7 P. D. 203; 47 L. T. 737; 5 Asp. M. C. 27.

Refusal to give up Clothes taken.]—Salvors of a derelict took and used the clothes found on board and refused to give them up. 20*l.* was deducted from the award, to be paid to the master and crew of the derelict in respect of their clothes. The Louisa, 7 Jur. 182.

Negligently putting Ship Ashore.]—A claim for salvage dismissed because the salvor, a steam tug, negligently got the ship on Sandwich Flats, when towing her off the Goodwins; the fact that the salved ship had a pilot on board, not excusing the salvors. The Duke of Manchester, 2 W. Rob. 470; 4 Not. of Cas. 582; 6 Moore, P. C. 90; 10 Jur. 863.

Deduction from salvage award made because the salvors in performing the service by their want of skill had brought the ship into danger and injured her. The Cape Packet, 3 W. Rob. 122.

Salvors attempted to tow ship into harbour when there was not enough water for her, and got her ashore and damaged her. A smaller award of salvage made in consequence. The Perla, Swabey, 230; and see The Yan-Yean, supra.

A revenue cutter put some men aboard a vessel that had lost her masts in a collision to take her to Penzance. She drew too much water, took the ground, and received much damage:—Held, no salvage to be awarded. The Lockwoods, 9 Jur. 1017.

Forcibly Dispossessing other Salvors.]—Salvors who forcibly dispossessed other salvors engaged by the master of the ship in distress allowed no share of the salvage award. The Fleece, 3 W. Rob. 278. See The Blenden Hall, 1 Dods. 414.

If first salvors lawfully in possession of a derelict are wrongfully dispossessed by second salvors who succeed in bringing the ship into safety, the second salvors will receive no benefit from the service they may render, but the whole reward will go to the original salvors. The Kathleen, 43 L. J., Adm. 39; L. R. 4 A. & E. 269; 31 L. T. 284; 23 W. R. 350; 2 Asp. M. C. 367.

Excluding Crew from Possession.] — Misconduct of salvors, who took possession of a vessel, whose crew they knew were in distress on shore waiting to return to her, punished by a small award. The Lisbon, Ir. R. 1 Eq. 144. And see The Cleopatra, infra, col. 641.

Where salvors having taken possession of a vessel which had got ashore and been temporarily abandoned by her master and crew in order to get tug assistance, refused to allow her master and crew on board, and remained in possession on board whilst the tugs provided by the master towed the ship into a place of safety:—The court held that there had been such misconduct as to work a total forfeiture of award, although the plaintiffs had in the absence of the master and crew laid out two anchors which contributed to the vessel's ultimate safety. The Capella, [1892] P. 70; 66 L. T. 388; 7 Asp. M. C. 158.

5. Salvage Services.

a. Supplying Anchor.

Taking out Anchor and Chain in Bad Weather.]—Taking out during bad weather an anchor and a chain to a vessel, which is compelled to slip her cable to get away from a dangerous position and run for a place of safety, is, although the anchor and chain in the result are not needed, a salvage service; 280*l.* awarded to two luggers and their crew on a value of 40,000*l.* The Æolus, 42 L. J., Adm. 14; L. R. 4 A. & E. 29; 28 L. T. 41; 21 W. R. 704; 1 Asp. M. C. 516.

Supplying an anchor and a cable to a vessel in the Gulls that had slipped her own is salvage service. The Prince of Wales, 6 Not. of Cas. 39.

b. Giving Advice.

Warning Ship of Danger—Frauds.]—Claims for salvage in warning foreign ships of danger, dismissed as fraudulent or not proved. The Giacomo, 3 Hag. Adm. 344; The Henrietta, 3 Hag. Adm. 345, n.

Advice Given—Salvors not on Board.]—Advice given as to the proper steps to be taken to get a ship off a sand, the salvors not being able to go on board because of the sea, remunerated by salvage award. The Eliza, Lush. 536.

Giving Information.]—The mere giving information as to the locality, even to a foreign ship, will not constitute a salvage service. The Little Joe, Lush. 88; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 783; 2 L. T. 473.

c. After Collision.

Service to One of Two Ships in Collision—Tugs.]—A collision having occurred between two ships, the "Woburn Abbey" and the "British Trident," two steam-tugs, the "Superb" and the "Conqueror," went to their assistance. In order to extricate the "Woburn Abbey," it was necessary that the "British Trident" should be towed away from her, and the pilot of the "Woburn Abbey" requested the captain of the "Superb" to perform this service. The "Superb" then towed the "British Trident," but the ships still dragged. The "Conqueror" arrived about half-an-hour after the "Superb," and the two tugs together held the "British Trident" and the "Woburn Abbey," and prevented the ships from dragging further:—Held, that the benefit received by the "Woburn Abbey" from the services of the "Superb" was a direct and not an indirect benefit; that there was no substantial difference between the merits of the "Superb" and the "Conqueror," and therefore that they were entitled to equal amounts of salvage. The Woburn Abbey, 21 L. T. 707—P. C.

Towing Vessels Clear—Rights of Tug.]—Where two vessels are in collision and are entangled together in a position dangerous to both, salvors who, by towing one of the vessels clear, free both vessels from danger, are entitled to recover salvage reward from the owners of both vessels. A screw steamship drifted, during a gale of wind, across the bows of a ship at anchor in the Mersey, and with her propeller caught the anchor chains of the ship, and the two vessels were held together in a position dangerous to both. A steam-tug went to the assistance of the ship, and held her whilst her chains were slipped and towed her clear of the steamship:—Held, that the owners, master, and crew of the tug were entitled to recover salvage reward from the owners of the steamship. The Vandyck, 47 L. T. 695; 5 Asp. M. C. 17—C. A. Affirming, 7 P. D. 42.

Tug assisting her Tow after Collision.]—A collision occurred between two vessels, "A." and "B." "A." was in tow of a steam-tug; the tug afterwards rendered assistance to "B." "B." was found solely to blame for the collision:—Held, that the tug's right of salvage remuneration was not affected by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 33, which makes it the duty of ships mutually to assist each other after a collision. The Hannibal v. The Queen, 37 L. J., Adm. 12; L. R. 2 A. & E. 53.

The 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 33, does not debar the innocent sufferer in a collision from salvage reward for services subsequently rendered to the other party to the collision. The Retriever v. The Queen, 17 L. T. 329.

The case of a towing ship is not a casus omissus from the statute. The tug of the vessel declared not to blame in a collision, rendered salvage services to the wrongdoer:—Held, that this section did not affect the right of the tug to salvage reward. Ib.

Services by Ship in Fault for Collision.]—A vessel rendering assistance to another which she has injured in collision cannot claim salvage reward if the collision takes place by her default. The Glengaber, 41 L. J., Adm. 84; L. R. 3 A. & E. 534; 27 L. T. 386; 21 W. R. 168; 1 Asp. M. C. 401.

The owners, master, and crew of a vessel which renders assistance to a vessel injured by collision are not deprived of their right to salvage reward by the fact that some of the owners are also owners of another vessel by whose misconduct the collision takes place. Ib.

A vessel rendering salvage assistance is not deprived of her right to reward by the fact that she is employed by a vessel whose misconduct renders her employment necessary. Ib.

A collision occurred between two vessels. Both were found to blame. A cause of salvage was instituted by the master and crew of one of the vessels for having saved a quantity of specie laden on board the other vessel:—Held, that the salvors were not entitled to reward for saving property which they had by their own wrongful acts contributed to place in jeopardy. Capella, Cargo ex, L. R. 1 A. & E. 356; 16 L. T. 800.

d. Mutiny.

Rescue of Ship from Mutineers.]—Salvage is not due to a crew for rescuing the ship from mutineers. The Governor Raffles, 2 Dods. 14.

—— By Government Ship.]—A government ship acting under directions of a vice-consul rescued a convict ship from the crew of mutinous convicts:—Held, no salvage payable. The Francis and Eliza, 2 Dods. 165.

Rescue from Mutinous Slaves.]—Rescue of a slave ship from insurgent slaves by another ship. One-tenth of the value awarded. The Trelawney, 4 C. Rob. 223.

e. Various Services.

Sending Seamen on board Vessel in Distress.]—A ship fell in on the high seas, in the winter season, with a brig in distress for want of sufficient hands to work her. The master of the ship sent two of his crew, who had volunteered to go, on board the brig, and by their assistance the brig was navigated safely into a British port. In consequence of the absence of the two men, the ship was exposed to risk, and the remainder of her crew had to undergo extra labour:—Held, that not only the two men who went on board the brig, but the master and owners of the ship and the rest of the crew of the ship, were entitled to salvage reward for the services rendered. The Charles, L. R. 3 A. & E. 536; 26 L. T. 594; 21 W. R. 13; 1 Asp. M. C. 296.

Where a ship is in distress, and accepts the services of strange hands, the services are in the nature of salvage, although the work done may be of no great difficulty or importance. The Bomarsund, Lush. 77.

Where the crew of a vessel is much reduced by death or sickness, another vessel supplying the deficiency on the high seas from among her own crew, is entitled to salvage. The Roe, Swabey, 84.

Loan of Navigator to Infected Vessel.]—The loan of a navigator to a vessel in distress, by reason of her own navigators being incapacitated by an infectious disease, is a salvage service on the part of the ship lending the navigator. The Skibladner, 47 L. J., Adm. 84; 3 P. D. 24; 38 L. T. 150; 3 Asp. M. C. 556.

It is a salvage service of a very high order on the part of a navigator to go on board an infected vessel and navigate her. Ib.

Detaining Seamen of Salved Vessel.]—The court will not lay down any general rule, but will be guided by the circumstances of each case, in determining whether or not the master of the salvors' vessel is justified in refusing to allow the crew of the salved vessel to return to their own ship before the completion of the salvage. The Cleopatra, 37 L. J., Adm. 31.

Starting a Ship ashore off the Ground.]—A troopship ashore was assisted in getting off the bank by another ship anchoring near and heaving on the ship ashore; thereby loosening her hold on the bank; when got off she was not attached to the salvor and got off by her own crew. Salvage (2,000*l.*) awarded. The Himalaya, Swabey, 515.

Vessel in Distress making ambiguous Signal.]—When a vessel makes an ambiguous signal it will be construed by the court according to the condition of the vessel when boarded; if she is damaged, and is in need of assistance, the signal will be treated as a signal for assistance, and those answering it as salvors; if she is not damaged and wants only a pilot, the signal will be treated as a signal for a pilot only. The Racer, 30 L. T. 904; 2 Asp. M. C. 317.

Salvors, induced by an ambiguous signal to put off from the shore to the assistance of a ship, are not entitled to salvage reward, if the actual condition of the ship shews that the signal was for a pilot only. The Little Joe, Lush. 88; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 783; 2 L. T. 473; The Otto Hermann, 33 L. J., Adm. 189.

Vessel going out of her Course.]—A steam-tug, having a vessel in tow, saw a ship ashore, and went out of her way to inform, and informed, another steam-tug of what she had seen. The other steam-tug thereupon proceeded to the stranded ship and towed her into safety. In an action of salvage instituted on behalf of both steam-tugs against the ship:—Held, that the owners, masters, and crews of both steam-tugs were entitled to salvage remuneration. The Sarah, 3 P. D. 39; 37 L. T. 831; 3 Asp. M. C. 542.

Barge Ashore.]—A barge ashore on the Grain Spit, and full of water, brought to Sheerness:—Held, no salvage, because barges commonly grounded there. The Upnor, 2 Hag. Adm. 3.

Expedition to Punish Pirates.]—A ship, whose master and crew had been captured by pirates, was retaken by salvors and afterwards ransomed. Subsequently the salvors organised an expedition for the purpose of punishing the pirates:—Held, that the expedition was not a salvage service. The Mary, 1 W. Rob. 448.

Ship engaged to render Service—Other Ship employed for less Sum.]—When a ship is engaged to render assistance to another ship in distress, without any fixed sum being agreed upon, and does remain by ready to give assistance, she cannot be deprived of her right to reward by reason of another vessel offering and being engaged to tow for a less sum than the former ship is willing to accept, and she will be entitled to recover a fair sum which will remunerate her for the services rendered, and compensate her for the loss she has sustained. The Maude, 36 L. T. 26; 3 Asp. M. C. 338.

Lying alongside Vessel after taking her to Anchorage.]—When a steam-tug is engaged to render assistance to a ship aground in the night-time, and succeeds in getting her off, and takes her to a safe anchorage for the night and lies alongside of her till morning, the salvage service does not end on the ship being anchored, but the steam-tug is entitled to reward for the time she lies alongside the ship ready to render further assistance if required. The Philotaxe, 29 L. T. 515; 2 Asp. M. C. 141.

Salvor leaving Ship in Distress under Belief that Service no longer wanted.]—When a steam-ship has been engaged to render assistance to another in distress by towing her to her port of destination, and after several hours' towing, the ships are parted by no default of the salvor, and the conduct of the ship in distress leads the salvor to the honest belief that his services are no longer required, and thereupon the latter proceeds to her own destination, he is not thereby deprived of his right to salvage reward, but upon the other vessel arriving safely in port by her own exertions, may proceed against her in respect of the services actually rendered. The Nellie, 21 L. T. 516; 2 Asp. M. C. 142.

Transhipping Cargo.] — Cargo transhipped from a stranded vessel in order to be taken to a place of safety:—Held a salvage service. The Westminster, 1 W. Rob. 229.

Misconduct of Tug rendering Service Necessary.]—A tug under a contract to tow, which by misconduct or negligence or want of reasonable equipments, occasions or materally causes danger to the ship in tow, is not entitled to salvage reward for rescuing the ship from such danger. The Minnehaha, Ward v. McCorkill, Lush. 335; 15 Moore. P. C. 133; 30 L. J., Adm. 211; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1257; 4 L. T. 810; 9 W. R. 925.

A tug agreed to tow a ship from Liverpool round the Skerries for a fixed sum. The tug negligently towed the ship in bad weather too near a lea shore, and the weather becoming worse, the hawser parted, and the ship being in a position of danger was compelled to let go her anchors to avoid being driven on shore. From this position she was rescued by the tug after being compelled to slip her anchors and chains, which were lost:—Held, that the tug was not entitled to claim salvage remuneration, and that her owners were liable to pay for her anchors and chains. The Robert Dixon, 5 P. D. 54; 42 L. T. 334; 28 W. R. 716; 4 Asp. M. C. 246—C. A.

Recapture from Enemy.]—A master and a boy rescuing their ship from French captors:—Held, entitled to salvage. The Beaver, 3 C. Rob. 292.

Recapture of Foreign Ship.] —Foreign ship rescued from the enemy (France):—Held, that the admiralty court had jurisdiction if any British subject engaged in the rescue claimed salvage. The Two Friends, 1 C. Rob. 271.

Ransoming Captured Ship and Restoring to Owner.]—Salvage awarded to one who ransomed a prize from her captor and brought her to England. The Henry, Edwards, 192.

Carrying News of Ship in Distress.]—Carrying news of a vessel in distress, so that a tug should go to her, rewarded as a salvage service. The Ocean, 2 W. Rob. 91.

Fire Ashore—Towing away from.]—Salvage awarded for towing a vessel in dock away from burning warehouses. The Tees, The Pentucket, Lush. 505.

—— Extinguishing in Dock.]—See The City of Newcastle, infra, col. 690.

6. Life Salvage.

Formerly no Power to Award.]—The admiralty Court formerly had no power to award salvage for saving of life, if no property was saved; 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 75, did not enable justices or the Cinque Ports commissioners to award life salvage. The Zephyrus, 1 W. Rob. 329.

Under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99.]—Salvage awarded for saving bullion and life under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99. Silver Bullion, 2 Spinks, 70.

Saving Life Enhances Award.] — Saving of life adds to the value of salvage services and leads to a liberal award. The Ardincaple, 3 Hag. Adm. 151.

A liberal award is to be given for the saving of human life, consideration being had to the degree of peril to which the salvors and the persons saved are exposed. The Eastern Monarch, Lush. 81.

The court will always take into its special consideration the salvation of human life, and give a corresponding reward. The Bartley, Swabey, 198.

In estimating salvage services the court will be guided above all by the consideration whether there was danger to human life. The Thomas Fielden, 32 L. J., Adm. 61.

Passengers and Crew.]—The words "persons belonging to such ship," in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 458, include passengers on board the ship as well as the master and crew; and who in respect to remuneration for life salvage, stand on the same footing as the master and crew. The Fusilier, Bligh v. Simpson, 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 51; 34 L. J., Adm. 25; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 289; 12 L. T. 186; 13 W. R. 592.

Liability of Cargo Owners to Contribute.]—The owners of the cargo are liable to contribute to that portion of the claim of salvors which arises from saving the lives of passengers, although the salvors may have rendered no direct benefit to the cargo, as the benefit to property is not a criterion of remuneration for life salvage. Ib.

The remuneration of service in life salvage does not rest upon a consideration of any direct benefit conferred upon those upon whom there falls the liability to pay, but rather upon the interest which the community has in encouraging the efforts of salvors; and upon this ground the owners of cargo on board a salved vessel are liable to a share of the payment of life salvage for the rescue of those on board. Ib.

Amount.] — The accident of the amount of salvage awarded exceeding the amount of the salvage vessels is wholly immaterial, as the value of such vessel is not an element to detract from the value of the salvage vessel. Ib.

Twenty-five men, the crews of four boats, saved the lives of ten men, and gave information to a steamboat which rescued others. The services lasted about four hours and were attended with much danger. Part of the cargo worth 40,000*l.* having been afterwards recovered, the court awarded the salvors of life 500*l.* Schiller, Cargo ex, 2 P. D. 145; 36 L. T. 714; 3 Asp. M. C. 439—C. A. Affirming 46 L. J., Adm. 9.

In a case of salvage the court, having out of the proceeds of ship and cargo, amounting to 608*l.*, awarded one-half to salvors of property, awarded 150*l.* to life salvors taking off the crew, together with costs to both plaintiffs. The Anna Helena, 49 L. T. 204; 5 Asp. M. C. 142.

Priority.]—Preservation of human life is made, by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 459, a distinct ground of salvage reward, with priority over all other claims for salvage where the property is insufficient. The Coromandel, Swabey, 205.

Claim against Specie subsequently Saved by Divers.]—A German steamship was wrecked in British waters, and the lives of ten passengers and some of her crew were saved by certain boats. Subsequently, divers employed by the owners of cargo in the steamship succeeded in recovering from the wreck a large amount of specie. A cause of salvage was instituted on behalf of the owners, masters and crews of the boats against the owners of the specie:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to be paid salvage remuneration out of the proceeds of the specie. Schiller, Cargo ex, 2 P. D. 145; 36 L. T. 714—C. A. Affirming 46 L. J., Adm. 9.

When Salvor, after towing Vessel, abandons her and Saves Crew.]—When a steamship, having taken in tow a vessel in distress, after towing her for some hours, on the weather getting worse and the lives of her crew becoming endangered, takes the crew out of her and finally abandons her in a place where she is afterwards picked up by another vessel and taken into port, the owners, master, and crew of the steamship are entitled to salvage reward in respect of the lives so saved, but not in respect of ship and cargo. The Eintracht, 29 L. T. 851; 2 Asp. M. C. 198.

Saving Boats' Crew who left Ship contrary to Orders.]—A steam-vessel incurred serious damage by a collision, and her master ordered her boats to be got out. Some of her crew without leave from the master, got into one of the boats and rowed away. The boat's crew was afterwards picked up at sea, and rescued from a position of danger, by a smack. In a salvage suit instituted on behalf of the owners and crews of the smack, against the steamship:—Held, that they were entitled to recover for the service they had rendered. The Cairo, 43 L. J., Adm. 33; L. R. 4 A. & E. 184; 30 L. T. 535; 22 W. R. 742; 2 Asp. M. C. 257.

Taking Shipwrecked Persons off Island.]—A ship was wrecked in the Red Sea off an island which was uninhabited and without water. A ship took the passengers and crew on board and brought them to England:—Held, that the service was not life-salvage. The sum of 200*l.* was awarded to the ship for services. Woosung, Cargo ex, 44 L. J., Adm. 45; 33 L. T. 394; 3 Asp. M. C. 50.

Ship wholly Lost.]—When lives and cargo have been salved from a ship, but the ship has been totally lost, the owners of the cargo are liable to pay salvage in respect of the lives, and the owners of the lost ship are not liable to contribute to such payment. Sarpedon, Cargo ex, 3 P. D. 28; 37 L. T. 505; 26 W. R. 374; 3 Asp. M. C. 509.

Award only allowed out of res Salved.]—Life salvage awards can only be made out of the res salved, and not against owners of a ship personally. Ib.

No res Saved—Validity of Agreement.]—A steamship was requested by another steamship in distress to stand by her. An agreement was accordingly made between the two masters for a fixed sum that the sound vessel would remain by the damaged one until she was in a safe position to get to port. The sound vessel remained by the damaged one until the latter was about to sink, when she took her crew on board, and the damaged steamer immediately afterwards sank. The owners, master and crew of the salving ship brought an action for life salvage:—Held, that as no res was saved the action would not lie either as a salvage action simply or on the agreement. The Renpor, 52 L. J., Adm. 49; 8 P. D. 115; 48 L. T. 887; 31 W. R. 640; 5 Asp. M. C. 98—C. A.

Not rendered in British Waters.]—A Dutch vessel took fire on the high seas, and some of her crew and some passengers who were on board her escaped in boats, and were picked up by a French schooner. The schooner afterwards fell in with a British steam-vessel, and the persons who had been picked up by the schooner were, at their own request, put on board the steam vessel, and were carried by her into an English port. The schooner was not within British waters during any portion of the time when the services were rendered:—Held, that the schooner had not rendered services such as to entitle her to claim salvage reward by virtue of the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, or the Admiralty Court Act, 1861. The Willem III., L. R. 3 A. & E. 487; 25 L. T. 386; 20 W. R. 216; 1 Asp. M. C. 129.

The court of admiralty has no original jurisdiction to award salvage for the saving of life only; and the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, does not give the court jurisdiction over salvage of life only performed on the high seas, at a distance of more than three miles from the shores of the United Kingdom, at least, if the ship from which the lives are saved is a foreign ship. It is immaterial to this question that before action the ship has been brought by other salvors into a British port. The Johannes, Lush. 182; 30 L. J., Adm. 91; 3 L. T. 757.

Ship Sunk by Collision—Expense of Raising—Liability of Damages recovered.]—The defendants' vessel having been sunk in the Thames by a collision occasioned by the fault of another vessel, the conservators, acting under 20 & 21 Vict. c. cxlvii. s. 86, caused it to be raised and sold, and the proceeds of the sale being insufficient to defray the expenses of raising it, they recovered, under s. 86, the amount of the deficiency from the defendants. The defendants on their part recovered the full value of their vessel from the owners of the vessel which was to blame for the collision. In an action for salvage in respect of the preservation of the lives of the crew of the defendants' vessel at the time of the collision:—Held, that the salvors could not recover; that the defendants' vessel not having been saved there was nothing to which the claim for life salvage could attach; and that it would not be preferred against the defendants in respect of the amount recovered as damages from the vessel to blame for the collision. The Annie, 56 L. J., Adm. 70; 12 P. D. 50; 56 L. T. 500; 35 W. R. 366; 6 Asp. M. C. 117.

Passengers forwarded from Wreck—Liability of Shipowner.—See The Mariposa, supra, col. 87.

7. Salvage or Towage.

a. Towage, not Salvage.

Where no Danger.]—In a salvage suit promoted in respect of certain services whereby the defendant's vessel, which at the time such services were rendered was in neither actual nor imminent probable danger, had been safely towed into port:—Held, that such services must be regarded as towage, and not as salvage services. No tender of the amount thereof having been made, such amount could not be recovered in a salvage suit. The Strathnaver, 1 App. Cas. 58; 34 L. T. 148; 3 Asp. M. C. 113—P. C.

The services of a tug were accepted by a vessel in no danger to carry her into port. A tender of a sum for towage upheld, there having been no salvage performed. The Harbinger, 16 Jur. 729.

A ship whilst docking in the Mersey got ashore on Pluckington bank, but was pulled off by her tugs in a few minutes:—Held, that they were not entitled to salvage. The Lady Egidia, Lush. 513.

Towage, as distinguished from salvage, is where the ship has received no injury and encountered no accident. The Reward, 1 W. Rob. 174; and see The Princess Alice, 3 W. Rob. 138.

Contract to Endeavour to Tow into Safety—Failure.]—Plaintiffs in a salvage action had left a vessel ultimately saved by other salvors in a worse position than that in which they picked her up. The court having found that there was an agreement that the plaintiff should endeavour to tow her to a place of safety for a remuneration to be fixed on shore:—Held, that the plaintiffs, having performed the agreement, although not entitled to salvage, were entitled to remuneration for what they had done. The Lepanto, [1892] P. 122; 66 L. T. 623; 7 Asp. M. C. 192.

Towage Agreement—Alleged Concealment.]—The owners and crew of a tug sued for salvage services, alleging that an agreement entered into for towage service was invalid, by reason of the fact of the illness of a great part of the crew of the vessel salved having been withheld. No danger to property was proved:—Held, that there was no salvage service, and the court pronounced for the agreement with costs. The Canova, L. R. 1 A. & E. 54; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 528.

b. Salvage, not Towage.

Steamer's Shaft broken.]—Where a steamship carrying fore and aft sails only, and not rigged for proceeding under sail alone, breaks the main shaft of her propeller and is compelled to take assistance from another ship which tows her forty miles into a port, the service is of a salvage character, although the service is not attended with any danger to the salvors. The Jubilee, 42 L. T. 594; 4 Asp. M. C. 275.

Where a steamship, disabled by the breaking of her crank-shaft, was towed a distance of about thirty miles without danger or risk by another steamship belonging to the same owners as the disabled vessel, and fifteen of the crew of the towing vessel instituted a salvage action in the sum of 5,000*l.* against the vessel towed, and arrested the vessel, cargo, and freight therein, the court held such services to be salvage services, but of so slight a character that on a value of 105,500*l.* it awarded 15*l.*, and ordered the salvors to pay all the costs of the action, expressing disapprobation both at the institution of the action in the high court, and at the arrest of the vessel for such an amount. The Agamemnon, 48 L. T. 880; 5 Asp. M. C. 92.

The "V." fell in with the "C.," showing signals of distress, with her propeller shaft broken, about thirty miles out of her usual course from America to England, and took her in tow. After the "V." had towed the "C." from 8.10 p.m. to 7.45 the hawser broke, and owing to the danger to the cattle on board, the "V." would not take the "C." again in tow. By the services of the "V." the "C." was brought ten to fourteen miles nearer her proper track, and towed eighty-five miles on her course, and thus brought into greater comparative safety. The "C." subsequently arrived safely at Queenstown:—Held, that the "V." was entitled to some salvage reward, and she was accordingly awarded 200*l.* The Camellia, 53 L. J., Adm. 12; 9 P. D. 27; 50 L. T. 126; 32 W. R. 495; 5 Asp. M. C. 197.

Towing Disabled Ship.]—Service performed by a steamer to a disabled vessel can never be considered as mere towage. The Charles Adolphe, Swabey, 153.

Tug Engaged in Towing—Service to Third Ship.]—A tug with a ship in tow cast her off in order to pull a steamship off a bank of mud and stones at a harbour mouth, it being then high tide. 50*l.* awarded for salvage. Lawson v. Grangemouth Dockyard Co., 15 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 753.

c. Towage converted into Salvage.

Towage may be Converted into Salvage.]—A towage service may, if exceptional circumstances arise, develop into a salvage service. The Isabella, 3 Hag. Adm. 428.

An agreement for towage, when from unavoidable circumstances salvage service becomes necessary, does not preclude the tug rendering such service from claiming as salvor. The William Brandt, cited, 2 W. Rob. 172; 2 Not. of Cas. Suppl. 67; and see infra, 16. Salvage Agreements.

Circumstances under which Towage may become Salvage.]—In order to entitle a steam-tug engaged to tow a vessel to successfully claim salvage remuneration for services rendered to such vessel, it must be shown not only that the tow was in danger when the services in respect of which salvage remuneration is claimed were rendered, but that at such time something was done either in the nature of risk run or extra services performed by the tug beyond what was included in the contemplation of the parties of the towage agreement. The Liverpool, [1893] P. 154; 1 R. 601; 68 L. T. 719; 7 Asp. M. C. 340.

A contract to tow embraces the risk of ordinary bad weather, but is put an end to by weather rendering the completion of the undertaking impossible; and in that case subsequent services may be in the nature of salvage. The Galatea, Swabey, 349; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1064; 7 W. R. 21.

A contract to tow in law implies an engagement that each party to the contract will perform his duty in completing it; that proper skill and diligence will be used on board both the vessel and tug; and that neither party, by neglect or mismanagement, will create unnecessary risk to the other, or increase any risk which might be incidental to the service undertaken. The Julia, 14 Moore, P. C. 210; Lush. 224.

If in the course of the performance of the contract, any inevitable accident happens to the one, without any default on the part of the other, no cause of action arises, as such accident is one of the necessary risks of the engagement to which each party was subject. But on the other hand, if the wrongful act of either occasions any damage to the other, such wrongful act creates a responsibility on the party committing it, if the other party has not by any misconduct, or unskilfulness on his part, contributed to the accident. Ib.

A contract to tow is not a warranty to tow to destination, but an engagement to use best endeavours and competent skill for that purpose, with a vessel properly equipped. The Minnehaha, Lush. 335; 15 Moore, P. C. 133; 30 L. J., Adm. 211; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1257; 4 L. T. 810; 9 W. R. 925.

If performance of the stipulated service is rendered impossible by a vis major, the obligation is terminated. Ib.

If unforeseen danger unavoidable by the steam-tug supervenes to the ship in tow, as by breaking of the hawser, the steam-tug is bound to complete the service, if possible; and the steam-tug, if thereby incurring risk and performing duties not within the scope of the original engagement, is entitled to salvage reward. Ib. S. P., The Julia, Lush. 224; 14 Moore, P. C. 210; The I. C. Potter, infra.

If, in the performance of a contract to tow, an unforeseen and extraordinary peril arises to the vessel towed, the steam-tug is not at liberty to abandon the vessel, but is bound to render to her the necessary assistance, and thereupon becomes entitled to salvage reward. The Saratoga, Lush. 318.

A steam-tug under contract to tow into dock was lashed alongside a vessel; in rounding to enter the dock basin the tide forced the vessel and the steam-tug close to a landing-stage, the steam-tug next to the stage; the pilot of the vessel hailed the tug to hold on and go ahead, which the tug did, but was forced against the stage, and injured:—Held, that the steam-tug was bound to endeavour to save the vessel from the impending peril, especially upon the order of the pilot, and so doing was entitled to salvage reward, including repayment of all damages and losses thereby incurred. Ib.

When the master of a steamer engages to tow a vessel, it is upon the supposition that the wind and weather and the time of performing the service will be what are ordinary at the time of year; but if an unexpected change of weather or other unforeseen accident occurs, he is bound to adhere to the vessel, and to do all in his power to rescue her from danger; and he will be entitled to reasonable extra remuneration for the extra service. The White Star, L. R. 1 A. & E. 68.

A steamer engaged to tow is bound, notwithstanding a merely temporary accident interrupting the service, and endangering the vessel towed, to complete the stipulated service with all reasonable skill and promptitude, and for so doing the steamer, if incurring no risk, is not entitled to salvage reward. The Annapolis, The Golden Light, Lush. 355; 5 L. T. 37—P. C.

In order to entitle a steam-tug engaged to tow a vessel to successfully claim salvage remuneration for services rendered to such vessel, it must be shown not only that the tow was in danger when the services in respect of which salvage remuneration is claimed were rendered, but that at such time something was done either in the nature of risk run or extra services performed by the tug beyond what was included in the contemplation of the parties in the towage agreement. The Liverpool, [1893] P. 154; 1 R. 601; 68 L. T. 719; 7 Asp. M. C. 340.

A steam-tug entered into a contract to tow a ship at sea into the port of Liverpool for 45*l.* During the performance of the service a hurricane arose and the vessels were in serious danger. The tug, at great peril to herself, continued to tow the ship during the hurricane, and by so doing prevented the ship drifting upon a lee-shore. The wind soon afterwards moderated, and the tug, still continuing to tow the ship, brought her into the port of Liverpool in safety:—Held, that the tug was entitled to salvage reward. The I. C. Potter, 40 L. J., Adm. 9; L. R. 3 A. & E. 292; 23 L. T. 603; 19 W. R. 335.

Though a towing vessel may be justified in abandoning her contract, it is still her duty to remain by the towed vessel to render assistance; but for such assistance she may claim salvage reward. Ib.

A tug under contract to tow a ship into port may be entitled to salvage reward for bringing the ship into port, although nothing has occurred to occasion an actual interruption to the towage. Ib.

Towage of a ship near the land in unsettled weather, if her ground tackle is disabled, is in the nature of salvage. The Albion, Lush. 282.

A tug engaged under the ordinary contract to tow, may, by the performance of substantial salvage service in saving the ship towed from supervening danger, earn salvage reward, though not herself incurring risk. The Pericles, Br. & Lush. 80.

—— Fog—Stranding.]—A tug, which had been engaged to attend a vessel into harbour, accompanied her to the entrance, when, a fog coming on and before the tug had made fast, the vessel went ashore, and was in a position of danger. The tug assisted to get her off:—Held, that such service was outside the scope of her engagement, and that she was entitled to salvage. Semble, the existence of such an engagement has no practical effect in diminishing the amount of the award. The Westburn, 74 L. T. 200; 8 Asp. M. C. 130.

Salvage Reward in Addition to Towage.]—Semble, where owing to an accident to the tow the tug is delayed in the performance of the towage contract, the tug may, in an action for salvage, be entitled to remuneration beyond the charge for towage. The Hjemmett, 49 L. J., Adm. 66; 5 P. D. 227; 42 L. T. 514; 4 Asp. M. C. 14.

8. Salvage or Pilotage.

Test.]—The test is, whether the risk attending the services to the vessel was such, that the pilot could not be reasonably expected to perform them for the ordinary pilot's fees, or even for extraordinary pilotage reward. A vessel was, during a heavy storm, being driven to leeward towards dangerous sands: her captain was ignorant of the locality, and her loss appeared almost inevitable:

some pilots, seeing her danger, put off to sea at the peril of their lives in order to assist her; they were unable to board her by reason of the height of the sea: but by preceding her and signalling to her, they guided her to a safe anchorage. The vessel had sustained no damage:—Held, that the pilots were entitled to be remunerated for salvage services. Akerblom v. Price, 50 L. J., Q. B. 629; 7 Q. B. D. 129; 44 L. T. 837; 29 W. R. 797; 4 Asp. M. C. 441—C. A.

Ship in Distress.]—A fishing-smack fell in near the Long Sand buoy with a foreign steamship. The steamship had been on the sands near the Kentish Knock lightship, but had got off with some damage to her rudder, and had a signal for a pilot hoisted. The master of the smack boarded the steamship and piloted her to the entrance of Harwich harbour:—Held, that the owners, master and crew of the fishing-smack were entitled to salvage remuneration. When a person goes on board of a vessel in distress, and pilots her into harbour, he is entitled to salvage remuneration, unless it is established that he has contracted to render the services for pilotage remuneration only. The Anders Knape, 48 L. J., Adm. 53; 4 P. D. 213; 40 L. T. 684; 4 Asp. M. C. 142.

Smack engaged to Sail Ahead.]—A foreign vessel fifty miles off the Dutch coast being in difficulty, in consequence of the boisterous state of the weather, and being leaky, called in the assistance of an English fishing-smack, and engaged the captain by a written agreement "to pilot and to sail ahead for 50*l*." After four days' boisterous weather, during which the captain of the smack worked at the pumps, the vessel was got into port. In an action for salvage services:—Held, that nothing had been done to convert pilotage service into a salvage service, and that the sum specified in the agreement was a sufficient compensation. The Jonge Andries, Swabey, 303; 11 Moore, P. C. 313; 6 W. R. 198—P. C.

Pilotage may, by circumstances of extreme danger and personal exertion, be converted into salvage. The Joseph Harvey, 1 C. Rob. 306.

Waterman acting as Pilot.]—A Dutch barque was riding at anchor off Deal, and waiting to proceed down channel, and a waterman who, though not a licensed pilot, was in the habit of piloting vessels, was taken on board her, under an arrangement whereby he was to receive 7*s.* a-day, with 5*l.* in addition, for navigating the vessel as pilot until she arrived off Beachy Head. The day after the waterman came on board, and whilst the barque was still at anchor, a gale came on, and the tempestuous state of the weather caused the vessel to drive, and rendered it necessary to slip the chain, when, under the direction of the waterman, the vessel was taken through the Gull Stream and brought up in safety in Margate Roads. In a salvage suit instituted on behalf of the waterman and other persons who had rendered services to the vessel:—Held, that the services rendered by the waterman were within the scope of his contract, and that he was not entitled to claim as a salvor. The Æolus, 42 L. J., Adm. 14; L. R. 4 A. & E. 29; 28 L. T. 41; 21 W. R. 704.

A pilot entering into an engagement to pilot a vessel undertakes to supply local knowledge and the peculiar skill of his class, and will not be allowed, even though he contributes to the safety of the vessel, to change the character of his service from pilotage to salvage, except where the vessel was in distress before he went on board to render the service, or where such circumstances of extreme danger and personal exertion supervene, which exalt his service into a salvage service. Ib. S. P., The Columbus, 2 Hag. Adm. 178, n.

Pilot assisting to Pump.]—Pilots going on board a leaky ship and assisting to pump held to be salvors. The Hebe, 2 W. Rob. 246; and see The Jonge Andries, supra.

Pilot doing Seaman's Duty.]—A pilot on a salved ship who rendered trifling assistance by helping at the wheel and windlass:—Held, not entitled to salvage. The Monarch, 56 L. J., Adm. 114; 12 P. D. 5; 56 L. T. 204; 35 W. R. 292; 6 Asp. M. C. 90.

Pilotage by Persons not Pilots.]—Pilotage service by persons who are not licensed pilots in a place where there are no such pilots is salvage service. The Rosehaugh, 1 Spinks, 261.

Pilot Boat Towing.]—Formerly, pilots were bound to give the use of their boats for towing, if necessary, being paid for damage to the boat and for extra labour. Tender of 50*l.* for towing a dismasted vessel into Portsmouth upheld. The General Palmer, 2 Hag. Adm. 176; The Enterprise, infra.

Pilots waiting for Fine Weather to Board.]—Pilots waiting for fair weather to go off to a ship ashore in distress only allowed pilotage, and not salvage, for getting her into harbour. The City of Edinburgh, 2 Hag. Adm. 333.

Pilotage of Ship with Rudder gone.]—Double pilotage given to a pilot taking a steamship that had lost her rudder; semble, the pilot boat towing. The Enterprise, 2 Hag. Adm. 178, n.

Incompetent Persons acting as Pilots.]—Fishermen who assume to act as salvors to the exclusion of pilots and more competent persons will get no reward if they do no good. The Dygden, 1 Not. of Cas. 115.

Ship that has Lost her Reckoning.]—A foreign ship bound to St. Petersburg from Malaga was boarded in the Bristol Channel by fishermen. Her master did not know where he was. Salvage awarded. The Eugenie, 3 Not. of Cas. 430.

Ship Put Back to stop Leak.]—An outward bound ship put back in the English Channel, finding herself making some water; she put into Dover and the leak was stopped for a trifling expense:—Held, that the pilot who took her into Dover was to be paid for a salvage and not a pilotage service. The Elizabeth, 8 Jur. 363.

Beachman undertaking Pilotage.]—A Deal man who boarded a ship in the Gull Stream and undertook to pilot her into the Downs, but ultimately put her ashore on Sandwich Flats, from whence she was with difficulty salved:—Held, not entitled to salvage. The Branken Moor, 3 Hag. Adm. 373.

Signalling for Pilot or Salvor.]—A vessel in a damaged condition out of pilotage waters signalling for a pilot:—Held, to be signalling for salvage assistance. The Felix, 1 Spinks, 23, n.

Ship out of Pilotage Water.]—Assistance given to a ship out of pilotage waters to bring her to a place of safety is salvage, not pilotage. The Hedwig, 1 Spinks, 19.

False Claim by Pilot—Costs.]—Pilot wrongfully claiming salvage condemned in costs. The Johannes, 6 Not. of Cas. 288, n.

A steamship put two men on board a foreign galliot brought up between the Needles and Hurst Castle, and she was taken by them to Cowes, the wind being fair but strong:—Held, no salvage service. The Wilhelmina, 1 Not. of Cas. 376.

Ship in Distress—Pilot awarded Salvage.]—A pilot engaged by a foreign ship as such awarded salvage, the ship being damaged and the weather bad. The King Oscar, 6 Not. of Cas. 285.

In an action for salvage it appeared that on March 20, about 11 A.M., the plaintiffs' fishing-smack fell in with the defendants' vessel which was showing an English Jack flag in her rigging, in the North Sea, forty miles from Lowestoft. The crew of the vessel were suffering from frost-bite, the helmsman in consequence steering with one hand. They were also short of provisions. They told the master of the smack that they wished to be piloted to the nearest port, the vessel being at this time out of pilotage waters, and he agreed to take and took the vessel to Great Yarmouth:—Held, that even assuming that the signal exhibited by the defendants' vessel was ambiguous, the assistance rendered to her was in the circumstances a salvage service, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to remuneration accordingly. The Aglaia, 57 L. J., Adm. 106; 13 P. D. 160; 59 L. T. 528; 37 W. R. 255; 6 Asp. M. C. 337.

A pilot is not bound to go on board a vessel in distress for mere pilotage reward; but if he go on board as pilot he will not be entitled to salvage reward for trifling assistance given to the crew. The Cherubim, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 172; S. P., The Frederick, 1 W. Rob. 16.

9. Who are entitled to.

a. Officers and Crews of H. M. Ships.

General Rule.]—Officers and crews of her majesty's ships are entitled to the same salvage as other salvors; but the award is diminished by reason of the ship not being private property. The Earl of Eglinton, Swabey, 7; The Iodine, 3 Not. of Cas. 140; The Ewell Grove, 3 Hag. Adm. 200; The Wilsons, 1 W. Rob. 172; The Mary Anne, 1 Hag. Adm. 158; The Rapid, 3 Hag. Adm. 419; The Rosalie, 1 Spinks, 188.

A queen's steamship assisted a merchant ship in distress under an agreement with the admiral at Portsmouth, that the latter should pay for all damage and loss of stores to the steamship:—Held, that this did not prevent the officers and crew of the steamship from claiming salvage. The Lustre, 3 Hag. Adm. 154.

The commander and crew of a queen's ship, or of a ship of the Bombay government, have the same rights to remuneration for salvage as the master and crew of a merchant ship. The Woosung, Cargo ex, 1 P. D. 260; 35 L. T. 8; 25 W. R. 1; 3 Asp. M. C. 239—C. A. Reversing 44 L. J., Adm. 45.

The commander of a queen's ship, sent to render help to a wrecked ship, cannot impose terms and refuse to give salvage services unless those terms are accepted. Ib.

Officers and crews of her majesty's ships, on receiving the consent of the admiralty, as required by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 485, may recover salvage from the owners of the ship and cargo for services rendered thereto, and for salvage services rendered to passengers belonging to the ship. The Alma, Lush. 378.

Whole Ship's Company entitled.]—The officers and crew of a queen's ship who remain on board are entitled to salvage, as well as those who actually perform the service. The Charlotte Wylie, 2 W. Rob. 495.

Arduous Service—Lightening Ship—Preservation from Robbery.]—A vessel with a valuable cargo on board, struck on a reef on an uninhabited island in the Red Sea near the mainland; and the crew began to jettison part of the cargo, which they threw into shallow water. Armed Arabs then crossed over from the mainland and began to plunder the jettisoned cargo. A queen's ship having come up, her commander anchored near the wrecked vessel, and sent a number of his crew to act as sentinels on the beach of the mainland, who were posted for about a mile along the beach, and were exposed to severe heat. Others of the crew were employed in discharging the cargo, working up to their waists in water in the hold, which was greatly fouled. They threw out the cargo and hauled it across the reef to the mainland, where it was collected by the sentinels and labourers. In an action of salvage by the commander and crew of the queen's ship:—Held, that the services rendered by them being beyond the scope of their public duty were salvage services, and that they were entitled to remuneration accordingly. Ulysses, Cargo ex, 58 L. J., Adm. 11; 13 P. D. 205; 60 L. T. 111; 37 W. R. 270; 6 Asp. M. C. 354.

Ship belonging to or hired by Government.]—A transport ship, hired by government, and performing by orders of the officer of a queen's ship, salvage services not within the terms of the charterparty, is entitled to a share of the amount awarded as salvage. The Nile, 44 L. J., Adm. 38; L. R. 4 A. & E. 449; 33 L. T. 66; 3 Asp. M. C. 11.

A ship belonging to the Bombay government with a hired commander and crew is, with respect to the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 484, in the same position as a queen's ship with commissioned officers. Woosung, Cargo ex, supra Government Transport—Government Stores.]—The owners, master, and crew of a steamship chartered to the government as a transport under the ordinary form of government charter, incorporating the transport regulations (by which it is provided that "when necessary, steam transports will be required to tow other vessels") are entitled to recover for salvage services rendered to a ship and her freight, even though the services be rendered with the assistance of a naval officer and naval seamen, and the salved vessel be laden (inter alia) with government stores. The Bertie, 55 L. T. 520; 6 Asp. M. C. 26.

Board of Trade's Vessels.]—The Board of Trade, as owners of a steam-tug and lifeboat belonging to Ramsgate harbour, may sue for an award of salvage in respect of service rendered by the steam-tug and lifeboat. The Cybele, 47 L. J., Adm. 86; 3 P. D. 8; 37 L. T. 773; 26 W. R. 345; 3 Asp. M. C. 352—C. A.

Rescue from Enemy.]—Salvage not due to a king's ship for rescuing from the enemy a hired transport engaged in the same expedition. The Belle, Edwards, 66.

Service by Queen's Ship to Ship in Service of Foreign Government.]—Salvage awarded where the service was to ship and cargo, and the ship alone was arrested and brought before the court. The service was by a queen's ship to a ship in the service of the French government. The Mary Pleasants, Swabey, 224.

Military Salvors.]—Military salvors awarded civil salvage. The Sir Francis Burton, 2 Hag. Adm. 156.

Queen's Ship.]—The officers and crew of the "Dalhousie," a ship in the service of the Bombay government awarded 4,500*l.* out of 22,400*l.*, being the value of cargo salved with difficulty from a ship ashore in the Red Sea and in danger from Arabs. The Dalhousie, 1 P. D. 271, n.

b. Both Ships belonging to same Owners.

General Rule.]—When salvage services are performed by one ship to another, both ships belonging to the same owners, the master and crew of the ship which has performed the salvage services are entitled to salvage remuneration, provided the services performed are not within the contract which they originally entered into with the owners, and which they would be paid for by their ordinary wages. The Sappho, Sappho (Owners) v. Denton, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 66; 40 L. J., Adm. 47; L. R. 3 P. C. 690; 24 L. T. 795. Affirming 19 W. R. 24.

The crews of two ships belonging to J. L., gave some assistance to a third ship chartered by J. L. upon the terms that he should pay the master and crew; the cargo belonging to J. L.: —Held, that no salvage could be claimed against the third ship. The Maria Jane, 14 Jur. 857.

A steam vessel laden with a general cargo, became disabled at sea in consequence of her machinery breaking down. Her cargo had been shipped under bills of lading, which contained among the excepted perils "accidents from machinery." Another steam vessel belonging to the same owners fell in with the disabled vessel, and towed her into safety:—Held, that the owners of the vessel rendering the service were entitled to recover salvage remuneration against the cargo laden on board the disabled vessel, and that the master and crew of the vessel rendering the service were entitled to recover salvage remuneration against the disabled vessel, her freight and cargo. The Miranda, 41 L. J., Adm. 82; L. R. 3 A. & E. 561; 27 L. T. 389; 21 W. R. 84; 1 Asp. M. C. 440.

Part Owners of Salving and Salved Ship the same.]—When a part owner has an interest in the vessel salved, his co-owners and the master and crew of the salving vessel may sue for salvage; the sum to which they are entitled being computed by deducting, from the value of the entire service, the share which would have been due to such part owner, if he could have joined. The Caroline, Lush. 334; 5 L. T. 89.

Chartered Ship Salving another belonging to the Charterers.]—A ship chartered by the East India Co. rendered salvage service to a ship owned by the company:—Held salvage was payable to the owners of the chartered ship. The Waterloo, 2 Dods. 433.

Master and Crew entitled, Owners not.]—A steamship laden with cargo became disabled at sea in consequence of the breaking of her crank shaft. Such breakage was caused by a latent defect in the shaft, arising from a flaw in the welding, which it was impossible to discover. Her cargo was shipped under bills of lading which contained among the excepted perils "all and every the dangers and accidents of the seas and of navigation of whatsoever nature or kind." Another vessel belonging to the same owners towed the disabled vessel to a place of safety. In an action of salvage brought by the owners, masters, and crew of the salving vessel against the owners of cargo on the salved ship:—Held, that the master and crew were entitled to salvage, but that the owners were not, for that there was an implied warranty by them that the vessel was seaworthy at the beginning of the voyage. The Glenfruin, 54 L. J., Adm. 49; 10 P. D. 103; 52 L. T. 769; 33 W. R. 826; 5 Asp. M. C. 413.

Salvage of Cargo—Owners entitled.]—A steamship became disabled at sea owing to the breaking of her fly-wheel shaft, through a flaw in the welding existing at the commencement of the voyage, but not discoverable by the exercise of any reasonable care. The cargo on board her was shipped under three bills of lading, the first of which contained, amongst other excepted perils, the clause:—"warranted seaworthy only so far as ordinary care can provide"; the second: "warranted seaworthy only as far as due care in the appointment or selection of agents, superintendents, pilots, masters, officers, engineers, and crew can ensure it"; and the third: "owners not to be liable for loss, detention, or damage . . . if arising directly or indirectly . . . from latent defects in boilers, machinery, or any part of the vessel in which steam is used, even existing at time of shipment, provided all reasonable means have been taken to secure efficiency." A vessel belonging to the same owners towed the disabled vessel to a place of safety. In an action of salvage brought by the owners, master and crew of the salving vessel against the owners of cargo in the salved vessel: —Held, that the owners of the salving vessel (though at the same time owners of the salved vessel) were entitled to salvage, and that the owners of the cargo had no remedy for breach of the contract of carriage, for the exceptions in the bills of lading were such as to constitute a limited warranty of seaworthiness at the commencement of the voyage, which limited warranty had been complied with by the ship-owners. Laertes, Cargo ex, 56 L. J., Adm. 108; 12 P. D. 187; 57 L. T. 502; 36 W. R. 111; 6 Asp. M. C. 174. See also The Agamemnon, ante, col. 612.

c. Shipowner or Charterer.

By agreement between the owner of a steamer and C., he agreed to charter the steamer for the purpose of running between certain named ports, and to pay a sum weekly for the use of the steamer until the agreement was determined in manner therein provided. The agreement provided that C. should pay all expenses of the crew and other expenses incidental to the running of the steamer, excepting only marine insurance, which was to be defrayed by the owner; that the steamer should be delivered up by C. on the termination of the agreement in as good condition as at the time of making the agreement, reasonable wear and tear excepted; that the master should not, except in the event of his misconduct, be removed by C. without consent of the owner. The steamer, while running under this agreement, fell in with a disabled vessel and towed her into safety:—Held, that C. was entitled to salvage reward, in respect of the service rendered by the steamer, and that the owner was not entitled to salvage reward. The Scout, 41 L. J., Adm. 42; L. R. 3 A. & E. 512; 26 L. T. 371; 20 W. R. 617; 1 Asp. M. C. 258.

The charterers of a vessel are not, except under very special circumstances, entitled to the salvage earned by that vessel. The Alfen, Swabey, 189.

The owners rendering salvage services, being also the charterers of the vessel receiving the services, are not, thereby debarred from claiming salvage reward, unless the effect of the charterparty has been to divest the owners of the possession and control of the salved vessel, and to transfer the same for the time to the charterers. The Collier, L. R. 1 A. & E. 83; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 789; 16 L. T. 155.

The claim of an owner to a share in a salvage reward beyond compensation for damage incurred by his vessel, is of feeble character, and he has no claim to the custody of such money. The Princess Helena, Lush. 190; 30 L. J., Adm. 137; 4 L. T. 869.

In the absence of special provision in the charterparty to the contrary, the owner and not the charterer is entitled to salvage; but the salvage may give rise to claims by the charterer against the owner. The Alfen, Swabey, 189.

Semble. Salvage performed by a ship demised to and wholly in the possession of a charterer enures to the benefit of the charterer. The Maria Jane, 14 Jur. 857.

The owner of a ship under charter awarded two-thirds of a prize captured by her. Thurgar v. Morley, 3 Mer. 20.

d. Apprentices.

Master of Apprentice Salvor.]—The master of an apprentice is not entitled to salvage awarded for the services of the apprentice. The Two Friends, 2 W. Rob. 349; 8 Jur. 1011.

Apprentices are entitled to share in salvage, and a contract that their masters should take their shares is, semble, invalid. The Columbine, 2 W. Rob. 186.

e. Agents.

Authority of Agent to Incur Expenses—Principle upon which Award based.]—An agent is not precluded from claiming as a salvor; but where the owners of the property in danger have requested him to render assistance, and thereby have given him a right to some remuneration, though the operations prove unsuccessful, the assessment of the award, for successful salvage services, will be based upon the principle that the agent did not, like an independent salvor, run the risk of the loss of the entire expenditure if his efforts had proved unsuccessful. The Kate B. Jones, [1892] P. 366; 69 L. T. 197; 7 Asp., M. C. 332.

Agent to Salve Cargo.]—One who is appointed agent by the master to save cargo wrecked may, nevertheless, claim as salvor in admiralty. The Happy Return, 2 Hag. Adm. 207.

Lloyds' Agent Hiring Men to Salve.]—Lloyds' agent hiring men to assist a vessel in distress is not entitled to claim as a salvor. The Lively, 3 W. Rob. 64.

A Lloyds' agent, who had undertaken the salvage of a vessel, and had employed men for the purpose, without incurring risk himself, allowed to claim as salvor. La Purissima Concepcion, 3 W. Rob. 181.

A valuable ship went ashore off Beachy Head. Two persons, Lloyds' agent and another, as agents, were employed by the master to salve the ship and cargo. They employed a large number of men at an expense of over 1,000*l.*:—Held, that they were entitled to salvage. The Lady Cranstown, cited 2 Hag. Adm. 207.

Extraordinary Services.]—Where ship agents render extraordinary services in saving property, the court will, under particular circumstances, allow a claim as agent and a claim as salvor to be united and combined. Honor, Cargo ex, 35 L. J., Adm. 113; L. R. 1 A. & E. 87; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 773; 15 L. T. 677; 15 W. R. 10.

Repayment of Advance to Salvors.]—Money paid by the ship's agent to salvors, in anticipation of an award, will not be repaid out of the fund in court to those who advance it. The Louisa, 3 W. Rob. 99.

f. Owner of Salving Ship.

Ship supplying Seamen—Owners entitled to Salvage.]—The owners, master and crew of a ship that supplies seamen in mid-ocean to another that is short handed are entitled to salvage, as well as the seamen who are transferred. The Roe, Swabey, 85.

Owner of Smack Salvor.]—Where services of smacksmen are accepted, the smackowner is entitled to share in the award. The Norden, 1 Spinks, 185.

Owners of Boats used by Salvors.]—The owners of boats used in a salvage service:—Held, not entitled to salvage, not having been personally engaged in the service; but to remuneration for the use of their boats. The Charlotte, 3 W. Rob. 68; 6 Not. of Cas. 279.

g. Coastguard and Lightship Men.

Coastguardmen.]—Coastguardmen are entitled to salvage, though it is their duty to do such work. Silver Bullion, 2 Spinks, 70.

Coastguard Officer.]—Claim for salvage of a coastguard officer who sent his men and boat, but did nothing himself, rejected. The Vine, 2 Hag. Adm. 1.

Lightship Crew.]—Some of the crew of a lightship rendered salvage services:—Held, that those who remained on board could not share in the award. The Emma, 3 W. Rob. 151.

h. Other Persons.

Lifeboat Crew in Employment of Harbour Authority.]—The Mersey Docks and Harbour Board agreed with a tug owner that the latter should, by day or night, tow their lifeboat to sea at fifteen guineas for each trip. The tug, in pursuance of this agreement, towed out the lifeboat, which rescued the crew of a ship in distress; afterwards she returned and brought in the ship and cargo:—Held, that the owners, master and crew of the tug were entitled, notwithstanding the agreement with dock company, to claim for life salvage. The Pensacola, Br. & Lush. 307.

Passenger—Naval Officer.]—A naval officer, being a passenger on board a brig that got into distress, contributed his assistance:—Held, that he could not claim as a salvor. The Branston, 2 Hag. Adm. 3, n.

Whole Crews of Boats employed entitled to Share.]—Where two luggers rendered salvage service, all the crews of both were held entitled to share, though some only were employed. The Mountaineer, 2 W. Rob. 7.

Wrecked Crew on Board Salved Ship.]—A wrecked crew on board the salved ship awarded salvage for their exertions in salving the ship. The Salacia, 2 Hag. Adm. 262.

Ship's Company adrift Picking up an Abandoned Ship.]—A vessel ashore and abandoned on a reef off Cuba was picked up by the crew of another vessel also ashore and abandoned in the neighbourhood and brought to England. Salvage awarded to the crew, but not to the owners, of the other ship. The Two Friends, 2 W. Rob. 349; 8 Jur. 1011.

Representatives of Deceased Salvors.]—Share of the salvage awarded to the representatives of salvors who were drowned in the service. The Marquis of Huntly, 3 Hag. Adm. 246.

Salvors abandoning Ship afterwards Salved by others.]—Salvors made great efforts to save a ship, but were at last compelled to abandon her; it was uncertain what effect their action had on the saving of the ship. Afterwards she was picked up derelict and brought in by other salvors:—Held, that the original salvors were entitled to salvage. The E. U., 1 Spinks, 63.

Crew Returning to Abandoned Ship.]—A ship was, by her master's order, abandoned at sea. The next day her crew, by order of the consul at Vigo, were put on board a steamship, which fell in with the abandoned ship. Part of the crew volunteered to go on board her, without the master; and they did so, and with some assistance from boats, carried her to Corunna:—Held, that they were entitled to salvage. The Florence, 16 Jur. 572.

Lords of Manors.]—A lord of a manor is not entitled to salvage for taking, against the consent of the owner, and preserving part of a ship thrown on his manor, when the servants of the owner are there to take care of it for him. Sutton v. Buck, 2 Taunt. 302; 11 R. R. 585. See also Geere v. Burkensham, supra, col. 594.

Beachmen.]—Two fishing smacks fell in with a derelict vessel, about seventy miles from the English coast, and took her in tow after great risk, and two days afterwards brought her close to Yarmouth, when the smacksmen, to expedite the completion of the salvage, engaged a steam-tug to take her in tow, but through the mistake or misconduct of those on board the tug the vessel got aground, whereupon the tug left the smacksmen, went in search of assistance, and, in their temporary absence, a number of beachmen took possession of the vessel and brought her safely into harbour. The admiralty court held, that, owing to the misconduct of the tug, the smacksmen's efforts, however meritorious, did not successfully salve the vessel, and that they were not entitled to share in the salvage, and decreed salvage to the beachmen only. Upon appeal, the judgment was reversed, and a liberal salvage allowed to the smacksmen. The Atlas, 15 Moore, P. C. 329; 31 L. J., Adm. 210; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 753; 6 L. T. 737; 10 W. R. 850.

Anchors of Salved Ship Recovered.]—Where salvors, in getting a ship off a sand slipped both her anchors, and after getting the ship off the sand called in another boat to recover the anchors:—Held, that the people who got the anchors were not entitled to share in the salvage award for ship and cargo. The Endeavour, Colley v. Watson, 6 Moore, P. C. 334; 6 Not. of Cas. 57.

Schooner Salvor Superseded by Steamship.]—A ship abandoned at sea was taken possession of by a small schooner, and after being towed by her for some time was boarded and taken to Liverpool by the steamship. The steamship had been hired for the purpose by underwriters of the abandoned ship and cargo. In a salvage action by these persons:—Held, that the schooner was entitled to claim as first salvor; also, that the hirers of the steamship were entitled to salvage, being justified in taking possession, as against the schooner, she being too small to accomplish the service. The Pickwick, 16 Jur. 669.

Both Ships British.]—It is no answer to a claim for salvage abroad that both ships were British. The Portia, 9 Jur. 167.

Civil Salvage awarded to Military Salvors.]—Civil salvage awarded to one claiming military salvage, the ship being in distress at the time. The Franklin, 4 C. Rob. 147. S. P., The Louisa, 1 Dods, 317.

Intention of Salvor — Mistake of Fact.]—Where a person renders services in a nature of salvage to a vessel which he at the time bonâ fide believes to be his own by purchase or otherwise, he is not precluded from recovering salvage reward in respect of such services because it turns out in fact that the vessel was not his property. The Liffey, 58 L. T. 351; 6 Asp. M. C. 255.

Whole Crew of Salving Ship entitled to Share.]—Those of a ship's crew who go on board the ship in distress have not an exclusive claim to salvage. The rest of the crew, being ready to assist, are entitled to share. The Baltimore, 2 Dods. 132.

Passengers—Cattle-men.]—The "B." while on a voyage from Boston to Liverpool with live cattle, fell in with a derelict ship, and towed her to Queenstown. In an action by the owners, master and crew of the "B." for salvage, the cattlemen claimed to participate in the award:—Held, that they were not entitled to any share in the salvage award. The Coriolanus, 59 L. J., Adm. 59: 15 P. D. 103; 62 L. T. 844; 6 Asp. M. C. 514.

Passengers rendering services to ship, where there is a common danger, are not entitled to salvage reward. The Vrede (Lush. 322; 30 L. J., Adm. 209), infra.

Passengers voluntarily remaining on board a vessel injured by a collision, and working at the pumps, are not entitled to salvage. Ib.

A ship being in danger, and the captain and part of the crew having made their escape, a passenger, at the request of the rest of the crew, took the command, and brought the ship safe to port. The merits of the passenger in saving the ship were acknowledged by the owner in a letter to one of the underwriters, wherein he expressed a desire to make him a compensation:—Held, that the passenger was entitled to sue the owner for the salvage. Newman v. Walters, 3 Bos. & P. 612; 7 R. R. 886.

Mate remaining on Vessel abandoned by Crew.]—Two vessels came into collision on the high seas. One of the vessels (a barque) received damage, and all her crew, except her mate, escaped on board the other vessel. The mate of the barque remained on board her, and navigated her until he obtained assistance from a steam vessel. The steam vessel then took the barque in tow and brought her into port in safety, the mate still assisting in her navigation:—Held, that, in awarding salvage to the owners, master and crew of the steam vessel, the right of the mate of the damaged ship to claim salvage reward for his services should be taken into consideration, and that the mate, upon his claim being brought before the court, was entitled to rank as a salvor. The Le Jonet, 41 L. J., Adm. 95; L. R. 3 A. & E. 556; 27 L. T. 387; 21 W. R. 83; 1 Asp. M. C. 438.

Seamen of Salving Ship.]—Salvage service may be performed by the seamen of the ship salved when an abandonment of her has put an end to their original contract. The Vrede (Lush. 322; 30 L. J., Adm. 209), supra.

If, upon a ship being wrecked, the master, improperly disregarding the interests of the owners of ship and cargo, discharges the seamen, the discharge is nevertheless valid, unless the seamen are proved to have fraudulently accepted their discharge; and subsequent services rendered by them to ship and cargo are salvage services. The Warrior, Lush. 476: 6 L. T. 133.

In order to deprive a seaman of his right to share in salvage, neither the agreement for the vessel to be employed in salvage service, nor the stipulation that he shall waive his claim for salvage, need be in writing to satisfy 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 18, but both must be clearly proved by those who dispute his right. The Pride of Canada, Br. & Lush. 208; 9 L. T. 546.

Contract with Underwriters — Work and Labour—Failure of Underwriters—Liability of Owners.]—Persons rendering services in themselves of a salvage nature under a contract for work and labour, are excluded from subsequently claiming against the property as salvors in respect of those services, whether the contract under which the services are performed be made with the owners of the property or with third persons. The Solway Prince, 65 L. J., Adm. 45; [1896] P. 120; 74 L. T. 32; 8 Asp. M. C. 128.

See also 5, SALVAGE SERVICES, supra.

10. WHO ARE LIABLE TO PAY SALVAGE.

Ship indirectly Benefited.]—Salvage is not due from the owners of a vessel that only indirectly receives a benefit from salvage services rendered to another vessel driving in her neighbourhood. The Annapolis, The Golden Light, and The H. M. Hayes, Lush. 355; 5 L. T. 37—P. C.

Liability of Persons not the actual Owners of Property saved.]—The liability to pay salvage is not confined to the actual legal owners of the property saved, but extends to those who have an interest in that property, which interest has been saved by the placing of the property itself in a position of security. Five Steel Barges, 59 L. J., Adm. 77; 15 P. D. 142; 63 L. T. 499; 39 W. R. 127; 6 Asp. M. C. 580.

Bail Insufficient—Liability of Appearers.]—See The Dictator, infra, col. 851.

Salvage payable by cargo owners in consequence of the negligence of the master is recoverable against the ship, under 24 Vict. c. 10. The Princess Royal, 39 L. J., Adm. 43; L. R. 3 A. & E. 41; 22 L. T. 39.

Salvage by Ship of same Owners.]—See The Waterloo, supra, col. 620.

Foreign Ship of War.]—Salvage services having been rendered to a Dutch ship of war brought into Mount's Bay, she was arrested in a salvage suit, and 800*l.* awarded to the salvors. The Prinz Frederik, 2 Dods. 451. N.B.—No application for release of the ship was made, and a protest to the jurisdiction having been put in, the case was decided by Sir W. Scott at the request of the Netherlands government.

Life Salvage—Passengers taken from Wreck.]—The owners of a passenger vessel ashore, from which, at her master's request, a passing vessel took the passengers, there being no risk of life, are not liable for salvage. The Mariposa, 65 L. J., Adm. 104; [1896] P. 273; 75 L. T. 54; 45 W. R. 191; 8 Asp. M. C. 159.

Action in personam—Lies in Admiralty for Salvage.]—The Five Steel Barges, supra. And see The Hope, and cases infra, col. 667.

11. CONTRIBUTION TO SALVAGE.

Shipowners.]—The "C.," a Spanish steamship, fell in at sea with the "S.," an English steamship, with signals of distress flying, and helpless from injuries sustained in a collision. The passengers of the "S." and specie, which had formed part of her cargo, having been taken on board the "C.," attempts were made by the "C." to tow the "S." into safety. These attempts were ineffectual, and ultimately, after the master and crew of the "S." had gone on board the "C.," the "S." was abandoned and her passengers, master and crew were landed in safety at an English port. Afterwards the specie was arrested in an action for salvage instituted at the suit of the owners, master and crew of the "C.," who claimed to recover for life salvage and for salvage services rendered to the "S." and the specie. The owners of the specie appeared as defendants, and served a notice on the owners of the "S." to contribute to the remuneration claimed by the plaintiffs. Thereupon the owners of the "S." appeared. At the hearing the court awarded salvage to the plaintiffs for the services rendered, but reserved all questions as to the liability of the owners of the "S." The owners of the specie then moved the court to declare that such portion of the sum awarded as was awarded for life salvage ought to be recouped to the owners of the specie. The court refused the motion, on the ground that no property belonging to the owners of the "S." having been salved, they could not be held personally liable to pay any portion of the sum awarded. The Sarpedon, Cargo ex, 3 P. D. 28; 37 L. T. 505; 26 W. R. 374; 3 Asp. M. C. 509.

Shipowner and Owner of Cargo.]—The payment into court of 8*l.* a ton under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 54, does not place the shipowner in the position of a person who has not done wrong. The owner of a ship sunk by a collision in the Thames admitted it to be his fault, and paid into court 8*l.* a ton in a suit to limit his liability. The Thames conservators having powers under the Removal of Wrecks Act, 1877, and the Thames Conservancy Acts, raised the ship and delivered the ship and cargo to the owner, he undertaking to pay the expenses of raising. Part of the cargo was some wool, which was damaged by being sunk:—Held, that the shipowner was bound to deliver the wool to the owner of the wool without claiming from him by way of contribution to salvage any part of the expenses of raising the ship and cargo. The Ettrick or Prehn v. Bailey, 6 P. D. 127; 45 L. T. 399; 4 Asp. M. C. 465—C. A. Affirming 50 L. J., Adm. 65.

Ship and cargo must each pay its own share of salvage; neither can be made liable for the salvage due from the other, whether the salvors proceed in the admiralty court or before the local magistrates. The Pyrénnée, Br. & Lush. 189.

The owners of goods on board a ship are bound to contribute to the general salvage of the ship and cargo as in a case of general salvage. Briggs v. Merchant Traders' Ship, Loan and Assurance Society, 13 Q. B. 167; 18 L. J., Q. B. 178; 13 Jur. 787.

Negligent Navigation — Right of Owner of Cargo against Shipowner.]—The plaintiffs under a charterparty shipped a large quantity of rye on board one of the defendants' ships, to be carried from the port of T. to the port of A. Owing to the negligent navigation of the defendants' servants the ship was cast ashore, and a large quantity of the rye was lost; but a considerable quantity was saved by the Salvage Association, who were employed by the underwriters of the cargo with the assent of the defendants. The average statement was prepared, and the sum assessed was agreed to by the plaintiffs, and the Salvage Association were paid by the underwriters the expenses claimed by them. The plaintiffs brought their action to recover the amount of the salvage expenses so paid by the underwriters. The plaintiffs recovered a verdict for an amount to be settled out of court. The question of law involved in the case was reserved for further consideration. The defendants contended that they were not liable because the plaintiffs themselves had not paid the expenses, and the payment under the circumstances was voluntary:—Held, on further consideration, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the amount of the salvage expenses, as without their being incurred, the remainder of the cargo could not have been sent to its destination, which was for the benefit of the defendants, and that the payment under the circumstances was not voluntary. Scaramanga v. Marquand, 53 L. T. 810; 5 Asp. M. C. 506—C. A. Affirming 1 Cab. & E. 500.

Shipowner and Charterer.]—Where a ship was chartered on the voyage out and home, at 2*l.* 10*s.* per ton, register measurement, per month, 2,500*l.* to be paid on clearing outwards, the like sum at the end of twelve months, and the remainder three months after being reported at the custom-house on her return: and the ship delivered her outward cargo, and sailed with her homeward cargo, and was captured and recaptured on the homeward voyage; and the ship and cargo were sold by consent of all parties, the owners and charterers having respectively made claim in the admiralty court to ship and goods, where restitution was decreed to them upon payment of salvage:—Held, that the charterers (having paid the two sums of 2,500*l.*) were not liable to contribute to the shipowner for salvage in respect of their goods, where the proceeds of the goods fell short of the sum due for the residue of the freight; but that the shipowner, in respect of the freight, was liable for the whole salvage; and the charterers having paid such contribution out of the proceeds of the goods, under a security given by them for payment of the salvage, with the assent of the shipowner as far as his liability was concerned:—Held, that they might set it off in an action by the owner for the residue of the freight. Secus, as to the charges of establishing the claim to the cargo, and procuring the decree for its restitution; for the charterers alone were liable to them. Cox v. May, 4 M. & S. 152; 16 R. R. 422.

Ships in Collision.]—Two vessels came into collision. The court pronounced them both in fault. One vessel was subsequently abandoned, but salved by other parties:—Held, that the owners of the abandoned vessel could not recover the salvage awarded against them from the other vessel. The Linda, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 146; 6 W. R. 196.

Bullion — Liability to Contribute.] — Where steam-tugs rendered salvage services by towing a sinking ship with passengers, cargo and bullion on board into safety, it was held, that the bullion was liable to contribute to the salvage reward in proportion to its value rateably with the other property salved. The Longford, 50 L. J., Adm. 28; 6 P. D. 60; 44 L. T. 254; 29 W. R. 491; 4 Asp. M. C. 385. But see The Emma, infra.

Smacksmen warped a derelict off a rock and put her in a position where part of some bullion on board could be, and was, taken away by her master. She afterwards sank, and was subsequently weighed and taken to Harwich by other salvors:—Held, that all the salvors should share alike, and that the bullion taken off by the master must contribute. The Jonge Bastiaan, 5 C. Rob. 322.

Cargo-owners not before Court.]—A sum of 400*l.* was decreed in pursuance of an agreement for salvage to ship, cargo and freight; the values of ship and freight only being then known, and the cargo-owners not before the court. Separate proceedings were afterwards taken against the cargo-owners, who offered to pay their share of the 400*l.* upon the nett proceeds of the cargo:—Held, that in ascertaining the nett proceeds, discount and other accustomed charges might be deducted, and that the costs of the original proceedings must be borne rateably by the cargo-owners, though not then before the court. The Peace, Swabey, 115.

Ship and Cargo salved Assessed together.]—The court assesses the salvage award upon the ship and cargo as a whole, and each pays its rateable share of the sum awarded, without reference to the fact that the services were of greater value to the one property than to the other; except only in case of bullion saved. The Emma, 2 W. Rob. 315; 3 Not. of Cas. 114. Not followed in The Longford, supra.

Agreement by Shipowner to pay Salvage—Liability for Salvage of Cargo.]—See The Prinz Heinrich, infra, col. 654.

Amount awarded paid to Shipowners—Enforcing Payment to Seamen.]—No action is maintainable by a seaman for his share of salvage awarded by two justices, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 460, and paid to the owner of the salvor vessel. Atkinson v. Woodall, 1 H. & C. 170; 31 L. J., Ex. 352; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 720; 6 L. T. 361; 10 W. R. 671.

Lender on Bottomry.]—Not liable to contribute to salvage. Walpole v. Ewer, Park, Marine Insurance (8th ed.) 898; Joyce v. Williamson, 3 Dougl. 162.

12. Derelict and Wreck.

Derelict—What is.]—A laden barge accidentally breaking loose from her moorings in the Thames, and drifting about with no one on board, is not derelict, and consequently not wreck within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), and persons finding her and mooring her in safety are not precluded from recovering salvage for so doing by reason of their neglecting to comply with the provisions of s. 450, and to deliver the barge to the receiver of wreck. The Zeta, 44 L. J., Adm. 22; L. R. 4 A. & E. 460; 33 L. T. 477; 24 W. R. 180; 3 Asp. M. C. 73.

When on the alarm attending a collision the crew of one vessel jumps on board the other, such abandonment does not of itself constitute a case of derelict. The Fenix, Swabey, 13.

In the case of a derelict the salvors have a right to exclusive possession of the vessel; unless it has been utterly abandoned, and is in contemplation of law a derelict, the occupying salvors are bound to give up charge to the master on his appearing and claiming charge, and the master may then refuse to continue to employ them, and may employ others, and may take what measures he thinks fit for the preservation of the vessel. The Champion, Br. & Lush. 69.

Where a vessel was picked up with four to five feet water in the hold, her compasses and the seamen's clothes having been taken off, the court pronounced against her as a derelict, though it did not appear that her crew had left sine spe recuperandi. The Gertrude, 30 L. J., Adm. 130.

A vessel having run ashore on the coast of Essex, was assisted by the owner of a smack, who put down an anchor and a hawser attached to the vessel for the purpose of securing her. The smack then left her, for the purpose of carrying away some of her stores, with the intention, however, of returning. The owner of another smack came to her afterwards, and finding no one in or near the vessel, and her deck under water, took away the anchor and hawser, and delivered them up to the deputy vice-admiral of Essex:—Held, that the anchor and hawser were not parted with, or left and abandoned, within 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 75, s. 1, and that the deputy vice-admiral was not justified in detaining them until salvage was paid or security given for its payment. Clark v. Chamberlain, 2 M. & W. 78; 2 Gale, 217.

—— Abandonment of, by Salvors—Right to Remuneration.]—The barque "N." fell in with the "K.," a derelict barque, in the Atlantic, and put five hands on board of her, who navigated her for three days. The "K." then fell in with the barque "B.," and the five hands on board of the "K." were, at their own request, taken on board the "B." The "B." then sent some of her own crew on board the "K.," and took her in tow, and towed her till the tow-rope broke, when the vessels parted company, and the hands on board the "K.," with the assistance of the "L.," a steamship which they afterwards fell in with, brought the "K." into Falmouth. In suits instituted on behalf of the masters, owners and crews of the "N.," the "B." and the "L.," the court held, that the master, owners and crew of the "N." were not entitled to salvage reward, but awarded salvage to the remaining plaintiffs. The Killeena, 51 L. J., Adm. 11; 6 P. D. 193; 45 L. T. 621; 30 W. R. 339; 4 Asp. M. C. 472.

Wreck.]—Timber which has been moored on a river (some miles above a harbour) opposite to the owners' premises, and has drifted therefrom to the sea, in consequence of an accidental loosening of the fastenings, is not a wreck within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 458, entitling the justices to make an award for salvage, and the salvors, obligees of a bond given by the owner to abide this award, are not entitled to sue on such bond. Palmer v. Rouse, 3 H. & N. 505; 27 L. J., Ex. 437; 6 W. R. 674.

The jurisdiction of the admiralty subsists as long as the shore is covered with water, and the rights of lords of manors can exist only as long as the land is left dry. Therefore a ship cannot be considered "wreckum maris," nor the claim of a lord of the manor to wreck sustained, unless at the time of taking possession she is either on the shore itself or left high and dry on land. The Pauline, 2 W. Rob. 358; 9 Jur. 286. See also Stackpole v. Reg., Ir. R. 9 Eq. 619—C. A.

Award in case of.]—See 13, Award, cols. 632, 641.

Ship abandoned by Captors.—A ship that had been captured and afterwards abandoned by the enemy was picked up at sea by salvors :—Held, that she was not derelict. The John and Jane, 4 C. Rob. 216.

A ship captured by the enemy and abandoned by the captors was picked up and brought into safety. A moiety of her value awarded for salvage, as for a derelict. The Lord Nelson, Edwards, 79.

13. Award.

a. Generally.

Principles discussed.]—Principles governing amount of award discussed. The Salacia, 2 Hag. Adm. 262.

Not Assessed on quantum meruit Principle.]—Salvage expenses are not assessed upon the quantum meruit principle, but on the general principle of maritime law, rewarding persons who by great, and perhaps dangerous, exertions bring in a ship, for which exertions, if not successful, nothing would have been paid. Aitchison v. Lohre, 49 L. J., Q. B. 123 ; 4 App. Cas. 755 ; 41 L. T. 323 ; 28 W. R. 1 ; 4 Asp. M. C. 168—H. L. (E.) See also The De Bay, infra, col. 636.

Salvage is not to be calculated merely at the rate of work, labour, or by the number of hours occupied ; risk, value and public policy are also to be considered. The Industry, 3 Hag. Adm. 203. Cf. The Hector, 3 Hag. Adm. 90 ; Nicholson v. Chapman, 2 H. Bl. 254.

Short Time Occupied in Rendering Service.]—Where salvage services are rendered by steamships, the amount of salvage which the court will award is not necessarily affected by the fact of the services performed occupying only a short time. The Northumberland v. The Andalusia, 12 L. T. 584. And see The Strathgarry, infra, col. 657.

Amount for which Action entered not necessarily the Limit.]—The sum for which the action is entered is not necessarily the limit of what may be awarded. The Jonge Bastiaan, 5 C. Rob. 323. And see The Dictator, infra, col. 976.

Value—Effect on Award.]—Although the quantum of remuneration to salvors is to some extent to be affected by the value of the property salved, it must not be raised to an amount altogether out of proportion to the services actually rendered. The Amérique, L. R. 6 P. C. 468 ; 31 L. T. 854 ; 23 W. R. 488 ; 2 Asp. M. C. 460.

Large value of the property salved is considered chiefly with reference to the adequacy of the fund out of which the award is made. The James Dixon, 2 L. T. 696. And see The Werra, infra, col. 637.

Where the property salved is small a large proportion of its value is awarded ; where it is large, a smaller proportion ; in derelict (formerly) half the value was given to salvors. The Blenden Hall, 1 Dods. 414.

Value, how Calculated.]—Salvors are entitled upon a value calculated at the place where their services terminated. The Norma, Lush. 124 ; 5 L. T. 340.

The value of freight salved is to be reckoned pro ratâ itineris peracti, and the other equities of the case. Ib.

A ship bound from Honduras to England was disabled on the voyage, and towed into Bermuda, where expenses nearly equal to the whole freight were incurred to refit ; the voyage home was afterwards completed, and the cargo delivered. The court allowed salvage upon one-half of the total gross freight. Ib.

The value stated by the owners of salved property in proceedings before commissioners is not conclusive upon the salvor, even though assented to at the time. The Hope, 14 W. R. 467.

The value of the salved property is to be taken at the place to which it is taken by the salvors ; when carried away and sold elsewhere, the cost of carriage and other charges being deducted from the proceeds of sale and a further percentage if the market is a better one. The George Dean, Swabey, 290.

Salvors took up money upon bottomry of the salved ship :—Held, that the amount of the bond and wages earned subsequently to the service ; but (semble) not wages earned before, were to be deducted from the value of the property, out of which the award was to be made. The Selina, 2 Not. of Cas. 18.

Expenses of Pumping, &c.]—Expenses incurred in salving a vessel, such as pumping, watching, &c., which strictly ought to be paid by the marshal, will, if paid by the salvors, be deducted by the court from the value of the salved vessel in assessing the salvage reward. The Le Jonet, 41 L. J., Adm. 95 ; L. R. 3 A. & E. 556 ; 27 L. T. 387 ; 21 W. R. 83 ; 3 Asp. M. C. 438.

Wages, Deduction of.]—Wages earned after the salved ship has been brought into port are not to be deducted from the freight upon which salvage is earned. The Emma, 4 W. R. 91.

Suit entered against Vessel alone.]—Her majesty's steamship "Leopard" rendered a salvage service to an English vessel then in the service of the French government, and laden with a valuable cargo. The suit was entered against the vessel alone, her value being 4,247*l.* The court, adverting to the difficulty of apportioning salvage where the cargo was not before it, awarded 600*l.* on the value of the vessel. The Mary Pleasants, Swabey, 224.

Rule as to a Moiety.]—A moiety of the value of the salved property awarded in a case of very great merit in the salvors, who had to contend with weather, armed resistance on shore and danger of infection. The Elliotta, 2 Dods. 75.

No precedent of more than a moiety being given for salvage of a derelict being forthcoming, a moiety awarded and costs out of the other moiety. The Frances Mary, 2 Hag. Adm. 89.

Except in very special cases no more than half the value of the property salved will be awarded as salvage. The Inca, Gore v. Bethel, 12 Moore P. C. 189 ; Swabey, 370. But see The Rasche, and cases, post, col. 641.

—— In Case of Derelict.]—See c. Derelict, infra, col. 641.

Appraisement — Fresh Appraisement on Appeal.]—Upon appeal from justices in a salvage case a fresh appraisement was made at the shipowners' request, although they had made no objection to the appraisement in the court below. The Oscar, 2 Hag. Adm. 257.

—— Decree Altered or Amended in consequence of Mistake in Value of Cargo.]—Salvage services having been rendered to a ship laden with cargo, a salvage suit was instituted against ship, freight and cargo. Separate appearances were entered on behalf of the owner of the ship and the owner of the cargo. The owner of the cargo filed an affidavit of value stating the value of the cargo, and the owner of the ship filed an affidavit of value stating the value of the ship and freight. At the hearing, the court, taking these values as accurate, by its decree awarded to the salvors a certain sum as salvage. Some time afterwards, the owner of the cargo discovered that he had by mistake included in his valuation of the cargo the value of the freight, and that the freight was of more value than appeared by the affidavit of value filed on behalf of the owner of the ship, and he made application to reduce the value of the cargo, and to reduce the amount it had previously decreed as salvage. On the mistake being proved:—Held, that the court had power to correct the mistake and to make the necessary alterations in the decree. The James Armstrong, L. R. 4 A. & E. 380; 33 L. T. 390.

—— Appraisement is Binding.]—An appraisement by order of the court binds both parties to a salvage action; the court will not after appraisement, at the instance of the owner, order the property to be sold in order to ascertain its value. The R. M. Mills, 3 L. T. 513; Venus, Cargo ex, L. R. 1 A. & E. 50; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 379; 14 W. R. 460.

—— Awards to Salvors absorbing whole Proceeds—Application to vary Decree.]—In an action of salvage the plaintiffs obtained an award of 1,500*l.* upon an appraised value of the defendants' ship of 1,250*l.*, and of her cargo of 5,004*l.*; total, 6,254*l.* The ship was subsequently sold by the marshal for 713*l.*, the cargo, which was of a nature not readily saleable in this country, for 1,649*l.*, and the total, 2,362*l.*, was reduced by fees and disbursements to 1,625*l.* An award of 130*l.* obtained by the pilot and 100*l.* by boatmen in separate actions in respect of the same salvage operations brought the total salvage claims up to 1,730*l.*, which more than absorbed the whole proceeds. On motion by the defendants to vary the decree by reducing the award of 1,500*l.*:—Held, that the application must be refused, as the defendants had allowed the court to proceed to award salvage upon the basis of the appraisement without taking any exception at the time, and, beyond the difference between the appraised value and the sum realised by the sale, there was nothing to indicate that the appraisement did not fairly represent the value at the time and place when the property was brought into safety. The Georg, [1894] P. 330; 71 L. T. 22; 7 Asp. M. C. 476.

Valuation of Salved Property made Abroad—Court unwilling to open.]—The court is unwilling to disturb a valuation of the salved property made by arbitration abroad by agreement between the foreign consignees and the salvors. The Sir Francis Burton, 2 Hag. Adm. 156.

Where no application is made in the court below for a commission of appraisement, the court of appeal will not admit affidavits directed to shew that the value of the salved property was greater than supposed in the court below. The Endeavour, Colby v. Watson, 6 Moore, P. C. 334; 6 Not. of Cas. 27—P. C.

Consideration of Risk.]—In awarding the amount for salvage services well performed, the court holds the shortness of the duration of such services as an element of meritoriousness; and where the amount of property salved is very large, the court will not take advantage of the extent of such amount further than to give a liberal reward, according to meritoriousness of the services actually performed. The United Kingdom v. The Syrian, 14 L. T. 833. And see The Werra, infra, col. 637.

In estimating the value of salvage services, circumstances, among others, to be considered by the court are, the degree of danger to which the vessel was exposed, and from which she was rescued by the salvors, the mode in which the services of the salvors were applied, and the risk incurred by the salvors in rendering those services. The Chetah, 38 L. J., Adm. 1; L. R. 2 P. C. 205; 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 278; 19 L. T. 621.—P. C.

In estimating salvage reward to the owners of the salving vessels, the circumstances that the salving vessel deviating from her course might have vitiated the insurance, the possibility of being answerable to the owners of the cargo for such deviation, and the exposure to danger of the salving ship, in rendering salvage services, are elements to be taken into consideration. The Sir Ralph Abercrombie, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 374; L. R. 1 P. C. 454.

Where no special risk has been incurred by the salvors, salvage reward is allotted upon a calculation of a fair remuneration for time and trouble to the owners of the salving vessel and to each hand engaged. The Otto Hermann, 33 L. J., Adm. 189.

Where there is danger to the salvors, the risk of life receives the greatest remuneration. Ib.

A lower scale of remuneration is given where the vessel salved is not one of present danger, but a case of urgency. Ib.

The lowest where, a vessel being disabled from proceeding, as in the case of a steam vessel in want of fuel, there is a possible contingency of serious consequences. Ib.

In all cases, the value of the vessel salving is regarded, and to whatever remuneration is given must be added a sum to meet any damage she sustains. Ib.

—— Great Danger incurred by Salvors.]—Salvage services of a highly meritorious character having been performed by salvors, in saving the lives of the crew, and the ship and cargo having been valued at 46,000*l.*, the admiralty court awarded 1,000*l.* as salvage for such services:—Held, that the sum was insufficient, and the remuneration increased to 2,000*l.*, in consideration of the great danger the salvors incurred, and of the fact of saving of lives, and the value of the ship and cargo. The Glenduror, Arnold v. Cowie, L. R. 3 P. C. 589; 24 L. T. 499; 1 Asp. M. C. 31.

Steamships—Time and Expense.]—Where a steamship goes out of port for the purpose of rendering salvage service to the vessel in distress, the time and expense incurred in reaching her is to be taken into account in fixing the award. The Graces, 2 W. Rob. 294.

Steamships — Liberal Awards to.]—Steam vessels are important agents in salvage services, and their owners will be adequately rewarded. The Spirit of the Age, Swabey, 286. Cf., The Raikes, 1 Hag. Adm. 246; The Earl Grey, 3 Hag. Adm. 363; The Martin Luther, Swabey, 287; The London Merchant, 3 Hag. Adm. 394; The Ella Constance, 15 L. J., Adm. 191; The Santipore, 1 Spinks, 231; The Medora, 5 Not. of Cas. 156; The General Palmer, 5 Not. of Cas. 159, n.

The capability of steamers to perform services with greater rapidity and certainty entitles them as salvors to a higher scale of reward. The Otto Hermann, 33 L. J., Adm. 189. See also The Palmyra, 25 L. T. 884; 1 Asp. M. C. 182.

Liberal Awards generally—Public Policy of.]—The interests of commerce and public policy require that liberal rewards should be given to salvors. The Sarah, 1 C. Rob. 313, n. S. P., The William Beckford, 3 C. Rob. 355.

—— Against Passenger Ships.] — Liberal awards are given against great passenger and mail steamship companies. The London Merchant, 3 Hag. Adm. 394; The Ardincaple, 3 Hag. Adm. 151.

Nautical Skill.]—Salvage award is estimated upon the consideration that nautical skill enhances the value of manual labour. The Duke of Clarence, 1 W. Rob. 346.

Loss of possible Earnings.]—The loss of possible profit of fishing boats is not to be included in an award of salvage for services rendered by them. The Nicolai Heinrich, 17 Jur. 329. S. P., The Louisa, 3 W. Rob. 99. And see The Sunniside, infra.

A specific sum (1,000*l.*) awarded for loss of a sealing voyage incurred by the salvors. The Salacia, 2 Hag. Adm. 262.

Salving and Salved Ships associated.]—Where the salving and salved ships are associated in a voyage in a common interest, a lesser amount of salvage is awarded than where the ships are wholly independent of each other and the salvage accidental. The Trelawney, 4 C. Rob. 223, 228.

Sum accepted by other Salvors immaterial.]—The amount at which other salvors have estimated their services is immaterial. The Antelope, 27 L. T. 663; 1 Asp. M. C. 477.

Damage to Salvor. —If a vessel rendering salvage services is damaged without negligence on her own part, she is entitled to recover the damage and demurrage during repairs from the salved vessel. The Mud Hopper, 40 L. T. 462; 4 Asp. M. C. 403.

Where the salvors' vessel is injured or lost whilst engaged in the salvage service, the presumption is that the injury or loss was caused by the necessities of the service, and the burden of proof is on the parties alleging that the loss was caused by the default of the salvors. The Thomas Blyth, Lush. 16.

Where the property saved is ample, losses voluntarily incurred by the salvor should be transferred to the owner of the property saved, and in addition the salvor should receive a compensation for his exertions and for the risk he runs of not receiving any compensation in the event of his services proving ineffectual. The De Bay, Bird v. Gibb, 52 L. J., P. C. 57; 8 App. Cas. 599; 49 L. T. 414; 5 Asp. M. C. 156—P. C.

The losses should be ascertained with precision where practicable, but in that case the salvage remuneration added thereto should be fixed on a more moderate scale than where the losses cannot be fixed with precision. Ib.

In an action for salvage, evidence of the loss of earnings by and of the costs of repairing damage done to the salving vessel in consequence of rendering salvage services is admissible. These sums are only to be regarded as elements for consideration in estimating the amount of the salvage reward, and are not to be considered as fixed amounts to be awarded to the salvors in respect of these matters. The Sunniside, 52 L. J., Adm. 76; 8 P. D. 137; 49 L. T. 401; 31 W. R. 859; 5 Asp. M. C. 140.

In an action of salvage, in which the value of the salving steamer was 85,000*l.*, and of her cargo and freight 104,047*l.*, and of the salved steamer 90,000*l.*, and of her cargo and freight 89,535*l.*, the court awarded 4,500*l.* to the owners, 500*l.* to the master, and 1,500*l.* to the crew, During the hearing the owners tendered evidence of the particular injuries to their steamer caused by the performance of the services, of the costs of the repairs, and of the pecuniary loss caused by the detention of their steamer whilst such repairs were being executed: the court refused to receive this evidence, or to refer it to the registrar and merchants to assess the amount of such costs and losses:—Held, on appeal, that the judge of the admiralty court is not bound ex debito justitiæ to admit such evidence or to decree in terms that a specific and ascertained amount shall be paid to salvors in respect of damages or costs caused by rendering salvage services, for he is not bound always to award a sum sufficient to indemnify a salvor. But the judge may, in his discretion, receive such evidence, and may, if it be proper, under the circumstances, include an amount in respect of damages in his award. Having regard to the large value in the present case, the decree should be varied by awarding 1,000*l.* to the shipowners for the actual services rendered, and by referring the costs of repairs to, and of the detention of the salvor's steamer, to be ascertained by the registrar and merchants, unless the appellants were willing that the decree of the court below should stand. The City of Chester, 53 L. J., Adm. 90; 9 P. D. 182; 51 L. T. 485; 33 W. R. 104; 5 Asp. M. C. 311.—C. A.

Loss of Information leading to Profitable Employment.]—A paragraph in a statement of claim for salvage, stating that by rendering the salvage service, the salving vessel had been prevented from obtaining information which would have resulted in profitable employment, ordered to be struck out, as relating to matters which the court could not take into consideration in estimating the value of the services. The Cybele, 47 L. J., Adm. 86; 3 P. D. 8; 37 L. T. 773; 26 W. R. 345; 3 Asp. M. C. 532—C. A.

Excessive Claim.]—Where a steamship, disabled by the breaking of her crank-shaft, was towed a distance of about thirty miles without danger or risk by another steamship belonging to the same owners as the disabled vessel, and fifteen of the crew of the towing vessel instituted a salvage action in the sum of 5,000*l.* against the vessel towed, and arrested the vessel, cargo and freight therein, the court held such services to be salvage services, but of so slight a character that on a value of 105,500*l.* it awarded 15*l.*, and ordered the salvors to pay all the costs of the action, expressing disapprobation both at the institution of the action in the high court, and at the arrest of the vessel for such an amount. The Agamemnon, 48 L. T. 880; 5 Asp. M. C. 92.

8,000*l.* claimed, 600*l.* awarded. Evil consequences of excessive demands insisted upon. The Nimrod, 14 Jur. 942.

5,000*l.* claimed, 15*l.* awarded. See The Agamemnon, supra.

Value of Property—Perils of Salving Ship—Possibility of Assistance—Character of Service.]—In estimating the amount of a salvage remuneration the court takes into consideration, first, the value of the property saved, and next the actual perils from which it has been saved. In considering the perils, the possibility of assistance being rendered to the vessel in peril must be taken to lessen the amount to be awarded. The value of the salving ship will not substantially affect the amount of the reward, but the length of time to which she is exposed to additional risks is a material element for consideration. The Werra, 56 L. J., Adm. 53; 12 P. D. 52; 56 L. T. 580; 35 W. R. 552; 6 Asp. M. C. 115.

Loss to Salvors.]—Where salvage services have occasioned the salvors serious pecuniary loss, and where the value of the ship and cargo saved is ample not only to defray loss sustained by a salvor, in addition to a proper sum for the master and crew, but also to leave a substantial surplus for the owner of the property saved, the salvor should be remunerated where possible with a sum sufficient to reward him for the risk and labour, and to cover damages and expenses incurred through rendering the service, and evidence of the damages and expenses ought to be received by the judge, so that they may be ascertained with precision. Per Baggallay and Lindley, L.JJ. The City of Chester, infra.

Where the property saved is ample, losses voluntarily incurred by the salvor should be transferred to the owner of the property saved, and in addition the salvor should receive a compensation for his exertions and for the risk he runs of not receiving any compensation in the event of his services proving ineffectual. The De Bay, Bird v. Gibb, 52 L. J., P. C. 57; 8 App. Cas. 559; 49 L. T. 414; 5 Asp. M. C. 156—P. C.

The losses should be ascertained with precision where practicable, but in that case the salvage remuneration added thereto should be fixed on a more moderate scale than where the losses cannot be fixed with precision. Ib.

Repairs Ordered by Salvors.]—Repairs to a salved vessel, ordered by the salvors, for which the shipwright has a lien, will not be dealt with by the court in a salvage suit. The Rainger, 2 Hag. Adm. 42.

Different Rates of Salvage for Ship and Cargo—Specific Parts of Cargo.]—An award of different rates of salvage for ship and different parts of the cargo is unusual and inconvenient, and will not be made; nor is it now the practice to award specific parts of the cargo. The Vesta, 2 Hag. Adm. 189.

Saving of Life enhances Award.]—In estimating the value of salvage services the court will be guided above all by the consideration of whether there was danger to life. The Thomas Fielden, 32 L. J., Adm. 61. And see 6, LIFE SALVAGE, supra.

Award Affected by Misconduct.]—See 4, MISCONDUCT, OR WANT OF SKILL, supra, cols. 599 et seq.

b. Amounts Awarded.

Amounts Awarded.]—A sum of 400*l.* was decreed, in pursuance of an agreement for that sum, for salvage service to ship, cargo and freight. The value of ship and freight only were then known. Afterwards the owners of the cargo were proceeded against, and offered to pay their proportion of the 400*l.* upon the net proceeds of cargo:—Held, in ascertaining nett value of the cargo, that 2½ per cent. discount, and certain other items sworn to be accustomed charges, might be deducted, but not a gratuity of 5*l.* 5*s.* to the master, and that costs of the original proceedings must be borne by the owners of the cargo proportionably with the owners of the ship, though the former were not before the court when the decree was made. The Peace, Swabey, 115; 4 W. R. 635.

A collier steamer of the value of 5,000*l.*, bound from Newcastle to Seville with a cargo, fell in, in the English Channel, with a large American ship, totally disabled by tempest. A boat, at great peril, was sent on board, and the vessel taken in tow, and brought safely into Portland. The value of the property saved was 52,000*l.* The court awarded to the salvors 2,800*l.*—1,500*l.* to the owners, 500*l.* to the master, 800*l.* to the crew, and double shares to the seamen who boarded in the boat. The St. Nicholas, Lush. 29.
